[redacted]

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

SAN DIEGO

NON-CIRCULATING

CALIFORNIA REPORTER REFERENCES

68 CALIFORNIA APPELLATE REPORTS, 2d SERIES

Cal.App.	P.2d
Page	Vol.	Page
1	155	863
9	155	841
12	155	878
20	155	895
23	156	69
30	156	39
32	155	853
38	155	844
48	156	81
82	155	876
86	155	901
98	155	912
104	156	29
115	156	79
120	156	273
122	155	850
128	155	862
131	156	35
138	155	882
143	155	908
143	156	940
151	155	870
163	156	57
168	156	59
173	156	274
180	156	52
184	156	265
189	156	28
192	156	54
197	156	261
204	156	62
217	156	488
241	156	457
249	156	454
254	156	46
266	156	461
280	156	473
286	156	479
294	156	476
300	156	946
308	156	450
315	156	486
318	156	983
360	156	483
366	156	775
376	156	958
387	156	936
393	156	976
399	156	774
400	156	767
407	156	781
421	156	780
424	156	944
426	156	969
440	156	956
444	156	953
449	156	941
456	157	68
462	157	9
473	157	30
476	156	979
485	156	950
491	157	25
501	157	15
504	157	401
517	157	434
520	157	45
523	157	657
529	157	57
552	157	38
557	157	41
564	156	963
574	157	21
577	157	651
582	157	421
591	157	7
594	157	442
600	157	428
603	157	36
607	157	426
610	157	436
617	157	432
621	157	411
627	157	390
640	157	655
643	157	23
646	157	34
650	157	415
652	157	378
657	157	385
665	157	440
670	157	429
674	157	446
681	157	886
705	157	654
706	157	863
713	157	660
716	157	646
725	158	23
742	157	878
745	158	42
751	157	867
755	157	872
758	157	868
765	158	51
780	158	32
788	157	880
792	157	859
798	158	36
811	157	899
821	158	46
825	158	435
843	158	207
853	158	225
894	155	868
894	157	414
895	157	420

CAL.REP.161–162 P.2d

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

COVERING CASES REPORTED IN

PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES

161 P.2d – 162 P.2d

CITE BY VOLUME AND PAGE OF THE
PACIFIC REPORTER
SECOND SERIES
Thus:
161 P.2d 1

ST. PAUL, MINN.
WEST PUBLISHING CO.
1946

COPYRIGHT, 1945, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.
Pacific Reporter, Second Series, Vol. 161, Nos. 1–8; Vol. 162, Nos. 1–6.

COPYRIGHT, 1946, BY WEST PUBLISHING CO.

CAL.REP.161–162 P.2d
5th Reprint—1974

JUDGES AND OFFICERS

SUPREME COURT

Chief Justice

PHIL S. GIBSON	San Francisco

Associate Justices

JOHN W. SHENK	San Francisco
DOUGLAS L. EDMONDS	San Francisco
JESSE W. CARTER	San Francisco
ROGER J. TRAYNOR	Berkeley
B. REY SCHAUER	Los Angeles
HOMER R. SPENCE	San Francisco

Clerks

A. V. Haskell	Clerk	San Francisco
I. M. Johnson	Chief Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Loren F. White	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
Samuel C. Shenk	Deputy Clerk	San Francisco
E. L. Blake	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
H. P. Coultis	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles
L. A. Endres	Deputy Clerk	Sacramento

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS

FIRST DISTRICT—SAN FRANCISCO

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

RAYMOND E. PETERS - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

BENJ. K. KNIGHT - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
LOUIS H. WARD - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

JOHN T. NOURSE - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

GEO. A. STURTEVANT[1] - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
C. J. GOODELL - - - - - - - - - - - San Francisco
MAURICE T. DOOLING, Jr.[2] - - - - - - - - - Hollister

CLERKS

WALTER S. CHISHOLM - - Clerk - - - - - San Francisco
W. B. SULLIVAN - - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco
HARRY M. GARDISER - - - Deputy Clerk - - - San Francisco

SECOND DISTRICT—LOS ANGELES

Division 1

PRESIDING JUSTICE

JOHN M. YORK - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

WILLIAM C. DORAN - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
THOMAS P. WHITE - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

Division 2

PRESIDING JUSTICE

MINOR MOORE - - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

ASSOCIATE JUSTICES

WALTON J. WOOD[3] - - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
MARSHALL F. McCOMB - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles
EMMET H. WILSON[4] - - - - - - - - - - Los Angeles

---

[1] Retired Nov. 1, 1945.
[2] Appointed, took office Nov. 1, 1945.
[3] Died Sept. 2, 1945.
[4] Appointed, took office Oct. 5, 1945.

DISTRICT COURTS OF APPEALS—Cont'd.

Division 3

Presiding Justice

WALTER DESMOND	Los Angeles

Associate Justices

CLEMENT L. SHINN	Los Angeles
PARKER WOOD	Los Angeles
W. TURNEY FOX[1]	Los Angeles

Clerks

James E. Brown	Clerk	Los Angeles
John W. Shenk III	Deputy Clerk	Los Angeles

THIRD DISTRICT—SACRAMENTO

Presiding Justice

ANNETTE ABBOTT ADAMS	Sacramento

Associate Justices

ROLFE L. THOMPSON	Sacramento
PAUL PEEK	Long Beach

Clerks

George N. Didion	Clerk	Sacramento
Jas. Wesley Platt	Deputy Clerk	Sacramento

FOURTH DISTRICT

Fresno—San Bernardino—San Diego

Presiding Justice

CHARLES R. BARNARD	Fresno

Associate Justices

E. J. MARKS	San Bernardino
LLOYD E. GRIFFIN	San Diego

Clerks

M. C. VanAllen	Clerk	San Bernardino
Lloyd E. Hidden	Deputy Clerk	San Bernardino
Earl J. Verdeckberg	Deputy Clerk	San Diego
Roy M. Bostwick	Deputy Clerk	Fresno

---

[1] Temporary assignment.

APPELLATE DEPARTMENT, SUPERIOR COURT

LOS ANGELES COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

HARTLEY SHAW	Los Angeles

JUDGES

EDWARD T. BISHOP	Los Angeles
CLARENCE L. KINCAID	Los Angeles

CLERK

JEROME B. WILLIAMS	Los Angeles

SAN FRANCISCO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

FRANKLIN A. GRIFFIN	San Francisco

JUDGES

EDWARD P. MURPHY	San Francisco
ALFRED J. FRITZ	San Francisco

CLERK

VICTOR N. SUTTICH	San Francisco

SAN DIEGO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

CHARLES C. HAINES	San Diego

JUDGES

GORDON THOMPSON	San Diego
EDWARD J. KELLY[1]	San Diego
ROBERT B. BURCH[2]	San Diego

CLERK

DEAN SCHUTZ	San Diego

SACRAMENTO COUNTY

PRESIDING JUDGE

PETER J. SHIELDS	Sacramento

JUDGES

MALCOLM C. GLENN	Sacramento
RAYMOND T. COUGHLIN	Sacramento

ATTORNEY GENERAL

ROBERT W. KENNY	San Francisco

---

[1] Retired April 9, 1945.
[2] Appointed, took office April 9, 1945.

CASES REPORTED

	Vol.		Page
Abraham; Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N. Y. v., App.	161	P.2d	689
Abraham; Nelson v., App.	162	P.2d	833
Adams v. Alexander, App.	162	P.2d	647
Agdeppa v. Glougie, App.	162	P.2d	944
Albertsworth; Fruns v., App.	162	P.2d	666
Alexander; Adams v., App.	162	P.2d	647
Allen; De Hart v., Sup.	161	P.2d	453
Alt; Botchford v., App.	162	P.2d	984
American Trust Co.; Eggert v., App.	162	P.2d	707
Anselm; Cafe Apollo Co. v., App.	161	P.2d	473
Ash; People v., App.	161	P.2d	415
Authier; Hunt v., App.	161	P.2d	487
Baird v. Lascy, App.	161	P.2d	996
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n; Hays v., App.	162	P.2d	679
Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n; Porteous v., App.	162	P.2d	679
Barnett; People v., App.	161	P.2d	571
Barry; Lang v., App.	161	P.2d	949
Bays v. Clugston, App.	161	P.2d	953
Beauchamp; Smith v., App.	162	P.2d	662
Bell; Lynch v., App.	161	P.2d	24
Bell Oil & Refining Co.; Butler v., App.	161	P.2d	559
Beltowski; People v., App.	162	P.2d	59
Bennett v. State Bar of Cal., Sup.	162	P.2d	5
Benwell, People ex rel., v. Foutz, Sup.	162	P.2d	1
Bernard v. Monheit, App.	162	P.2d	41
Bernstein; People v., App.	161	P.2d	381
Bethlehem Steel Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	161	P.2d	18
Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	161	P.2d	59
Bevilacqua's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	589
Blume; Wagnor v., App.	161	P.2d	1001
Board of Police and Fire Pension Com'rs of City of Long Beach; Larson v., App.	162	P.2d	33
Board of Police and Fire Pension Com'rs of City of Long Beach; Tyra v., App.	162	P.2d	35
Board of Social Welfare v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	162	P.2d	627
Board of Social Welfare v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	162	P.2d	630
Board of Social Welfare v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	162	P.2d	635
Borad; O'Morrow v., App.	161	P.2d	28
Bossen; Rand v., Sup.	162	P.2d	457
Botchford v. Alt, App.	162	P.2d	984
Bracey v. Gray, App.	162	P.2d	314
Bradley; People v., App.	162	P.2d	38
Brisson; Kaluzok v., App.	161	P.2d	64
Brophy v. Employees Retirement System, App.	162	P.2d	939
Brown; People v., App.	162	P.2d	300
Brown v. Republic Productions, Sup.	161	P.2d	796
Brown v. Republic Productions, Sup.	161	P.2d	798
Brown; Wood v., App.	162	P.2d	859
Brunton; Shnell v., App.	161	P.2d	288
Burgess v. State, App.	162	P.2d	855
Burke; People v., App.	161	P.2d	303
Burnsed v. Murray, App.	161	P.2d	413
Busch v. Turner, Sup.	161	P.2d	456

CASES REPORTED

	Vol.		Page
Butler v. Bell Oil & Refining Co., App.	161	P.2d	559
Butler; People v., App.	161	P.2d	401
Byrnes, Ex parte, Sup.	161	P.2d	376
Cafe Apollo Co. v. Anselm, App.	161	P.2d	473
California Employment Stabilization Commission; Garcia v., App.	161	P.2d	972
California Water & Tel. Co.; City of San Diego v., App.	162	P.2d	684
Carpenter; Fitch v., App.	161	P.2d	824
Castle v. Castle, App.	162	P.2d	656
Castro; People v., Super.	162	P.2d	743
Chin Po Foon; Fong Chuck v., App.	162	P.2d	642
Christopher v. State Bar of Cal., Sup.	161	P.2d	1
Chuck v. Chin Po Foon, App.	162	P.2d	642
Ciciliot; Remmers v., App.	161	P.2d	257
Cigna; Monheit v., App.	162	P.2d	41
City and County of San Francisco; Gazzera v., App.	161	P.2d	806
City of Long Beach; Wilson v., App.	162	P.2d	658
City of Los Angeles v. Cole, App.	162	P.2d	306
City of Pasadena; Phillips v., Sup.	162	P.2d	625
City of San Bernardino; Wilkins v., App.	162	P.2d	711
City of San Diego v. California Water & Tel. Co., App.	162	P.2d	684
Clugston; Bays v., App.	161	P.2d	953
Cohn v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., App.	161	P.2d	74
Coit v. Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co., App.	161	P.2d	812
Colbert v. Colbert, App.	162	P.2d	839
Cole; City of Los Angeles v., App.	162	P.2d	306
Collup; People v., App.	161	P.2d	576
Colombo v. Colombo, App.	162	P.2d	995
Columbia Pictures Corp. v. De Toth, Sup.	161	P.2d	217
Combs v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., App.	162	P.2d	68
Compton v. Southern Pac. Co., App.	161	P.2d	40
Condor Corp. v. Cunningham, App.	162	P.2d	21
Cory v. Cory, App.	161	P.2d	385
Cory v. Cory, App.	162	P.2d	497
Covert v. State Bd. of Equalization, App.	162	P.2d	717
Crinos; People v., App.	162	P.2d	64
Crinos; People v., App.	162	P.2d	837
Cunningham; Condor Corp. v., App.	162	P.2d	21
Davis v. Davis, App.	162	P.2d	62
Day; People v., App.	161	P.2d	803
De Acosta, Appeal of, App.	162	P.2d	306
De Hart v. Allen, Sup.	161	P.2d	453
Dempsey; Slaughter v., App.	162	P.2d	843
Department of Water and Power of City of Los Angeles; La Prade v., Sup.	162	P.2d	13
De Toth; Columbia Pictures Corp. v., Sup.	161	P.2d	217
Dobbs; People v., App.	161	P.2d	46
Dolton v. Green, App.	162	P.2d	700
Douglass v. Douglass, App.	161	P.2d	66
Douglass' Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	66
Douillard v. Smith, App.	161	P.2d	378
Dreyer; People v., App.	162	P.2d	468
Eastern-Columbia, Inc., v. Los Angeles County, App.	161	P.2d	407
Eggert v. American Trust Co., App.	162	P.2d	707
Employees Retirement System; Brophy v., App.	162	P.2d	939
Evans v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	162	P.2d	488
Fairbanks; Farmer v., App.	162	P.2d	26
Farmer v. Fairbanks, App.	162	P.2d	26
Farrar v. Fry, Super.	162	P.2d	73

	Vol.		Page
Fauver; Sprague v., App.	162	P.2d	865
F. C. B. A. Market; Heglin v., App.	161	P.2d	976
Ferrari v. Mambretti, App.	161	P.2d	275
Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N. Y. v. Abraham, App.	161	P.2d	689
Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N. Y. v. Mahoney, App.	161	P.2d	944
Finkel; People v., App.	161	P.2d	298
Fitch v. Carpenter, App.	161	P.2d	824
Follett; Huebotter v., App.	161	P.2d	481
Fong Chuck v. Chin Po Foon, App.	162	P.2d	642
Fontes; Tucker v., App.	161	P.2d	697
Foutz; People ex rel. Benwell v., Sup.	162	P.2d	1
Frank v. Repp & Mott, App.	161	P.2d	279
Freitas v. Marsh, App.	161	P.2d	565
French v. French, App.	161	P.2d	687
French; Morgan v., App.	161	P.2d	800
Fruns v. Albertsworth, App.	162	P.2d	666
Fry; Farrar v., Super.	162	P.2d	73
Frye; Opp v., App.	161	P.2d	235
Garcia v. California Employment Stabilization Commission, App.	161	P.2d	972
Gazzera v. City and County of San Francisco, App.	161	P.2d	806
Geisendorfer v. Rainbow Mill & Lumber Co., App.	161	P.2d	561
General Petroleum Corp.; Sutter v., App.	161	P.2d	817
Gerbel; People v., App.	162	P.2d	946
Giles; People v., Super.	161	P.2d	623
Gilliam, Ex parte, Sup.	161	P.2d	793
Glougie; Agdeppa v., App.	162	P.2d	944
Godsey; People v., App.	162	P.2d	46
Goldberg v. Pacific Emp. Ins. Co., App.	161	P.2d	272
Goodenough; Rivera v., App.	162	P.2d	498
Gray; Bracey v., App.	162	P.2d	314
Green; Dolton v., App.	162	P.2d	700
Gregoris; People v., App.	161	P.2d	568
Grimes v. Nicholson, App.	162	P.2d	934
Hadges v. Kouris, App.	162	P.2d	476
Hagen; Hyde v., App.	161	P.2d	242
Haitian Coffee Co.; Hicks v., App.	161	P.2d	564
Haitian Coffee Co.; Whitaker v., App.	161	P.2d	564
Hamilton v. Salopek, App.	161	P.2d	955
Hargrave; Zumwalt v., App.	162	P.2d	957
Harlan v. Harlan, App.	161	P.2d	490
Harris v. Joffe, App.	161	P.2d	694
Harshaw; People v., App.	161	P.2d	978
Hays v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, App.	162	P.2d	679
Heglin v. F. C. B. A. Market, App.	161	P.2d	976
Henry J. Kaiser Co.; Huber v., App.	162	P.2d	693
Herrington; Judson v., App.	162	P.2d	931
Heyman Bros.; Pullen v., App.	162	P.2d	961
Hicks v. Haitian Coffee Co., App.	161	P.2d	564
Hill v. Nelson, App.	162	P.2d	927
Hillside Memorial Park; North Side Property Owners' Ass'n v., App.	161	P.2d	618
Himes v. Los Angeles County, Sup.	161	P.2d	10
Hopkins; Olwell v., App.	162	P.2d	297
Horowitz; People v., App.	161	P.2d	833
Howard v. Howard, App.	161	P.2d	681
Howard v. Loud, App.	161	P.2d	49
Huber v. Henry J. Kaiser Co., App.	162	P.2d	693
Huber v. Huber, App.	161	P.2d	54
Huebotter v. Follett, App.	161	P.2d	481

	Vol.		Page
Hughes; People v., App.	161	P.2d	285
Hunt v. Authier, App.	161	P.2d	487
Hyde v. Hagen, App.	161	P.2d	242
Independent Laundry v. Railroad Commission, App.	161	P.2d	827
Industrial Acc. Commission; Bethlehem Steel Corp. v., App.	161	P.2d	18
Industrial Acc. Commission; Bethlehem Steel Co. v., App.	161	P.2d	59
Industrial Acc. Commission; Evans v., App.	162	P.2d	488
Industrial Acc. Commission; Simmons Co. v., App.	161	P.2d	702
Industrial Acc. Commission; Williams v., App.	161	P.2d	979
Industrial Acc. Commission; Wolski v., App.	161	P.2d	283
Industrial Indem. Exchange v. State Bd. of Equalization, Sup.	161	P.2d	222
Jackson; People v., App.	161	P.2d	809
Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co.; Coit v., App.	161	P.2d	812
Joffe; Harris v., App.	161	P.2d	694
John & Wade; Lamar v., App.	161	P.2d	970
Jones v. Mortimer, App.	162	P.2d	492
Jones v. Tierney-Sinclair, App.	162	P.2d	669
Jones; Western Coal & Min. Co. v., App.	161	P.2d	418
Judson v. Herrington, App.	162	P.2d	931
Kaluzok v. Brisson, App.	161	P.2d	64
Kapitan v. Smith, App.	161	P.2d	270
Keith Ry. Equipment Co.; People v., App.	161	P.2d	244
Kell v. McIntosh, App.	161	P.2d	407
King; Larson v., App.	162	P.2d	974
King v. Los Angeles County Fair Ass'n, App.	161	P.2d	468
Kirk v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., Sup.	161	P.2d	673
Knutzen's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	598
Kouris; Hadges v., App.	162	P.2d	476
Lair's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	288
La Malfa v. Piombo Bros., App.	161	P.2d	964
Lamar v. John & Wade, App.	161	P.2d	970
Lang v. Barry, App.	161	P.2d	949
La Prade v. Department of Water and Power of City of Los Angeles, Sup.	162	P.2d	13
Larson v. Board of Police and Fire Pension Com'rs of City of Long Beach, App.	162	P.2d	33
Larson v. King, App.	162	P.2d	974
Lasater v. Oakland Scavenger Co., App.	162	P.2d	486
Lascy; Baird v., App.	161	P.2d	996
Lauszus; Sacramento County v., App.	161	P.2d	460
Lavenbarg v. Shetrone, Sup.	162	P.2d	918
Lindley; People v., Sup.	161	P.2d	227
Lingg's Estate, In re, App.	162	P.2d	707
Litvinuk v. Litvinuk, Sup.	162	P.2d	8
Loncaric, Ex parte, App.	162	P.2d	313
Long; People v., App.	161	P.2d	278
Los Angeles, City of, v. Cole, App.	162	P.2d	306
Los Angeles County; Board of Social Welfare v., Sup.	162	P.2d	627
Los Angeles County; Board of Social Welfare v., Sup.	162	P.2d	630
Los Angeles County; Board of Social Welfare v., Sup.	162	P.2d	635
Los Angeles County; Eastern-Columbia, Inc., v., App.	161	P.2d	407
Los Angeles County; Himes v., Sup.	161	P.2d	10
Los Angeles County; North Side Property Owners' Ass'n v., App.	161	P.2d	613
Los Angeles County; Trabue Pittman Corp. v., App.	161	P.2d	10
Los Angeles County Fair Ass'n; King v., App.	161	P.2d	468
Los Angeles Ry. Corp.; Combs v., App.	162	P.2d	68
Los Angeles Ry. Corp.; Kirk v., Sup.	161	P.2d	673
Loud; Howard v., App.	161	P.2d	49

	Vol.		Page
Loud's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	49
Loynes; Mortimer v., App.	162	P.2d	479
Lozano v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., App.	161	P.2d	74
Lusher v. Silver, App.	161	P.2d	472
Lynch v. Bell, App.	161	P.2d	24
Lynch's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	24
McCarty; Ziesemer v., App.	162	P.2d	857
MacFarlane; People v., App.	162	P.2d	937
McIntosh; Kell v., App.	161	P.2d	407
McIntosh v. McIntosh, App.	161	P.2d	407
MacIsaac v. Pozzo, Sup.	161	P.2d	449
McKinney; People v., App.	161	P.2d	957
McMains; Stucker v., App.	161	P.2d	997
McVickers, Ex parte, App.	161	P.2d	609
Mahoney; Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N. Y. v., App.	161	P.2d	944
Mahoney v. Mahoney, App.	161	P.2d	944
Mais v. Poinsettia Land Co., App.	162	P.2d	925
Majors v. Majors, App.	161	P.2d	494
Mambretti; Ferrari v., App.	161	P.2d	275
Marlenee v. Warkentin, App.	162	P.2d	321
Marsh; Freitas v., App.	161	P.2d	565
Martin v. Mut. Ben. Health & Acc. Ass'n, App.	162	P.2d	980
Maxwell; People v., Super.	162	P.2d	743
Meier v. Meier, App.	162	P.2d	950
Melone; People v., App.	162	P.2d	505
Mendez; People v., Sup.	161	P.2d	929
Monheit; Bernard v., App.	162	P.2d	41
Monheit v. Cigna, App.	162	P.2d	41
Morgan v. French, App.	161	P.2d	800
Mortimer; Jones v., App.	162	P.2d	492
Mortimer v. Loynes, App.	162	P.2d	479
Mortimer; Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. v., App.	161	P.2d	684
Moulton; People v., App.	162	P.2d	317
Murray; Burnsed v., App.	161	P.2d	413
Mut. Ben. Health & Acc. Ass'n; Martin v., App.	162	P.2d	980
Nelson v. Abraham, App.	162	P.2d	833
Nelson; Hill v., App.	162	P.2d	927
Nicholson; Grimes v., App.	162	P.2d	934
Nieto; Stowe v., App.	162	P.2d	837
North Side Property Owners' Ass'n v. Hillside Memorial Park, App.	161	P.2d	618
North Side Property Owners' Ass'n v. Los Angeles County, App.	161	P.2d	613
Oakland Scavenger Co.; Lasater v., App.	162	P.2d	486
Olds; Peebler v., App.	162	P.2d	953
Olwell v. Hopkins, App.	162	P.2d	297
O'Morrow v. Borad, App.	161	P.2d	28
One 1940 Buick 8 Sedan, License No. 1F500, Engine No. 74019475; People v., App.	161	P.2d	264
One 1940 Buick Sedan, Engine No. 53795291; People v., App.	162	P.2d	318
One 1941 Chrysler Tudor Engine No. C 30 8808; People v., App.	162	P.2d	653
Opp v. Frye, App.	161	P.2d	235
Pacific Emp. Ins. Co.; Goldberg v., App.	161	P.2d	272
Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.; Cohn v., App.	161	P.2d	74
Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.; Lozano v., App.	161	P.2d	74
Pacific States Sav. & Loan Co. v. Mortimer, App.	161	P.2d	684
Palm v. Weber, App.	162	P.2d	863
Partee; People v., App.	161	P.2d	586
Peebler v. Olds, App.	162	P.2d	953
People v. Ash, App.	161	P.2d	415

	Vol.		Page
People v. Barnett, App.	161	P.2d	571
People v. Beltowski, App.	162	P.2d	59
People v. Bernstein, App.	161	P.2d	381
People v. Bradley, App.	162	P.2d	38
People v. Brown, App.	162	P.2d	360
People v. Burke, App.	161	P.2d	303
People v. Butler, App.	161	P.2d	401
People v. Castro, Super.	162	P.2d	743
People v. Collup, App.	161	P.2d	576
People v. Crinos, App.	162	P.2d	64
People v. Crinos, App.	162	P.2d	837
People v. Day, App.	161	P.2d	803
People v. Dobbs, App.	161	P.2d	46
People v. Dreyer, App.	162	P.2d	468
People v. Finkel, App.	161	P.2d	298
People v. Gerbel, App.	162	P.2d	946
People v. Giles, Super.	161	P.2d	623
People v. Godsey, App.	162	P.2d	46
People v. Gregoris, App.	161	P.2d	568
People v. Harshaw, App.	161	P.2d	978
People v. Horowitz, App.	161	P.2d	833
People v. Hughes, App.	161	P.2d	285
People v. Jackson, App.	161	P.2d	809
People v. Keith Ry. Equipment Co., App.	161	P.2d	244
People v. Lindley, Sup.	161	P.2d	227
People v. Long, App.	161	P.2d	278
People v. MacFarlane, App.	162	P.2d	937
People v. McKinney, App.	161	P.2d	957
People v. Maxwell, Super.	162	P.2d	743
People v. Melone, App.	162	P.2d	505
People v. Mendez, Sup.	161	P.2d	929
People v. Moulton, App.	162	P.2d	317
People v. One 1940 Buick 8 Sedan, License No. 1F500, Engine No. 74019475, App.	161	P.2d	264
People v. One 1940 Buick Sedan, Engine No. 53795291, App.	162	P.2d	318
People v. One 1941 Chrysler Tudor Engine No. C 30 8808, App.	162	P.2d	653
People v. Partee, App.	161	P.2d	586
People v. Riley, App.	162	P.2d	64
People v. Sarazzawski, Sup.	161	P.2d	934
People v. Shields, App.	161	P.2d	475
People v. Sidwell, Sup.	162	P.2d	913
People v. Simeone, Sup.	161	P.2d	369
People v. Smith, Sup.	161	P.2d	941
People v. Smith, App.	162	P.2d	475
People v. Smittcamp, App.	161	P.2d	983
People v. Stolzoff, Super.	162	P.2d	743
People v. Triplett, App.	161	P.2d	397
People v. Vaughn, App.	161	P.2d	293
People v. Vicencio, App.	162	P.2d	650
People v. Walton, Super.	161	P.2d	498
People v. Westmire, App.	162	P.2d	988
People v. White, App.	162	P.2d	862
People ex rel. Benwell v. Foutz, Sup.	162	P.2d	1
Petroleum Midway Co. v. Zahn, App.	161	P.2d	947
Philippi's Estate, In re, App.	161	P.2d	1006
Phillips v. City of Pasadena, Sup.	162	P.2d	625
Piombo Bros.; La Malfa v., App.	161	P.2d	964
Pleitner; Py v., App.	161	P.2d	393

	Vol.		Page
Poinsettia Land Co.; Mais v., App.	162	P.2d	925
Porteous v. Bank of America Nat. Trust & Sav. Ass'n, App.	162	P.2d	679
Pozzo; MacIsaac v., Sup.	161	P.2d	449
Pullen v. Heyman Bros., App.	162	P.2d	961
Py v. Pleitner, App.	161	P.2d	393
Railroad Commission; Independent Laundry v., App.	161	P.2d	827
Rainbow Mill & Lumber Co.; Geisendorfer v., App.	161	P.2d	561
Rand v. Bossen, Sup.	162	P.2d	457
Rattray v. Scudder, App.	161	P.2d	260
Remmers v. Ciciliot, App.	161	P.2d	257
Repp & Mott; Frank v., App.	161	P.2d	279
Republic Productions; Brown v., Sup.	161	P.2d	796
Republic Productions; Brown v., Sup.	161	P.2d	798
Reynolds v. State Bd. of Equalization, App.	162	P.2d	735
Riley; People v., App.	162	P.2d	64
Rivera v. Goodenough, App.	162	P.2d	498
Roberts; Stiebel v., Sup.	162	P.2d	461
Roberts' Estate, In re, Sup.	162	P.2d	461
Robson v. Union Pac. R. Co., App.	161	P.2d	821
Sacramento County v. Lauszus, App.	161	P.2d	460
Salopek; Hamilton v., App.	161	P.2d	955
Samaritan Institution; Wood v., Sup.	161	P.2d	556
San Diego, City of, v. California Water & Tel. Co., App.	162	P.2d	684
San Diego County; Stevenson v., Sup.	161	P.2d	553
Sarazzawski; People v., Sup.	161	P.2d	934
Schaub; Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v., App.	162	P.2d	966
Schultz v. Schultz, App.	161	P.2d	36
Scudder; Rattray v., App.	161	P.2d	260
Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. Schaub, App.	162	P.2d	966
Security First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles; Simpson v., App.	162	P.2d	494
Serns v. Serns, App.	161	P.2d	417
Shetrone; Lavenbarg v., Sup.	162	P.2d	918
Shields; People v., App.	161	P.2d	475
Shnell v. Brunton, App.	161	P.2d	288
Sidwell; People v., Sup.	162	P.2d	913
Silver; Lusher v., App.	161	P.2d	472
Simeone; People v., Sup.	161	P.2d	369
Simmons Co. v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	161	P.2d	702
Simpson v. Security First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles, App.	162	P.2d	494
Skrbek; Smith v., App.	162	P.2d	674
Slaughter v. Dempsey, App.	162	P.2d	843
Smith v. Beauchamp, App.	162	P.2d	662
Smith; Douillard v., App.	161	P.2d	378
Smith; Kapitan v., App.	161	P.2d	270
Smith; People v., Sup.	161	P.2d	941
Smith; People v., App.	162	P.2d	475
Smith v. Skrbek, App.	162	P.2d	674
Smittcamp; People v., App.	161	P.2d	983
Southern Pac. Co.; Compton v., App.	161	P.2d	40
Spahn v. Spahn, App.	162	P.2d	53
Sprague v. Fauver, App.	162	P.2d	865
State; Burgess v., App.	162	P.2d	855
State Bar of Cal.; Bennett v., Sup.	162	P.2d	5
State Bar of Cal.; Christopher v., Sup.	161	P.2d	1
State Bd. of Equalization; Covert v., App.	162	P.2d	717
State Bd. of Equalization; Industrial Indem. Exchange v., Sup.	161	P.2d	222
State Bd. of Equalization; Reynolds v., App.	162	P.2d	735
Stevens' Estate, In re, Sup.	162	P.2d	918

	Vol.		Page
Stevenson v. San Diego County, Sup.	161	P.2d	553
Stiebel v. Roberts, Sup.	162	P.2d	461
Stolzoff; People v., Super.	162	P.2d	743
Stowe v. Nieto, App.	162	P.2d	837
Strudthoff v. Yates, App.	162	P.2d	845
Strudthoff's Estate, In re, App.	162	P.2d	845
Stucker v. McMains, App.	161	P.2d	997
Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County; Tabor v., App.	162	P.2d	869
Sutter v. General Petroleum Corp., App.	161	P.2d	817
Tabor v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, App.	162	P.2d	869
Tierney-Sinclair v. Jones, App.	162	P.2d	669
Tomalino; Wilson v., App.	161	P.2d	1006
Trabue Pittman Corp. v. Los Angeles County, App.	161	P.2d	10
Triplett; People v., App.	161	P.2d	397
Trujillo v. Trujillo, App.	162	P.2d	640
Tucker v. Fontes, App.	161	P.2d	697
Turner; Busch v., Sup.	161	P.2d	456
Tyra v. Board of Police and Fire Pension Com'rs of City of Long Beach, App.	162	P.2d	35
Union Pac. R. Co.; Robson v., App.	161	P.2d	821
Valenzuela, In re, App.	162	P.2d	301
Vaughn; People v., App.	161	P.2d	293
Vicencio; People v., App.	162	P.2d	650
Wagnor v. Blume, App.	161	P.2d	1001
Walton; People v., Super.	161	P.2d	498
Warkentin; Marlenee v., App.	162	P.2d	321
Weber; Palm v., App.	162	P.2d	863
Weisbecker v. Weisbecker, App.	161	P.2d	990
Western Coal & Min. Co. v. Jones, App.	161	P.2d	418
Westmire; People v., App.	162	P.2d	988
Wetzel v. Wetzel, App.	162	P.2d	299
Whitaker v. Haitian Coffee Co., App.	161	P.2d	564
White; People v., App.	162	P.2d	862
Wilkins v. City of San Bernardino, App.	162	P.2d	711
Williams v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	161	P.2d	979
Wilson v. City of Long Beach, App.	162	P.2d	658
Wilson v. Tomalino, App.	161	P.2d	1006
Wolski v. Industrial Acc. Commission, App.	161	P.2d	283
Wood v. Brown, App.	162	P.2d	859
Wood v. Samaritan Institution, Sup.	161	P.2d	556
Yates v. Strudthoff, App.	162	P.2d	845
Zahn v. Petroleum Midway Co., App.	161	P.2d	947
Zakaessian v. Zakaessian, App.	161	P.2d	677
Ziesemer v. McCarty, App.	162	P.2d	857
Zumwalt v. Hargrave, App.	162	P.2d	957

CALIFORNIA REPORTER

161 PACIFIC REPORTER

SECOND SERIES

26 Cal.2d 663

CHRISTOPHER v. STATE BAR OF CALIFORNIA.

L. A. 19081.

Supreme Court of California.
June 29, 1945.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
July 26, 1945.

1. Attorney and client 🔑49

State Bar had jurisdiction to take disciplinary proceedings against an attorney who was also serving as justice of the peace for unprofessional conduct in that he acted as attorney for plaintiff in an action filed in a justice's court of township in which he resided, as against contention that offense was against the judicial office of justice of peace, which would require removal from office and not against the legal profession or practice of law, which would require discipline. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 103g, 171; St.1939, pp. 348, 355, §§ 6002, 6068(a, b); Const. art. 6, § 18.

2. Attorney and client 🔑53(2)

Evidence supported finding that attorney who was also serving as justice of peace was guilty of unprofessional conduct in that he acted as attorney for plaintiff in an action filed in a justice's court in township in which he resided, so as to justify suspension from the practice of law for a period of six months. Code Civ.Proc. § 171.

3. Attorney and client 🔑38

The statute, in prescribing duties of an attorney and imposing penalties for a breach thereof, did not manifest intent that moral turpitude, dishonesty, or corruption should be discovered as a separate and distinct element of the act. St.1939, p. 357, §§ 6101, 6103.

4. Attorney and client 🔑58

Proof that attorney who was also serving as justice of the peace acted as attorney for plaintiff in an action filed in a justice's court of township in which he resided, in violation of statute, involved moral turpitude sufficient to justify attorney's suspension. Code Civ.Proc. § 171, St.1939, pp. 355, 357, §§ 6068(a, b), 6101, 6103, 6106.

CARTER and SCHAUER JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Proceeding by Charles E. Christopher against the State Bar of California, to review recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be suspended from the practice of law for the period of six months.

Petitioner suspended for a period of six months.

J. E. Simpson, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Henry F. Prince, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is a proceeding to review the recommendation of the Board of Governors of the State Bar that petitioner be suspended from the practice of the law for the period of six months.

The petitioner was admitted to the bar of this state on March 18, 1927. From January, 1935, to January 5, 1943, he was justice of the peace of San Gabriel township in Los Angeles County. On May 26, 1943, he received a notice to show cause why he should not be disciplined for unprofessional conduct in that he acted as attorney for the plaintiff in an action filed on July 7, 1939, in the justice's court of San Gabriel township and thereafter prosecuted the action to judgment at a time when he was prohibited by section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure from practicing law in that court; and that the conduct of the petitioner in the premises involved moral turpitude.

The petitioner had theretofore acted as the attorney for Linda Sandoval and others and had received from them a promissory note payable to himself for $85 on account of legal services rendered. The note was unpaid except as to $10. The petitioner assigned the note to his wife. Acting as his wife's attorney he caused a complaint to be prepared entitled Winnie W. Christopher v. Linda Sandoval et al., in which it was sought to recover the sum of $75 with interest, costs and $20 attorney fees. The petitioner signed the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff and caused it to be filed in said justice's court on July 7, 1939. On August 2, 1939, he caused an order to enter the default of the defendants to be filed and a judgment to be entered in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants in the sums demanded in the complaint. On the same day he notarized the oath of his secretary to the cost bill. On August 25, 1939, as attorney for the plaintiff, he caused an abstract of judgment to be recorded in the office of the county recorder of said county. On March 15, 1943, about two and one-half months after he had ceased to be a justice of the peace in said township he personally requested that a writ of execution be prepared and issued for the total sum of $107.99, including $20 attorney's fee, and directed that the writ be executed.

In response to the notice to show cause the petitioner filed an answer in which he did not deny the commencement and prosecution to judgment of the action as outlined in the notice to show cause but denied that those steps had been taken "knowingly and willingly" as charged; and alleged affirmatively (1) that he signed the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff and as a notary public took and subscribed to the oath of his wife in verifying the complaint through inadvertence and that the other steps leading to and including the entry of judgment were taken during his absence on vacation and without his knowledge; (2) that the notice to show cause did not state facts which, if true, would involve moral turpitude; (3) that if the facts alleged constituted an offense of any kind it would be an offense against his office as justice of the peace, and that The State Bar of California was without jurisdiction over the petitioner for acts committed against that office; and (4) that in 1939 the district attorney of Los Angeles County presented all of the facts alleged in the notice to show cause to the grand jury of that county whose duty it was to investigate offenses of public officials including justices of the peace, with the result that the petitioner appeared before, but no action was taken by, that body.

The petitioner appeared at the hearing before the local committee. The jurisdictional point, at once presented by him, was sustained by a vote of two to one. The proceeding was certified to the Board of Governors for dismissal. Thereafter the board decided in favor of jurisdiction and referred the matter to the local committee for a hearing and recommendation in due course. After a full hearing held in November, 1943, the local committee found that the petitioner had committed the acts as alleged and not through inadvertence, but failed to find that moral turpitude was involved. It recommended a public reproval. The board adopted the findings of the local committee and in addition concluded that the conduct charged and found to have taken place involved moral turpitude within the meaning of section 6106 of the State Bar Act, St.1939, p. 357, and has recommended to this court that the petitioner be suspended for a period of six months.

On review three questions are involved: 1. Did The State Bar have jurisdiction to take disciplinary proceedings against the petitioner? 2. Are the findings supported by the evidence? and 3. Do the acts charged and found to have been committed by the petitioner constitute cause for disciplinary action?

[1] On the first question the petitioner reiterates his contention that the charges, if true, constituted offenses against his office of justice of the peace, and not offenses against the profession of the law.

Section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "No justice, or judge of a court of record * * * shall practice law in any court of this state * * * during his continuance in office; nor shall any justice of the peace practice law before any justice's court in the county in which he resides."

As a member of the bar the petitioner had the right to practice law in all of the courts of this state with the sole exception provided in section 171, that is, that he could not practice law in any justice's court in Los Angeles County while he was a justice of the peace in that county. During the time that he was both a practicing lawyer and a justice of the peace he was acting in a dual capacity with corresponding and reciprocal obligations to the courts and the profession. He was just as much controlled by section 171 in the practice of the law as he was curtailed in his professional activities as a justice of the peace. As a general law of this state section 171 has the same meaning and effect as if it provided that "no attorney at law shall practice law in any justice's court in the county in which he resides while he is a justice of the peace in that county." Practice of the law in violation of that section is an offense against the profession of the law, and an attorney so offending is subject to disciplinary proceedings through the medium of the State Bar Act even though it might be said that thereby he would offend also against the office of justice of the peace. When it is determined that a law of the state relating to his professional activities has been violated by an attorney at law, the court on review should not be astute to relieve him from the consequences of his act because forsooth he might suffer some other penalty for an offense against his judicial office; nor should he be permitted to use his judicial office to shield him from the consequences of his delinqency as an attorney at law.

The laws of the state, both constitutional and statutory, have been unremitting in an endeavor to safeguard the administration of justice from both the actual and the apparent conflict of interest between court and practitioner. Justices and judges of courts of record are prohibited from practicing law in any court of the state by section 18 of articie VI of the Constitution. They are excluded from membership in The State Bar by section 6002 of the State Bar Act, St.1939, p. 348. Justices of the peace in certain cities are prohibited from practicing law "in or out of court" during their continuance in office. Code Civ.Proc. § 103g. Notwithstanding the right of the petitioner to practice law during his continuance in office, he was bound to observe the statutory injunction not to practice before any justice's court in the county in which he resided. In the conduct of his practice it was his duty "to support the Constitution and laws of the United States and of this State," and "to maintain the respect due to the courts of justice." State Bar Act, § 6068, subds. (a) and (b), St.1939, p. 355. Section 171 was binding on the petitioner both as a justice of the peace and as a lawyer. By violating that statute he was nurturing a conflict in interest which the fundamental and statutory law prohibited. Since his right to practice law continued, he remained amenable to the processes of The State Bar.

The petitioner seeks to sustain his contention on the jurisdictional point by reliance on the Hardy case. State Bar v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 323, 278 P. 432. That case can be of no assistance to him. There The State Bar sought to prosecute proceedings against a judge of the superior court, a court of record, for the alleged practice of the law contrary to his obligation as a member of the legal profession. This court held that The State Bar was without jurisdiction so to proceed for the reason that the right of the accused to practice law was suspended under constitutional provision during his continuance in office and that as he was not a member of The State Bar he was not amenable to its disciplinary processes.

The jurisdiction of the offense was therefore within the accusatory powers of The State Bar, and the decision of the Board of Governors on the point was correct.

[2] On the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings of the local committee and of the Board of Governors the petitioner contends that the evidence supports only the conclusion that he did not know what he was doing when he signed the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff, the verification of his wife appended thereto, and as notary on the cost bill; that they were so signed by inadvertence, and that the subsequent steps in the litigation were taken without his knowledge. The record does not support the contention.

Miss Ellen C. Neilan was the petitioner's legal secretary from February, 1937, to April, 1942, when she became assistant clerk of the justice's court of San Gabriel township and later, in November, 1942, court clerk, a position she occupied at the time of the hearings in the proceedings before The State Bar. She testified that in the latter part of June, 1939, the petitioner handed to her the promissory note with the request that she prepare a complaint based thereon in the name of Mrs. Christopher as plaintiff and instructed her to file it in the justice's court. Before the complaint was prepared she had a conversation with the petitioner in which she called his attention to the fact that the action could not be brought in the municipal court of Los Angeles because the parties defendant were residents of San Gabriel township. She testified that she had no recollection of a conversation in which she was told, as claimed by the petitioner, to file the complaint in his name in the justice's court.

The complaint was verified by Mrs. Christopher and her oath was subscribed to by the petitioner as notary public. A certified copy of the complaint is an exhibit in this proceeding. In support of the contention of the petitioner that he signed the complaint and verification by inadvertence he relies on the fact as testified by Miss Neilan that it was her custom to clip back pages for his ready signature on the appropriate page, and his own statement that he did not notice that he was verifying his wife's signature. Miss Neilan stated that she did not remember whether she followed this practice on that occasion, but that she recalled that Mrs. Christopher signed the verification on her desk and that Mr. Christopher was there at the time and signed the endorsement on the note, the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff, and the verification as a notary; that petitioner left about July 1, 1939, for a month's vacation and she filed the complaint on July 7th; that in accordance with her usual custom she signed the petitioner's name to the order to enter the default judgment; that she signed her own name to the memorandum of costs, which the petitioner notarized on his return prior to August 2nd. The default judgment was entered and the cost bill was filed on August 2, 1939. She testified that she prepared the writ of execution and issued it in March, 1943, when she was clerk of the court, at the personal request of the petitioner.

The petitioner testified that he instructed Miss Neilan to commence suit on the note in Mrs. Christopher's name in the municipal court in Los Angeles; that following the conversation concerning the impropriety of filing the complaint in the municipal court he instructed her to file it in the justice's court in his own name. He admitted his signature on the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff, and on another page his signature as notary public on the affidavit of verification signed by his wife. He stated that he signed the complaint and verification affidavit when his wife was not there, but that he had no distinct recollection of signing the same because it was the practice of his secretary to prepare papers and stack those requiring his signature on his desk folded back and clipped so that only the signature page appeared; that the practice was followed in this case; and that he did not observe at the time that the complaint was entitled in the name of his wife as plaintiff; that he thereupon departed on vacation for the month of July, during which time another justice of the peace in the county sat in the San Gabriel township court; that after a complaint was signed it was the practice in his office for his secretary to follow the matter through in default cases; that his signature as notary public appeared on the memorandum of costs and disbursements filed after his return from vacation, but that he did not notice at that time what action was involved; that the endorsement to his wife on the reverse side of the note was not cancelled because that question never came to his attention; that the first time he had notice of the facts was when the matter came before the grand jury in October, 1939, following which no proceedings were taken against him by that inquisitorial body.

The local committee made a finding that "it is not true that at the time suit was filed on said promissory note it was filed in the name of Winnie W. Christopher through inadvertence, but that said complaint was filed in said court in the name of the plaintiff therein named with the full knowledge of" the petitioner. Similarly the committee found that the acts of the petitioner in causing to be filed the order to enter default judgment including $20 as attorney fees, and the memorandum of costs and disbursements including $1.00 as fees for notarial services performed by the petitioner, were not done through inadvertence but with the full knowledge of the petitioner. Likewise as to the abstract of judgment filed for record on August 25, 1939, the committee found that the acts of the petitioner were not inadvertent but were with his full knowledge.

It is obvious that the local committee and the Board of Governors in the light of the record evidence believed the testimony of Miss Neilan and refused to believe the testimony of the petitioner on the vital questions involved. An examination of the transcript and the exhibits in the proceeding supports the conclusion that there is a sound basis for not according full credit to the testimony of the petitioner.

The petitioner admitted that at the time of the transactions in question he was familiar with the provisions of section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure and that he knew it was improper for him to appear as attorney on behalf of anyone in an action filed in his own court. His claimed inadvertence in signing the complaint as attorney for the plaintiff, in notarizing the cost bill and particularly in notarizing his wife's verification of the complaint is persuasively negatived by an examination of the exhibits. The complaint shows that he signed it as attorney for the plaintiff immediately above the typewritten words showing that relationship. His wife signed the verification. The petitioner's signature is almost immediately opposite and very near the signature of his wife. Aside from other implications arising from his action as a notary public, as he claims it took place, credulity is taxed to the breaking point to believe that when he signed as notary he did not know that he was taking the verification of his wife. The facts and circumstances make the asserted custom of clipping back pages dubious support for his claim of inadvertence. He admitted that when he obtained the writ of execution in March, 1943, he knew all of the facts surrounding the grand jury investigation. Since he personally obtained that writ he should not be heard to say that he did not know that the item of attorney's fees was specifically included therein. Even if it be assumed that he did not, through inadvertence, appreciate that the item of attorney's fees was sought by the allegations and the prayer of the complaint, he cannot avoid knowledge of the inclusion of that item in the writ of execution. Since he must have known of such inclusion, he likewise must have known that he was not entitled to an attorney's fee if he was prosecuting the action in his own name as plaintiff. Certain it is that if he believed that the action had been prosecuted in his own name, he should have taken steps to relieve his former clients, the judgment debtors in the case, from the payment of the unjust exaction of an unauthorized attorney's fee. He took no such steps. It must therefore be concluded that the evidence is sufficient to support the findings of the local committee and the Board of Governors and that it would be improper, under all of the circumstances of the case, for this court, in exercising its supervisory powers in state bar matters, to find contrary to those findings.

[3, 4] On the final point the petitioner contends that the facts as found would not, if true, disclose moral turpitude on his part. The presence of moral turpitude sufficient to justify disbarment or suspension may be disclosed under varying circumstances. For example, if an attorney is convicted of a felony or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude the record of a final judgment of conviction is conclusive against him. State Bar Act, § 6101, St. 1939, p. 357. The commission of an act of moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, whether committed in the course of his relations as attorney or otherwise, is sufficient cause for suspension or disbarment. State Bar Act, § 6106; cf. Jacobs v. State Bar, 219 Cal. 59, 25 P.2d 401. Such provisions were undoubtedly included in the State Bar Act because it was realized that the acts of an attorney in violation of law, aside from any breach of his duty as an attorney, might reflect upon his integrity and fitness as an attorney and require his suspension or disbarment. But in prescribing the duties of an attorney and imposing penalties for a breach thereof, it was not considered that moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption should be discovered as a separate and distinct element of the act. When it was provided in section 6103 of the State Bar Act that "* * * any violation of the oath taken by him, or of his duties as such attorney, constitute causes for disbarment or suspension," such violation was to be deemed sufficient to support a disciplinary proceeding. We are not here dealing with the case of a violation of a traffic or other law applying to the public in general and which has no relation to the duties of an attorney. The law violated by the petitioner was one specially directed to him for his observance and faithful adherence as a justice of the peace and as an attorney, the violation of which would tend to bring the courts and the profession into disrepute. To say that the violation of such a law does not constitute grounds for discipline would be to set at naught a salutary legislative enactment designed to safeguard the public as well as the attorney in professional relationships.

Since it must be held that the petitioner knowingly practiced law in violation of a statute governing his duties as a lawyer his conduct in that respect was a breach of his duty to support the Constitution and laws of this state and to maintain the respect due to courts of justice. State Bar Act, § 6068(a) and (b). It was also a violation of the oath of an attorney prescribed by section 6067 of the State Bar Act. Such conduct therefore constituted cause for discipline pursuant to section 6103 of that act.

In accordance with the recommendation of the Board of Governors, the petitioner is hereby suspended from the practice of the law in this state for a period of six months commencing thirty days from and after the date of the filing of this opinion.

CARTER, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The majority opinion in this case evades the material issues and disregards pertinent authorities which should control the disposition of the case. While giving lip service to the so-called Hardy case (State Bar v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 323, 278 P. 432), it utterly disregards the holding in that case and emasculates the doctrine therein enunciated. It fails to even mention the numerous cases which hold that a violation of a statute relating to the duties of justice of the peace is an offense against the judicial office and not against the legal profession or practice of law. It does not attempt to differentiate or suggest any basis for a distinction between a violation by a justice of the peace of the provisions of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure and a violation of the provisions of section 171 of that code. It fails to suggest any basis for its holding that petitioner's acts involved moral turpitude.

In my opinion the offense of a justice of the peace in violating section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if proven, may amount to such misconduct in office as would subject him to removal from office in the manner provided by law. It is now held by the majority that it also places him in peril of proceedings which may destroy his eligibility to practice his profession or remove him from his membership in The State Bar and thus accomplish by indirection his disqualification to hold, and hence, necessarily his removal from office for which the Legislature has set up a direct, if not exclusive mode of procedure. Pen.Code, § 758 et seq. A justice of the peace of a Class A township must be an attorney at law. Code Civ.Proc. § 159a.

In State Bar v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 323, 278 P. 432, 438, sought to be distinguished by the majority opinion, attention was directed to the foregoing dangerous and untoward consequences. It was there held that The State Bar was without jurisdiction to proceed against a judge of the superior court for the reason that the right of such judge to practice law was suspended during his continuance in office. In the course of the opinion this court stated: "There would seem to exist many reasons, rooted in public policy, why this public and, it may well be said, powerful corporation, considering its membership and the relation thereof to the administration of justice through the judicial arm of the state government, should not lightly be held to be invested with the power and authority over judicial officers which in the instant case it has sought to exercise." Notwithstanding this declaration, I am disposed to hold that inasmuch as a justice of the peace may act in the capacity of a lawyer with certain restrictions it may be desirable that The State Bar be not completely short of regulatory powers over him. However, I cannot agree with the majority, that this court should not be astute to heed any demarcation between an offense committed against a judicial office and one that may be committed against the profession of an attorney at law. In our system of government, the independence of the judiciary is fundamental. It is essential in all courts that the judges who are appointed or elected to administer the law should be permitted to administer it under the protection of the law, independently and freely, without favor and fear. The proper method for ridding the people of any district, county, township, or municipal officer, for misconduct in office is set forth in section 758 et seq. of the Penal Code. A justice of the peace is in need of protection similar to any other judge or justice, hence, should a disciplinary proceeding against an incumbent justice of the peace come before us, I do not want to be foreclosed by the instant decision from considering the applicability and propriety of the holding in the case of State Bar v. Superior Court, supra, that the regulatory power of The State Bar over a justice of the peace be deemed suspended, at least, to the extent that his right to practice law has been suspended. Thus, if what is charged against him is a violation of that suspension, it would not be a matter for State Bar action, but would leave the matter of his qualification to hold office to be determined in the manner provided by law.

In some jurisdictions it is held as a logical sequence of the rule that a judge cannot be disciplined, as a lawyer, during his tenure of office because of misconduct, that such acts cannot be made the basis of disbarment proceedings afterwards. In re Jones, 202 La. 729, 12 So.2d 795; In re Meraux, 202 La. 736, 12 So.2d 798. However, it has been determined otherwise in this state. See In re Craig, 12 Cal.2d 93, 82 P.2d 442. Under this rule it would seem to follow that petitioner being no longer a justice of the peace, The State Bar has jurisdiction over his person and of the acts committed by him while he was a justice of the peace. Notwithstanding this rule it does not follow that cause for discipline has been made out in this case.

The majority opinion seeks to obviate the necessity of finding moral turpitude in the conduct attributed to petitioner by holding that the violation of section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure constitutes an offense against the profession or practice of law. Local Administrative Committee # 8 for the County of Los Angeles, before whom the disciplinary proceedings in the instant matter were initiated found that petitioner had committed the acts charged against him, but did not find any moral turpitude. The Board of Bar Governors (by a vote of 12 to 3) made an additional finding and conclusion to the effect that the conduct charged and found to have taken place involved moral turpitude. The theory of respondent, The State Bar, is that petitioner should be disciplined pursuant to section 6106 of the Business and Professions Code (State Bar Act), which provides that an attorney may be disbarred or suspended for "the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise." Petitioner has vigorously attacked the conclusion that his conduct constitutes moral turpitude. The majority opinion makes no effort to meet this attack but as aforesaid seeks to obviate the necessity thereof. In order to arrive at their conclusion that petitioner may be disciplined irrespective of the discovery of moral turpitude "as a separate and distinct element of the act," the majority have bypassed numerous authorities which distinctly hold that an offense such as charged against petitioner is an offense against the judicial office which he holds, only, and not an offense against the profession or the practice of law. State Bar v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 323, 278 P. 432; Baird v. Justice's Court, 11 Cal.App. 439, 105 P. 259; Connecticut M. Life Ins. Co. v. Most, 39 Cal.App.2d 634, 103 P.2d 1013; In re Silkman, 88 App.Div. 102, 84 N.Y.S. 1025; In re Strahl, 201 App.Div. 729, 195 N.Y.S. 385.

State Bar v. Superior Court, supra, involved an application by The State Bar for a writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court of Los Angeles County to require Carlos Hardy, a judge thereof, to testify before a committee of the Board of Governors of The State Bar investigating charges against him involving the practice of law and acceptance of $2,500 in fees while a judge of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County. Article VI, section 22 of the state Constitution then provided that: "No judge of a court of record shall practice law in any court of this state during his continuance in office." The writ was denied. During the course of the opinion this court stated: "An attorney and counselor at law who may be the incumbent of a judicial office, by essaying to practice law, does not by so doing violate any particular principle of legal ethics to which our attention has been directed. This is shown by the fact that the occupants of judicial positions in the courts of this state not of record, who are otherwise eligible so to do, may and in most instances do, practice law without any suggestion that in so doing they are violating either former or existing laws defining and regulating the ethical practices of the legal profession. The offense of a judge of a court of record who violates the foregoing provision of the Constitution is not an offense against his profession, but against his office."

In Baird v. Justice's Court, supra, a judgment of a justice's court ordering a police judge "disbarred from practicing law in the justice court of Riverside township, so long as he shall remain police judge of said city," was annulled. One ground of decision was that if as a matter of fact the police judge had violated the law by engaging in the practice of his profession before a justice of the peace, when at the same time he was occupying a judicial position, his offense is that of a judicial officer and not that of an attorney, and that if he subjected himself to any penalty by reason of misconduct, it was that provided by section 758, Penal Code (removal from office).

In Re Silkman, supra [88 App.Div. 102, 84 N.Y.S. 1027], it was urged that the New York Supreme Court, Appellate Division, had "inherent" power to discipline lawyers, and "that an offense committed by a judge in practicing, when prohibited, is likewise an offense committed by him as a lawyer, which calls for the exercise of the inherent power." It was held that if the accused "has violated the injunction of the Constitution, he has offended as surrogate, and not as an attorney. As an attorney his right to practice law is undoubted, and it is only as surrogate that it is or can be questioned, and it follows that the violation of the Constitution, if it has been violated, has been committed by him in his judicial or official, rather than in his professional capacity." A similar holding was made in Re Strahl, 201 App.Div. 729, 195 N.Y.S. 385.

The place occupied by section 171 in the Code of Civil Procedure discloses similarly that it is a disqualification or prohibition against the conduct of judges and was never intended to be a statute regulating the conduct of attorneys as such. It is found under the chapter heading: "Disqualifications of Judges." The section of the code immediately preceding, and a part of the same chapter, is the more commonly known section 170, prescribing grounds for disqualification of a "justice, judge or justice of the peace" for personal interest, interest by relationship, prior service as attorney and bias or prejudice. The chapter containing sections 170 and 171 is a part of part I, title II of the code. Part I is titled, "Courts of Justice," and title II bears the title, "Judicial Officers." On the other hand, chapter I, title V of part I of the Code of Civil Procedure as originally enacted related to attorneys as such and bore the heading, "Attorneys and Counselors at Law." The sections therein contained have for the most part been repealed and reenacted as chapter IV of the Business & Professions Code, under the heading, "Attorneys." St.1939, p. 347. These headings or titles being a part of the codes as originally enacted or amended by the Legislature may be consulted in interpreting the sections of the codes, so that they may be given effect according to their true import. Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1, 16, 16 P. 345; In re Forthmann, 118 Cal.App. 332, 336, 5 P.2d 472; 23 Cal.Jur., § 147, p. 772.

It is manifest from the foregoing authorities and what has been said that section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not purport to regulate the duties of a lawyer. Its obvious purpose is to prevent reciprocity in the administration of justice that might result if justices of the peace in the same county were allowed to practice law before each other. The consequences of the instant decision are far-reaching. If a justice of the peace may be disciplined by The State Bar for a violation of section 171 of the Code of Civil Procedure, then he may be similarly disciplined for sitting in a case in which he is interested in violation of section 170 of that code.

The charges against petitioner not amounting to an offense against the profession or the practice of law, disciplinary proceedings against him are not justified unless his conduct falls within section 6106 of the Business & Professions Code, which provides that an attorney and counselor may be disbarred or suspended for "the commission of any act involving moral turpitude, dishonesty or corruption, whether the act is committed in the course of his relations as an attorney or otherwise." A consideration of the record before us leads to the inescapable conclusion that the additional finding and conclusion of the Board of Bar Governors (not made by the local administrative committee), that petitioner "committed acts involving moral turpitude, dishonesty and corruption within the meaning of section 6106 of The State Bar Act," cannot be sustained. According to the uncontradicted evidence adduced at the hearings before the local administrative committee, the promissory note sued upon was given for a legal and just claim, and was unpaid in the amount sued for. No attempt was made to show that the makers of the note, the defendants in the action brought upon it, at any time had, or believed they had, a defense to the action. The notice to show cause does not even allege facts showing that petitioner committed any acts which were detrimental to the makers of the note or that any advantage was obtained by him contrary to their legal obligations. In Wallis v. State Bar, 21 Cal.2d 322, 131 P.2d 531, it appeared that the petitioner borrowed money from a client on a number of occasions, promising interest and large bonuses, in order to make speculative investments. Representations in regard to the investments not warranted by any information in the possession of the petitioner were made to the client. It was contended that because of the making of these representations petitioner should be suspended for six months. We held that even if the client had a cause of action for fraud against the attorney under the rule stated in section 1572 of the Civil Code, disciplinary action was not justified because there had been no intent to mislead. Cf. Bryant v. State Bar of California, 21 Cal.2d 285, 296, 131 P.2d 523; 3 Cal.Jur., § 122, p. 727.

At the time of the filing of the suit complained of, July 7, 1939, petitioner actually was not sitting in his court, but was on vacation, and remained on vacation while service of copies of the complaint and summons were made on defendants and beyond the time in which defendants were directed to answer. A visiting justice from another township sat in petitioner's court during the entire month of July, 1939. Petitioner did not act upon any issue of law or fact in the matter, but on the contrary testified that if any issue of fact or law arose while he was sitting he intended to disqualify himself and call in another justice. The action being in contract for the amount of $75, all the parties residing within San Gabriel township, and the note being payable within the township, the justice's court of that township was the proper court for institution of the action. Code Civ.Proc.1937, §§ 112, 395. As heretofore stated, it was not alleged or shown that any ulterior motive prompted bringing the action, or that the makers of the note have been deprived of a defense. At the time of issuance of execution petitioner had ceased being a justice of the peace, and the Board of Bar Governors made no finding conforming to the allegations in the notice to show cause that petitioner had caused the issuance of the writ of execution and delivered it to the constable knowing "full well that the judgment rendered in said action theretofore was wholly void and of no legal effect." The judgment was not void. Connecticut M. Life Ins. Co. v. Most, 39 Cal.App.2d 634, 103 P.2d 1013. The matters herein concerned, except the issuance and levy of execution, occurred during the summer of 1939 and were not repeated, yet no action was taken by respondent until May, 1943. Petitioner ceased being justice of the peace and returned to the full time practice of law in January, 1943. Therefore, the delay in instituting proceedings may have been caused by respondent's doubting whether or not it had jurisdiction while petitioner continued to be a justice of the peace, although according to its argument in this proceeding it had the power to investigate and maintain proceedings at all times. At any rate, in 1940, when the matter was fresh in the minds of everyone, it was investigated by the Los Angeles County grand jury, a body that had the power to present an accusation directed toward removing petitioner from office, "for willful or corrupt misconduct" (Pen.Code, § 758 et seq.), which body, after summoning and hearing witnesses, took no action. Evidently it was of the opinion that the offense, if committed, did not include "willful or corrupt misconduct in office." I am equally convinced that it did not involve moral turpitude and that therefore these proceedings should be dismissed.

The majority apparently attempt to derive some support from a statement made toward the close of the opinion, that "The presence of moral turpitude sufficient to justify disbarment or suspension may be disclosed under varying circumstances. For example, if an attorney is convicted of a felony or a misdemeanor involving moral turpitude the record of a final judgment of conviction is conclusive against him. State Bar Act, § 6101." Whatever the intended significance of the statement it clearly has no application to the facts of this case. Petitioner has not been convicted of any crime and the majority opinion fails to state any basis for holding him guilty of acts involving moral turpitude. For a definition of moral turpitude see In re O'Connell, 184 Cal. 584, 194 P. 1010; In re Craig, supra; In re Rothrock, 16 Cal.2d 449, 106 P.2d 907, 131 A.L.R. 226.

The effect of the majority opinion is to overrule the Hardy, Baird and Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance cases, and also the Rothrock case, without giving consideration to the reasoning which formed the basis of those decisions. Certainly if these cases are to be overruled, some mention should be made of them in the majority opinion and some basic reason should exist for such action. I challenge anyone to read the last cited cases and reconcile the views therein expressed with the majority opinion in this case.

From what I have said in the foregoing dissenting opinion it is obvious that the proceeding against the petitioner should be dismissed.

SCHAUER, J., concurred.

Rehearing denied; CARTER and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

HIMES v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.*

L. A. 18936.

Supreme Court of California.

June 29, 1945.

Rehearing Granted July 26, 1945.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred L. Bartlett, Judge.

Prior opinion, 152 P.2d 541.

Murphey & Davis, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and A. Curtis Smith, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, and Clyde Woodworth, City Atty., of South Gate, for respondents.

PER CURIAM.

This case presents for determination the same questions which were decided in S. Siwel Co. v. County of Los Angeles, Cal. Sup., 160 P.2d 789. It is conceded by counsel that the issues of fact and law in the two cases are identical, and that the Siwel decision will control the disposition of this appeal.

The judgment herein is reversed with directions to the trial court to overrule the general demurrer to appellant's complaint and to proceed in accordance with the views stated in S. Siwel Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra.

TRAYNOR, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent for the reasons set forth in my dissenting opinion in S. Siwel & Co. v. County of Los Angeles, Cal.Sup., 160 P.2d 789.

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 189.

TRABUE PITTMAN CORPORATION, LIMITED, v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.*

Civ. 14708.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

July 24, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 20, 1945.

1. Fixtures 🔑1

In determining whether an article is a "fixture", manner of its annexation, its adaptability to purpose for which realty is used and intention of party making annexation must be considered.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Fixture".

2. Statutes 🔑179

Definitions contained in Revenue and Taxation Code, in so far as they are comprehensive, are to be applied in taxation matters. St.1939, p. 1277, §§ 104, 105.

3. Statutes 🔑179

The Revenue and Taxation Code does not indicate a purpose to depart from time honored distinctions between real and personal property, nor to discard usual tests in reference to intention and manner of affixation of fixtures for tax purposes. St.1939, p. 1274, § 1 et seq.; p. 1277, §§ 104, 105; St.1941, p. 3111, § 405.

4. Constitutional law 🔑87

The right to own property is a basic constitutional right along with right of individuals to contract and, among themselves, determine ownership.

5. Statutes 🔑179
Taxation 🔑576

Under the rule that ownership cannot be impressed by law against will of individual, state is without power, by a series of definitions or otherwise, to attach property of one person to property of another against will of either or both and then seize property of latter because of a failure to pay taxes on property of former.

6. Municipal corporations 🔑972(3)

Where national bank leased building for a branch and in lease reserved ownership of vault door which bank installed in a manner so as to make it easily removable without damage to walls of building, door, like other bank fixtures, remained personal property of bank and could not be properly assessed by Los Angeles as an improvement to lessor's realty. St.1939, p. 1277, §§ 104, 105; St.1941, p. 3111, § 405; 12 U.S.C.A. § 548; Const. art. 13, § 16, subd. 1(a).

* Subsequent opinion 168 P.2d 156.

7. Municipal corporations ⚷972(3)

The rule that nothing may be done indirectly which cannot legally be done directly applies to attempts of Los Angeles to tax personal property of national bank, legally taxable only by state, by declaring bank fixtures installed in leased premises to be improvements taxable to lessor.

8. Municipal corporations ⚷972(3)

Los Angeles assessor could not, by a mere reclassification, convert personal property into real property and thus bring it within right to tax. 12 U.S.C.A. § 548.

9. Municipal corporations ⚷977

Lessor of building leased to national bank was entitled to recover full amount of tax payments made under protest covering assessment on vault door unit and other fixtures installed by lessee bank, which fixtures, under terms of lease, were to remain the personal property of bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Joseph W. Vickers, Judge.

Action by Trabue Pittman Corporation, Limited, against the County of Los Angeles and City of Los Angeles for a tax refund. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendants appeal.

Affirmed in part and reversed with directions in part.

Holbrook & Tarr, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff, appellant and respondent.

J. H. O'Connor, County Counsel, S. V. O. Prichard, Asst. County Counsel, and A. Curtis Smith, all of Los Angeles, for Los Angeles County.

Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Louis A. Babior, Deputy City Atty., both of Los Angeles, for City of Los Angeles.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal by both the plaintiff and the defendants from a judgment entered in a tax refund case which involves the taxability of banking fixtures installed in leased premises by a national bank, namely, the Bank of America National Trust & Savings Association. The bank's lessor, plaintiff herein, has appealed from that part of the judgment which denied recovery of taxes paid under protest, in reference to a vault door and door frame owned and installed by the lessee bank but assessed to the plaintiff on the theory that such vault door unit constituted an improvement to plaintiff's building. The defendants have likewise appealed from the trial court's holding that certain tellers' cages, wickets, counters, partitions, etc., were personal property belonging to a national bank and hence exempt from local taxation, and adjudging that plaintiff should recover the amount of taxes assessed against such property and paid under protest. The question here under consideration, therefore, is in respect to the nature of banking fixtures in a leased building,—whether, for taxation purposes they shall be considered as realty or as personalty.

The complaint, occupying 107 pages of the clerk's transcript, describes the situation and certain alleged discrimination in great detail, the reason for such particularization being explained by plaintiff's counsel in the opening statement as follows, "* * * we had hoped to present sufficient facts so it would be a test case for several hundred other cases, * * *".

By stipulation the trial court first proceeded "to take all the evidence and determine the issues as to whether or not the property in question was real estate * * or personalty," and at the end of the trial after the court had rendered its decision as to the nature of the property, plaintiff's attorney announced that the question of discrimination would not be pursued further and such issue was therefore not passed upon by the court.

It should be noted at the outset that the subject here considered and the opinion as well, are concerned only with property of the character and nature herein described and the relation of the contracting parties with regard thereto. This limitation is noted because of the application of the Federal Constitution and statutes, and Section 16, subd. 1(a) of Article XIII of the California Constitution to the tax problem here presented, a condition which, manifestly, does not apply generally.

It appears from the record that during the years 1930 and 1931 the plaintiff constructed, at the corner of Rimpau Avenue and Washington Boulevard in Los Angeles, a one-story and basement store building, the building being designed for the occupancy of stores and a market, and no part thereof being specially designed for bank use. After having been occupied by a drug store, dress shop and lamp shop, the corner store room was leased on July 31, 1936 for a term of six years by the plaintiff to the Bank of America, at the end of which term the premises were leased to the bank for a new term of five years ending July 31, 1947. Pursuant to the usual practice of the bank, when quarters are leased for a branch bank, the banking officials prepared plans for alteration of the premises, which in this particular instance included both interior and exterior alterations, the construction of a vault room and the installation of a vault door, counter line, partitions, and what appear to be the usual and customary bank fixtures. The cost of the alterations, exclusive of furniture and fixtures, was $11,630.36, which figure did not include the cost or value of the bank vault door which was moved there from a warehouse maintained by the bank for the storage of such vault doors. The value of this particular vault door, the main subject of contention herein, was estimated at $1500, and the cost of moving and installing it was $234. The vault room constructed by the bank after leasing the plaintiff's store room, was built of reinforced concrete, approximately 17 feet long, 8½ feet wide, with a height of 8½ feet, and with a door opening 7 feet 5 inches high by 3 feet 6 inches wide, which door opening, as appears from the trial court's findings of fact, "was not constructed so as to require the installation of any particular type or make of door or door frame and which said opening was devoid of any bars, hooks or other contrivance intended for the hanging thereon or attachment thereto of any door frame or door whatsoever."

The vault door and frame, owned and installed by the bank, is one unit and is described by the bank's architect as follows: "Well, this door is a Miller make, three and a half inches in thickness, polished steel finish, and there is a double combination and a triple time lock, and then there was a frame, and then there is an inner vestibule which is made of three by three angles and plates." The door unit was skidded in on rollers, "Then the door is put in its position in the opening in the vault, wooden wedges are inserted at the top of the door, and the frame, to hold the door in its vertical position. * * *

"Q. When this has been plumbed and found in a true vertical position then what holds it in that position? A. The wooden wedges.

"Q. And at all times do these wooden wedges hold it in position? A. Yes. * * After the door has been tested for its plumbness, then the opening between the inner vestibule and the rough opening in the vault is filled with cement grout."

This cement grout is "Not necessarily tamped" in. As to whether the filler or grout between door and wall formed a bond, the same witness testified, "Well there is a semisort of bond there, but the grout when it dries out the moisture content leaves the grout and there is a tendency for the grout to shrink, so it is possible there might be a slight space between the grout and the concrete wall and in between the grout and the steel vestibule.

"Q. Is that grout placed there for the purpose of making a bond between the vault and frame and the wall of the vault? A. No, it is not.

"Q. What is it placed in there for? A. Well, more for fire protection purposes."

The wooden wedges used to hold the vault door in a vertical position are left in place and "They still hold the door in position." The inner flanges of the door unit "are attached to the lining of the vestibule by means of a type of screw or bolt that is screwed in there". The bank has removed similar vault doors from one location to another "a good many times" by loosening the cement grout with a hammer and shoving the door out, and this procedure does not do any substantial injury to the building. Such removal "would take two or three men maybe three or four hours", and it was common practice to thus remove vault doors. Likewise the other bank fixtures such as partitions, counters, etc., can be removed without injury to the building.

The trial court found that by the express provisions of the written lease between plaintiff and the bank, "all title in and to the furniture, fixtures, vault door, vault door frame, safety deposit boxes, business equipment and other personal property, placed in or about the said leased premises by lessee National Bank, remains in lessee National Bank"; likewise that "all custody, possession and control" thereof, "during the pendency of its lease, or any renewal thereof, remains solely in lessee National Bank, together with the right of removal therefrom"; and that plaintiff "has never made or asserted any claim or property right or interest" in any of said business equipment. Mr. B. F. Lane, Assistant Vice President of the bank, testified that the vault door was installed in plaintiff's building with the intention on the part of the bank to remove it at the termination of the lease or any extension thereof. The court further found that the vault door unit was "a commodity which is the subject of commerce and trade * * * bought and sold on the open market by at least six firms * * *; that similar vault door frames and vault doors in a number in excess of 150 have been removed from premises occupied by banks, jewelers, furriers, building and loan associations, and other types of business within the last five years in Southern California, * * *".

Quoting from the opening brief filed by plaintiff-appellant, it appears that "During the 1941 assessment season the Los Angeles County assessor, for the first time, included in the assessment of plaintiff's building, the vault door, counters and trade fixtures, which had been installed by the bank in the leased store room, being the sum of $29,250.00, which according to the assessor, included a valuation placed on the bank's vault door of $660.00, and on the counter lines, etc. of $910.00, or an aggregate of $1,570.00 on the bank's property." At the beginning of the trial, in response to an inquiry by the trial judge, the Assistant County Counsel explained this assessment as follows: "Before the San Diego vault door case (San Diego Trust & Savings Bank v. County of San Diego, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 142 [105 P.2d 94, 133 A.L.R. 416]) was decided by the Supreme Court, it was the general practice in this county to regard trade fixtures installed by lessees as being personal property, including bank vault doors, regardless of the matter of the unity of use, and so forth and so on."

An application was made on behalf of plaintiff to the 1941 Board of Equalization of Los Angeles County to eliminate from the assessment on plaintiff's building the value placed on the bank's property, both plaintiff and the bank objecting to the assessment of the vault door and other banking fixtures as "improvements" to plaintiff or to anyone, and claiming that such property was personal property belonging to the bank and therefore not assessable under the provisions of Article XIII, section 16, subd. 1(a) of the California Constitution providing for a tax measured by a national bank's net income in lieu of all other taxes except taxes on real property, and in view of Section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, U.S.C.A. Sec. 548 of Title 12, permitting the taxation of real property belonging to national banking associations "to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed." The Board of Equalization denied the application, plaintiff thereafter paid the taxes under protest and instituted this action for the recovery thereof.

After hearing the testimony and viewing the premises the trial court found that the vault door and frame "were and had become integral parts of the building of the Plaintiff herein, but * * * that the remaining banking fixtures * * * were trade fixtures and should have been classified by the Assessor as personal property of the lessee National Bank.", and rendered judgment accordingly. It may be further noted that the court found that on May 2, 1941, the bank had notified the County Assessor in writing of its claim that the bank vault doors and other banking fixtures "were personalty and not realty and that they should not be assessed to Plaintiff Landlord as constituting a part of the improvements", and that the Assessor thereafter "advised said Bank of his intention to classify for tax purposes such fixtures as 'improvement' regardless of the fact that they were located on 'leased' premises".

It seems evident from an examination of the briefs and, indeed, from the record of the trial itself, that the decision in this case depends largely upon an interpretation of the rule as laid down in the case of San Diego Trust & Savings Bank v. County of San Diego, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 142, 105 P.2d 94, 133 A.L.R. 416, and the application of that rule to the facts presented in the instant case. In announcing his decision the trial judge said, "My opinion is based largely upon the rule laid down in several cases, particularly the San Diego Bank case, that we must give consideration to the manner of annexation, the adaptability to the use and purpose for which the realty is used, and the intention of the annexing party; that we must also consider, as said in the Southern California Telephone case (Southern California Telephone Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 12 Cal.2d 127, 82 P.2d 422) that where the rights of those not parties to a private agreement are involved, the intent is manifested by the physical fact, with due consideration to the status of the parties by whom the articles have been installed."

The San Diego Bank case referred to above was an appeal from a judgment granting an injunction permanently enjoining the assessor of San Diego County from assessing as real property for local taxation purposes certain bank vault doors and other equipment belonging to the plaintiff banking corporations. Commenting on the facts in the San Diego Bank case, respondent's brief says: "A closer examination of the case by scrutiny of the record itself reveals that the case involved 15 vaults, 22 vault doors and 1 elevator. Ten of the vaults, 15 of the vault doors and the elevator were located upon premises where the Plaintiff banking corporation owned both the land and the building. Two of the vaults and 4 of the vault doors were upon premises where one of the banks owned the building to which the property in question was attached but leased the land upon which that building was situated. One vault and one vault door were on premises where another of the Plaintiff banks owned the land but leased the building, and two of the vaults and two of the vault doors were upon premises where both the land and the buildings were leased from private owners." Reversing the judgment of the lower court the Supreme Court held that "vaults and vault doors constitute a unit for use together and are improvements to the realty." However, as pointed out in appellant's brief, the court in the San Diego case expressly withheld determination of the precise question which arises in the instant case, and at page 152 of the opinion in 16 Cal.2d, at page 99 of 105 P.2d, 133 A.L.R. 416, says, "In those instances where the owner of the vault doors is also the owner of the building to which they are annexed their classification as real property for purposes of taxation creates no further problem. Where the owner of the vault doors has annexed his property to the real property of another, however, the question immediately arises as to whom the tax on the vault doors shall be assessed. We are reluctant to render this decision without first disposing of that question, since we are of the opinion that it could well be considered here. However * * * counsel for both parties stated to the trial court that said question was not to be considered as an issue in this case inasmuch as it was said to be at issue in a proceeding for a writ of prohibition (No. 91,260) 'trailing' this case * * *. The trial court, therefore, did not consider the question, nor did the parties discuss it in their briefs. In order therefore to permit the parties the benefit of their briefs and argument we shall not determine that question in this opinion." (Italics added.) It is evident, as commented upon in appellant's closing brief, that in the San Diego case "No distinction is there noted between the vault doors, etc. installed in leased premises and those installed in premises owned by the banks." Indeed, in that case the Supreme Court says at page 150 of 16 Cal.2d, at page 98 of 105 P.2d, 133 A.L.R. 416, "It is significant that in nearly every instance the party installing the vault doors owned the building in which the same were installed." The San Diego Bank case, therefore, cannot be deemed authority for respondent's contention that the vault doors owned by the bank in the instant case were properly assessed as improvements to plaintiff lessor. In the San Diego case the action was brought, not by a lessor having no interest in the vault doors but by banking corporations which in most instances were the owners of both the vaults and the real estate to which they were attached. There is nothing in the San Diego case to indicate that the Supreme Court sought to alter the long established law relating to the trade fixtures of tenants, nor is any arbitrary authority given to tax assessors to declare that the real estate of a lessor is "improved" by trade fixtures in which he has no interest and over which he exercises no control.

It is provided in Revenue and Taxation Code, Section 405, St.1941, p. 3111, that, "Annually, the assessor shall assess all the taxable property in his county, except State assessed property, to the persons owning, claiming, possessing, or controlling it at 12 o'clock meridian of the first Monday in March. The assessor shall ascertain such property between the first Mondays in March and July." (Italics added.) In view of this provision considered in connection with the trial court's definite finding that "all custody, possession and control" of the vault door and other banking fixtures "remains solely in lessee National Bank, together with the right of removal therefrom" and that the title to said property "remains in lessee National Bank" it is difficult to see where any authority exists for assessing such property to the plaintiff lessor.

The respondents lay particular stress upon the following statement found in the San Diego Bank case, 16 Cal.2d 142, at page 150, 105 P.2d 94, 133 A.L.R. 416: "The nature of a vault door itself suggests an intent permanently to affix it to a vault which by ordinary tests must be said to constitute an improvement to realty. Vaults alone without doors would not be useful as vaults, and would fail in their intended purpose." While the quoted statement was doubtless applicable to the facts of the San Diego case where separate ownership of building and vault door was not involved, it is not controlling in reference to the present litigation. In the instant case the evidence shows the existence of an intent diametrically opposed to that suggested in the quoted statement from the San Diego opinion. The manner of installation, the ease of removal, the general practice of removing such vault doors and their status as a commodity bought and sold on the open market, the fact that the vault door in question was not designed or constructed for installation in the plaintiff's building, the lease provision giving the bank the right to remove the vault door, and practically every other fact shown by the evidence, is inconsistent with any other intent than that of a temporary attachment to the plaintiff's building. The matters just mentioned are all incorporated in the trial court's Findings of Fact. Not least important in this connection is the finding "that said bond could be broken without injury to the walls of the building and the vault door and frame removed without physical injury to the remainder of said building". Also, as found by the court, the assessor's office was fully advised by the bank on May 2, 1941, in respect to its ownership of the vault doors.

Another case discussed and relied upon by both parties to this appeal is Southern California Telephone Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 12 Cal.2d 127, 82 P.2d 422, in which a writ of mandate to compel the State Board of Equalization to correct an assessment by classifying central office equipment as personal property instead of improvements to realty, was denied. In reference to this case and the San Diego Bank case respondents' brief contains the following: "While the question presented by the instant case was thus not directly decided in that case (the telephone case), we respectfully submit that the Telephone Company case, supra, coupled with the bank vault door case, supra, (San Diego Bank case) makes it very plain that the property involved in this case constitutes a unit of use which gives to it the character of realty for the purpose of taxation." The instant case, however, is not one dealing with "central office equipment" such as was involved in the Telephone case, but with the equipment of a branch bank located in a leased store building not originally constructed for bank use. In fact, a distinction between "central office equipment" and branch office equipment is recognized in the Telephone case at page 138 of 12 Cal. 2d, at page 428 of 82 P.2d, which recites that, "In no proper sense can equipment in small leased offices be held an improvement to and part of real property owned by another." The facts in the Telephone case were, of course, entirely different from those existing in the present case, and manifestly the decision in the Telephone case is no authority for upholding the assessment of the bank's vault doors as an improvement to plaintiff's real estate.

[1] In this connection it is interesting to note the comment of the trial judge in the instant case: "I believe the effect of that case (the Telephone case) is to say that * * * in the case of the main building under that unit rule the so-called fixtures became realty, became a part of the building, within the class of improvement under the Assessor's right of assessment; but that branch installation, particularly in leased premises, might well be personalty, and not improvement to the real estate. * * * I think the same reasoning could apply to banks. The main offices of the bank, such as at Seventh and Spring and Seventh and Olive, of this Bank of America, have been constructed, in so far as the lower floors are concerned, * * * for banking purposes and might well be considered and determined by the court under the unit rule to be realty; but again when small branches are installed, such as this one—and this is a small branch in so far as its equipment is concerned—the unit rule does not apply and it remained as personalty." (Italics added.) Evidently the trial court was here referring to the counters, tellers' cages, partitions, etc., which were held to be personalty and not improvements to the plaintiff's building, rather than to the vault door which that court deemed an improvement to the real estate. However, it cannot be doubted that the vault door, moved to its present position from the bank's warehouse with the evident intention to remove it elsewhere at the termination of the lease, was as much a part of the banking equipment of this branch bank as were the other fixtures and, so far as the present controversy is concerned, no more of an improvement to plaintiff's building exists in the one case than in the other. The three tests which, according to the San Diego Bank case, must be applied in determining whether or not an article is a fixture, namely: "(1) the manner of its annexation; (2) its adaptability to the use and purpose for which the realty is used; and (3) the intention of the party making the annexation", have been duly considered in reference to the present controversy but, so far as the vault door is concerned, with a different result from that reached by the trial court.

[2, 3] In seeking to maintain the propriety of the present assessment defendants' position is stated as follows, "Second, the plaintiff has assumed that ordinary common law cases applying the law of fixtures to the correlative rights of landlord and tenant are determinative of the present case. The Defendant takes the position that in so far as the tax laws have provided definitions for taxing purposes these definitions are to be applied regardless of whether they comport with ordinary common law cases." It is true, as mentioned by defendants, that Section 104 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, St.1939, p. 1277, declares that real estate shall include "improvements", and Section 105, St.1939, p. 1277, provides that "Improvements" include: "(a) All buildings, structures, fixtures, and fences erected on or affixed to the land, except telephone and telegraph lines." (Italics added.) And it is doubtless true, as stated in the above quotation from defendants' brief, that the definitions contained in the tax laws, in so far as they are comprehensive, are to be applied in taxation matters. In answer to this contention, however, it should be particularly noted that there is no provision either in the Revenue and Taxation Code, or in any of the cited cases, which indicates either directly or by implication, a purpose to depart from the time honored distinctions between real and personal property, nor to discard the usual tests in reference to intention and the manner of affixation, both of which matters were specifically mentioned in the San Diego Bank case. .

While it is true that many of the cases dealing with trade fixtures arose in reference to controversies between landlords and tenants or involved other contractual relationships, it is impossible to ignore the analogy between such cases and the present dispute concerning tax assessment, at least in respect to the permanency of attachment to realty and the intent of the parties in making the annexation. Even as it relates to the tax assessor, denominated by the defendants as a "third party" not bound by a "hidden secret intent" contained in the private agreement (lease) between landlord and tenant, such analogy must be preserved, otherwise a confusion in the law would result which would seriously imperil all contracting parties wherever trade fixtures are involved. In other words, there cannot be one interpretation of the law to be applied in the one case, and an entirely different interpretation to be adopted in another case. And in this connection it may be noted that in the present case no "secret" intent was involved, for the assessor was duly notified concerning the situation. Furthermore, the "physical facts" commented upon by defendants as being the proper criterion in reference to intention, indicate that the attachment of the vault door was not intended to be permanent or in any sense an "improvement" to plaintiff's building.

[4, 5] Defendants' argument, that the state merely taxes the property and is not interested in ownership, is no answer to plaintiff's contention. The right to own property is a basic constitutional right. Moreover, individuals retain the constitutional right to contract and, among themselves, determine ownership. Ownership cannot be impressed by law against the will of the individual. In the circumstances, the effort to separate property and ownership is pure fiction. The state is without power, by a series of definitions or otherwise, to attach the property of one person to the property of another against the will of either or both, and then seize the property of the latter because of a failure to pay the taxes on the property of the former. Such a process, obviously, destroys that security in property guaranteed by the Federal Constitution.

[6] Under the evidence in the present case the only rational position is that bank vault doors, when attached as they were in the branch bank in question and under the circumstances herein shown to exist, cannot be properly assessed as improvements to the lessor's realty. In fact, any other view would place all landlords in a most precarious position, subjecting them to possible tax liability by reason of the fact that a tenant has brought in removable trade fixtures and in some manner temporarily attached such articles to the rented building with the landlord's consent.

[7] It is axiomatic that, nothing may be done indirectly which cannot, under the law, be done directly. There can be no question, as stated in the appellant's brief, that "Under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, a federal instrumentality, including a national banking association, is not subject to taxation by any state, or subordinate entity, or subdivision of such state, except to the extent granted, or permitted, by the statutes of the United States of America, and the sole grant or permission to tax national banking associations, including Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, Plaintiff's tenant, is contained in the provisions of section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, U.S.C.A. sec. 548 of Title 12 * * *", heretofore mentioned, permitting the local taxation of real estate owned by a national bank but giving no authority for taxation of such bank's personal property. It is also clear that the only taxation of national banks contemplated in this state is the "in lieu" taxation measured by the bank's net income, provided for in Section 4a of the State Bank and Corporation Franchise Tax Act (Act 8488, Deering's Gen.Laws), which taxes are in lieu of any other local taxes except the tax on realty, and expressly authorized by Article XIII, section 16, subd. 1(a) of the California Constitution. In 1896 an attempted assessment on the money and fixtures of a national bank was held void in First National Bank of San Francisco v. City and County of San Francisco, 129 Cal. 96, 61 P. 778. Assessment of personal property and fixtures of a national bank was also held void in City and County of San Francisco v. Crocker-Woolworth National Bank of San Francisco, C.C., 92 F. 273. That this is the law, there can be no doubt.

[8] It would seem, therefore, as maintained in appellant's brief, that "The assessor of Los Angeles County in this instance endeavored by a mere reclassification to convert personal property into real property and thus bring it within the right to tax under Section 5219(3) above quoted". Such a reclassification, whether based upon a theory of improvement to the lessor's realty by reason of unity of use, or otherwise, is unwarranted by the evidence in this case. Nor is such a practice justified by reason of the San Diego Bank case or any other decision brought to the attention of the court. Judicial approbation of the assessment levied in this case could only lead to unnecessary confusion, and furthermore would apparently lend approval to an attempt to tax indirectly through the lessor, personal property of a national bank which under the law could not be taxed directly.

[9] For the reasons heretofore given plaintiff is entitled to recover the full amount of tax payments made under protest, covering assessments on both the vault door unit and other banking fixtures installed by the lessee Bank of America. The judgment in so far as it permitted a recovery of taxes paid on the banking fixtures other than the vault door, is to that extent affirmed, but said judgment is reversed in so far as it denied plaintiff a recovery of taxes paid on the vault door unit, and since there is no serious controversy as to the facts the court is directed to enter judgment accordingly.

Plaintiff, appellant and respondent Trabue Pittman Corporation, Ltd., to recover costs on appeal.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

Hearing granted; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

70 Cal.App.2d 369

BETHLEHEM STEEL CORPORATION v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 12883.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

July 30, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑948

Statute providing that injured employee is not entitled to compensation if he unreasonably refuses to submit to medical treatment is merely a codification of the general rule that aggravation or extension of an injury is not compensable, and that one may not recover for an aggravation of an injury caused by his own act. St. 1937, p. 276, § 4056.

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑948, 949

An employee is not compelled to undergo an operation or treatment when the outcome is problematical, uncertain, or attended with real danger. St.1937, p. 276, § 4056.

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑1939

Whether the employee has acted reasonably or not in refusing treatment is a question of fact upon which the opinion of the commission, based upon expert medical or surgical advice, is final. St. 1937, p. 276, § 4056.

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑1417

The commission's power to determine whether injured employee has acted reasonably in refusing treatment is not arbitrary, and its determination must be based upon competent expert evidence, unless the issue pertains to a problem properly falling within the scope of judicial knowledge. St.1937, p. 276, § 4056.

5. Workmen's compensation 🔑1416

In determining whether injured employee's refusal to submit to surgical operation was unreasonable, so as to deprive him of compensation, what doctors told employee, as well as testimony of doctors at the hearing, constituted medical opinion upon which the commission could base its award. St.1937, p. 276, § 4056.

6. Workmen's compensation 🔑1672

Testimony of doctors before the Industrial Accident Commission, and inferences to be drawn therefrom, and evidence as to what doctors also told injured employee, were sufficient to sustain finding that employee's refusal to accept treatment offered by employer was reasonable, so as not to deprive him of right to compensation. St.1937, p. 276, § 4056.

7. Workmen's compensation 🔑1703

In workman's compensation proceeding, conduct of hearing referee, in asking doctors certain questions after they had been examined by employer's lawyer, did not show prejudice against employer.

WARD, J., dissenting.

Special proceeding by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, a self-insured employer, against the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and another to review a finding of the commission that an injury sustained by Paul Weldon McClure, employee, resulted in 100 per cent. permanent disability, and that he was entitled to such medical treatment as may reasonably be required to relieve him from the effects of such injury during his life, and that employee's refusal of further medical and surgical treatment offered by the employer was not unreasonable.

Award affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and R. C. McKellips, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Petition for a writ of review.

The Commission found that Paul McClure was injured in the course and scope of his employment with Bethlehem Steel Corporation, a self-insured employer, in September, 1942; that he then sustained a dislocated intervertebral disc; that such injury has resulted in 100 per cent permanent disability; that the employee is entitled to such medical treatment as may reasonably be required to relieve him from the effects of such injury during his life; and that the employee's refusal of further medical and surgical treatment offered by the employer is not unreasonable. Petitioner's main contentions are that the last mentioned finding, when tested by the requirements of § 4056 of the Labor Code, is unsupported by any substantial evidence, and that petitioner was deprived of a fair and impartial hearing because of the alleged bias and prejudice of the referee.

The facts are as follows: In 1942 McClure was employed as a welder by Bethlehem. On September 29th of that year, while working in a cramped position, he experienced a "popping" sensation in his back. For a few minutes he was unable to walk, but finally was able to get to the employer's first-aid station, where an attendant, not a physician, taped his back. He was in considerable pain, and it was with some difficulty that he got home. The next morning he was unable to get out of bed and was removed, by the employer, to a hospital, where X-rays were taken. He was hospitalized for four days and given electro-therapy treatments. Dr. Barrett, a plant physician for Bethlehem, told McClure that he probably had a pulled ligament or muscle. After his stay in the hospital McClure went back to work. He reported several times to the first-aid station and had his back taped. He suffered considerable pain and after about a month he bought a belt. He continued to work, in spite of the continuous pain, until October, 1943. In that month he had to quit work and was again examined by Dr. Barrett at the plant hospital. Dr. Barrett referred him to Dr. Hand, an orthopedic specialist. A letter from Dr. Hand to Dr. Barrett, dated November 11, 1943, states that McClure "has the signs and symptoms of low back strain and nerve root irritation. * * * These findings are consistent with a ruptured disc between lumbar four and five. I believe it would be advisable to manipulate his back under a spinal anaesthetic and apply traction to both legs." McClure was sent to the hospital where he was put in traction for five or six weeks. After his release he went back to work, but continued to suffer pain. In March of 1944 Dr. Barrett sent McClure to a physiotherapist, who gave him several treatments. These seemed to aggravate the condition. It became very difficult for him to walk. He reported to the hospital and a company doctor, who was substituting for Dr. Barrett, told him that he had rheumatism and arthritis, that he "would never be cured," and that he should retire and take a trip around the world. This doctor had an interne tape McClure's back. The condition continued and in May of 1944 McClure called at the Commission and asked what he should do. The Commission sent him to Dr. Dozier of Bethlehem who, in turn, sent him to Dr. Hand. Dr. Hand told him that there was a disc out, that it was cracked or chipped, but that he wanted verification. He was then sent to Dr. Jones. Dr. Hand's report, dated May 16, 1944, states: "This man is again totally disabled and most probably has a ruptured intervertebral disc, even though he does not have atrophy, sensory changes or reflex changes. He was greatly improved by manipulation and traction. This might be worth another attempt. If unrelieved by such a procedure, he should be seen by a neuro-surgeon for an opinion relative to the possibility of his having a ruptured intervertebral disc." The report of Dr. Jones is dated May 22, 1944. He concludes that the "history strongly suggests that this patient has a dislocated nucleus pulposus. At the present time there are no findings from the neurological standpoint. He has, however, definite evidence of mechanical difficulty in his low lumbar spine.

"I would suggest that this patient have a Lipiodol study of his low lumbar spinal canal; and if a dislocated nucleus pulposus is demonstrated, he would then require operation for removal of same."

At this time Dr. Barrett strongly recommended against an operation, stressing to McClure the uncertainty and danger of such procedure. On June 6, 1944, McClure filed his application with the Commission asking that the nature and extent of his disability be determined. The first hearing on this application was held on June 21, 1944. At this, and subsequent hearings, McClure was not represented by counsel. At this first hearing it was stipulated that McClure had been injured in the course and scope of his employment; that the employer was self-insured; that medical treatment had been furnished and compensation paid to date. McClure testified as to the history of his injury. A report of Dr. Olsen, dated June 20, 1944, was introduced. He concluded that the "clinical picture is typical of a protruded intervertebral disc. It should be removed." At the conclusion of the June 21st hearing counsel for the employer stated that they wanted McClure examined by Dr. Fender and, if he so recommended, an operation would be offered.

McClure was then examined by Dr. Fender. His report, dated June 24, 1944, gives a complete history of the case and indicates a complete examination was then made. The report concludes: "I think the man suffers from a dislocation of a portion of an intervertebral disc. However, and in spite of the long period of conservative management already followed, I would recommend deferring surgery in this case for the present." A letter from Dr. Olsen dated June 28, 1944, states that "when symptoms from a disc persist for such a time, surgery is imperative. His disability will be permanent until the disc is removed." A letter from the attorney of the employer to the Commission dated June 28, 1944, encloses the Dr. Fender report and states that "Mr. McClure is being offered this conservative treatment recommended by Dr. Fender, or the operation suggested by Dr. Jones."

McClure replied to this letter on July 7, 1944. He therein states that early in May, 1944, he called upon Doctors Barrett and Dozier for a consultation; that Dr. Barrett told him "that an operation was necessary, but that the head physican [sic] of the Bethleham [sic] Plants advised against such an operation due to the fact that they are not succesful [sic]"; that the two doctors advised that he accept a cash settlement; that he has been examined by Dr. Fender; that Dr. Fender does not deem it advisable to operate; that he has "come to the conclusion that it would be against my better judgement [sic] to have such an operation at this time"; that he has again seen Dr. Fender but at the date of this visit the doctor had not heard anything further about the case.

Under date of July 14, 1944, the rating department of the Commission recommended a 100 per cent disability rating. The attorney for the employer requested a further hearing, which request was granted. A further hearing was had on August 25, 1944.

The record shows that prior to this hearing an effort was made to settle the case. The employer offered, and McClure agreed to accept, a $3,000 cash settlement. The referee, acting well within his powers, refused to approve this settlement, giving as his reasons that at the time he accepted, McClure, because of his injury and because of certain personal matters, was unable to exercise a free judgment in the matter, and because the amount offered was insufficient.

Before the hearing of August 25, 1944, the employer had advised McClure that he should be operated upon or perhaps try several weeks' rest in bed in a hospital. McClure had again reported to Dr. Fender, but was then suffering from a cold. The doctor had told him to come back when he was over the cold. At the hearing he testified that he had not done this because "I didn't think it was worth while going back to him." He was then asked:

"Q. Will you at this time put yourself under the care of Dr. Fender for treatment? A. I don't know what he can do. I've had so many treatments.

"Q. I am asking you if you will at this time put yourself under the care of Dr. Fender? A. It wouldn't do me a bit of good to put myself under his care.

"Q. Is that your answer, you will not? A. That is true."

He then went on to reply, in answer to a question from the referee, that the reason he refused treatment was that Dr. Olsen had stated that an operation was imperative and that he felt that further treatments would be useless. He then stated that he refused to be operated upon. He gave as his reasons the following:

"Well, the idea is that as you know Dr. Barrett has told us that this is practically a new field of operation and it stands to reason that any operation that is a new field that can be improved on and I have talked to several people—I know one fellow personally and I have a brother-in-law that has the same accident. He has gone to the Mayo Clinic and they said yes, they would operate but he would have a stiff back the rest of his life.

"Q. What else did Dr. Barrett tell you when you were first discussing operation and by Dr. Barrett I mean Dr. Gilbert Barrett, the Chief Surgeon for the Bethlehem Steel Company? A. Yes, Dr. Barrett told me at the time Mr. Dozier and Dr. Barrett called me in—we were discussing operations and Dr. Barrett told me frankly that the Bethlehem would not undertake an operation of this sort and he told me that the doctor over all the Bethlehem plants had specified to give the patient a settlement and not undertake the operation and Dr. Barrett told me then, he said that the operation is very, very dangerous. He said, 'You go in there and monkey around with the trunk line and there is all nerves and everything in your back,' and he said, 'It is very dangerous to monkey with the back.' Naturally I was scared.

"Q. And you still have that information he gave you and that advice in mind? A. Yes, it is just that I am afraid of it.

"Q. Did you discuss with Dr. Olsen about operation? A. Yes.

"Q. What did Dr. Olsen tell you about operation? A. He said it was dangerous. He said it was a new field and he said some fellow—one fellow out of a percentage may get over it. Other fellows may go through the operation and get over it but it will come back to them. They will either have a pain in their back or a pain in their legs."

Dr. Fender was called as a witness and testified that the conservative treatment he would recommend before an operation was simply rest in bed for a period of two or three weeks, that the man's conservative treatment up to date had been complicated by maneuvers that had been carried on and might themselves have prevented recovery. The doctor obviously had little faith in the bed treatment. He testified that some of these cases recovered spontaneously, but that the chances of that happening in the case of this employee were dwindling down rapidly to the vanishing point. He gave it as his opinion that over half of these operations, that about 60 or 70 per cent of the cases obtained favorable results. The employee's back, if the operation was successful, would be better than it then was, and he would be able to work, but not to lift and carry heavy things as before his injury. Again he testified that the chances were 75 per cent that he would be improved and able to return to useful work; that the operation was not dangerous to life, that it was serious only in the sense that any operation, even a tonsillectomy, is serious; that an intercranial operation on the brain, or an operation on lungs or heart were more serious. He was definitely of the opinion that McClure should have the operation if conservative treatment failed.

Dr. Barrett testified that he was now not adverse to an operation if conservative treatment failed. He admitted advising against an "early" operation. (This advice was given in May, 1944, some 20 months after the injury.) He stated: "We don't like surgery if it can be avoided and I had been told by the chief surgeon that he was opposed to early operation and any operation if it can be avoided. If not, it is applied"; that they have performed such operations "but we don't like them"; that the patient should go to bed for several weeks and if that failed to give relief he should be operated upon; that the "majority" or operative cases get a "result" if done by careful surgeons; "some don't and I mentioned to Mr. McClure when we were discussing it and urged that this be not done at this time [May, 1944]. Dr. Shoudy had told us of two cases that were unfavorable, making them more skittish than ever. Dr. Shoudy is the chief surgeon of the Bethlehem Steel. It made them less inclined to have this done."

The rating expert for the Commission testified that McClure was 100 per cent disabled; that he would not guess what the rating might be if McClure were operated upon; that after such operations "some of them come out with no disability at all and some of them have severe disability afterwards"; that he has observed "several" cases of improvement after such an operation and has "seen one or two where they were worse."

On September 29, 1944, the referee made his final report. He therein explains why he refused to approve the compromise and finds that on the facts, which he reviews, the refusal to accept further medical treatment or the operation was not unreasonable; finds the disability to be 100 per cent; and finds the applicant is entitled to reasonable medical treatment for the balance of his life.

On October 18, 1944, the Commissioners filed their order disapproving the compromise and their findings and award which follow substantially those of the referee.

The employer thereafter filed a petition for rehearing, urging, substantially, the same points made on this petition. The rehearing referee recommended a rehearing and filed a report. He therein stated that in his opinion there was considerable misunderstanding in this case over the proper treatment which raised in McClure's mind a suspicion of the employer's doctors; that in the beginning they strongly advised against surgery, so that when surgery was offered he was in such a state of mind he did not want surgery at the hands of defendant's doctors but wanted a settlement so that he could go to Johns Hopkins; that from his (the rehearing referee's) experience conservative treatment should first be tried before surgery; that here all the doctors agree surgery is called for and testified no great risk is involved; that in his opinion the refusal to accept the operation was unreasonable. The hearing referee also filed a report on the rehearing. At this time McClure, still unrepresented by counsel, was living in Oregon. In this report, after reviewing the evidence, the referee points out that it was not until after McClure had come to the Commission for advice that surgery was offered; that prior to that it was discouraged; that they then tried to negotiate an inadequate settlement; that when this failed and they were faced with a 100 per cent disability rating, they then offered the operation; that in his opinion the refusal of McClure was reasonable. The Commission denied the petition for rehearing, and this present petition for a writ of review was filed.

The main legal question involved is the proper interpretation and application of § 4056 of the Labor Code, St.1937, p. 276. It provides: "No compensation is payable in case of the death or disability of an employee when his death is caused, or when and so far as his disability is caused, continued, or aggravated, by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, or to any surgical treatment, if the risk of the treatment is, in the opinion of the commission, based upon expert medical or surgical advice, inconsiderable in view of the seriousness of the injury."

It is the contention of petitioner that under this section if the medical and surgical experts agree that the risks incident to an operation are inconsiderable in view of the seriousness of the injury then the employee's refusal of medical or surgical care is, as a matter of law, unreasonable. It is also urged that the record here shows that all the doctors agreed the operation and treatment were necessary and that the risks were inconsiderable. While we may agree with petitioner's interpretation of the section, we cannot agree with its interpretation of the record.

[1-4] The section above quoted is simply a codification of the general rule that aggravation or extension of an injury is not compensable—one may not recover for an aggravation of an injury caused by his own act. An employee is under a duty to submit to reasonable medical or surgical treatment, and, if he refuses and his injury is thereby aggravated, he may not recover compensation. See annotations 6 A.L.R. 1260; 18 A.L.R. 431; 73 A.L.R. 1303; see, also, Danziger v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 109 Cal.App. 71, 292 P. 525; General Acc., etc., Corp. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 77 Cal.App. 314, 246 P. 570; Marshall v. Ransome Concrete Co., 33 Cal.App. 782, 166 P. 846. However, it is also well settled that an employee is not compelled to undergo an operation or treatment when the outcome is problematical, uncertain or attended with real danger. Marshall v. Ransome Concrete Co., 33 Cal.App. 782, 166 P. 846; see, also, Campbell's Workmen's Compensation, p. 668, § 751, and cases cited fn. 111. It is equally well settled that the question as to whether the employee has acted reasonably or not in refusing treatment is a question of fact upon which the opinion of the Commission, based upon expert medical or surgical advice, is final. Danziger v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 109 Cal.App. 71, 292 P. 525. The Commission's power is, of course, not arbitrary, and its determination must be based upon competent expert evidence, unless the issue pertains to a problem properly falling within the scope of judicial knowledge. Southern California Edison Co. v. Indus. Acc. Comm., 75 Cal.App. 709, 243 P. 455.

[5, 6] If these rules be applied to the evidence in the present record we think there is sufficient evidence, and reasonable inferences from the evidence, to sustain the finding that McClure's refusal to accept the treatment offered was reasonable. It is true that on the hearing all of the doctors testified that in their opinion McClure should be operated upon and that the risks attendant thereto were slight. But that is not all of the expert evidence that appears in the record. What the doctors told McClure also constitutes medical opinion upon which the Commission could base its award. This employee had undergone every form of treatment suggested by the employer's doctors for nearly two years, and his condition had grown progressively worse. It was not until November of 1943 that Dr. Hand first suggested the possibility of a ruptured intervertebral disc. Sometime later a company doctor diagnosed his condition as incurable rheumatism or arthritis and suggested that he take a trip around the world. It was not until the employee asked help from the Commission in May of 1944 that an intensive diagnosis was made. Even then the specialists were doubtful as to the advisability of an operation. Dr. Jones, in his report of

May 22, 1944, suggested a Lipiodol study which would have been of assistance in diagnosis and which apparently was not made, and suggested the possibility of an operation. When the employee suggested this to Dr. Barrett, that doctor strongly recommended against an operation, stressing the uncertainty and danger of such an operation. Dr. Fender recommended against surgery as late as June 24, 1944. Dr. Barrett told the employee that Bethlehem would not undertake such an operation and that the chief surgeon for Bethlehem had directed that such operations should not be undertaken but that settlements should, if possible, be effected. He also told the employee that the operation "is very, very dangerous," and that it was very dangerous to start cutting into the trunk line. Dr. Olsen told the employee the operation was dangerous and that it was a new field and that "one fellow out of a percentage may get over it." This is all medical evidence that creates a substantial conflict with the later opinions given by these same doctors. It is a reasonable inference from the evidence that after the company doctors had convinced the employee that the operation was dangerous and doubtful as to results, an attempt was made to settle the case. It was only after this attempt failed that the doctors unequivocally recommended an operation. Even on the last hearing Dr. Fender testified that the operation was successful in but substantially over half the cases, in about 60 or 70 per cent of the cases, later changed to 75 per cent of the cases. Dr. Barrett, while now recommending the operation, admitted that the doctors at Bethlehem do not like such operations. He also stated that in a "majority" of cases you could expect a good result, and that he knew of cases where the results were unfavorable. The rating expert for the Commission testified that he knew of cases that had been benefited and others that had been injured by such operations. This was all expert evidence, based upon the opinions of doctors, upon which the Commission was entitled to base its finding on the issue. The fact that these doctors later gave conflicting evidence does no more than create a conflict.

It must be remembered that we are not here dealing with the law of averages, but with the case of Paul McClure. The test imposed by § 4056 of the Labor Code is not entirely an objective one. The questions are, did Mr. McClure reasonably refuse the proffered treatment, and whether the Commission's finding is based on expert medical and surgical evidence. There would seem to be little doubt but that the finding of reasonableness is amply supported.

Petitioner makes much of the fact that McClure also refused the rest in bed treatment suggested by Dr. Fender. That doctor had but little faith in that treatment, as evidenced by his testimony that in view of the fact the injury was almost two years old the possibility of a spontaneous cure was rapidly diminishing to the vanishing point. In view of the many treatments undergone by this patient his lack of confidence in this treatment was obviously justified.

[7] Petitioner also contends that it was deprived of a fair trial because of the alleged bias and prejudice of the hearing referee. In this connection it cites J. G. Boswell Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 67. In that case an award was annulled and a new hearing ordered because the appellate court found that the hearing referee, the same referee that heard the evidence in the present case, was biased and prejudiced. In that case, as the opinion discloses, the referee was biased and prejudiced. Each case must be determined on its own facts. The record in this case shows no such bias and prejudice. Petitioner objects because the referee asked the doctors certain questions after they had been examined by the lawyer for the employer. This was entirely proper under the circumstances. The employee was unrepresented by counsel. An examination of the questions asked shows that they were asked to bring out all of the facts, some of which had not been brought out by the attorney for the employer. The Boswell case recognizes that such procedure is permissible and proper.

Petitioner also contends that a memorandum filed by the hearing referee after the rehearing referee had recommended a rehearing shows bias and prejudice. In that memorandum the hearing referee stated the facts as he saw them. The summary is, on the whole, a fair one. He then concluded his memorandum as follows:

"Even at the risk of being charged by the eminent counsel for the defense with reflected prejudice and bias, I prefer to protect this applicant when I can do so without the risk of doing any injustice to the defendants.

"If the Commission, after a careful consideration of this memo and the entire record herein, believes that a rehearing should be granted and grants it, I will quit arguing the case—but until such time as a rehearing is granted in such case where the applicant has no attorney and is helpless and far away, I must write as I feel or write not at all. Recommendation: Deny petition for rehearing."

Assuming that this memorandum should be considered for the purpose of determining whether the referee was prejudiced, but keeping in mind that this referee had already passed on the facts, we are of the opinion that it does not demonstrate bias and prejudice. The memorandum reasonably can be interpreted as an honest and fair attempt to bring before the Commission the true facts of the case as the hearing referee saw them. It must be remembered that in these cases it is the Commission and not the referee that makes the orders. The Commission had before it the rehearing referee's recommendation and that of the hearing referee. It was its responsibility to grant or deny the petition for rehearing. We must assume, of course, that official duty was properly performed.

The award is affirmed.

KNIGHT, J., concurs.

WARD, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. In this case an examination of section 4056 of the Labor Code is imperative. It reads as follows: "No compensation is payable in case of the death or disability of an employee when his death is caused, or when and so far as his disability is caused, continued, or aggravated, by an unreasonable refusal to submit to medical treatment, or to any surgical treatment, if the risk of the treatment is, in the opinion of the commission, based upon expert medical or surgical advice, inconsiderable in view of the seriousness of the injury."

To accept the premise that the expert testimony required by the statute may be supplied by what one doctor, who subsequently changed his opinion, told the applicant for compensation, defeats the purpose of the statute. The language of the statute leads me to conclude that the finding of the commission must be based upon expert medical or surgical advice before the commission, rather than upon a statement to the applicant and repeated by the applicant to the commission, inasmuch as the qualifying phrase follows the word "commission."

Accepting the applicant's theory for the moment—that it was not unreasonable to refuse to submit to the operation—the record discloses that one physician, a Dr. Fender, who was the last to examine the applicant, recommended further conservative treatment to relieve the applicant's difficulties because he felt that prior treatment had been complicated by incomplete rest. The treatment he proposed was simply to put the applicant in bed, flat on his back, for a period of two or three weeks. In answer to the question whether he would submit to such treatment by Dr. Fender, the applicant said he would not. In view of the seriousness of the injury—total disability—a flat refusal to submit to further conservative treatment can not be said to be reasonable. In my opinion the award should be annulled.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 392

In re LYNCH'S ESTATE.

LYNCH et al. v. BELL.

No. 12853.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

July 31, 1945.

1. Wills 🔑118

The Probate Code requires that will be subscribed or acknowledged by testator before two attesting witnesses present at same time to be entitled to probate. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

2. Wills 🔑386

An attesting witness' testimony, accepted as true by probate court, that neither testator's subscription nor his acknowledgment of will was made in both witnesses' presence at same time, must be so considered for all purposes of appeal from judgment denying probate of will. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

3. Wills 🔑303(3)

An attesting witness' testimony established that will was neither subscribed nor acknowledged by testator in presence of both witnesses at same time as required to entitle it to probate. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

4. Wills 🔑118

The phrase "in the presence of", as used in statute requiring that will be subscribed or acknowledged by testator in presence of both attesting witnesses at same time, means conscious presence, not merely actual physical presence of witness without realization of what is transpiring, and is not synonymous with witness' being in same room as testator and another witness at time of their signatures of will. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "In the Presence of".

5. Wills 🔑118, 119

To authorize admission of will to probate, both attesting witnesses must not only be actually present when will is subscribed or acknowledged by testator, but his conduct and actions must unmistakably indicate to witnesses that will is his, though no particular verbal formula need be followed. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

6. Wills 🔑360

Where record on appeal from judgment denying probate of contested will showed that proponent expressly waived right to demur to contest and did not complain of any insufficiency in pleading during trial and that all parties understood that only contested issue as to validity of will was whether testator signed or acknowledged it in both witnesses' presence at same time, proponent's objections that contestants' general allegation that will was not executed in statutory manner or form was conclusion of law, and that specific ground for denial of probate could not be determined from findings or judment, did not warrant reversal. Probate Code, § 50, subds. 2, 3.

7. Wills 🔑309

Where both subscribing witnesses to will testified in contest thereof and it clearly appeared from testimony of one of them that will was not executed in conformity with legal requirements, probate court owed duty to deny petition for probate of will, regardless of whether proceeding was hearing of preliminary proof or trial of contest on merits or whether burden of proving invalidity of will rested on contestants. Probate Code, § 50, subds., 2, 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Daniel W. Lynch, deceased. From a judgment denying a petition by Agnes G. Bell, formerly Agnes G. Smith, as executrix of deceased's will, for probate thereof, Mary Lynch and others, contestants, appeal.

Affirmed.

Waldo F. Postel, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Milton Marks and Morris Lowenthal, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

Daniel W. Lynch died March 17, 1944, leaving a witnessed will dated May, 1940, which was offered for probate. He was unmarried and was survived by a mother, Mary Lynch, six brothers and two sisters. By the terms of his will be devised and bequeathed his entire estate in equal undivided shares to four of his brothers, his mother Mary (erroneously described in the will as a "sister"), and a friend, Agnes G. Smith. The will named Agnes G. Smith (now Agnes G. Bell) as executrix, and she petitioned for the probate of the will. The mother and four of the brothers, two of whom were named as beneficiaries in the will, filed a contest to the will on three grounds, the first being that the will was not executed in conformity with the requirements of the law of this state. After hearing the evidence the probate court so found, and denied the petition for probate. Agnes G. Bell appeals. It is evident that the decision of the probate court is fully supported by the law and the facts.

[1] Section 1276 of the Civil Code as it stood prior to the adoption of the Probate Code in 1931 embodied four subdivisions. By the first it was provided that a witnessed will "must be subscribed at the end thereof by the testator himself, or some person in his presence and by his direction must subscribe his name thereto"; subdivision 2 provided: "The subscription must be made in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or be acknowledged by the testator to them to have been made by him or by his authority"; and subdivision 3 provided: "The testator must, at the time of subscribing or acknowledging the same, declare to the attesting witnesses that the instrument is his will * * *." The construction placed by the courts upon the foregoing provisions was that if neither the subscription nor the acknowledgment was made before two witnesses, both present at the same time, it was not executed with the formality required by section 1276 of the Civil Code. Estate of Lawrence, 196 Cal. 321, 237 P. 738, 739. In so holding the court in that case said:

"It therefore appears that neither the subscription nor the acknowledgment of the decedent took place before two witnesses present at the same time. The precise question was presented in Estate of Emart, 175 Cal. 238, 244, 165 P. 707, 710, L.R.A. 1917F, 866, where this court construed the language of section 1276 of the civil Code, reviewed the history of the legislation on the subject, and said: 'From the language of our statute and this review of its history, we regard the conclusion as unescapable that our law requires the subscription or the acknowledgment to be before the two witnesses present at the same time.'

"The appellant contends that in Estate of Dow, 181 Cal. 106, 183 P. 794, this court, in the opinion on rehearing, so far discredited the decision in Estate of Emart, supra, as to render the point involved herein an open one. Such was not the case. In Estate of Dow, supra, the will was subscribed and acknowledged in the presence of both witnesses, but the witnesses did not sign the document in the presence of each other. It was held that, under the statute, the witnesses need not sign in the presence of each other. The distinction is pointed out by the court in the opinion on rehearing in that case.

"On the authority of Estate of Emart, supra, the judgment is affirmed."

In 1931 section 1276 of the Civil Code was reenacted into section 50 of the Probate Code. Some modifications, not material here, were made to subdivisions 1 and 4; but subdivisions 2 and 3, upon which the decisions in the Lawrence and Emart cases were based, were reenacted in the same form except that the words "present at the same time" were added to subdivision 2, so that as reenacted it is made to read: "The subscription must be made, or the testator must acknowledge it to have been made by him or by his authority, in the presence of both of the attesting witnesses, present at the same time." (Italics ours.) And the obvious purpose of adding the italicized words was to make the new section harmonize with the construction theretofore placed by the courts on section 1276. Subsequent to the adoption of the Probate Code another case (Estate of Krause, 18 Cal.2d 623, 117 P.2d 1, 2) arose involving a will executed prior to the adoption of the Probate Code; and the construction placed by the earlier cases on subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1276 was confirmed and applied. In that case the court said: "The law requires the subscription or acknowledgment to be made before the two witnesses present at the same time, and where this requirement is not met, the instrument must be denied probate. Estate of Emart, 175 Cal. 238, 165 P. 707, L.R.A.1917F, 866; Estate of Lawrence, 196 Cal. 321, 237 P. 738." From the foregoing it will be seen that the law as declared in the three cases last mentioned is controlling in similar cases arising under section 50 of the Probate Code.

[2] Here the two witnesses to the will were Miss Dorothy Kelly and J. W. Welch, and their testimony as to the circumstances attending the signing of the will is conflicting. The testimony given by Miss Kelly affirmatively shows that neither the subscription nor the acknowledgment of the decedent was made in the presence of both witnesses, present at the same time; and since the probate court accepted her testimony as true, it must be so considered for all the purposes of this appeal.

[3] The following are among the facts established thereby: The decedent was a member of the firm of Lynch & Sons, with offices on upper Market Street in San Francisco, and Miss Kelly had been in his employ as secretary for upwards of five years. Welch was an insurance salesman and transacted considerable business with the decedent. He called to see the decedent at his office at least twice a month, and Miss Kelly was well acquainted with him. The decedent and Miss Kelly occupied different desks on opposite sides of the same room, a considerable distance apart. Each desk faced a wall so that while they were seated at them their backs were toward each other. On the day in question Welch entered the room, greeted Miss Kelly and walked over to the decedent's desk. She observed that they "were either looking at a paper or signing some paper" and that some conversation was being carried on between them; but she did not know the nature of the business they were transacting nor did she hear any part of the conversation. She stated that she was busy with her duties and paid no attention to it. Welch remained only a short time and then left the room, closing the door behind him. After he had gone the decedent walked over to her desk, and laid the document on her desk before her. The first page was folded under, and he said: "Will you sign here, Dorothy?" She asked him what it was, and he replied, "Sign here." Noting that the document had been signed by the decedent and Welch, she signed it as directed. Thereupon, so she testified, the decedent picked up the document "in a sort of joking manner and said, 'This is my will'"; and that he then walked over and put it in the file. The distance to the file from Miss Kelly's desk was about fifteen feet. Part of the testimony so given by the witness was as follows:

"Q. Before you signed was anything said to the effect that what these men were signing was a Will? A. No.

"Q. Was the word 'Will' uttered by anybody in that room before you signed? A. No. I had no idea what was going on at all, I didn't hear it.

"Q. You had no idea? A. No.

"Q. And is it not a fact that the first knowledge that you had that it was a Will was after you had signed it? A. That is true, when he told me.

"Q. Then Mr. Lynch told you? A. Yes.

"Q. And when Mr. Lynch told you that, after you had signed, Mr. Welch had already gone? A. Yes."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the situation here presented has been brought clearly within the holding of the cases above cited.

[4] Nor does the fact that Miss Kelly was present in the room at the time that the decedent and Welch signed the will alter the legal aspect of the case, for it is well settled that the phrase "in the presence of" as used in the law of wills means conscious presence and not merely the actual physical presence where the party has no realization of what is going on. Chappell v. Trent, 90 Va. 849, 19 S.E. 314; Aiken v. Weckerly, 19 Mich. 482; Heatherington et al. v. Pipes, 32 Miss. 451; Baldwin v. Baldwin's Executor, 81 Va. 405, 59 Am.Rep. 669. In short, the phrase "in the presence of" is not synonymous with "being in the same room." Reed et al. v. Roberts, 26 Ga. 294, 71 Am.Dec. 210. As said in Page on Wills (vol. 1, p. 640): "A person in whose presence an act is done must be informed of what is taking place so that he actually knows what is being done; or the act is not done in his presence, no matter how close to him it may be done. A will is not signed in the presence of one who is attending to another matter and does not know what is taking place until he is told later."

[5] And so in this state it has been held that both witnesses must not only be actually present when the subscription is made or the testator acknowledges it to have been made by him or by his authority, but it must be "unmistakably indicated to the persons signing as witnesses by the testator's conduct and actions" that it is his will, although no particular verbal formula need be followed. Estate of Silva, 169 Cal. 116, 145 P. 1015; Estate of Cullberg, 169 Cal. 365, 146 P. 888; Estate of Johnson, 100 Cal.App. 676, 280 P. 987. In other words, the circumstances attending the transaction must show that the decedent must have intended to have the witnesses know that the writing was his will. Estate of Cullberg, supra; 26 Cal.Jur. p. 781. In Estate of Norswing, 47 Cal.App.2d 730, 118 P.2d 858, one of the attesting witnesses testified that he did not know that the instrument he was signing was intended as a will, in spite of the fact that it had the word "Will" written at the top of it, and the witness could have read the attestation clause. It was there held (page 733 of 47 Cal.App.2d, page 860 of 118 P.2d): "It is essential, however, that each of the witnesses shall understand that the testator was promulgating the document as his will. Estate of Silva, supra; Estate of Johnson, 100 Cal.App. 676, 280 P. 987"; and that in that case there was "no evidence of acts or conduct on the part of the decedent which required a finding that the nature of this instrument was unmistakably indicated to this witness."

In the present case, although it appears that Miss Kelly was in the room when the document was signed by the decedent and Welch, she positively and unequivocally testified that she was wholly unaware of the nature of the transaction that was taking place between them; and that it was not indicated to her that the instrument was a will until after she had signed it, and that at that time the other witness was not present but had left the premises.

Briefly, Welch's testimony was that he brought the unsigned document to the decedent's office and stated to him, "Here is your last will and testament"; that the decedent then signed the document in the presence of himself and Miss Kelly and said, "This is my last will and testament"; that thereupon he, Welch, and Miss Kelly signed as witnesses in the decedent's presence and in the presence of each other; and that he, Welch, then left the room. It is evident, however, that since Welch's testimony was rejected by the probate court the most that can be said for it on appeal is that it merely raised a conflict in the evidence.

[6] The remaining points consist of technical objections to matters of pleading and procedure. In this connection it is contended that the general allegation that the will was not executed by the decedent in the manner or form required by law for the execution of a will is a conclusion of law and that therefore such allegation and the general finding based thereon are insufficient to support the judgment; furthermore, that it cannot be determined from the findings or the judgment upon what specific ground the will was denied probate. It appears from the record, however, that appellant expressly waived the right to file a demurrer to the contest and requested that the trial proceed without delay on the pleading as filed and appellant's answer thereto, which she had already filed; also that at no time during the trial did appellant complain of any insufficiency in the pleading. Moreover the record shows that at the trial all parties understood that the only contested issue before the probate court as to the validity of the will was the one hereinabove discussed, and all of the evidence was directed to that issue. Such being the state of the record, it is our opinion that the objections raised by appellant do not serve as grounds for reversal.

[7] Appellant's next contention is that the contest was tried on the merits; that it was not merely the hearing of the "preliminary proof"; that being a trial on the merits of the contest the burden of proof to establish the invalidity of the will rested on the respondents; that they offered no evidence, and that such being the case judgment should have been entered dismissing the contest. It is entirely immaterial, however, whether the proceeding before the probate court was a hearing of the "preliminary proof" or a trial of the merits of the contest; and it is likewise immaterial upon whom the burden of proof rested, for the reason that both subscribing witnesses were produced in court and testified as witnesses in the case; and it clearly appeared from the testimony of one of them that the will was not executed in conformity with the legal requirements; that being so, it was the plain duty of the court to deny the petition for the probate of the will.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concur.

O'MORROW v. BORAD et al. *

Civ. 14822.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 31, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Trial ⚷33

Aside from requirements of automobile liability policy, plaintiff-cross-defendant and defendant-cross-complainant in automobile collision action were each entitled to present evidence on their affirmative claims against the other and to present a defense against other's claim.

2. Insurance ⚷514½

Where insurer undertakes defense of an insured through its attorneys, insurer and attorneys owe insured their undivided allegiance to his cause and duty of acting in utmost good faith in his behalf, and relationship between them should be one of highest trust and confidence, but such duty cannot be performed or relationship exist properly when insurer and its attorneys have an interest adverse to insured.

---

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 483.

3. Insurance ⚷514½

Where plaintiff and defendant in automobile collision case were each insured by same insurer and each had an affirmative claim against other with result that interests of insurer and its attorneys were in conflict with interests of each litigant, insurer was disqualified by public policy, from defending and, insurer being disqualified, defendant did not violate co-operation clause by appointment of his own counsel.

4. Insurance ⚷514½

Insurer, which had issued automobile liability policies to each party to automobile collision action and hence had an adverse interest to each, was not obligated to pay for services of attorneys of one insured in prosecuting declaratory relief proceeding arising out of insurer's erroneous assertion that such insured, by securing his own counsel, had violated co-operation clause and thereby invalidated his insurance coverage, since it was not necessary that insured proceed in a declaratory relief action and he could have had issue determined in ordinary legal procedure by proceeding to trial in collision case and, if not successful there, in maintaining action on policy.

5. Insurance ⚷514½

Where plaintiff and defendant in automobile collision case were each insured by same insurer, plaintiff was entitled to defend against cross-complaint through attorneys of his own selection rather than those selected by insurer but was not entitled to attorney's fees from insurer in such defense.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank M. Smith, Judge.

Action for declaratory relief by W. D. O'Morrow against Jack Borad, Firemen's Insurance Company of Newark, New Jersey and The Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Company of New York for a declaration that plaintiff has right by use of his own attorneys, to defend against, and to prosecute cross-complaint in, automobile negligence action without loss of insurance protection. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Musick, Burrell & Pinney, Anson B. Jackson, Jr., and Eugene M. Elson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Benjamin J. Goodman and Laurence Berger, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Jack Borad.

Hunter & Liljestrom, of Los Angeles, for respondents Firemen's Ins. Co. and Metropolitan Casualty Ins. Co.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief. The plaintiff O'Morrow and the defendant Borad were insured under automobile insurance policies which policies, identical in form, covering public liability and property damage, were issued by defendants Firemen's Insurance Company of Newark, New Jersey, and the Metropolitan Casualty Insurance Company of New York, Those companies will be referred to as the "insurer." On December 19, 1943, while those policies were in effect, the automobiles of plaintiff O'Morrow and defendant Borad, which were being operated by them, collided at a street intersection. Both of them claimed to have suffered personal injury and property damage as a result of the collision and they gave prompt notice of the collision to the insurer as required by the policies. Thereafter Borad, through an attorney other than the insurer's attorneys, filed a complaint against O'Morrow in the Municipal Court of the City of Los Angeles for $1,922.54 damages alleged to have resulted from the collision. On January 18, 1944, copies of the summons and complaint in that action were served upon O'Morrow. On January 19, 1944, one of O'Morrow's attorneys notified the insurer by telephone concerning the service of the summons and complaint, and the insurer then informed said attorney that Borad was also insured by the insurer, and the insurer told the attorney to discuss the matter with the manager of the Los Angeles office of the insurer, who would be in his office the next day. On January 20 the attorney for O'Morrow told the manger by telephone that in the opinion of the attorney O'Morrow had a valid affirmative claim against Borad, that O'Morrow desired to comply in all respects with the terms of his insurance policy, that since O'Morrow and Borad were insured by the same insurer it seemed obvious that the interests of O'Morrow and Borad were the opposite of the interests of the insurer, and asked the manager what his suggestions were as to the manner in which the matter should be handled; that the manager said in reply thereto that the insurer intended to employ Hunter & Liljestrom, attorneys at law, to represent the insurer and he would have those attorneys communicate immediately with O'Morrow's attorneys, and the manager asked said attorney to send the copy of the Borad complaint to the manager. On January 21, O'Morrow's attorneys wrote and sent a letter to the insurer, enclosing the copies of the summons and complaint, and stating in substance that in their opinion O'Morrow was free from negligence and his damages would exceed the jurisdiction of the Municipal Court and that O'Morrow should not only file an answer but should file a cross-complaint; that an unusual circumstance had arisen since both parties were insured by the same insurer, and that the interests of the insurer and those of O'Morrow were divergent and from ethical considerations it would seem improper for the insurer's regular counsel to represent him at least as to the cross-complaint; and that since Borad's complaint would require an answer by January 28, the attorneys for O'Morrow suggested a conference with the insurer and their counsel immediately in order to determine a proper course to pursue.

On January 26 one of the attorneys for the insurer told O'Morrow's attorneys that he had arranged for an extension of time, until after such a conference, within which O'Morrow might answer Borad's complaint. On January 27 a conference was held wherein it was tentatively agreed, subject to further conference, that an answer to Borad's complaint and a cross-complaint by O'Morrow against Borad should be interposed by both firms of attorneys, i.e., O'Morrow's attorneys, Musick, Burrel & Pinney, and the attorneys for the insurer, Hunter & Liljestrom, but with the understanding that the attorneys for the insurer would have no responsibility in prosecuting the cross-complaint.

On January 27, after the conference and prior to any further communication from the insured or their attorneys, O'Morrow's attorneys wrote and sent a letter to the insurers wherein it was stated in substance: that since the conference the attorneys for O'Morrow had given further consideration to the conflicting interests involved and were convinced it was not to the insurer's interest to aid O'Morrow in the successful prosecution of his affirmative cause of action against Borad, who was also insured by the insurer; that it would be to the insurer's interest to defeat O'Morrow's affirmative claim; that if Borad had an affirmative claim against O'Morrow it would be to the insurer's interest to defeat that claim; that any recovery by either O'Morrow or Borad would have to be paid by the same insurer; that under such circumstances it would be improper that the insurer have any connection with the litigation and that the function of the insurer should be that of a stake-holder, abiding the result of the litigation; that it was the intention of O'Morrow's attorneys to defend O'Morrow and to prosecute his claim without any participation by the insurer; that Borad's counsel should take the same position and that an arrangement should be made between the insurer and both O'Morrow and Borad whereby the insurer should agree to pay the costs, fees of the unsuccessful litigant, and the judgment against him; and that the attorneys for O'Morrow would be glad to consult with the insurer's counsel at all times, but as to participation by the insurer's counsel in the litigation the interests of O'Morrow and the insurer were so diverse as to make that impossible. A copy of that letter was sent to Mr. Liljestrom, one of the attorneys for the insurer.

On January 28 the attorneys for the insurer wrote and sent a letter to the attorneys for O'Morrow wherein it was stated in substance: that after giving further thought to the tentative agreement and before receiving the letter of January 27 the attorneys for the insurer concluded that they should not appear on the cross-complaint; that if they felt that in representing O'Morrow in the defense against Borad's complaint there might arise any conflict in their duty to him and his insurance carrier they would not consider representing him; that the insurance carrier, in referring the defense to them, understood that they would take the position that O'Morrow was not negligent; that as to the cross-complaint the responsibility would be entirely that of O'Morrow's attorneys, Musick, Burrell & Pinney; that O'Morrow might handle the litigation as he deemed advisable, but they wished to advise him that might invalidate his coverage under his policy; that they particularly called his attention to the provision with regard to the assistance and co-operation required of the assured and the right of the company to have complete control of the defense; that the insurer insisted upon handling the defense, and unless permitted to do so would not pay any costs or attorneys' fees incurred by O'Morrow and would not waive any of its rights under the policy; and that they were enclosing a copy of a letter of January 27 which the insurer's attorneys had sent to Borad's attorney relative to their understanding with him as to additional time within which to plead.

About February 11, 1944, O'Morrow's attorneys, Musick, Burrell & Pinney filed an answer to Borad's complaint which answer was in the usual form in such cases and denied that O'Morrow was negligent and alleged contributory negligence on the part of Borad. At the time of filing the answer, said attorneys for O'Morrow also filed a cross-complaint against Borad for $6,359 damages alleged to have resulted from the collision. The cause was then transferred to the superior court. Under employment by the insurer, and on behalf of Borad, the law firm of Parker, Stanbury & Reese filed an answer to the cross-complaint.

On February 14 the insurer wrote and sent a letter to O'Morrow, and sent a copy of it to his attorneys, advising that since he had filed an answer to Borad's complaint and was proceeding with the defense of that action in violation of the terms of his policy, the insurer would not pay any costs or attorneys' fees incurred or any settlement made or any judgment rendered against him; and that the insurer reserved all its rights under the policy.

On February 23 the complaint herein for declaratory relief was filed by O'Morrow wherein he named Borad and the two insurance companies (referred to herein as the insurer) as defendants, and wherein he sought a declaration of the rights of the parties under his insurance policy, particularly as to whether under the circumstances above stated he had the right, without invalidating his insurance coverage, to defend against the Borad complaint and to prosecute his cross-complaint against Borad through competent attorneys of his own selection who should be paid by the insurer a reasonable sum for their services not to exceed the amount ordinarily paid by the insurer to its regular attorneys. By stipulation the trial of the damage action has been continued until after the determination of this appeal.

One of the provisions of the policy is:

"II. Defense, Settlement, Supplementary Payments.

"As respects such insurance as is afforded by the other terms of this Policy

"(a) under Coverages G and H the Company shall

"1. defend in his name and behalf any suit against the insured alleging such injury or destruction and seeking damages on account thereof, even if such suit is groundless, false or fraudulent; but the Company shall have the right to make such investigation, negotiation and settlement of any claim or suit as may be deemed expedient by the Company;

"2. pay all premiums on bonds to release attachments for an amount not in excess of the applicable limit of liability of this Policy, all premiums on appeal bonds required in any such defended suit, but without any obligation to apply for or furnish such bonds, all costs taxed against the insured in any such suit, all expenses incurred by the Company, all interest accruing after entry of judgment until the Company has paid, tendered or deposited in court such part of such judgment as does not exceed the limit of the Company's liability thereon, and expenses incurred by the insured, in the event of bodily injury, for such immediate medical and surgical relief to others as shall be imperative at the time of the accident;

"(b) the company shall reimburse the insured for all reasonable expenses, other than loss of earnings, incurred at the Company's request. The Company agrees to pay the amounts incurred under this Insuring Agreement, except settlements of claims and suits, in addition to the applicable limit of liability of this Policy."

Coverages "G and H" referred to in the above provision are:

"Coverage G—Property Damage Liability

"To pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become obligated to pay by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law for damages because of injury to or destruction of property, including the loss of use thereof, caused by accident and arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the automobile.

"Coverage H—Bodily Injury Liability

"To pay on behalf of the insured all sums which the insured shall become obligated to pay by reason of the liability imposed upon him by law for damages, including damages for care and loss of services, because of bodily injury, including death at any time resulting therefrom, sustained by any person or persons, caused by accident and arising out of the ownership, maintenance or use of the automobile."

Another provision of the policy is: "The insured shall cooperate with the Company and, upon the Company's request, shall attend hearings and trials and shall assist in effecting settlements, securing and giving evidence, obtaining the attendance of witnesses, and in the conduct of suits. The insured shall not, except at his own cost, voluntarily make any payment, assume any obligation or incur any expense other than for such immediate medical or surgical relief to others as shall be imperative at the time of accident."

The trial court concluded that appellant (O'Morrow) had violated the conditions of the policy of insurance in that he refused to permit respondents (the insurance companies) to defend in his name and on his behalf the action filed by Borad, and that he had failed to co-operate with respondents in the defense of said action. Judgment in accordance with those conclusions was entered, and the appeal is by O'Morrow from that judgment.

The appellant (O'Morrow) contends that the insurer was disqualified to defend him against Borad's complaint or to prosecute his cross-complaint against Board for the reason that the interests of the insurer were in conflict with the interests of O'Morrow. He argues that the insurer, being the insurer of both parties—O'Morrow and Borad, would be required to pay the judgment (within the limit of the policy) which O'Morrow might obtain against Borad upon his cross-complaint and therefore it would be to the interests of the insurer to defeat him on his cross-complaint; that the matter of defending him against the complaint of Borad, being inextricably interwoven with the matter of prosecuting the cross-complaint, could not be presented in the trial as a matter separate and apart from the cross-complaint, and since the insurer was clearly disqualified to represent O'Morrow on the cross-complaint, he was likewise disqualified to defend him against the claim of Borad; that appellant's right to recover damages from Borad is as substantive a right, if the facts entitle him to such recovery, as is his right to a successful defense against Borad's complaint; that when a person places the defense or prosecution of his legal rights in the hands of another, a relationship of trust is created where the person to whom the defense is entrusted is the trustee and the other person is the cestui que trust, and the trustee must act in the utmost good faith toward the cestui que trust in protecting his rights, not only with reference to a defense of the cestui que trust but as to an affirmative claim of the cestui que trust arising out of the same transaction which is necessarily inextricably and indivisibly bound up with his rights from a defensive standpoint; that a person assuming to act as a trustee who has an interest in conflict with those of the beneficiary is disqualified from acting as trustee, except when the beneficiary with full knowledge of the motives of the trustee permits the trustee to act for him (citing Section 2230 of the Civil Code); that the beneficiary O'Morrow, having knowledge of the motives of the insurer to protect itself against the affirmative claim of O'Morrow, has chosen not to permit the insurer to act as his trustee; that he is not obligated to do it under the express terms of the insurance policy, since it obligates the insurer in a wholly unilateral way to furnish a defense for the insured but it does not obligate the insured to permit the insurer to conduct his defense; that he is not obligated to do it under the statute, and if there were any conflict between the requirements of the insurance policy and the statute, the statute would prevail; that considerations of public policy would prevail also over such a provision of the insurance policy; that the conflict in interests between O'Morrow and the insurer is one of the insurer's own making, resulting from its chosen method of doing business—holding itself out to the general public to insure all comers and taking the chance and assuming the risk of the occurrence of such a situation as the one that has arisen here, where two of its assured in good faith assert claims against each other under conditions covered by their insurance policies; that the insurer by insuring two persons who are involved in the same collision, has so changed its position toward O'Morrow from that which normally exists between an insurer and the assured where the insurer has no interest on the other side of the controversy, as to prejudice the rights of O'Morrow if he entrusts the litigation to the insurer, and the insurer is thereby estopped to compel O'Morrow to entrust it with the litigation; that the insurer can conduct the litigation only through attorneys who are its employees, and if the attorneys employed by the insurer should be in active charge of the litigation as counsel of record for O'Morrow, a relationship of highest trust and confidence would be created between the principal, which is the insurer acting through its employee attorneys, and O'Morrow, who is the nominal client of the insurer's attorneys; that by reason of that relationship, created by the insurer, and the conflicting interests between the insurer and O'Morrow the insurer is disqualified from conducting the litigation in behalf of O'Morrow and has waived its rights, if any it had, to defend him; and that the proposal by counsel herein for the insurer, that the insurer have control of the defense for O'Morrow by one firm of attorneys and have control of the defense for Borad against the cross-complaint by another firm of attorneys and that the attorneys selected by O'Morrow have the responsibility of the cross-complaint, is wholly impractical and impossible since the issues of negligence and contributory negligence must be tried at the same time and there is no line of demarkation in such a case between the evidence for the defense and the evidence on the cross-complaint, and that if the insurer's two sets of attorneys have been successful in their examinations up to the theoretical point where evidence on the cross-complaint should begin, the negligence of O'Morrow and Borad will have been established and the cause of action on the cross-complaint will have been destroyed. Appellant also contends that the insurer is disqualified to defend Borad for the same reasons that it is disqualified to defend O'Morrow.

The insurer (respondent) asserts that appellant has the right to prosecute his cross-complaint against Borad, and that it has not contended that the provisions of the policy gave it any control over the cross-complaint. It does contend that it has the right to control O'Morrow's defense to Borad's complaint through one firm of attorneys, and to control Borad's defense to O'Morrow's cross-complaint through another firm of attorneys. It contends further that O'Morrow has violated the co-operation clause of the policy by filing an answer to Borad's complaint and by notifying the insurer that he (O'Morrow) intended to defend against Borad's complaint without any participation therein by the insurer.

[1] O'Morrow was entitled not only to present a defense against Borad's complaint, but he was entitled to present evidence under his cross-complaint against Borad. Likewise Borad was entitled to present a defense against O'Morrow's cross-complaint and to present evidence under his complaint against O'Morrow. The insurer is willing that O'Morrow, through attorneys of his own selection, have the responsibility for his cross-complaint, but it insists that it has the right to control, through attorneys of its own selection, the defense on each side of the controversy. If it should successfully defend each side there would be no recovery against it on either the cross-complaint or the complaint, and then of course it would not be required to pay a judgment under either insurance policy. The issues in the collision case, as to liability, being negligence and contributory negligence, it would seem that when the evidence necessary upon those issues had been presented under Borad's complaint by Borad's attorneys and under O'Morrow's answer thereto by the insurer's attorneys, there would not be any further evidence, on the subject of liability, available for presentation under the cross-complaint by O'Morrow's attorneys. Under such conditions, where the defenses of O'Morrow and Borad would be controlled by attorneys selected by the insurer, the delegation of responsibility for the cross-complaint to attorneys selected by O'Morrow would not afford them an adequate opportunity to represent him properly on the cross-complaint.

Counsel herein for the insurer state that one of its material rights under the insurance policy is the right to compromise, and that if it had control of O'Morrow's defense through attorneys of its own selection it might effect a compromise with Borad (whom it was defending through attorneys of its own selection), and that such a compromise would in no way prejudice O'Morrow on his cross-complaint against Borad. In such circumstances the insurer would be in reality negotiating a settlement with itself, since it would be employing the attorneys representing both sides. Assuming, under those circumstances, that O'Morrow had a strong case against Borad on his cross-complaint, it would be to the interest of the insurer to pay, on behalf of O'Morrow, some comparatively small amount to Borad in settlement of his claim against O'Morrow. Proof that O'Morrow's attorneys of record (selected by the insurer) had settled Borad's affirmative claim against O'Morrow, which claim arose out of the identical collision that was the basis of O'Morrow's cross-complaint, would have a prejudicial effect upon the cross-complaint.

[2] If the insurer were to undertake the defense of O'Morrow through its own attorneys, it and the attorneys would owe him their undivided allegiance to his cause and the duty of acting in utmost good faith in his behalf. The relationship between them and him should be one of the highest trust and confidence. Likewise the insurer and its attorneys would owe the same high duties to Borad whom they are defending on O'Morrow's cross-complaint. The attorneys selected by the insurer to defend O'Morrow and the attorneys selected by the insurer to defend Borad, even though they are members of different law firms and nominally would be the attorneys for the opposing parties O'Morrow and Borad, are in fact employed by the insurer to represent its interests and they owe their allegiance to their client, the insurer. The interests of the insurer are in conflict with the interests of O'Morrow and Borad. The interests of the attorneys employed by the insurers to represent said persons, whose interests are in conflict with the interests of the insurer, are likewise in conflict with the interests of O'Morrow and Borad.

[3] Usually in an automobile collision case which is before the court, the persons involved in the collision, if insured, are insured in different companies. In such usual case the interests of the insurer and the insured are not in conflict and the insurer has the right to defend the insured. The collision case herein is unusual in that the persons involved in the collision were insured by the same insurer and each person has an affirmative claim against the other, with the result that the interests of the insurer are in conflict with the interests of each insured. One of the insured herein, having filed his answer through attorneys of his own selection and having notified the insurer that he will defend without any participation therein by the insurer, has been notified by the insurer that he had thereby violated the co-operation clause of his policy. The question arises as to whether, under these unusual circumstances, the insurer should forego its right to defend the insured which it has in the usual case where there is no conflict of interests between the insurer and the insured, or whether the insured should forego his fundamental right, based upon considerations of public policy, to be represented in his defense by an attorney at law whose interests are not in conflict with his interests. If it should be held that O'Morrow violated the co-operation clause by reason of his election, under the peculiar circumstances herein, to rely upon his right to be represented by attorneys of his own selection whose interests are not in conflict with his interests then he is without insurance. The insurer is in the business of insuring persons for compensation, taking chances and risks of various kinds including the occurrence of such an unusual situation as the one here presented where two of its assured have affirmative claims against each other arising from the same automobile collision. O'Morrow purchased insurance in order to be insured and to avoid the chances and risks of financial loss in the event of an automobile collision. As between the two, the insurer which asserts its right to defend the insured when its interests are in conflict with his interests, and the insured who will be without insurance if he has violated the co-operation clause by relying upon his fundamental right to be represented by one whose interests are not in conflict with his interests, the question should be resolved in favor of the insured. The insurer is disqualified to defend O'Morrow through attorneys of its own selection for the reason that the interests of the insurer are in conflict with the interests of O'Morrow. The insurer, under the unusual circumstances here, is estopped to compel O'Morrow to entrust it with the control of his defense. The insurer being disqualified, as above stated, O'Morrow did not violate the co-operation clause. The insured, O'Morrow, is entitled to defend against the complaint of Borad through competent attorneys of his own selection.

As above stated, a further contention of O'Morrow is that the insurer should pay for the services of his attorneys in defending him against Borad's complaint. It appears that it was the intention of O'Morrow to prosecute an affirmative claim against Borad irrespective of whether Borad prosecuted an affirmative claim against O'Morrow. Before the complaint of Borad was filed, O'Morrow had employed attorneys to file a complaint against Borad. If O'Morrow's complaint had been filed and Borad had answered without filing a cross-complaint, the insurer would not have been required to pay for the services of O'Morrow's attorneys in prosecuting his complaint, since the insurance policy did not provide that the insurer should prosecute an affirmative claim for the insured. After Borad had filed his complaint, O'Morrow was required to defend against that complaint, and it was necessary for O'Morrow to file a cross-complaint, if he intended to prosecute an affirmative claim against Borad. O'Morrow's defense and his cross-complaint, as to liability, are based upon the same evidence. As above stated, when his defense is completed there will be nothing more to prove, as to liability, under the cross-complaint. It therefore appears that if O'Morrow had prosecuted his affirmative claim against Borad in an independent action, as he intended to do, the services rendered by his attorneys would have been the same as they would be in defending against Borad's complaint and in prosecuting O'Morrow's cross-complaint. O'Morrow was prevented from proceeding in an independent action by the filing of the Borad complaint, and O'Morrow's plan to prosecute his cross-complaint against Borad was interfered with by the insurer's insistence, under the peculiar circumstances herein, that it be permitted to defend O'Morrow through its attorneys. Since O'Morrow is entitled, under the decision herein, to defend through attorneys of his own selection, and since the evidence on his defense is included in the evidence on his cross-complaint, he is in the same position, as to prosecuting his affirmative claim, as he was in before Borad filed his complaint. It might be argued that he is not in the same position, as he was in when he intended to file an independent action, for the reason that at that time he was not confronted with the necessity of making a defense, and of course the insurer was not then obligated to defend him; and that when Borad filed his complaint it became necessary to make a defense, and since the premium paid by O'Morrow included payment for a defense the insurer should be required to pay for the defense even though O'Morrow is prosecuting a cross-complaint. It is correct that O'Morrow was not confronted with a defense when he was preparing to file an independent action, but that distinction between his position at that time and his position now is not a practical one. The insurer is willing to defend him through its attorneys and insists upon doing so, and if O'Morrow's cross-complaint were not involved he would be willing undoubtedly to be defended by the insurer. Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, where the insurer is disqualified to defend O'Morrow because he insists upon his right to prosecute his cross-complaint, the legal services to be rendered in his behalf are the same, for all practical purposes, as they were before the Borad complaint was filed. Being in the same position, for all practical purposes, as he was in originally when he intended to file an independent action and to pay for the services of his attorneys, it would result in a profit to him, not a reimbursement, if the insurer were required to pay for the services of his attorneys on the theory that the attorneys were defending him when in fact by such services he would be accomplishing his original object of prosecuting an affirmative claim against Borad. The insurer should not be required to pay for the services of O'Morrow's attorneys in defending him.

[4] Another contention of O'Morrow is that the insurer should pay for the services of his attorneys in prosecuting this declaratory relief proceeding. Although the insurer had notified him that he had violated the co-operation clause and had thereby invalidated his insurance coverage, it was not necessary that he proceed in a declaratory relief action. He could have proceeded to trial in the damage case with his own attorneys and if successful on his cross-complaint, and consequently successful in his defense, it would not be material whether his insurance coverage was valid or not, since he would not be liable for damages as a result of the collision; and if not successful in his defense against Borad's complaint and the insurer should still contend that he had invalidated his insurance, he could then have a judicial determination of that matter. If he was solicitous about proceeding in that manner and wanted the protection of a declaratory relief judgment, the insurer should not be required to pay his attorneys' fees in this declaratory relief proceeding.

[5] Borad is entitled to defend against the cross-complaint through attorneys of his own selection. He is not entitled to his attorneys' fees in such defense.

The judgment is reversed. Appellant to recover his costs.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 293

SCHULTZ v. SCHULTZ.

Civ. 14856.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 26, 1945.

1. Appeal and error ⟹15

Appeal from order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate order dismissing plaintiff's action for failure to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, no answer having been filed, was dismissed as a mere repetition of plaintiff's appeal from order of dismissal. Code Civ. Proc. § 581a.

2. Appeal and error ⟹113(2)

An appeal does not lie from an order denying a motion to vacate judgment if grounds upon which moving party seeks to have judgment vacated existed before entry of judgment and were available on appeal therefrom.

3. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹65

Under statute providing that an action in which judgment is not entered within three years after service of summons in absence of an answer, must be dismissed by court on its own motion, a stipulation against entry of default except on ten-day notice of intention to enter default and opportunity to plead cannot take from court power and duty to dismiss action on its own motion after expiration of three year period. Civ.Code, § 3513; Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

4. Constitutional law ⟹70(1)

The courts do not have power by judicial decision to render practically meaningless direct and positive requirements of an applicable statute.

5. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹65

The code section providing for dismissal of an action on court's own motion when judgment is not entered within three years after service of summons in the absence of an answer was adopted to secure expeditious and prompt disposition of litigation and not for benefit and repose of individuals and cannot be contravened by private agreement or stipulation. Civ.Code, § 3513; Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

6. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹65

Under code section directing court on its own motion to dismiss an action in which no answer has been filed and more than three years have elapsed after service of summons, court has no discretion. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

7. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹45

Although courts are loath to deny a trial on the merits, they must do so when circumstances of case fall within explicit terms of code section directing dismissal for failure of plaintiff to enter judgment within three years after service of summons when no answer has been filed. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

8. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹60(6)

The burden of bringing about an expeditious trial is cast by the code on plaintiff, and, while defendant may bring about an expeditious trial, he is under no legal duty to do so and is required to do no more than meet plaintiff step by step. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

9. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹60(2)

The word "answer", as used in code section requiring dismissal of an action if plaintiff has failed to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons if no answer has been filed, does not mean "appear in the action". Code Civ. Proc. §§ 437, 581a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Answer" and "Appear in the Action".

10. Dismissal and nonsuit ⟹60(2)

Stipulation, under which plaintiff agreed not to have defendant's default entered without giving defendant 10 days' notice of intention to do so so as to give defendant an opportunity to plead, was not an "answer" within meaning of code section declaring what an answer shall contain or within section providing for dismissal of action within three years after summons has been served if no answer has been filed and plaintiff has failed to enter judgment. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 437, 581a, 1014.

11. Appearance ⟹8(3)
Pleading ⟹76

An appearance is not necessarily an answer although an answer is an appearance. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 437, 581a, 1014.

12. Dismissal and nonsuit ⚷60(2)

The code section providing for dismissal for failure to enter judgment discloses legislative intent that specified actions be dismissed by court whenever no answer has been filed, regardless of what appearance may have been made other than by answer, when plaintiff fails to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a.

13. Constitutional law ⚷56
Dismissal and nonsuit ⚷45

The code section requiring dismissal of an action within three years after service of summons, if no answer has been filed and plaintiff has not had judgment entered, is not unconstitutional as impinging jurisdiction of superior court to enter a default. Code Civ.Proc. § 581a; Const. art. 6, § 5.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Myron Westover and Emmet H. Wilson, Judges.

Action by Inez M. Schultz against Henry C. Schultz for separate maintenance. From an order on court's own motion dismissing the action for plaintiff's failure to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, no answer having been filed, and from order denying plaintiff's motion to vacate order of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal from order denying motion to vacate, dismissed; and order of dismissal affirmed.

H. Sidney Laughlin, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George H. Pratt, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court dismissing an action pursuant to the provisions of the second paragraph contained in section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, in part, provides that "all actions * * * must be dismissed * * * if summons has been served, and no answer has been filed, if plaintiff * * * has failed, to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons."

[1, 2] Plaintiff also attempts to appeal from an order denying her motion to set aside the foregoing order, but the same must be dismissed because it is at once apparent that the attempt to appeal from the order refusing vacation of the order of dismissal is but a repetition of plaintiff's appeal from such last-mentioned order. "As to the order denying the motion to vacate the judgment, under the settled law of this state an appeal will not lie from such order if the grounds upon which the moving party sought to have the judgment vacated existed before the entry of the judgment and were available on appeal therefrom. (Citing cases.)" Mather v. Mather, 22 Cal.2d 713, 720, 140 P.2d 808, 811.

In the action with which we are here concerned, summons was served upon defendant and no answer was ever filed. After more than four years had elapsed following service of summons, the court on its on motion dismissed the action on August 30, 1944, under the authority conferred by section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The action here in question is one for separate maintenance and the record before us discloses, in chronological order, the following steps taken in the litigation from its inception up to the order of dismissal.

Dec. 27, 1939, Complaint filed, summons order to show cause re support pendente lite, costs and attorney fees, and temporary restraining order issued and duly served upon the defendant.

Dec. 29, 1939, On affidavit of defendant, temporary restraining order modified in part.

Jan. 5, 1940, Order to show cause re alimony pendente lite, costs, attorney fees and restraining order called for hearing, and continued to February 1, 1940. In the minute order appears the following: "By stipulation, as to restraining order, to be written and filed".

Jan. 10, 1940, Stipulation entered into between the parties under date of January 5, 1940, filed providing for payment by defendant of plaintiff's attorney fees and further providing "that the plaintiff herein will not enter default against the defendant, Henry C. Schultz, except upon and after serving the Attorney of Record for said defendant with written notice of her intention to enter the same, unless the defendant plead within 10 days after service of said written notice", and "that this stipulation in no manner constitutes a waiver of any legal right whatsoever or an admission of any liability, of either of the parties". (Emphasis added.)

Feb. 1, 1940, Pursuant to the foregoing order of continuance under date of January 5, cause again called and ordered off calendar.

Aug. 19, 1944, Amended complaint and supplemental complaint filed. Order to show cause and temporary restraining order returnable Aug. 28, 1944, issued.

Aug. 21, 1944, Amended complaint, supplemental complaint, order to show cause and temporary restraining order served on defendant.

Aug. 28, 1944, Foregoing order to show cause and restraining order of August 19 called for hearing and continued to September 14, 1944.

Aug. 30, 1944, Following minute order entered: "It appearing to the court from an examination of the record herein that this action should be dismissed under the provisions of Section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure; now, therefore, upon the court's own motion the above entitled action is hereby dismissed."

[3] Appellant earnestly contends that, because of the above-quoted stipulation, the court was without power to enter the defendant's default and therefore the provisions of section 581a were inapplicable. This argument is not impressive. In Lynch v. Bencini, 17 Cal.2d 521, 531, 110 P.2d 662, it was held that the last paragraph of the code section imposes a duty upon the plaintiff to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons, with a resulting benefit to the defendant, and casts a specific penalty upon a plaintiff when he fails to perform the duty imposed upon him. The case just cited further holds, 17 Cal.2d at page 532, 110 P.2d at page 668, that whenever there is a failure on the part of the plaintiff to perform the aforesaid duty, the court "must dismiss the action", and must do so "on its own motion"; and furthermore, that "it is error for the court to fail to perform this duty directly imposed upon it." "[That] the statute is 'jurisdictional' in the sense that the court has no power to excuse the delay" and is empowered "to act only in a certain way, that is, by ordering a dismissal" was the holding in Gonsalves v. Bank of America, 16 Cal.2d 169, 172, 105 P.2d 118, 120.

[4] In the case at bar, the plaintiff, under the stipulation, at all times during the statutory period of three years following service of the summons, had it within her power to give the defendant 10 days' notice of her intention to enter his default unless he "plead within 10 days after service of said written notice". Appellant's contention that section 581a is in reality a statute of limitations, may be waived by the party benefitted thereby, and that by reason of the foregoing stipulation the defendant did in fact waive any rights he might have under the statute is emphatically answered by the very language of the stipulation that the same "in no manner constitutes a waiver of any legal right whatsoever * * * of either of the parties". We are further persuaded that the terms of the last paragraph of section 581a with which we are here alone concerned, providing that the action must be dismissed by the court "on its own motion", would be rendered practically nugatory if by stipulation the parties to an action might take from the court not only its power but its duty to dismiss the action on its own motion. The courts are without power by judicial decision to render practically meaningless the direct and positive requirement of the portion of the statute which is applicable to a case such as this where the defendant did not file an answer.

[5-8] We are further impressed that the portion of the statute here under consideration was adopted to secure expeditious and prompt disposition of litigation, and not for the benefit and repose of individuals. When a law is established for a public reason, and not intended for the benefit of an individual, such law cannot be contravened by a private agreement or stipulation (Sec. 3513, Civ.Code). While courts are loath to deny a trial on the merits, nevertheless the portion of the code provision with which we are here concerned directs in plain and explicit terms what shall be done in cases like the one at bar and the court has no discretion. To relax the rule in some cases would be to set at naught the will of the legislature. So far as the equities referred to by appellant are concerned, in the instant case it must be borne in mind as heretofore pointed out that at all times within the statutory period of three years she had it within her power to compel the defendant to answer. While the defendant may bring about an expeditious trial of a case, he is under no legal duty so to do, but the plaintiff is. The defendant is required to do no more than meet the plaintiff step by step.

[9-11] Appellant next contends that the court, in this case, should construe the word "answer" used in the second paragraph of section 581a to mean "appear in the action"; and that the stipulation hereinbefore discussed constituted an appearance by defendant in the case at bar. Appellant relies upon the following language in Lynch v. Bencini, supra, 17 Cal.2d at page 533, 110 P.2d at page 669: "This statutory provision was plainly intended to apply in just such a case as this where the defendant did not appear"; and the case of Jacks v. Lewis, 61 Cal.App.2d 148, 151, 142 P.2d 358, 360, wherein the court used the phrase "failure of the defendant to appear and plead", is also cited by appellant. In view of the reasoning contained in the foregoing opinions taken as a whole, as well as the conclusions reached therein, we are unable to ascribe to these isolated expressions the meaning imputed to them by appellant. The history of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure, as set forth in People v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 17 Cal.App.2d 257, 260, 61 P.2d 1184, coupled with the holding of the Supreme Court in Lynch v. Bencini, supra, militates strongly against appellant's contention. The words "answer" and "appear" are not synonymous. To construe the word "answer" as used in section 581a as including every "appearance" would amount to judicial legislation, which is beyond the authority of the court. Sec. 437, C.C.P., provides that "The answer of the defendant shall contain: 1. A general or specific denial of the material allegations of the complaint controverted by the defendant. 2. A statement of any new matter constituting a defense or counterclaim." The stipulation filed in the instant action contains neither. Sec. 1014 of the same code provides that "A defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, or gives the plaintiff written notice of his appearance, or when an attorney gives notice of appearance for him." This section makes it plain that, although an answer is an appearance, an appearance is not necessarily an answer.

[12] In the light of the final paragraph of section 581a, C.C.P., the only portion of the section with which we are here concerned, we must assume from the plain and unequivocal language used that when the legislature enacted the same, the legislative intent was that the actions mentioned in said paragraph must be dismissed by the court whenever no answer has been filed, regardless of what "appearance" may have been made other than by answer, when plaintiff fails to have judgment entered within three years after service of summons.

[13] Appellant's final contention, which challenges the constitutionality of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure upon the ground that it attempts to deprive the Superior Court of jurisdiction conferred upon it by Article VI, Section 5, of the Constitution of the State of California, is without merit. Appellant argues that the code section in question impinges upon the jurisdiction of the Superior Court to enter a default, or to do anything other than dismiss the action, after more than three years. In Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 916, 156 P.2d 25, 26, the court stated: "It is well settled that the trial court has jurisdiction to render a default judgment more than 'three years after service of summons' (Code Civ.Proc. 581a) although such a judgment is erroneous and subject to direct attack upon an appeal from it". (Citing cases.) However, in the instant case, the court did not attempt to enter such a judgment or take any action other than to order dismissal of the action and deny plaintiff's motion to vacate such order of dismissal. Manifestly it cannot successfully be maintained that the court is without jurisdiction to dismiss an action for lack of prosecution or that legislation authorizing such action is unconstitutional.

For the reasons herein stated, the attempted appeal from the order denying the motion of plaintiff to set aside and vacate the order of dismissal is dismissed. The order dismissing the action pursuant to the provisions of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 267

COMPTON v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO.

Civ. 12848.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

July 24, 1945.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Aug. 18, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 15, 1945.

1. Commerce ⚷27(8)
Master and servant ⚷110

The test to determine whether an employee working in a roundhouse on an engine undergoing "running repairs" or servicing, the engine being nominally engaged in interstate commerce, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal Employers' Liability Act, and the test to determine whether such an engine is in "use" and on railroad's "line" within the Safety Appliance or Boiler Inspection Acts, are not synonymous. Safety Appliance Acts, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.; Boiler Inspection Act of 1911, § 2, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. § 23; Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51.

2. Master and servant ⚷110, 111(1)

The federal statutes imposing absolute liability on railroads for injuries caused by defective equipment exclude such liability while the car or engine is removed from actual service, even temporarily, for repairs, and with the exception of the statute making it unlawful for a railroad to use any car in interstate commerce not provided with grab irons, the statutes apply only when the engine or car is in actual use on the line or in moving traffic. Safety Appliance Acts, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 1, 2, 4-6, 11, 13, 17; Boiler Inspection Act of 1911, § 2, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. § 23.

3. Master and servant ⚷110

Where locomotive engaged in interstate commerce, called for a stated time, had a defective check valve which caused steam to escape into a feed water pump, and a machinist repairing the pump was burned by steam, but the locomotive was in a roundhouse for temporary "running repairs", the locomotive was not in actual "use" on the railroad's line within the Boiler Inspection Act which did not apply so as to make the railroad absolutely liable regardless of railroad's negligence. Boiler Inspection Act of 1911, § 2, as amended, 45 U.S.C.A. § 23.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Use".

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; A. F. Bray, Judge.

Action by Felix E. Compton against the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation, under the Boiler Inspection Act, for injuries. After defendant's motions for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict were denied, a verdict was returned for plaintiff, and from a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals.

Judgment reversed and trial court directed to enter judgment for defendant.

Carlson, Collins & Gordon, of Richmond, for appellant.

Hildebrand, Bills & McLeod, of Oakland (Louis H. Brownstone, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, while employed as a machinist in the roundhouse of defendant railroad company at Yuma, Arizona, and while working on a locomotive of defendant admittedly engaged in interstate commerce, received injuries for which this action was brought. The locomotive was in an unsafe condition in that the check valve on the boiler was defective causing steam to escape into the pump on which plaintiff was working. It is not contended that the unsafe condition was caused by the negligence of defendant or its employees, the sole basis of liability being that defendant violated the Boiler Inspection Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 23. Under that statute, in the event of a violation, liability is absolute, is not dependent on negligence, and contributory negligence of the employee is no defense. The trial court, after denying defendant's motions for a nonsuit and for a directed verdict, submitted to the jury the question as to whether such statute had been violated. The jury brought in a verdict for $4,000, and upon entry of judgment, defendant appeals. Its sole contention is that, inasmuch as the locomotive here involved was admittedly undergoing running repairs in the roundhouse of defendant at the time of the accident, the Boiler Inspection Act, as a matter of law, has no application, liability, if any, in such cases being based on the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51, under which statute negligence constitutes an indispensable element of liability.

45 U.S.C.A. § 23, provides: "It shall be unlawful for any carrier to use or permit to be used on its line any locomotive unless said locomotive, its boiler, tender, and all parts and appurtenances thereof are in proper condition and safe to operate in the service to which the same are put, that the same may be employed in the active service of such carrier without unnecessary peril to life or limb, * * *." (Italics added.)

Under this section the carrier is under an absolute duty to keep its locomotives in such condition that they may be "employed in the active service of such carrier without unnecessary peril to life or limb." Unless the locomotive is in such condition it is made unlawful "to use or permit" it "to be used on its line." The question here is whether a locomotive detached from all cars and placed in a roundhouse for running repairs is in "use" "on its line" within the meaning of the statute.

The facts are not in dispute and are as follows: Yuma, Arizona, is a terminal point of defendant. When a freight train reaches Yuma its engine is disconnected from the train and is taken by the crew to a lead or turn in track where it is turned over to a hostler, a yard employee, who takes it to the roundhouse, where the locomotive is inspected and serviced before its next run. The roundhouse is about two blocks from the main lines. So-called "running repairs" are made at the roundhouse. These are repairs of a minor nature that do not require more than twenty-four hours to perform. If more extensive repairs are needed the locomotive is deemed "in the hole" and "out of service," and labeled "withdrawn from service." While a locomotive is being inspected and serviced, or is undergoing running repairs in the roundhouse, it may be called by the transportation office for duty. The foreman of the roundhouse then determines whether the locomotive may go out or whether further time for the repairs is needed.

The locomotive here involved had completed a run and was brought to the roundhouse by the hostler. Plaintiff reported to work at 7 a. m. at the roundhouse on the day of the accident and was instructed by the foreman to repair the leaking pump on the engine. The accident occurred at about 7:15 a. m. At that time the engine had been "called" for 8 a. m., that is, the transportation office had assigned it to a particular train leaving at that hour. Although the repairs were not completed, the roundhouse foreman had indicated that the locomotive would be ready for service at the requested time. This would mean that about 7:30 a. m. the locomotive would be driven on a lead out track by the hostler and delivered to the crew.

When plaintiff was assigned the duty of repairing the pump the locomotive had a fire in the fire box and steam up in the boiler. The job required the installation of a new gasket in the head of the hot water chamber of the feed water pump. While removing the cap to install the gasket, steam and hot water escaped and plaintiff received severe burns on the face and body. Subsequent investigation revealed that a small piece of metal had become lodged under the boiler check valve causing it to remain partially open and thus permitting steam to escape from the boiler into the feed water pump on which the plaintiff was working. It is conceded that if the Boiler Inspection Act is applicable, this unsafe condition constituted a violation of the act.

The trial court submitted to the jury the question as to whether at the time of the accident the locomotive was in use on defendant's line within the meaning of the Boiler Inspection Act. We are of the opinion that this was error in that it appears from the uncontradicted evidence, as a matter of law, that that statute is not applicable to the facts here involved.

There appears to be no case directly in point interpreting the Boiler Inspection Act, but there are several cases directly in point interpreting the Safety Appliance Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq., which contains language very similar to that used in the Boiler Inspection Act. The leading case is Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hooven, 6 Cir., 297 F. 919. In that case liability was sought to be predicated upon a violation of the Safety Appliance Act which also creates an absolute liability. As it then read that statute provided that it shall be unlawful "to haul or permit to be hauled or used on its line any car" not equipped with certain safety appliances. Section 2. The plaintiff, a machinist, was working upon a locomotive that had been sent to the roundhouse the day before the accident for its regular monthly inspection and for running repairs. At the time of the accident, as in the instant case, the locomotive had been called for service. It was customary for engines brought into the roundhouse to be sprayed with oil to protect them from rust. The oil was then washed off with warm water. The engine had been sprayed but the oil had not yet been removed. The plaintiff in descending from the top of the boiler slipped on a steel running board on which there was some oil, and was injured. He was unable to save himself by grabbing the safety grab rails because they also were covered with oil. The Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the judgment for the plaintiff. In so doing the court stated the question involved as follows (page 921 of 297 F.): "Does the absolute liability of the railroad for the appliances and their security as fixed by the statute follow its instrumentalities of transportation beyond their actual present use or hauling, or, more specifically, is it the intent of the act to have the absolute liability imposed by it attach to the vehicle during such time as it is withdrawn temporarily from actual service and after it has reached the place of repair and is undergoing conditioning and repair for the purpose for which it is intended and for the use to which it is assigned?"

After pointing out the test for liability under the Employers' Liability Act is entirely different from that under the Safety Appliance Act, the court stated that under the latter statute the test was whether the car was in "use" "on its line," and that under that test "it is difficult to see wherein the safety of a highway of interstate commerce may be endangered by a locomotive withdrawn from service and at rest in a stall of the railroad's roundhouse undergoing repairs, even though such withdrawal be but temporary."

The court then held (page 922 of 297 F.):

"The act forbids the 'use' or 'hauling on its line' of prescribed cars. Whatever ambiguity lies in the statute results from the susceptibility of the term 'use' to an interpretation equivalent in meaning to the terms 'employ' or 'engage,' or the phrase 'habitually use,' as distinguished from the term 'use' as implying actual present use. Having in mind the broad aims and purpose of the statute and its specific provisions, we think there can be no doubt as to the meaning of its prohibitory clause. The statute imposes an absolute liability on the carrier to equip its vehicles with safety appliances and to keep such appliances secure. The act of equipping the vehicle originally with the safety appliances and the act of repairing an appliance which becomes defective in use are acts in compliance with and not in violation of law and are not in our judgment acts which the law intends to penalize. The process of conditioning an engine and preserving it from deterioration through rust by spraying it with oil appears to be, so far as this record is concerned, the usual and necessary treatment of the engine during monthly inspection, contributing to the safety of the apparatus while in actual use. If during such treatment the safety appliances are rendered temporarily insecure by the presence of oil upon them, it does not seem to us to present a condition that comes within the purview of the act, when as in this case the engine is completely withdrawn from all relationship to the highways of interstate commerce, and from all connection with the movement of trains thereon.

"Another consideration also contributes to this conclusion. Assuming it to be the wise and humane purpose of the act to secure the utmost of safety to travelers and employees upon the highways of interstate commerce, whatever may be the source of the dangers which threaten it, it becomes the clear duty of the carrier in conformity with such purpose, as was suggested by this court (opinion of Judge Knappen, Southern Ry. Co. v. Snyder, 6 Cir., 187 F. 492, at page 497, 109 C.C.A. 344), to exercise a high degree of diligence in discovering and repairing defects in its safety appliances and in withdrawing the car from commercial use while they exist. Such diligence seems also to be imposed on the carrier by the Boiler Inspection Act (Comp.St. § 8630 et seq. [45 U.S.C.A. § 22 et seq.]) and related statutes. Can it be said that it is the intention of the Safety Appliance Act to penalize such diligence by extending the absolute liability of the carrier through the period of replacement and repair, and reaching even a case where the insecure condition of the appliance which failed was the natural and temporary result of the reconditioning process? We think such contention untenable, unless supported by specific direction of the statute."

The plaintiff in the instant case seeks to distinguish the Hooven case in that in the latter case the unsafe condition was a reasonably necessary incident of processing the locomotive, which is not true in the present case. While it is true that this factual difference exists, such difference in no way affects the basic question of interpretation as to whether an engine temporarily removed from service and undergoing temporary repairs is in "use" on the carrier's "line." The case is directly in point on this basic issue.

Other cases support the conclusion that the statute does not apply to locomotives removed from actual service and undergoing repairs. In New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kelly, 7 Cir., 70 F.2d 548, an injured employee based his action on violations of both the Safety Appliance Act and the Federal Employers' Liability Act. It was admitted that the car was in interstate commerce. Judgment for plaintiff was reversed by the Circuit Court. The plaintiff was a brakeman on a yard crew. The car in question was defective and was so marked. It was undergoing repairs on a repair track where it had been for three days. Plaintiff was injured when he fell because of the lack of a grab iron which had been removed in the course of repairs. The repairs were undoubtedly more extensive than running repairs. In holding that as a matter of law there had been no violation of the Safety Appliance Act the court stated (page 550 of 70 F.2d): "After a defective car reaches the place of repair, the Safety Appliance Act is inapplicable because such car has been withdrawn from service and is not 'in use' under the provisions of the act, nor does mere shifting of cars within the place of repair put the car 'in use' within the meaning of the statute." Citing several cases, including the Hooven case, supra.

In Sherry v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 6 Cir., 30 F.2d 487, also a Safety Appliance Act case, the car in question had been cut from the train, placed on a "ladder" track, and reported as having a defective brake. Plaintiff was an inspector and, while inspecting the brake, was injured by reason of its defective condition. The Circuit Court affirmed a directed verdict for defendant, holding that, as a matter of law, the Safety Appliance Act had no application. The court stated (page 489 of 30 F.2d):

"The absolute liability above referred to is implied from these statutory provisions, and it is to be noted that the inhibited act on the part of the railroad company in each is 'the hauling or permitting to be hauled or used' on its line any car with the required equipment in defective condition. This constitutes the 'violation of the act' we have above referred to in statement of the general principles deduced from precedent. It has accordingly been held by this court that the act has no application to equipment withdrawn from service and undergoing minor repairs preparatory to early return to service. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hooven, 6 Cir., 297 F. 919. Cf. McCalmont v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 6 Cir., 283 F. 736.

"In the instant case the defective car was not being hauled or used by the defendant, except in that it was stored temporarily upon one of the ladder tracks. It had been withdrawn from use for the very purpose of undergoing repair. No movement was immediately contemplated, and no action of setting the brakes was necessary, save as incident to inspection and repair."

Another case discussing the question involved, also a Safety Appliance Act case, is Kaminski v. Chicago, M., St. P. & P. R. Co., 180 Minn. 519, 231 N.W. 189, where a judgment for plaintiff was reversed. The car in question was in the heavy repair yard of defendant and was undergoing extensive repairs. Cars were customarily transferred from one track to another in the course of making repairs. While the car in question was being thus moved, plaintiff, in attempting to pull himself up the side of the car, grasped the grab iron. It came off and he fell to the ground. The grab iron was to be removed in the course of the repairs and the nuts holding it in place had been burned off. Usually the grab irons fell off or were taken off when the bolts were burned, but in this case the grab iron remained insecurely on the car. The court said: "We understand these cases to hold that, although a car with defective appliances is being moved for the purpose of taking it out of service and placing it at the point where it is to be repaired, it is within the operation of the Safety Appliance Act during such movement. But we have been cited to no case and know of none which goes to the extent of holding that a car with defective appliances which has been taken out of service and has been placed on a repair track to be repaired in a yard used exclusively for the purpose of making repairs, and which is actually in process of being repaired, is still within the operation of the Safety Appliance Act." (page 190 of 231 N.W.)

After analyzing both the Hooven and Sherry cases, supra, and citing certain other cases, the court concluded (page 191 of 231 N.W.): "We reach the conclusion that, where a bad order car has been withdrawn from service and taken to and placed in a repair yard where it is being repaired, subsequent movements of the car made in the course of the work and for the purpose of facilitating it are not within the operation of the Safety Appliance Act."

A case discussing the Boiler Inspection Act and apparently interpreting it when it provided that it applied to locomotives "in moving interstate traffic" is Harlan v. Wabash Ry. Co., 335 Mo. 414, 73 S.W.2d 749, 753. In that case the locomotive was undergoing inspection and conditioning in the roundhouse. During inspection it was discovered that the mechanical stoker was jammed. Plaintiff, a machinist's helper, was injured during the course of the repairs when he stepped into an open trap door in the engine vestibule and his foot was crushed by a revolving propeller. It was held that no cause of action under the Boiler Inspection Act had been proved first, because leaving open the trap door was not a mechanical defect, and secondly, because the engine was not in use or moving in interstate commerce. In connection with this last holding the court stated (page 753 of 73 S.W.2d):

"Nor can plaintiff recover under the Boiler Inspection Act for the reason that the engine in question on which plaintiff was working when injured was not at the time in use or moving in interstate commerce, as we held in Brady v. Wabash Ry. Co., 329 Mo. 1123, 49 S.W.2d 24, 29, 83 A.L.R. 655. This act, like the Safety Appliance Act (45 U.S.C.A. § 1 et seq.), while applicable only to interstate commerce, is narrower in its scope and application than is the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.). The latter act covers negligence of an interstate carrier resulting in the injury or death of an employee when the negligent act or omission is directly connected with interstate transportation and the instrumentalities thereof, or is so nearly related to it as to be practically a part thereof. The Boiler Inspection Act, like the Safety Appliance Act, does not rest on negligence, but is absolute in its requirements and is restricted to locomotive engines when in use in moving interstate traffic. It is only when in such use that the engine and appliances are required to be 'in proper condition and safe to operate in the service to which the same are put.' We pointed out in the Brady case that the Safety Appliance Act, and the same is true of the Boiler Inspection Act, does not apply to cars or engines when withdrawn from active use in interstate commerce for temporary repairs, though intended to be again and shortly put in such active use. * * *

"It follows from these rulings that under the facts shown here the engine in question was not in actual use in moving interstate commerce at the time of the plaintiff's injury, but was so far withdrawn from such active use as to make the provisions of the Boiler Inspection Act inapplicable. But it must not be concluded that this is true as to the broader provisions of the Federal Employers' Liability Act."

These cases clearly establish that a locomotive sent to a roundhouse for temporary repairs, is not, while undergoing such repairs, in "use" on the carrier's "line" and is not, therefore, within the provisions of the Boiler Inspection Act.

Plaintiff relies principally on three cases to sustain his contention that the act is applicable—New York Cent. R. Co. v. Marcone, 281 U.S. 345, 50 S.Ct. 294, 74 L.Ed. 892; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Kast, 6 Cir., 299 F. 419, certiorari denied 266 U.S. 613, 45 S.Ct. 95, 69 L.Ed. 468; and Brady v. Terminal R. R. Ass'n, 303 U.S. 10, 58 S.Ct. 426, 82 L.Ed. 614. The first two cases are clearly not in point. In the Marcone case the employee in question was employed in a roundhouse to grease engines therein for inspection. He was killed when the engine was moved while he was apparently working on it. The action for his death was based on the Federal Employers' Liability Act, under which liability is based on the negligence of the carrier. One of the questions involved was whether the deceased employee was engaged in interstate commerce at the time of his death. The court held that he was. The same point was involved in the Kast case. The gist of the opinion is indicated by the first two headnotes which read: "A railroad employé, engaged in a work in interstate commerce, who had stopped work and was going after his lunch on the premises when injured, with the intention of returning immediately afterward to the same work, was employed in 'interstate commerce' at the time of injury, within Employers' Liability Act." "A machinist and his helper, who at the time of the helper's injury were engaged in making running repairs to an engine in use in interstate transportation, while it was laying off between runs at a roundhouse, held employed in 'interstate commerce,' within Employers' Liability Act."

[1] These two cases are of no help at all in deciding the problem presented on this appeal. All they decided was that an employee working in a roundhouse on an engine undergoing running repairs or servicing, where such engine is normally engaged in interstate commerce, is engaged in interstate commerce within the meaning of the Federal Employers' Liability Act. The cases did not consider whether such an engine was in "use" on its "line" within the meaning of the Safety Appliance or Boiler Inspection Acts. Most of the five cases cited by defendant, and above analyzed, point out that the two tests are not synonymous. That this is so is made quite clear when the language of the Federal Employers' Liability Act is considered. 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 provides in part:

> "Every common carrier by railroad while engaging in commerce between any of the several States or Territories * * * shall be liable in damages to any person suffering injury while he is employed by such carrier in such commerce * * * for such injury or death resulting in whole or in part from the negligence of any of the officers, agents, or employees of such carrier * * *.
>
> "Any employee of a carrier, any part of whose duties as such employee shall be the furtherance of interstate or foreign commerce; or shall, in any way directly or closely and substantially, affect such commerce as above set forth shall, for the purposes of this chapter, be considered as being employed by such carrier in such commerce * * *."

This language is obviously different from that used in the Boiler Inspection Act which makes it unlawful "for any carrier to use or permit to be used on its line" any locomotive unless its boiler is safe "to operate in the service to which the same are put, that the same may be employed in the active service of such carrier without unnecessary peril to life or limb." 45 U.S.C.A. § 23. This last language was carefully framed to state the thought that the absolute liability being imposed only applied while the locomotive was in actual use on the "line" of the company in "active service."

The third case relied upon by plaintiff—Brady v. Terminal R. R. Ass'n, 303 U.S. 10, 58 S.Ct. 426, 82 L.Ed. 614—is likewise not in point. Brady was an inspector for the Wabash Railway Company. He was injured while inspecting cars when a grab iron became loose. He sued the Terminal Railroad Association under the Safety Appliance Act which extends its benefits not only to employees of the defendant carrier but to any person rightfully on the premises —employee, employee of another carrier, passenger, etc.—who is injured by reason of the defective appliance. When injured Brady was inspecting a car brought by the defendant Terminal Railroad Association to yards of the Wabash line. The cars were placed on the receiving track of the Wabash line, and Brady was inspecting them to determine whether they were in proper condition to be accepted by the Wabash line when he was injured. The United States Supreme Court held that the car was still in "use" by the Terminal Railroad Association, even though not actually on a line of that company. The court was careful to point out that (page 13 of 303 U.S., page 428 of 58 S.Ct., 82 L.Ed. 614): "It is not a case where a defective car has reached a place of repair," citing with apparent approval the Hooven and Kelly cases, supra. The rationale of the opinion is that the car was still in "use" by the Terminal Railroad Association until accepted by the Wabash line. The case has no application to cars withdrawn from service and undergoing repairs.

The several federal statutes imposing absolute liability on railway carriers for injuries caused by defective equipment all seem to have been drawn carefully to exclude such absolute liability while the car or engine is removed from actual service, even temporarily, for repairs. These statutes appear in 45 U.S.C.A. Chapter 1, §§ 1–23, inclusive. Section 1 provides: "It shall be unlawful for any common carrier engaged in interstate commerce by railroad to use on its line any locomotive engine in moving interstate traffic" not equipped with a power driving-wheel brake. Section 2 provides that it shall be unlawful for any interstate railroad common carrier "to haul or permit to be hauled or used on its line any car used in moving interstate traffic" not equipped with an automatic coupler. Section 4 provides that it shall be unlawful for an interstate railroad carrier "to use any car in interstate commerce" not provided with grab irons. Section 5 provides that no freight cars "shall be used in interstate traffic" which do not comply with the standard as to height of drawbars. Section 6 provides that any interstate railroad carrier using any locomotive "or hauling or permitting to be hauled or used on its line any car" in violation of the preceding provisions shall be liable to a $100 penalty for each violation. Section 11 provides that it shall be unlawful for any carrier subject to §§ 1–16 of this title "to haul, or permit to be hauled or used on its line" any car subject to the provisions of these sections unless said car is equipped with certain designated safety appliances, while § 13 provides that any carrier subject to these provisions "using, hauling, or permitting to be used or hauled on its line" any car subject to §§ 1–16 of this chapter not equipped as provided in §§ 11–16 shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each violation, provided that, if during a run such defect is discovered, the defective car may be hauled to a place of repair without the penalties, but civil liabilities will continue during such haul. Section 17 provides that it shall be unlawful for any interstate railroad carrier "to use any locomotive in moving interstate or foreign traffic" not equipped with an ash pan. Section 23 is the Boiler Inspection Act. Its language has already been several times quoted.

[2, 3] It will be noted that in not one of the absolute liability sections, except § 4, does the statute apply to cars or engines simply engaged in interstate commerce. In each section, except § 4, some further limitation appears. In some of the sections it is required, in addition, that the equipment be used in "moving interstate traffic." Others use language more comparable to that used in § 23. But with the exception of § 4 each of the sections in Chapter 1 of Title 45 U.S.C.A. clearly and without ambiguity indicates that it is to apply only when the car is in use on the line or in moving traffic. This, by necessary implication, excludes such sections when the equipment is removed from the line and placed in a roundhouse for temporary or more serious repairs.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed. See Stetson v. Sheehan, 186 Cal. 334, 200 P. 392.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 261

PEOPLE v. DOBBS.

Cr. 637.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 23, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⚷1023(8)

Entry of minute order sustaining demurrer to information with leave to amend was a sufficient "judgment" from which the people could appeal under provision of Penal Code for appeal from judgment for defendant on demurrer. Pen.Code, §§ 1005–1008; § 1238, subd. 2.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Judgment".

2. Homicide ⚷127

A general charge of manslaughter, without alleging whether voluntary or involuntary manslaughter is intended, and without reciting the precise facts that will be relied upon, is sufficient to uphold conviction of either voluntary or involuntary manslaughter. Pen.Code, §§ 192, 952.

3. Indictment and Information ⚷110(17)

Information charging, in language of statute, the unlawful killing without malice of named persons, sufficiently charged the crime of manslaughter. Pen.Code, §§ 192, 952.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; G. R. Freeman, Judge.

John Percy Dobbs was charged with manslaughter, and, from an order and judgment sustaining his demurrer to the information and granting leave to amend within ten days, the People of the State of California appeal.

Order and judgment reversed.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and John Neblett, Dist. Atty., of Riverside, for appellant.

Sarau, Thompson & Colegate and H. L. Thompson, all of Riverside, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with manslaughter. On April 23, 1945, his demurrer to the information was argued and an order was entered in the minutes sustaining the demurrer with leave to amend within ten days. On April 27, 1945, what purports to be a formal judgment, sustaining the demurrer and granting the plaintiff leave to amend within ten days, was filed and recorded in the book of judgments. On the same day, the plaintiff appealed both from the order of April 23 and the judgment of April 27.

The first question presented is whether any right of appeal is here available to the appellant. Subdivision 2 of section 1238 of the Penal Code provides that an appeal may be taken by the People "from a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer" to the information. The respondent contends that neither the minute order sustaining the demurrer with leave to amend nor the formal judgment thereafter entered is such a judgment on demurrer as is required by subdivision 2 of section 1238; that neither is a final judgment in any sense since permission to amend was granted; that if the district attorney did not desire to amend a judgment of dismissal should have been entered; that such a judgment of dismissal is the judgment for the defendant which is contemplated by section 1238; and that a review of the order sustaining a demurrer can be had only upon an appeal from a judgment of dismissal.

There appears to be no authority in this state which is directly in point under all of the circumstances which here appear. In People v. Ah Own, 39 Cal. 604, it was held, under the old Practice Act, that an order sustaining a demurrer to an indictment amounted to a final judgment and was appealable. This was based upon the then existing difference between civil and criminal cases, the complaint in the one being amendable while in the other it was not. In People v. Jordan, 65 Cal. 644, 4 P. 683, 684, decided after sections 1007 and 1238 of the Penal Code were adopted, it was held that an appeal would lie from an order sustaining a demurrer to an indictment. The reason given for this holding was not the matter of finality mentioned in the Ah Own opinion but was because "the Penal Code does not provide for any entry of judgment on demurrer, other than the entry of the order upon the minutes. Section 1007. The order in the minutes is the judgment." Although at that time a complaint was not amendable this fact was not relied on and, in effect, the court held that the judgment on demurrer referred to in section 1238 was the order allowing the demurrer and entered in the minutes as provided for in section 1007.

The matter again arose in 1922, nearly forty years after the Jordan decision. In People v. Apple, 57 Cal.App. 110, 206 P. 487, 489, an appeal from an order sustaining a demurrer was dismissed. After holding that the appeal was taken too late, the court went on to hold that an appeal from such an order would not lie because, since the decision in the Jordan case, section 1008 of the Penal Code had been so amended as to make indictments or informations amendable, and to further provide for the entry of a judgment of dismissal in case they were not amended after the sustaining of a demurrer. The court stated that this latter provision clearly "contemplated that either a judgment of dismissal or a judgment upon the demurrer itself without a dismissal" should be entered, and that it followed that there could be no appeal except from a judgment so entered. It is difficult to see how this provision for a judgment of dismissal, under certain conditions, clearly or otherwise contemplated, as an alternative, a formal judgment upon a demurrer without a dismissal, which is nowhere provided for in the code. It may be observed that if a judgment of the latter kind is contemplated by any of the code sections, one was here entered. It should also be observed that while section 1008 then provided for a judgment of dismissal after a demurrer was sustained, under certain conditions, section 1007 had not been amended, was not limited to the conditions expressed in 1008, and still provided that the court must give judgment either allowing or disallowing the demurrer and that an order to this effect must be entered in the minutes, which order, it was held in the Jordan case, "is the judgment." The provisions of section 1007 were not discussed in the Apple case. The decision in that case was followed in People v. Ryan, 57 Cal.App. 338, 207 P. 269, and in People v. Hadley, 64 Cal.App. 221, 222, 221 P. 389, and without a discussion of the provisions of section 1007. In none of these cases was a hearing in the Supreme Court requested.

It is true that at the time the last-mentioned cases were decided there was not an entire absence from the Penal Code of any provision for the entry of a judgment of dismissal, after the sustaining of a demurrer, since section 1008 then provided for such a judgment under certain circumstances. However, in that respect the situation has now been restored to that existing at the time of the Jordan decision, since in 1927 section 1008 was so amended as to eliminate that portion which provided for the entry of a judgment of dismissal in case no amendment was made after the sustaining of a demurrer. As a result, it is again true, as pointed out in the Jordan case, that no provision is made in the Penal Code for any entry of judgment on demurrer other than the entry of the order upon the minutes, as provided for in section 1007.

There is one distinction between the present situation and that prevailing at the time of the Jordan decision, although the matter was not there mentioned. Complaints are now amendable. The respondent argues that this fact is conclusive, that the words used in section 1238, "from a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer," refer to a judgment which is a final determination of the case, that the rule should be the same as that in a civil case where a judgment of dismissal is required after the sustaining of a demurrer, and that a review of an order sustaining a demurrer can be had only upon an appeal from a judgment of dismissal.

[1] It may be assumed that good reasons could be advanced for applying the same rule in this regard in both civil and criminal actions. On the other hand, there may be good reasons for a different rule in criminal cases, where questions of jeopardy are involved, and where it may be considered an advantage to both parties to have the legal sufficiency of the charging instrument determined in advance, and before the ordeal of a criminal trial must be undergone. In any event, we regard this as a question for the legislature and not for the courts. Section 1238, which sets forth specifically the instances in which the People may appeal, makes no mention of a judgment of dismissal but definitely provides for an appeal "from a judgment for the defendant on a demurrer." Assuming that a court, under its general powers, could properly enter a judgment of dismissal, after a demurrer has been sustained and upon refusal to amend, and that such a judgment would be appealable under subdivision 2 of section 1238, it would be unreasonable to hold that this subdivision refers exclusively to a judgment entered under such implied powers and that it does not apply or relate to the only such judgment which is specifically provided for in the Penal Code, the one mentioned in section 1007. Section 1005 provides for a demurrer to an information. Section 1006 provides for an early hearing on that demurrer. Section 1007 then provides that on considering this demurrer the court "must give judgment," and then provides that its order thereon "must be entered upon the minutes." Under some circumstances, in civil cases, a minute order is considered as a judgment for the purpose of serving as a foundation for an appeal and no good reason appears why the same should not be true, in such a case as this, where the code section expressly provides that the court must give judgment and then, in effect, provides that this judgment shall be entered in the form of a minute order. As the court pointed out in the Jordan case: "The order in the minutes is the judgment." Assuming that a judgment of dismissal may properly be entered after the sustaining of a demurrer, under certain conditions, another form of judgment, to be entered as a minute order, is specifically provided for in section 1007. In our opinion the entry of such a minute order is a sufficient judgment, within the meaning of the statutes, from which an appeal may be taken.

A further question is presented as to whether the information here sufficiently charges the respondent with the commission of the crime of manslaughter under section 192 of the Penal Code. The respondent contended through his demurrer, and contends here, that the information is insufficient and uncertain in that it cannot be ascertained therefrom whether he is charged wtih voluntary manslaughter or involuntary manslaughter; whether he is charged with voluntary manslaughter or lawful act not amounting to a felony or with the commission of a lawful act in an unlawful manner; what unlawful act he was committing at the time in question; or how or in what manner he was committing a lawful act without due caution or circumspection.

Section 192 of the Penal Code defines manslaughter "is the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice." The two kinds of manslaughter, voluntary or involuntary, are then set forth. Section 952 provides that an offense may be charged in the words of the statute, or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is accused.

The information here charges that the respondent on or about the 26th day of February, 1945, in the county of Riverside, "did unlawfully and without malice kill" four persons who are named. This charges the offense of manslaughter in practically the identical language used in the statute. The language used is also practically identical, so far as material here, with that of the information involved in People v. Herbert, 6 Cal.2d 541, 58 P.2d 909, 912, where a conviction of manslaughter was affirmed. In analyzing the requirements of a manslaughter charge in that case, in connection with the question of former jeopardy, the court said:

"The ingredient of manslaughter is that a human life was unlawfully taken. * * The statute defining it is general and it makes no difference as to the particular means or methods by which it is committed if death ensues from the commission of an unlawful act not amounting to a felony, or from the commission of a lawful act which might produce death in an unlawful manner or the commission of a lawful act without due caution and circumspection. Section 192, Pen.Code. The manner of its commission need not be pleaded."

[2] In People v. Pearne, 118 Cal. 154, 50 P. 376, 377, the court said: "If this indictment had simply charged an 'unlawful killing,' without malice, it would have charged the crime of manslaughter of both kinds, voluntary and involuntary." Even before the rules of pleading in criminal cases were relaxed by the amendments of 1927 and 1929 it was held sufficient to allege an offense in the language of the statute except in cases where fraud was an essential element of the crime. In re Berto, 195 Cal. 774, 235 P. 735. In many cases, before and after those amendments, it was held that a general charge of manslaughter was sufficient to uphold a conviction of either voluntary or involuntary manslaughter, that it was not necessary to allege in the information which of the two kinds of manslaughter were charged against the defendant, and that no recital of the precise facts that would be relied upon is necessary. People v. Hunt, 26 Cal.App. 514, 147 P. 476; People v. Bones, 35 Cal. App. 429, 170 P. 166; People v. Wilson, 193 Cal. 512, 226 P. 5. Similar principles have been applied in connection with the charging of the commission of other crimes. People v. Fewkes, 214 Cal. 142, 4 P.2d 538; People v. Chait, Cal.App., 159 P.2d 445.

[3] In our opinion, the complaint here sufficiently charges the respondent with the crime of manslaughter and the court erred in sustaining the demurrer.

The order and judgment appealed from are reversed.

MARKS, J., concurs.

70 Cal.App.2d 399

In re LOUD'S ESTATE.

HOWARD v. LOUD et al.

Civ. 14788.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
July 31, 1945.

1. Wills ⇨675

In order that a trust may arise from the use of precatory words, the court must be satisfied, from the words themselves, taken in connection with all other terms of distribution, that testator's intention to create an express trust was as full, complete, settled and sure as though he had given the property to hold upon a trust declared in the ordinary manner.

2. Wills ⇨672(3)

Where the direction to an executor is sufficiently definite and imperative, an intent to create a trust may be legitimately inferred.

3. Wills ⇨675

Where holographic will bequeathed $10,000 to testator's friend, and letter was written to designated executors bearing same date as holographic will in which testator expressed hope and wish that friend to whom bequest was made should never be in want, words in letter could not be construed as creating a precatory trust for benefit of friend in addition to specific bequest. Civ. Code, § 2221.

4. Appeal and error ⇨1056(4)

Where trial court rightly concluded that purported codicil contained no dispositive intent and therefore was not a codicil, rejection of evidence as to surrounding circumstances was not prejudicial error.

5. Wills ⇨99

A later testamentary writing which is supplementary to an earlier instrument is termed a "codicil", but a mere reference to a will with no testamentary intent is not a codicil. Probate Code, § 74.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Codicil".

6. Wills ⇨99, 206

A letter written by testator to designated executors bearing same date as holographic will, which told executors that testator wanted them to see that a friend to whom specific bequest had been made would receive her money as soon as possible, and which expressed hope that such friend should never be in want, could not be admitted to probate as a "codicil". Probate Code, § 74.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Harold L. Loud, deceased. From a judgment refusing to admit certain documents in probate, Margaret Augustus Howard appeals, opposed by Archie Chester Loud and another, executors of the estate of Harold L. Loud, deceased.

Affirmed.

Henry H. Draeger, of Beverly Hills, and Kenneth E. Grant, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur L. Erb and Richard C. Waltz, both of Beverly Hills, for respondents.

DORAN, Justice.

Harold L. Loud, an attorney at law, died at Santa Monica, California, on September 27, 1943, and a holographic will dated January 28, 1937 was duly admitted to probate, the decedent's two brothers, Archie Chester Loud and August Blanke Loud being appointed as executors. The dispositive portions of this will, read as follows:

"First, I authorize and direct my executor, hereinafter named to pay out of my estate as soon as may be after my death all my just debts and funeral expenses.

"Second, I give devise and bequeath unto Margaret Augustus Howard the sum of ten thousand ($10,000) dollars to be hers absolutely and forever. This sum to be raised by the sale of as much of my personal property as becomes necessary to raise the aforesaid sum.

"Third, I give devise and bequeath unto my mother Ida Mary Loud to be hers absolutely and forever all the rest and residue of my estate, of every nature whatsoever or wheresoever situate, of which, at the time of my death, I may be seized or possessed, or to which I may be in any wise entitled.

"Fourth, In the event of the death of my mother Ida Mary Loud prior to that of my own, I give devise and bequeath the above mentioned residue to be equally divided between by brothers Archie Chester and August B. Loud, to be theirs absolutely and forever.

"Fifth, I hereby nominate and appoint my brothers Archie Chester Loud and August Blanke Loud as joint executors of this my last will and testament."

In the words of appellant's brief, "Decedent's brothers did not seek probate, as a codicil to the will, of a further holographic instrument signed by decedent and bearing the same date as the will. Thereafter, on March 25, 1944, Margaret Augustus Howard * * * petitioned the court for admission to probate of such instrument as a codicil to the will." The purported codicil, in decedent's handwriting, was found in the same compartment, with the will, and is as follows:

"Jan. 28th, 1937

Dear Aug and Arch:

This is my last will and testament and I want you to carry it out as I have stated and see that Margaret gets the money I have left her as soon as you can. She has been a good friend for a number of years and it is my hope and wish that she shall never be in want.

I would like to be cremated if there is no objection by any of you and the old ashes scattered to the four winds—However if any of you object to this procedure then do with my remains as you will. After all it can't make much difference to me—

You have both been good brothers and we have had a wonderful mother. It all goes to have made life worth while—

Bill."

It was stipulated that the above letter was in the decedent's handwriting, that decedent was commonly known as "Bill", and that the salutation "Dear Aug and Arch" was addressed to the executors of the will.

The trial court found "That the document, dated January 28, 1937, the same date as the Will, is not a codicil, there being no testamentary intent; that the objections to its probate should be sustained and a probate of said Document should be denied", and rendered judgment accordingly.

In urging reversal of this ruling appellant makes the following contentions:

"1. The rejected instrument is testamentary in character and a codicil in that (a) it protects the Howard bequest of the will against reduction under the statutory provisions for contribution, and (b) it is dispositive in character in that, being directed to decedent's executors, it commands that provision be made to assure Miss Howard against want.

"2. In construing the rejected instrument, the probate court erred in rejecting evidence of surrounding circumstances."

It is argued in appellant's brief that, "should a pretermitted heir appear the specific bequest of $10,000.00 would be invaded proportionately with the residuary devise and bequest to decedent's mother to make up the share of the estate to which a pretermitted heir would be entitled", under the provisions of Section 91 of the Probate Code, but that the purported codicil protects Miss Howard's bequest from such invasion since it indicates that "it was the obvious intention of the testator that it should be exempted from apportionment for any such contribution." This argument is, however, without merit, for as pointed out in the respondents' brief, "no facts we brought to the attention of the trial court by stipulation, or otherwise, which indicated any probability that there are or may be pretermitted heirs", and since appellant's petition indicates that the value of the estate is "in excess of $150,000.00", the possibility of the specific bequest being invaded is speculative and remote, if, indeed, it exists at all. The record shows that the deceased died September 27, 1943 and no child has yet appeared.

What may be denominated as appellant's principal contention is that "The rejected instrument is dispositive in that, being directed to the executors, it commands provision to assure Miss Howard against want." This contention is based upon the written statement, "It is my hope and wish that she (Miss Howard) shall never be in want." By these words, appellant maintains, "In legal effect, then, the executors are directed and commanded to make such provision as will insure Miss Howard from want, and a testamentary trust is created for her benefit." The respondents, on the other hand, assert that the rejected instrument is not dispositive or testamentary in character, and that deceased's expression of hope and wish that Miss Howard "shall never be in want" is insufficient to create a precatory trust.

Section 2221 of the Civil Code declares that a voluntary trust is created "by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: 1. An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust, and, 2. The subject, purpose and beneficiary of the trust." While it is doubtless true that the subject, purpose and beneficiary of the alleged trust are designated with reasonable certainty, it does not satisfactorily appear that there was "An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust", without which intention, obviously no voluntary trust can exist. In this connection it may be noted that the trial court took judicial notice that the deceased was a practicing lawyer. It is therefore a reasonable assumption that if the testator had intended to create a trust in appellant's favor in addition to the specific bequest of $10,000, such intention would have been evidenced by some formal and definite language. In the purported codicil now under consideration it is clearly indicated that decedent desired the formal will to stand unchanged for at the inception of the letter it is stated, "This is my last will and testament and I want you to carry it out as I have stated and see that Margaret (appellant) gets the money I have left her as soon as you can." (Italics added.) The purported codicil was found in the same compartment with the will and bore the same date. Such facts lead to the conclusion that the formal will deposited with the letter must have been the instrument referred to in the letter when the testator said "This is my last will and testament," and that the testator intended only that the executors should "carry it out as I have stated". The writer then went on to informally admonish the executors to "see that Margaret gets the money I have left her as soon as you can", and further expressed the quite natural hope that "she shall never be in want". The appellants have cited no case, decided under the present California law, in which similar language has been construed as creating a trust. The existing cases, in fact, are quite to the contrary. Moreover, a judicial approval of appellant's contention in reference to this matter would create a precedent the dangers of which are too obvious to require comment.

[1] The appellant, seeking to establish a precatory trust, states that the case of Colton v. Colton, 127 U.S. 300, 8 S.Ct. 1164, 32 L.Ed. 138, is full authority for the contention here made. There the decedent, a resident of California, left a will reading as follows: "I give and bequeath to my said wife, Ellen M. Colton, all of the estate, real and personal, of which I shall die seized or possessed or entitled to. I recommend to her the care and protection of my mother and sister, and request her to make such gift and provision for them as in her judgment will be best." It was there held that a trust was created in favor of the mother and sister by reason of the precatory language in the will. But unfortunately for appellant's position, the Colton case does not represent the present California view, nor is it helpful in the instant case. In Sears v. Rule, 45 Cal.App.2d 374, 380, 114 P.2d 57, 61, the court said, "The early liberal construction of language upholding precatory trusts has been frequently rejected by modern authorities in this and all other jurisdictions." In the Sears case the court quotes from 1 Bogert on Trusts and Trustees, § 48, page 231, as follows: "The tide has run so strongly against turning precatory expressions into words of trust that the ordinary words of request, recommendation, wish, and desire are quite generally construed to have no legal effect." Pursuant to this rule the Sears case held that a voluntary trust was not created by a will which gave the residue of an estate to a named person and which declared that testator's reason for so doing was "that I am confident, and place my trust in him to the extent that he will distribute my estate in accordance with my wishes he and I have often discussed." In that case the rule as expressed in 69 C.J. page 717 is quoted with approval: "In order that a trust may arise from the use of precatory words, the court must be satisfied, from the words themselves, taken in connection with all the other terms of the disposition, that the testator's intention to create an express trust was as full, complete, settled, and sure as though he had given the property to hold upon a trust declared in the ordinary manner."

Another case not dissimilar to the present litigation is that of In re Estate of Lee, 104 Cal.App. 15, 284 P. 948, 949, in which a holographic will instructed testator's brothers and sisters to "take care of Brother Will." The court held that such words did not create a precatory trust, and further stated that the later rule of decision in respect to this matter had been "recognized and approved in section 1322, Civil Code [now Section 104, Probate Code], which provides: 'A clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any reasons assigned therefor, or by any other words not equally clear and distinct. * * *'" The appellant in the Lee case, as does appellant here, relied upon Colton v. Colton, 127 U.S. 300, 8 S.Ct. 1164, 32 L.Ed. 138, hereinbefore mentioned, and the opinion in the Lee case specifically states that the Colton case "repeatedly has been rejected in these jurisdictions as out of harmony with this later rule." The Lee case further states that "Any uncertainty as to the authority of the Colton case in this state was set at rest in Re Estate of Mitchell, 160 Cal. [618], 622, 117 P. 774," where the court said, "If that decision (the Colton case) was in any particular inconsistent with our own decisions on the subject, it would not be binding authority. The interpretation of wills is not a question upon which the federal courts control the state courts."

In appellant's reply brief it is stated that "With such authorities appellant has no quarrel". Although conceding that these authorities "follow a rule long established in California and elsewhere", it is nevertheless maintained that "this expression of hope and desire to the executors imposes an imperative obligation and in legal effect commands fulfillment of the testator's hope and desire by the executors".

[2, 3] While it is doubtless true that in a proper case, where the direction to an executor is sufficiently definite and imperative, an intent to create a trust may be legitimately inferred, it is obvious that the present situation does not present such a case. The so-called codicil here under consideration does not direct or command or even suggest that the executors shall see to it that Miss Howard "shall never be in want". Having made a definite provision to this end in the will, nothing more is expressed in the purported codicil than, as the testator has said, a mere "hope and wish that she shall never be in want." Under no theory can such words be construed as evidencing an intention to abandon or change the will; nor is such language sufficient to create a trust.

[4] In urging a reversal of the ruling which denied probate to the purported codicil, appellant presents the further point that "In construing the testamentary character of the instrument the court erred in rejecting evidence of surrounding circumstances." A formal offer was made by appellant offering to prove among other things that Miss Howard and the testator had been engaged to be married since 1928, their marriage being prevented by the objections of the decedent's mother; that in 1934 the deceased started contributing to Miss Howard's support, paying her $200 a month in addition to providing her with living quarters, an automobile and various gifts, which allowance was increased in 1938 to $300 per month; that the amount given her in 1941 approximated $7,500, and that such contributions continued to the date of testator's death. In re Spitzer's Estate, 196 Cal. 301, 307, 237 P. 739, 742, is relied upon where the court quotes with approval from In re Estate of Beffa, 54 Cal.App. 186, 201 P. 616, as follows, "'It is well settled in this country and in England: First, that in determining whether the instrument propounded was intended to be testamentary, reference will be had to the surrounding circumstances, and the language will be construed in the light of these circumstances * * *', Clarke v. Ransom, 50 Cal. [595], 600." It is significant, however, that none of these cases suggest that surrounding circumstances may be used to create a will or codicil which legally does not exist. In Re Estate of Spitzer, relied upon by appellant, the court says, "it is true that courts will not make a will for a decedent who has failed to do so for himself, * * *." Indeed, no one would seriously deny that such is and always has been the rule.

The trial court rightly concluded that the purported codicil "contains no dispositive intent whatever and therefore it is not a codicil". Such being the case, it is obvious that no surrounding circumstances, however cogent or compelling, could supply this dispositive intent. As was said by the trial court in denying the offer of proof, "the surrounding circumstances may be shown in certain situations to clear up ambiguity of language and things of that kind, but even if the testimony offered were to be received, that testimony taken in connection with the document would still leave me of the view, gentlemen, that this is not a testamentary disposition and therefore it is not entitled to admission as a codicil to the will, which has been admitted to probate, and which as a will is not assailed here". Assuming therefore, but only for the sake of argument, that the trial court had been wrong in excluding the offered evidence of surrounding circumstances, nevertheless such exclusion would have been harmless since even if such testimony had been received, the decision would still have been adverse to the appellant's contentions.

[5, 6] Section 74 of the Probate Code provides that "Except as hereinabove provided, no written will, nor any part thereof, can be revoked or altered otherwise than: (1) By a written will, or other writing of the testator, declaring such revocation or alteration, and executed with the same formalities required for the execution of a will; * * *." The purported codicil although in the handwriting of Mr. Loud, indicates no intent to revoke or modify the will.

In the words of 26 Cal.Jur. page 809: "A later testamentary writing which is supplementary to an earlier instrument is termed a 'codicil'". However, as said in Schuler on Wills, Vol. 1, sections 393, 468, "A mere reference to a Will with no testamentary intent is not a codicil." The quotation from Schuler is particularly pertinent to the present situation. The purported codicil in the present case is no more, legally speaking, than a "mere reference to a Will", and in place of showing an intent to change the will by the creation of a trust, clearly indicates that the will provisions were to be carried out in toto. The letter in question was not a codicil.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

HUBER v. HUBER. *

Civ. 14801.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 18, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 13, 1945.

1. Divorce 🔑254

A provision that there was no community property must be read into divorce judgment not containing such declaration, when considered with finding that there was no community property.

2. Husband and wife 🔑264

Evidence in divorce action did not sustain finding that there was no community property and that all realty was purchased with husband's separate funds.

3. Husband and wife 🔑257

Net profits of one-man business carried on by husband, after allowing interest upon invested capital, must be considered to be value of husband's services and therefore community property.

4. Husband and wife 🔑264

A finding that realty conveyed to husband and wife as joint tenants was purchased with husband's separate funds cannot stand except upon clear and convincing proof.

5. Husband and wife 🔑262(2), 264

A wife suing for divorce was not bound to prove that community funds were used in purchase of realty conveyed to husband and wife as joint tenants, but husband had burden of accounting for community funds which came into his hands and of proving by clear and convincing evidence every fact essential to justify reformation of the deeds.

6. Husband and wife 🔑262(2)
Reformation of Instruments 🔑43

In wife's action for divorce, husband seeking to establish that property conveyed to himself and wife as joint tenants was his separate property, without alleging or proving mutual mistake or agreement with wife, was required to prove that deeds were made under mistake upon his part which would justify their reformation and that his separate property alone was used in purchasing realty. Civ.Code, § 3399.

7. Divorce 🔑286

Where there was a material variance between proof and finding in divorce action upon question of mistake in deeds conveying realty to husband and wife as joint tenants, reviewing court would not consider sufficiency of evidence to prove mistake.

8. Reformation of Instruments 🔑45(4)

The law requires exact proof to support claim that deed was not intended to convey the title which it purports to convey. Civ.Code, § 3399.

9. Reformation of Instruments 🔑45(4)

Proof justifying reformation of deeds must be clear and convincing, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving mistake open to doubt. Civ.Code, § 3399.

10. Husband and wife 🔑14(3)

That husband's purpose in causing realty to be conveyed to himself and wife in joint tenancy was to facilitate administration of his estate and to protect wife in event of his death did not militate against effectiveness of the deeds.

11. Deeds 🔑188
Reformation of Instruments 🔑37
Trusts 🔑371(2)

Husband's cross-complaint, in divorce action, alleging that he intentionally caused property to be placed in joint tenancy, and not alleging mistake as to effect of deeds or other facts which would give him the right to recall or limit any interest vested by them in wife, stated no cause of action for annulment or reformation of the deeds, or for declaration of trust.

12. Divorce 🔑253

Testimony in divorce action did not sustain finding that husband, in causing realty to be conveyed to himself and wife as joint tenants, intended wife to have a half interest in event of his death if he did not during lifetime direct otherwise.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action for divorce by Marie Ida Huber against William X. Huber, wherein defendant filed cross-complaint. From that part of a judgment awarding divorce and alimony which denied plaintiff the interest of a joint tenant in property, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed in part.

---

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 708.

Hahn, Graf & Ross and A. A. Goldstone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George Penney, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

The judgment appealed from awarded plaintiff a divorce and $3,000 as alimony, payable at the rate of $75 per month; it also declared that four parcels of residential property which stood in joint tenancy and a fifth which had been sold by the parties were the separate property of defendant. Plaintiff has appealed from that part of the judgment which denied her the interest of a joint tenant in the property. She challenges the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings upon that issue.

Plaintiffs alleged that the five properties were owned by the parties as joint tenants and that the rents, issues, and profits therefrom were community property, as well as certain personal property and cash in bank. Defendant in his answer alleged "that the properties were placed in the joint name of plaintiff and defendant in order to facilitate administration of his estate in the event that the defendant should die and for no other reason whatsoever." He filed a cross-complaint praying for a divorce and a judgment that the properties were his separate property, and he alleged "That following the marriage of the parties hereto and for the purpose of protecting the cross-defendant herein in the event of the death of cross-complainant and for no other reason, there was placed in joint tenancy certain property purchased out of the separate funds of the cross-complainant" (describing the five properties).

[1] No facts were alleged which would justify a reformation of the joint tenancy deeds, and defendant did not allege any agreement that the properties were to be held for his use and benefit or as his separate property. Plaintiff did not allege that community funds had been used to purchase them; in her answer to the cross-complaint she did not deny that the properties had been purchased from the separate funds of defendant, but the action was tried as if there were an issue as to whether community funds also had been used. No objection was made to the sufficiency of the pleadings and they appear to have been regarded as adequate to put in issue all matters in controversy between the parties and to support any judgment which the facts might justify. Plaintiff's notice of appeal also should be regarded as sufficient to call for a review of the determination that there had been no accumulation of community property. The judgment did not declare that there was no community property, but a provision to that effect must be read into the judgment when it is considered with the finding that there was no community property. The evidence as to the existence of community property is inextricably involved in a consideration of the evidence as to the source of the funds which went into the real property. The finding that there was no community property and the finding that the real property was purchased with the separate property of the husband must stand or fall together.

The parties married December 31, 1937, and lived together a little more than five years. The properties were acquired at different times within that period and required an initial outlay of $20,852.75. The court found (1) that they were purchased with defendant's separate funds, and (2) that "while defendant caused said properties to be conveyed to the plaintiff and the defendant as joint tenants, he did so as a mere matter of convenience to himself and in order that title would, as he believed, pass to plaintiff one-half of said properties upon his death if he did not otherwise direct in his lifetime * * * that defendant did not intend to vest any present interest in said properties in the plaintiff and that she was fully conversant with that fact," and (3) that there was no community property "except of a most nominal value."

[2] The primary question is whether there was evidence to support the finding that there was no community property. If there was community property at the time of the trial, plaintiff was entitled to not less than one-half of it; if the parties had accumulated community property it would have been necessary for defendant to prove that none of it was used in the purchase of the real estate. We are satisfied that there was not sufficient evidence to sustain the finding that there was no community property. Furthermore, as we shall point out, the undisputed evidence that a substantial amount of community funds came into the hands of defendant and the complete failure of defendant to account for more than a small part of them render it impossible for us to uphold the finding that all of the real property was purchased with defendant's separate funds.

Defendant's theory of the case was that he caused the property to be placed in joint tenancy as the result of a mistake as to the effect of the deeds. His testimony will be referred to later. It is sufficient to say here that he did not allege or testify to, nor did the court find, that there was a mutual mistake of plaintiff and defendant as to the effect of the deeds. Plaintiff contends that the deeds could not be reformed, and that no other relief could be granted defendant which would affect her title as a joint tenant, except upon evidence of a mutual mistake (Civil Code, sec. 3399), or evidence of an agreement between the parties that, while the title stood in joint tenancy, the interests of the parties would be other than those of joint tenants. See Tomaier v. Tomaier, 1944, 23 Cal.2d 754, 146 P.2d 905. She contends that there was no evidence of a mutual mistake and no evidence of an agreement, and with this we agree. Her argument assumes that a large amount of community funds went into the real property. If this were true, plaintiff's title as a joint tenant would be good, in the absence of proof of a mutual mistake or an agreement giving some other meaning and effect to the deeds. Defendant could not convert community funds into his separate property except by agreement with his wife.

[3-9] A study of the transcript and an analysis of the exhibits has failed to disclose evidence to support the finding that the parties had no community property except of nominal value. The testimony upon the property issue was given by defendant and his accountant. The deductions which we make from the evidence with reference to the community income from defendant's business are based upon the testimony of the accountant and an explanatory analysis filed as an exhibit. Defendant, who was a customs broker with an established business, drew a salary, for four years following the marriage, of $300 a month, or a total of $14,400. He testified that he spent some $80 to $90 a month to maintain the household and that he paid $500 for an automobile for plaintiff, and plaintiff testified that defendant had bought her clothes to the amount of $36. Defendant did not otherwise account for the salary which he had drawn. He did not testify to the expenditure of more than $6,000 for the benefit of the community nor attempt to explain what became of the rest of his salary. Plaintiff contends that the balance of some $8,000 must have gone into the purchase of the real estate, but there was no evidence that it was used for this purpose, although we think there was no sufficient evidence to prove that none of it was so used. If we take the accountant's figures of defendant's over-all worth at the time of the marriage and at a time shortly before the time of trial, we find that they summarize as follows; at the time of the marriage defendant had cash in his business of approximately $15,000. He also had one savings account of $13,531.53 and another savings account of $522.58. The net profits of the business for the five-year period were $15,933.94. (The accountant arrived at this amount of net profits after allowing defendant 4 per cent interest upon his capital invested in the business.) Upon the record before us, the earnings that remained must be considered to be the value of defendant's services to the business, since he ran a strictly one-man business; they would therefore be community property. Witascheck v. Witascheck, 1942, 56 Cal.App.2d 277, 132 P.2d 600. There was prima facie proof of these facts as to earnings. They were shown on the accountant's summary, and as there was no evidence to the contrary, they constituted the only evidence as to the net income from the business. In computing the net income the accountant had charged to expense only $150 per month as defendant's salary, the remainder of $150 per month was reflected in his figures as earnings. Therefore, $7,200 should be added to the accountant's figure of net earnings, which gives an amount of community earnings, including salary, of $23,133.94 for the five-year period. These several figures total $52,188.05 as the amount of defendant's separate property and the community funds which he received. (We assume that the net profits from the five parcels of real estate were included in the earnings of the business, since the real estate was carried as a fixed asset of the business. These, however, amounted to only $3,925.28, according to the accountant, and if this amount should be deducted from $23,133.94, the earnings which, prima facie, belonged to the community, they would be reduced to $19,208.66, and the total figure to $48,262.77.) Defendant testified that he paid $20,852.75 for the real estate and that he expended some $6,000 for the benefit of the community and approximately $1,868.83 in repairs and improvements on the real property; he had in bank in May of 1943 $8,769.45. These figures total $37,491.03. This amount, deducted from $48,262.77, leaves $10,771.74. The record does not contain evidence from which it is possible to reconcile these two figures, namely, the total amount of defendant's total assets, separate and community, as stated, and the amount of $37,491.03 for which he accounted. We have examined the evidence from another viewpoint but without any better results. According to the figures of the accountant, the net worth of defendant's business on December 31, 1937, was $15,420.92, and in July of 1943 was shown to be only $27,728.84, inclusive of the real estate, and it is impossible from the evidence to reconcile the latter figure with defendant's worth at the time of his marriage plus the unexpended amount of his earnings during marriage. We quote the above figures and those which follow to show the inadequacy of the evidence, from any standpoint, to support the findings upon the property issues. A study of the analysis which the accountant made of defendant's business does not furnish an answer as to the source of the funds with which the real property was purchased. It appears therefrom that if defendant had used capital from his business, as well as other separate funds, for the purchase of the property, the cash capital of the business would have been reduced to $8,860.02. The summary was purely theoretical and not evidence of any fact in issue. The transcripts of defendant's savings accounts, which were his separate property, were in evidence; they showed the state of the accounts during the period in which the property was purchased but nothing as to the sources of the funds that were added from time to time after marriage, or the uses that were made of the money. There was uncontradicted evidence that defendant had separate property in his business and in his savings accounts amounting to $8,000 or $9,000 more than the cost of the properties. He testified that all of the money that went into the real estate was his separate property. He checked out all of the money in the savings accounts but he did not explain how it was expended. His total withdrawals from the Farmers and Merchants' account amounted to $18,029.57, which was less than the cost of the property. Such withdrawals also exceeded the original savings accounts by $4,498.04, which had been added to the accounts, after marriage, in 21 separate deposits. It was not shown where this money came from and there was no evidence that any part of it represented income from the real property. The cost of the properties exceeded by $6,799.64 the savings accounts which defendant had at the time of his marriage. Other than the original savings accounts, defendant kept no separate account of his separate or community funds. His salary and the rentals from the property went into a single account in the Beverly Hills bank. The $4,498.04 that was added to the Farmers and Merchants' account necessarily came from an account in which separate and community funds were commingled, since it was not shown that defendant had any other account. If there had been evidence that all the community funds had been expended for the benefit of the community, it would necessarily have followed that the real estate had been purchased with defendant's separate funds. But when there was such a great discrepancy between the amount of community funds which defendant received and those which he accounted for, he was not entitled to a finding that the real estate had been purchased with his separate funds. Such a finding cannot stand except upon clear and convincing proof that such was the fact. It was not incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that community funds were used in the purchase of the real estate. She held title as a joint tenant and defendant was attacking the deeds. He had two burdens to carry: one was to account for the community funds which had come into his hands, and the other was to prove by clear and convincing evidence every fact which was essential to justify a reformation of the deeds. Since he did not allege or prove a mutual mistake or an agreement with plaintiff, it was necessary, in order to establish his own theory of the case, for him to prove that the deeds were made under a mistake upon his part which would justify their reformation, and further that his separate property alone had been used in purchasing the real estate. As will appear hereinafter, there was a material variance between the proof and the finding upon the question of mistake and we are therefore not considering the sufficiency of the evidence to prove a mistake justifying equitable relief. We have shown the insufficiency of the evidence to support the finding that the funds used in the purchase of the property were the separate property of defendant. The law requires exact proof to support a claim that a deed was not intended to convey the title which it purports to convey. The proof that will justify reformation of a deed "must be clear and convincing, and not loose, equivocal, or contradictory, leaving the mistake open to doubt." Burt v. Los Angeles Olive Growers' Ass'n, 1917, 175 Cal. 668, at page 675, 166 P. 993, 996. Defendant produced no checks which were used in the purchase of the property nor did he give any satisfactory explanation as to the source of all of the funds that were used therein. Even if the original amounts in his savings accounts were used for that purpose, there was still an additional $4,498.04 that may have come from community funds. Defendant had knowledge as to the source of the funds that were added to his principal savings account and was under a duty to account for the community funds. Something more was required of him than his mere unsupported statement that the money used was his separate property. The issues were difficult ones to try and the court was entitled to the most complete and explicit proof which was available.

In another view of the case, the finding that the real estate was the separate property of defendant cannot be sustained. This finding of ultimate fact was based upon the finding of a particular mistake on the part of defendant as to the effect of the joint tenancy deeds, which, as we shall point out, was not sustained by the evidence.

[10-12] By his cross-complaint defendant alleged that he knowingly and intentionally caused the property to be placed in joint tenancy. The fact that his alleged purpose was to facilitate the administration of his estate and to protect plaintiff in the event of his death did not militate against the effectiveness of the deeds. He alleged no mistake as to the effect of the deeds or other facts which would give him the right to recall or limit any interest which they vested in plaintiff. In other words, his cross-complaint stated no cause of action for annulment or reformation of the deeds, or for the declaration of a trust. He testified that he did not intend that plaintiff should have any present interest in the properties and that he believed that under the deeds she would take only a half interest in the event that he was married to her at the time of his death. (We note that he was not questioned as to what he believed his interest would be if he survived plaintiff.) He also testified that after he had paid the money in the first purchase, he told plaintiff that he had arranged it so that she would get a half interest in the property if they remained married at the time of his death, and that he had made no statement to her in connection with any of the other purchases. He did not testify that plaintiff made any reply to his alleged remark and plaintiff was not questioned about it. There was no evidence that plaintiff believed or understood that she was acquiring no present interest in the property. The finding was that defendant intended for plaintiff to have a half interest in the event of his death if he did not during his lifetime direct otherwise. Defendant's testimony with respect to his intentions did not conform to the allegations of his cross-complaint, but was received without objection. The finding as to his intentions did not conform to and was not supported by his testimony. Evidently he intended plaintiff to have some interest in the properties. His testimony was that it was a future interest, conditional upon the existence of the marriage to the time of his death, but the finding was that he had a different intention. There was no evidence to support the finding that defendant caused the property to be placed in joint tenancy with the mental reservation that plaintiff's interest would terminate altogether if he should, during his lifetime, "direct otherwise." There was no evidence that he had that understanding as to the effect of the joint tenancy deeds. There is a patent and serious uncertainty in the finding as to the nature of defendant's act which would terminate plaintiff's interest, but we need not discuss that point.

The effect of the judgment was to declare the deeds valid as to defendant but void as to any interest of the plaintiff. But the deeds were not void. Defendant knowingly caused the properties to be placed in joint tenancy and the deeds were valid even if subject to reformation as between the grantees.

The finding that there was no community property except of nominal value, and the finding as to defendant's intention and his understanding of the effect of the deeds, are not supported by the evidence. The judgment must be reversed for the reasons stated. No question has been raised on the appeal as to the sufficiency of the findings to support the judgment and we therefore express no opinion on that point.

The judgment is reversed, except as to the provision which awards plaintiff a divorce, attorney's fees and costs.

DESMOND, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 382

BETHLEHEM STEEL CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 12902.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.
July 30, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑1939

The power of a reviewing court to annul the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in the exercise of its jurisdiction is limited, and if the specific findings have support in the evidence and such findings with the aid of fair inferences drawn therefrom sustain the Commission's conclusion as to ultimate facts, its decision will not be overthrown.

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑1939

Where two opposing conclusions may be drawn from facts found, the one accepted by the Industrial Accident Commission is controlling, provided it is reasonable and there is evidence in the record to support it.

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑52

The workmen's compensation law is to be liberally construed in favor of jurisdiction in the Industrial Accident Commission with the purpose of extending the benefits of the law for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment. St.1937, p. 265, § 3202.

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑1939

Courts must indulge in all reasonable inferences to support the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission, and any reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the employee. St.1937, p. 265, § 3202.

5. Workmen's compensation 🔑1573

The conclusion of the Industrial Accident Commission that injury to employee who fell on employer's premises where he had gone to receive war bond pursuant to direction shortly after quitting work in nearby main plant, arose out of and in the course of employment was sustained by the evidence.

6. Workmen's compensation 🔑610

If the particular act is reasonably contemplated by the employment, injuries while performing it arise out of the employment and are compensable.

7. Workmen's compensation 🔑610

In determining whether a particular act is reasonably contemplated by the employment, the nature of the act, the nature of the employment, the custom and usage of a particular employment, the terms of the contract of employment, and perhaps other factors should be considered.

8. Workmen's compensation 🔑610

Any reasonable doubt as to whether an act was contemplated by the employment must be resolved in favor of the employee in view of the state's policy of liberal construction in favor of employee. St. 1937, p. 265, § 3202.

9. Workmen's compensation 🔑974

Where injured employee did not realize the seriousness of the injury he had received but on day following accident employee's daughter phoned the foreman that father had been injured and three days later employee's wife personally notified employer of such injury, and compensation claim was filed with Commission six days after the accident, notice of injury was sufficient to entitle employee to reimbursement for medical expenses. St.1937, pp. 281, 294, 295, §§ 4600, 5400, 5402.

WARD, J., dissenting.

Writ of review by Bethlehem Steel Company against Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California and Daniel E. Seaquist to annul compensation award made by the Commission to the individual respondent.

Award affirmed.

R. P. Wisecarver, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and R. C. McKellips, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

KNIGHT, Justice.

On October 17, 1944, Daniel E. Seaquist, employed as a machinist by the Bethlehem Steel Company at its Twentieth Street shipbuilding plant in San Francisco, tripped and fell on a cement walk, fracturing his kneecap. He was 61 years old and had been in the employ of the company two years. On October 23, 1944, he filed an application with the Industrial Accident Commission for compensation, which the company contested upon the grounds that Seaquist's injuries did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, and that he failed to give notice of claim of an industrial injury. A hearing was had and findings were made adverse to the company on both of the foregoing issues. Accordingly, an award was entered in favor of Seaquist, which the company now seeks to have annulled upon the ground that the commission acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction, the points urged in this behalf being that the evidence does not justify the findings of fact, and that the findings of fact do not support the award.

The accident occurred about 3:30 p.m., on land belonging to the company, contiguous to the enclosed plant yard, a few minutes after Seaquist had checked out from work at the near-by main plant gate. Earlier that day he had received a card from the company stating that a war savings bond, for which he had subscribed through the company under the wage-withholding plan, was ready for delivery, and instructing him to call for the bond at a certain window in Building No. 54, located on the land on which the accident occurred. The building had been constructed and, with the exception of the ground floor, was being used by the United States Navy as a Navy Facility. The ground floor was used by the company in carrying on the bond sales transactions with its employees. Following the instructions given by the card, Seaquist called for the bond and after receiving it started to walk away, but in doing so he tripped and fell on a raised cement walk laid along the outside of the building and beneath the outside windows thereof through which the company was delivering the bonds.

The legal conclusions upon which the commission based its decision were: That the premises upon which the injury occurred were part of the premises of employment; that although Seaquist had discontinued his regular work and was on his way home, he had not left the premises of employment at the time of injury; that "the operations in which the employee was engaged at the time of the injury, namely, the withdrawing of a bond, payment for which was withheld from the wages due applicant [Seaquist], were a part of the total operations of the defendant in its capacity as employer"; that at the time of the injury Seaquist was performing a service growing out of and incidental to the employment, and that therefore the injuries received were compensable.

The basis of the argument advanced by the company in support of its position that Seaquist's injury did not arise out of and in the course of his employment is that in calling for the bond Seaquist was engaged in a strictly personal mission having no connection whatever with his employment; and that since the accident occurred outside of the plant, after Seaquist had checked out from work and was on his way home, the case does not fall within any of the exceptions to the general so-called "going and coming" rule. It is our opinion that the argument so advanced is not sustainable.

In addition to the facts above stated, the record discloses the following: The plan under which the bonds were purchased had its origin in the United States Treasury Department. In carrying out such plan the company requested all of its employees to purchase war bonds through the company by authorizing the company to withhold from their wages certain sums in payment of the bonds; and to that end the company distributed among its employees a printed form of authorization to be signed by them. When the bonds were ready for delivery, the company placed a printed form of notice to that effect in the employee's time box at the plant, instructing him to call for the bonds at a certain window in "Building No. 54"; and the bonds were there delivered by the company to its employees. Prior to July 14, 1944, Seaquist had purchased some bonds under the above plan, but later had cancelled his subscription. Shortly thereafter he was told by his foreman that they "would like to get" him "on the list again"; and on July 14, 1944, he complied with such request by signing one of the printed forms of authorization, which read in part as follows: "This authorization is given pursuant to the War Savings Plan dated Aug. 1, 1941, of Bethlehem Steel Corporation and Subsidiary Companies, a copy of which I have received, and is to remain in effect until canceled by me in writing." On the day of the accident, the company placed in Seaquist's time box the printed notice that his bond was ready and instructing him to call for it at a specified window "at Building No. 54." The notice further stated: "BRING THIS CARD WITH YOU. Bonds not called for within one week of receipt of this card will be delivered at window No. 7 [a different window]. Bonds not called for within 30 days will be mailed to bond owner." The company's name appeared in print at the bottom of the notice, and Seaquist was following the instructions thus given when he was injured.

As to the location of Building No. 54, the record shows that it was built on the southerly portion of a block of land belonging to the company lying on the southerly side of Twentieth Street, contiguous to the plant yard and opposite the company's offices. There was a fence between the block and the plant yard; and the larger portion of the block, fronting on Twentieth Street, was utilized by the company as a parking lot. It was enclosed by some sort of a single rail fence, or ropes or chains, and the entrance thereto was on Twentieth Street, only a short distance from the main plant yard gate at the end of Twentieth Street, through which the company's employees checked when going to and from work. The windows of the building through which the bonds were delivered to the employees were cut through the northerly side wall of the building facing the parking lot, and beneath the windows there was laid a raised cement walk. It was thus arranged so as to make it unnecessary for the employees to enter the building to obtain delivery of their bonds, and sometimes there were as many as 100 employees lined up in front of the windows for such purpose. On the day of the accident, Seaquist, after checking out from work through the Twentieth Street gate, walked a few feet along Twentieth Street to the gateway of the parking lot and then across the parking lot to the windows of Building No. 54, where the accident occurred.

[1-5] It is well settled that the power of a reviewing court to annul the action of the Industrial Accident Commission in the exercise of its jurisdiction under the Workmen's Compensation Law is limited, and one of the fundamental rules of limitation is that if the specific findings have support in the evidence and such findings, with the aid of fair inferences drawn therefrom, sustain the commission's conclusions as to ultimate facts, its decision will not be overthrown; and where two opposing conclusions may be drawn from the facts found, the one accepted by the commission is controlling, provided, of course, it is reasonable and there is evidence in the record to support it. (27 Cal.Jur. pp. 579, 580.) Moreover, it is declared both by legislative enactment and judicial decisions that the Workmen's Compensation Law is to be liberally construed in favor of jurisdiction in the commission with the purpose of extending the benefits of the act for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment, Labor Code, sec. 3202, St.1937, p. 265; Fenton v. Industrial Accident Comm., 44 Cal.App.2d 379, 112 P.2d 763; and to this end it is held to be the duty of the courts to indulge in all reasonable inferences to support the commission's findings, Hatheway v. Industrial Accident Comm., 13 Cal.2d 377, 90 P.2d 68, and that any reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the employee. Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Industrial Accident Comm., 37 Cal.App.2d 567, 99 P.2d 1089; Western Pipe & Steel Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 49 Cal.App.2d 108, 121 P.2d 35. Applying the foregoing rules to the situation here presented, it is quite certain that any interference with the commission's ultimate conclusion on the main issue would be unwarranted.

[6-8] As was said in Employers' etc., Corporation v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra, and later quoted with approval in Western Pipe, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, supra 37 Cal.2d at page 573, 99 P.2d at page 1092: "If the particular act is reasonably contemplated by the employment, injuries received while performing it arise out of the employment, and are compensable. In determining whether a particular act is reasonably contemplated by the employment, the nature of the act, the nature of the employment, the custom and usage of a particular employment, the terms of the contract of employment, and perhaps other factors should be considered. Any reasonable doubt as to whether the act is contemplated by the employment, in view of this state's policy of liberal construction in favor of the employee, should be resolved in favor of the employee." Here, the commission found, and the evidence shows, that the bond sales operations carried on between the company and its employees were part of the total operations of the company in its capacity as employer; and the evidence further shows that although Seaquist had checked out from work at the plant yard, the particular act in which he was engaged at the time he was injured, namely, calling for a bond which was to be delivered to him in lieu of part of his wages, was in furtherance of such operations and must have been reasonably contemplated by his employer, because the company had notified him to call for the bond within a week at the particular place on the company's premises where he sustained the injury. There is no evidence showing that the employees were permitted to pick up the bonds during working hours.

Aside, however, from the tests set forth in that portion of the decision last above quoted, there are many exceptions to the "going and coming" rule, and, as was said in Western Pipe, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 49 Cal.App.2d 108, 121 P.2d 35, at page 111, the scope of those exceptions has been considerably broadened recently by the Supreme Court in the cases of Freire v. Matson Navigation Co., 19 Cal.2d 8, 118 P.2d 809, and Smith v. Industrial Accident Commission, 18 Cal.2d 843, 118 P.2d 6. In those cases and also in the case of California Casualty Indemnity Exchange v. Industrial Accident Commission, 21 Cal.2d 751, 135 P.2d 158, it was held that because of the factual situations there presented they were taken out of the operation of the general "going and coming" rule; and those cases cite and review many others, both from within and from without this jurisdiction, wherein it was held likewise, that because of the presence of special facts the general rule was not applicable thereto. Naturally no two of those cases rested on the same state of facts, and consequently it cannot be said that factually any one of them is in point here. However, two legal principles are emphasized therein: that the term "employment" includes not only the doing of the work, but a reasonable margin of time and space necessary to be used in passing to and from the place where the work is done; and that the rule that the employee must be rendering service for the employer at the time of the injury is not of inevitable application. And it is our opinion that the reasoning of those cases fully sustains the conclusion adopted in the present case by the referee and the commission, that the injuries here arose out of and in the course of Seaquist's employment.

The company's second major point is likewise without merit. It is contended that it received no notice of the injury and that therefore Seaquist was not entitled to reimbursement for medical expenses.

[9] The pertinent provisions of the Labor Code are as follows: Section 4600 provides that medical attention which is reasonably required to cure or relieve from the effect of injury to the employee shall be provided by the employer, and that "In the case of his neglect or refusal seasonably to do so, the employer is liable for the reasonable expense incurred by or on behalf of the employee in providing treatment." Section 5400 provides: "Except as provided by sections 5402 and 5403, no claim to recover compensation * * * shall be maintained unless within thirty days after the occurrence of the injury which is claimed to have caused the disability or death, there is served upon the employer notice in writing, signed by the person injured or someone in his behalf * * *." And section 5402 provides that "Knowledge of such injury, obtained from any source, on the part of an employer, his managing agent, superintendent, foreman, or other person in authority, or knowledge of the assertion of a claim of injury sufficient to afford opportunity to the employer to make an investigation into the facts, is equivalent to service under section 5400." In 27 California Jurisprudence, at page 528, the law governing the matter of the payment of medical expenses is stated as follows: "In every case the employer should be given a fair opportunity to furnish to the employee the treatment required on account of the injury or to substitute his own treatment for that procured. Obviously, in order that he be given such an opportunity, the notice or knowledge of the injury must be such as to afford a reasonable notification of the need of medical treatment or claim thereto on account of the injury." But it is then said: "However, even though he first becomes aware of the necessity for treatment at the time the employee is being treated by a physician of his own choice, the employer is obliged then to tender treatment else he becomes liable for the value of services rendered thereafter."

In the present case the facts are these: At the time Seaquist fell he suffered immediate and severe pain, but he did not realize the seriousness of the injury he had received, and he went on home. Later he called his personal physician, who found the kneecap fractured and placed Seaquist in a private hospital, where the fracture was reduced and the knee placed in a cast. He remained in the hospital thirteen days. On the day following the accident, Seaquist's daughter phoned to the foreman under which Seaquist was working that her father had been injured, and three days later Seaquist's wife went to the plant yard and personally notified the company of her husband's injury. At that time the company's representative with whom she talked said nothing "one way or the other what they were going to do"; and shortly after her visit to the plant Mrs. Seaquist received a phone call to the effect that the company denied liability; and on October 23, 1944, which, as will be noted, was six days after the accident and while Seaquist was still in the hospital, he filed his application for compensation with the commission.

In view of the foregoing facts, showing definitely that the company was twice notified of the happening of the accident, to wit, on the next day after it happened and again three days later, and that after having been so notified it denied liability, the company was clearly responsible for the payment of the medical expenses incurred by Seaquist in the treatment of his injury.

The award is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., concurs.

WARD, Justice.

I dissent.

The referee found the following:

"Under ordinary circumstances, the applicant would leave the ship building yard through a gate at 20th and Illinois Streets without being required to go through the building where he picked up his bond and sustained his injury, or to enter the lot where the building stood. * * * The land on which the bonds were handed out was located so that if the applicant were to leave the premises of employment in order to go home and had no personal occasion to enter the land or building in question, he would in no way pass through the building or over the lot where it stood. * * *

"The Bethlehem Steel Company handled the bookkeeping and clerical work involved in deducting the purchase price of the bonds from the payroll and the handing out of the bonds at the proper time * * *, doing so as an accommodation to the workmen in their employ * * *, and the employees took advantage of this machinery for purchasing war bonds and receiving their bonds, not as a necessary element of their hiring, but as a part of the mutual undertaking to promote the loan to the Government represented by the bonds."

It is also in evidence that the building from which the bonds were delivered was not a part of Bethlehem Steel Company's plant directly, but a building erected for Naval facilities, the whole of the second floor being so occupied, and the handing out of bonds was done there solely to accommodate employees of Bethlehem and not as a part of the ship building operations, nor in furtherance of such operations.

Where such facts as these are found, no exception to the going and coming rule can be implied. This is not a case where the personal errand of the employee is in furtherance of the employer's business, such as washing hands, nor is it a case where the employee is using the only or usual means of egress or ingress from the employer's plant. The employer in carrying out an accommodation for its employees and for the government cannot be held to an extension of the time of the employment relationship so as to create liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act when the relationship of employer and employee has ceased for the day and the employee is not on the premises of the employer for any other purpose than his own benefit.

KALUZOK et al. v. BRISSON et al.*

Civ. 3414.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 26, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 11, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 20, 1945.

1. Venue ⚿4

Whether an action is local or transitory depends upon its character as disclosed by the complaint and upon the character of the judgment which could be entered in case of default. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 392, subd. 1, 395.

2. Venue ⚿5(3)

Where plaintiff purchased real property and gave a note for purchase price in part and paid balance in cash, and note was secured by trust deed upon property in which corporate defendant was named as trustee and individual defendants as beneficiaries, plaintiffs as trustors had an interest in the real property as respects application of statute providing for determination of actions involving real property, or interests therein in the county in which such property is located. Code Civ.Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

3. Venue ⚿5(3)

The statute providing that county in which realty is situated is proper forum for "determination in any form of right or interest in realty" intends to cover cases, no matter what their form, which actually involve a real or substantial interest in realty, although, technically, they may not fall within the classes which are specifically named in statute. Code Civ.Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Determination in Any Form of Right or Interest in Realty".

4. Venue ⚿5(3)

Action for fraud on ground that individual defendants made false representations as to value of realty purchased from defendants by plaintiffs praying that any damage allowed should be applied upon unpaid balance of note given by plaintiffs for purchase price and secured upon realty by trust deed in which corporate defendant was named trustee involved a "determination of a right or interest in realty" within the venue statute precluding a transfer of the action from county in which realty was located to county of defendants' residence. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 392, subd. 1, 395.

5. Venue ⚿5(3)

Applicability of statute providing that action for determination of interest in realty should be brought in county where realty is located is not dependent upon whether certain of defendants have an interest in realty, but upon whether plaintiffs who have an interest in realty, have brought an action as provided by statute for determination of such right or interest. Code Civ.Proc. § 392, subd. 1.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; O. K. Morton, Judge.

Action by Frank Kaluzok and others against Joseph G. Brisson and others to recover damages for alleged fraudulent representations in connection with purchase of realty. From an order denying defendants' motion to transfer the action to Los Angeles County, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Walker and Horn, of Long Beach, for appellants.

Sarau, Thompson & Colegate, of Riverside, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying the defendants' motion to transfer the action from Riverside County to Los Angeles County. It is conceded that the individual defendants reside in Los Angeles County and that the corporate defendant has its principal place of business in that county.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiffs purchased certain real property in Riverside County from the individual defendants for $55,000; that they gave those defendants a note for $38,500 and paid the balance in cash; and that this note was secured by a trust deed upon the property in which the corporate defendant was named as trustee, and the individual defendants were named as beneficiaries. Briefly stated, it is then alleged that the plaintiffs were induced to purchase the property at this price by their reliance upon certain representations of fact made by the individual defendants; that these representations were false and untrue; that the real property at the time of the purchase was worth

---

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 481.

$35,000 and no more; and that by reason of the false representations the plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of $20,000. The prayer is for damages in that amount and that any sum recovered be ordered applied on the unpaid balance of the note secured by the trust deed.

The sole question presented on this appeal is whether this action is one coming within the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure or whether it is governed by section 395 of that code. The appellants contend that since the action is based on fraud it falls within the provisions of section 395 and they rely on cases holding, in general, that where fraud alone is relied upon the action is transitory rather than local in nature.

[1] Whether an action is local or transitory depends upon its character as disclosed by the complaint and upon the character of the judgment which could be entered in case of a default. Eckstrand v. Wilshusen, 217 Cal. 380, 18 P.2d 931. While the complaint here alleges fraudulent representations these allegations are inseparably connected with allegations as to the ownership of the land and the giving of the trust deed under certain conditions. The real purpose of the action is to establish that, because of the conditions surrounding its execution, the amount and extent of the interest in the land which is represented by the trust deed is smaller, and the interest of the trustors is greater, than would otherwise appear. While the prayer includes a request for the allowance of damages it is prayed that any amount so allowed shall be applied upon the unpaid balance called for by the note and trust deed. It seems clear that had the appellants defaulted no personal money judgment could have been entered in favor of the respondents. The only judgment for the respondents possible in that event would have been one which would have had the effect of reducing the appellants' real interest in the property and correspondingly increasing that of the respondents.

[2, 3] There is no question that the respondents, as trustors, had an interest in this real property. Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n v. Bentley, 217 Cal. 644, 20 P.2d 940. Subdivision 1 of section 392 provides that the county in which the real property is situated is the proper county for the trial of certain actions, including those for the recovery of real property or an estate or interest therein, for injuries to or partition of real property, and for the foreclosure of liens and mortgages thereon. The clause relating to the recovery of real property or of an estate or interest therein also contains the provision "or for the determination in any form, of such right or interest." This is a broad provision which seems intended to cover other cases, no matter what their form, which actually involve a real or substantial interest in real property although, technically, they may not fall within the classes which are specifically named. In Eckstrand v. Wilshusen, 217 Cal. 380, 18 P.2d 931, section 392 was held applicable because the substantial nature of the action was to cancel a deed on the ground of fraud. That section has been held applicable in an action to declare a trust in real property (Donohoe v. Rogers, 168 Cal. 700, 144 P. 958), in an action for the reformation of a contract for the sale of real property (Franklin v. Dutton, 79 Cal. 605, 21 P. 964), and an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land (Grocers', etc., Union v. Kern, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 466, 89 P. 120). It was so held in Sloss v. De Toro, 77 Cal. 129, 19 P. 233, 234, an action to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a sale of real property made by an administrator. In that case, the court said:

> "The question then is, did this action require the determination, in any form, of a right or interest in real property?
>
> "It seems to us that it did. The main purpose of the action evidently was to have an alleged fraudulent sale of land set aside and the title revested in its former owners. This purpose could only be accomplished by showing—First, that the plaintiff had an estate or interest in the land; and, second, that the defendants had wrongfully tried to deprive him of that interest. If the action had been ejectment, or to quiet title, it would not more clearly have required a determination as to plaintiff's right or interest in the property."

In Stanley v. Barney, 123 Cal.App. 139, 10 P.2d 1022, 1023, the court said: "While it may be true, as appellants contend, that the relief which might be granted under the complaint would operate in personam, we are of the opinion that the action would determine, in some form, the right or interest of plaintiff in the real property. The court would be called upon to determine whether or not plaintiff was an heir of the decedent grantor. As such an heir he had the right, in the absence of administration, to attack the transfer. 9 Cal.Jur. 212.

Thus his interest was an issue. To say that the real property was not the subject of the action would be to indulge in a mere quibble. It is a direct attack upon the title."

In Franklin v. Dutton, 79 Cal. 605, 21 P. 964, an action for the reformation of a contract for the sale of certain land, the court said: "If it be an action for the determination, in any form, of a right or interest in real estate, situated in Santa Barbara county, it must be tried in that county."

In Hannah v. Canty, 1 Cal.App. 225, 81 P. 1035, 1036, it is said: "The action is therefore to be regarded as having for its sole object to establish a trust in the lands, and the accounting asked for as merely incidental to the action, which necessarily involves the determination of the amount due from plaintiff."

[4] The respondents here elected to stand on their contract and to make up for any loss caused by misrepresentations by seeking a reduction in the amount which they owed on the trust deed. Regardless of any personal element, the real and substantial nature of the action is to reduce the interest of the appellants in the property and to increase that of the respondents. This is an attempt, in some form, to determine the exact right or interest of the respondents in the real property. If this were an action to cancel this deed of trust there would be no question but that section 392 would apply. No good reason appears why it should not be equally applicable in an action to reduce the amount of interest in the land represented by the deed of trust, since that statute governs an action for the determination, in any form, of a right or interest in real property.

[5] In their reply brief, the appellants suggest that while the corporate appellant, as trustee, held the legal title to the property the individual appellants, as beneficiaries, were interested only in the note and had no legal or equitable estate in the real property, and that it follows that any reduction in the unpaid portion of the purchase price would not decrease the interest of the beneficiaries or increase the interest of the respondents whose title, being equitable, would not be affected by the amount due on the note. This argument not only ignores the real and substantial interests of these various parties but the applicability of section 392 does not depend upon whether or not, technically speaking, certain of the appellants have an interest in this land but it depends upon whether the respondents, who unquestionably have an interest in the land, have brought an action which is one "for the determination in any form, of such right or interest." For the reasons above given, it must be held that the action is one of that nature.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

MARKS, J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 279

In re DOUGLASS' ESTATE.
DOUGLASS et al. v. DOUGLASS et al.
Civ. 12856.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
July 26, 1945.

1. Wills ⇨579

Bequest of "the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description, including * * * silver, * * * linens and china," included two automobiles used by testatrix for personal enjoyment and purchased after execution of will especially where any other construction would require distribution of undivided interests among four children, which testatrix sought to avoid. Probate Code, §§ 101, 103.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Personal Effects".

2. Wills ⇨565(1)

Where used in a limited sense, or without qualification, "personal effects" will be limited to personalty worn or carried about or attending the person, but where amplified by qualifying words or phrases, the term includes all personalty intimately associated with testator. Probate Code, §§ 101, 103.

3. Wills ⇨440

The intention to be sought for in will is not that which existed in testator's mind but that expressed by him in language of the will. Probate Code, §§ 101, 103.

4. Wills ⚷466

As used in will, "including" is not restrictive or exclusionary.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Including".

5. Wills ⚷579

In will disposing of personal effects "including * * * my silver, * * * linens and china", "including" was a word of enlargement meaning "together with", "as well as", or "also", and did not restrict "personal effects" to personalty within the classification of silverware, linens, and china.

6. Wills ⚷579

Failure to itemize automobiles in bequest of personal effects "including" silverware, linens and china, did not negative intent to include automobiles which were purchased after execution of will.

PETERS, P. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Victoria A. Douglass, also known as Victoria Adams Douglass, also known as V. A. Douglass, deceased, wherein Eldridge A. Douglass and others appealed from that portion of a decree of partial distribution which concerned two automobiles, opposed by Earl S. Douglass and another, coexecutors.

Affirmed.

Crist & Beene, of Palo Alto, for appellants.

Williamson & Wallace, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, Justice.

This appeal was taken by Eldridge A. Douglass and Leon F. Douglass, Jr., two of the residuary legatees named in the will of their mother, Victoria A. Douglass, deceased, from that portion of a decree of partial distribution distributing two automobiles, a 1941 Cadillac touring sedan and a 1941 Ford station wagon, to Florence Douglass Langdon, the decedent's daughter. The controversy concerning the automobiles arose out of the question of the construction of the last sentence of the sixth clause of the will which reads as follows:

"I hereby give and bequeath all of my jewelry, with the exception of my wrist watch, to my beloved daughter, FLORENCE DOUGLASS LANGDON. My wrist watch, I give and bequeath to my beloved sister MARY ACKERMAN.

"I hereby give and bequeath all of my flat silverware to my son LEON F. DOUGLASS, JR. All of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description, including all of the rest of my silver, and all of my linens and china, I give and bequeath to my beloved daughter FLORENCE DOUGLASS LANGDON." (Italics ours.)

[1] The probate court held that the automobiles were part of the "rest" of the personal effects of the testatrix, within the meaning of the last sentence of the sixth clause, and it is our opinion that the construction so placed thereon by the probate court is not only reasonable and entirely consistent with the other provisions of the will, but that the adoption of any other construction would be contrary to the intention of the testatrix as expressed by her in a subsequent clause of her will.

The appeal is presented on a clerk's transcript, and the following are among the facts appearing therefrom: The will, a copy of which is set out in the transcript, was executed on April 3, 1940; and the testatrix died on April 29, 1943. At the time she made the will she was married and the mother of six children, four of whom survived her. She was survived also by two grandchildren. The surviving children are adults. There are three sons, Leon, Eldridge A. and Earl S. Douglass, and one daughter, Florence Douglass Langdon. Prior to the execution of the will, the testatrix conveyed certain property in trust, and the will disposes of all other property of which she was the owner, which, so far as the record shows, did not include any real property. The only specific bequests made by her are those embodied in the sixth clause of the will; and by the seventh paragraph she bequeathed and devised the residue of her estate to her four children, share and share alike. The estate was of large value; it was but little indebted and part of it consisted of cash. As to the value of the estate the record shows that prior to the filing of the petition for partial distribution, the executors deposited the sum of $47,500 with the county treasurer to cover the payment of inheritance taxes which had not then been fixed, and that afterwards the court made an order "compromising and fixing" the tax in the sum of $28,386.69. Therefore, taking into consideration the statutory exemptions, and computing the tax at the statutory rates, the value of the estate is shown to be in excess of $400,000. Earl S. and Eldridge A. Douglass were named as executors of the will; and the seventh clause of the will provided, among other things, that if prior to filing the petition for the distribution of the estate the legatees could not agree in writing as to the division of the property devised and bequeathed to them under the seventh clause of the will, the executors, at their discretion, were authorized to divide it as equally as possible "in order to avoid the distribution of undivided interests * * *." An agreement was reached as to the division of all property except the automobiles, which Florence claimed under the last sentence of the sixth clause of the will, and her claim was supported by her brother Earl; whereas Leon and Eldridge took the position that the automobiles constitute part of the residue of the estate and, as such, should be distributed to the four children, share and share alike. Thereafter the executors filed a petition for partial distribution asking that the property thus divided by the four children among themselves be distributed to them in conformity with their agreement; and the executors having failed to agree as to the disposition of the automobiles, the four children joined in signing a written consent, which was filed with the probate court, that the automobiles "be distributed as the court may direct." However, appellants being dissatisfied with the probate court's decision have taken this appeal.

[2] With respect to the principal issue it may be stated that the general rule adhered to in most jurisdictions is, that where the testator uses the term "personal effects" in a limited sense, that is, without qualification, the term ordinarily will be construed as signifying an intention to limit the bequest to such personal property as is worn or is carried about or attends the person, but that where the testator has amplified the term by adding qualifying words or phrases thereto, the term will be construed as having been used by him in an unlimited and unrestricted sense, signifying an intention to include therein all personal property intimately associated with the testator; and some cases go even further in holding that such unlimited use of the term may include property other than of the character last mentioned.

In the present case it is manifest that the phrase "All of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description" was not employed by the testatrix in any restricted sense so as to exclude from its broad scope and operation all personal property except such as is worn or carried on the person, because, as will be noted, immediately following the quoted phrase the testatrix expressly included therein personal property that could not be worn or carried on the person, namely, silverware, linens and china. That being so, it very properly may be held that the testatrix intended to include all personal property of "every kind and description" which had been intimately associated with her person; and, clearly, automobiles used by her for her own convenience and enjoyment fall within such classification as much so as the silverware, linens and china.

True, none of the evidence that was introduced before the probate court at the hearing of the petition for partial distribution has been brought before this court. However, the facts disclosed by the record on appeal are amply sufficient to support the inference that she maintained a home and that the automobiles were used by her for her convenience and enjoyment. In this regard the record shows that she was a resident of San Mateo County and a woman of large wealth; and that she was the owner of linens and china, and a large quantity of household silver. The articles of silverware are listed in the petition for partial distribution and it appears therefrom that nearly all of it consists of dining service silver. The two automobiles were of the type ordinarily used for enjoyment and convenience,—a Cadillac touring sedan, appraised at $1450, and a Ford station wagon, appraised at $865; and there is nothing whatever in the record indicating that the testatrix was engaged in any sort of a business enterprise, or that either automobile was utilized by any other person for business purposes.

In the state of the record above set forth there is no ground, legal or factual, upon which this court would be justified in holding as a matter of law, contrary to the conclusion reached by the probate court, that the automobiles should not be classified as part of the personal effects of the testatrix.

[3] Furthermore, the Legislature of this state has prescribed certain rules governing courts in the interpretation of wills, among which are: That a will is to be construed according to the intention of the testator, and that where his intention cannot have effect to its full extent, it must have effect as far as possible (Probate Code, sec. 101); that where the meaning of any part of a will is ambiguous or doubtful, it may be explained by any reference thereto or recital thereof, in another part of the will; that all parts of a will are to be construed in relation to each other, and so as, if possible, to form one consistent whole; but that where several parts are absolutely irreconcilable, the latter must prevail (Probate Code, sec. 103). However in this connection it is well to state that in construing a will the intention to be sought for is not that which existed in the mind of the testator, but is that which is expressed by him in the language of the will. In re Estate of Major, 89 Cal.App. 238, 264 P. 542; In re Estate of Ogden, 78 Cal.App. 412, 248 P. 680; In re Estate of Bourn, 25 Cal.App.2d 590, 78 P.2d 193.

Here, the result of sustaining appellants' contention, that the automobiles should be classified as part of the residue and distributed accordingly, would mean that the two automobiles would be distributed to the four children in undivided shares; and that is precisely what the testatrix did not want to happen, for, as declared by her in the seventh clause of her will, she authorized the executors to divide the property disposed thereunder among the four children "in order to avoid distribution of undivided interests."

In support of their position, the appellants seek to apply the doctrine of ejusdem generis. The substance of their argument seems to be that by adding the phrase "including all of the rest of my silver, and all of my linens and china" to the phrase immediately preceding, to wit, "All of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description," the testatrix signified an intention to restrict the broad and comprehensive preceding phrase to such personal property as falls within the classification of silverware, linens and china. (Italics ours.)

[4, 5] With this argument we are unable to agree. Generally speaking, the word "including" is not construed as a restrictive or exclusionary word, and as here used it carries no restricted meaning. It clearly signifies a meaning just the opposite. It is a word of enlargement and expresses the idea that the thing in question constitutes only a part of a greater whole (In re Frey's Will, 154 Misc. 421, 277 N.Y.S. 269), and conveys the same meaning as the words "together with," "as well as," or "also." In re Link's Estate, 182 Misc. 966, 47 N.Y.S.2d 40. As said in In re Goetz's Will, 71 App.Div. 272, 75 N.Y.S. 750, 751: "'Including' is not a word of limitation, rather is it a word of enlargement, and in ordinary signification implies that something else has been given beyond the general language which precedes it. Neither is it a word of enumeration of the property which would pass by the express terms of the language of gift." And in that case it was held that in a bequest of all personal property, including furniture, plate, etc., the word "including" did not limit the bequest to the property enumerated after the wording, but covered all of the testator's personal property. In the present case, if the testatrix had intended to restrict the meaning of the term "personal effects," she could easily have done so by using some common word or words of restrictive meaning, for example, "consisting of" or "comprising" instead of the word "including."

[6] It has been suggested that if the testatrix had intended the automobiles to be included in the term "personal effects" it is inconceivable that she would not have itemized them in her "including" phrase. The difficulty with that suggestion is that the will was executed in April, 1940, whereas both automobiles were 1941 models,—from which it reasonably may be inferred that she did not acquire the automobiles until after the will was executed; and certainly as the owner of an estate of this magnitude she was not called upon to revise her will every time she acquired some additional personal effects, particularly since the unlimited phrase, "All of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description" was obviously broad enough to include any after acquired personal effects.

As heretofore stated, many cases are to be found, particularly in outside jurisdictions, construing the meaning of the term "personal effects" as used in wills; but an examination of those cases clearly demonstrates that no fixed rule of construction can be laid down to fit all cases because of the difference in the wording of wills, and the duty imposed upon courts to construe the language of each will, as far as possible, in accordance with the testamentary plan or scheme of the testator as expressed by him in his will. It is evident, therefore, that while certain legal principles may be deduced from those previously adjudicated cases, the holdings therein are not decisive in construing wills involved in later cases, unless, of course, the wording of the wills is identical; and identical wills are seldom found. Among the cases dealing with the subject of "personal effects" is In re Estate of Sorensen, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241, 243, wherein the question arose as to whether a clause in a will bequeathing "All jewelry and personal effects" included money received by the testatrix from the sale of her home; and it was held that the clause of the will embodying those words was not a general residuary clause and therefore did not include the money. In so holding the court went on to say that the term "personal effects" as there used in the will referred to clothing and ornaments or any small articles which usually attend the person. The court, in that case, cited and quoted from a Minnesota case (Barney v. May, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N.W. 790, 791) wherein it was held that the wording of the will there under consideration did not include money or securities. The portion of the decision quoted is as follows: "The word 'personal,' used with 'effects,' much restricts its meaning. In common understanding the expression 'personal effects,' without qualifying words, includes only such tangible property as attends the person, or, as variously stated, 'such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person' (Brandon v. Yeakle, 66 Ark. 377, 50 S.W. 1004; Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 A. 58), or 'goods and items of property having a more or less intimate relation to the person.' * * * But to hold that the term 'personal effects,' as used here, includes a large residue of money and securities, nothing of which she then owned, and which she evidently did not have in mind, would do violence to the language of the will."

Another case of interest is In re Estate of Lovejoy, 38 Cal.App.2d 69, 100 P.2d 547, 549. There the testatrix after providing that all her "property" was to be sold and disposed of in a certain manner, proceeded to describe her property, both real and personal, stating where the various items of property and some of the evidence of ownership could be found, and then in a subsequent paragraph she gave her "personal property" to a named person "for her to distribute." The court went on to say that under well-established rules the will was to be interpreted as a whole, to give effect to the testatrix' general scheme, and it was held that the words "personal property" as used in the subsequent paragraph of the will meant personal effects, such as clothing, ornaments and other articles which are usually considered as personal effects.

A later case worthy of mention is In re Estate of Duraind, 51 Cal.App.2d 206, 124 P.2d 330. There the entire will consists of several separate instruments executed at different times, all of which were holographic. In one of them, executed on October 27, 1939, the testatrix declared (51 Cal.App.2d at page 208, 124 P.2d at page 332): "I hereby appoint my cousins, Doretta Yoell and Rosalie Gardner, to take charge of my personal property and distribute it according to my instructions." The next day, October 28, 1939, she executed another instrument containing this bequest: "I give and bequeath my household furniture, bric-a-brac and personal effects to" certain named beneficiaries. The reviewing court held that the probate court was justified in construing the words "personal property" as used in the first instrument as meaning "personal effects" as that term was used in the latter. A case bearing closest analogy to the present one is In re Jones' Estate, 128 Misc. 244, 218 N.Y.S. 380, wherein a physician bequeathed to his wife "all household goods and furniture, personal effects"; and it was held that the term "personal effects" as there used included two automobiles of which the testator was the owner, "even though one automobile had been employed by the doctor very largely in making calls upon patients."

There are also cases holding that the term "household effects" as used in the wills under consideration in those cases included family automobiles, among them being In re Winburn's Estate, 139 Misc. 5, 247 N.Y.S. 584, wherein that term was held to include a Lincoln limousine and a Ford sport roadster. The court there said that the test as to what are household effects would appear to be whether the disputed articles are used in or by the household, or for the benefit or comfort of the family. In the case of Mathis v. Causey, 172 Ga.

868, 159 S.E. 240, 75 A.L.R. 111, the court held that an automobile used by a doctor in his profession was not included in that provision of his will bequeathing all his clothing, personal jewelry, library, furniture, works of art, silverware, household goods, "and other personal effects located at, and used or adapted for use in connection with, my residence on Sixth Street in said City of Vienna and at my office in the Forbes Building in said City of Vienna." But the decision therein is based mainly upon the restrictive words above quoted, the court saying: "The personal effects given in this legacy are those located at, or used or adapted for use in connection with, testator's residence, and his office. These words restrict and limit the meaning of the words 'other personal effects,' as used in this bequest."

The foregoing cases have been referred to merely as illustrative of the statement hereinabove made that because of the difference in the wording of wills and the duty of courts to construe the language used in each will as far as possible in accordance with the testamentary plan or scheme appearing from the will, no fixed rule of construction can be established to govern in all cases.

In the present case, being guided by the rules of construction prescribed by the Probate Code, and construing the will herein as a whole, it is our conclusion that the last sentence of the sixth clause of the will included the automobiles. Accordingly, that portion of the decree from which the appeal was taken is affirmed.

WARD, J., concurs.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

I dissent.

As pointed out in the majority opinion, we are here called upon to interpret, without the benefit of any extrinsic evidence, a clause of a will. The Supreme Court in Re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 131 P.2d 825, has adopted the rule that when a question of construction is presented to an appellate court, and the document alone is before the court without extrinsic evidence, it is the duty of the appellate court to exercise its independent judgment as to which of several constructions is the most reasonable, without reference to the construction given by the trial court. See, also, Moore v. Wood, Cal.Sup., 160 P.2d 772. The majority opinion does not disclose whether it has applied this rule or whether it has followed the rule of those cases impliedly overruled by In re Estate of Platt (see concurring opinion of Carter, J., 21 Cal.2d 352, 353, 131 P.2d 830, 831) which held that the construction of a document by the trial court will be upheld if reasonable, even though there is a more reasonable contrary construction. In my opinion, if the rule of In re Estate of Platt be applied, there can be no doubt but that the construction given the clause in question by the trial court, even if it be conceded that such construction was a possible one, is not as reasonable as the construction that the automobiles in question are not included within the phrase "personal effects." For that reason I believe the decree of partial distribution should be reversed.

The problem presented can be stated as follows: By the phrase "all of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description, including all of the rest of my silver, and all of my linens and china" did the testatrix intend to include the two automobiles owned by her? The problem is really divided into two parts: First, what is the ordinary and usual meaning of the phrase "personal effects," and secondly, is there anything in the clause in question or in any other portion of the will that indicates that the phrase was used in other than its usual and ordinary meaning?

It must be kept in mind that the adjective "personal" has several meanings. When the term is used to modify the word "property" it is usually used in opposition to the adjective "real," and includes all property that is not real property. But when used in a will to modify the word "effects" it is obviously intended to be used in the sense of intimately connected with the person of the testator. While there is some confusion in the cases, largely caused by a failure to recognize this difference in the meaning of the word "personal," the overwhelming weight of authority is that the phrase "personal effects" appearing in a will, in the absence of an indication of a different intent, naturally and ordinarily includes only such tangible personal property as is worn or carried about the person, or is intimately associated with the person. Mathis v. Causey, 172 Ga. 868, 159 S.E. 240, 75 A.L.R. 111; Child v. Orton, 119 N.J.Eq. 438, 183 A. 709; In re May's Estate, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N.W. 790; In re Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 A. 58; Brandon v. Yeakle, 66 Ark. 377, 50 S.W. 1004; First Methodist Episcopal Church South v. Anderson, Tex. Civ.App., 110 S.W.2d 1177; In re Benson's Estate, 110 Mont. 25, 98 P.2d 868; Carr v. Railton, 66 R.I. 225, 18 A.2d 646, 20 A.2d 374.

We are not without express authority on this point in this state. In Re Estate of Sorensen, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241, the court was interpreting a clause in a will providing that all jewelry and personal effects were bequeathed to a designated legatee, and the question was whether that clause included some money left by the deceased. In holding that it did not, the court stated (46 Cal.App.2d at page 38, 115 P.2d at page 243):

"* * * it is obvious that this clause refers to clothing and ornaments or any other small articles which usually attend the person, and is not a general residuary clause, [In re] Estate of Lovejoy, 38 Cal. App.2d 69, 100 P.2d 547.

"In Barney v. May, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N.W. 790, 791, the court said:

" 'The word "personal," used with "effects," much restricts its meaning. In common understanding the expression "personal effects," without qualifying words, includes only such tangible property as attends the person, or, as variously stated, "such tangible property as is worn or carried about the person" (Brandon v. Yeakle, 66 Ark. 377, 50 S.W. 1004; Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 A. 58), or "goods and items of property having a more or less intimate relation to the person." * * * But to hold that the term "personal effects," as used here, includes a large residue of money and securities * * * would do violence to the language of the will.' "

In Re Estate of Lovejoy, 38 Cal.App.2d 69, 100 P.2d 547, the court held that the words "personal property" as used in the will under construction meant "personal effects," and that those words (38 Cal. App.2d at page 74, 100 P.2d at page 549) meant: "clothing, ornaments and other small articles which are usually considered as personal effects."

The majority opinion suggests that automobiles may fall within this limited category. If an automobile is a "personal effect" so would a yacht, or a private railroad car, or a riding stable, or a carriage, be "personal effects." The phrase cannot thus be extended. If used without words of explanation the phrase must be held limited to tangible personal property worn or carried about the person, or intimately connected with the person. Automobiles do not fall within that category.

The next question is whether there is anything in the paragraph or in the entire will that indicates that the phrase "personal effects" was here used in other than its ordinary and usual meaning. Certainly the clause "of every kind and description" adds nothing to the phrase "all of * * * my personal effects." If the phrase "personal effects" only includes those things intimately connected with the person, then the phrase "personal effects of every kind and description" is likewise so limited—it is still limited to "every kind and description" of "personal effects."

When the balance of Paragraph Sixth is read the intent with which the testatrix used the phrase is made crystal clear. She was obviously fearful that the phrase "personal effects" might be given too limited a meaning. To obviate this difficulty what did she do? In the first sentence of the paragraph she gave her wrist watch to a named sister and the balance of her jewelry to her daughter. In the very next sentence she bequeathed her flat silverware to a named son. Then she bequeathed "all of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description, including all of the rest of my silver, and all of my linens and china" (italics added) to her daughter. Words could hardly be used that would more clearly show that by this clause the testatrix had in mind her jewelry, her silverware, her linens, her china, and other articles of a personal and intimate nature. She was obviously fearful that the phrase "rest of my personal effects of every kind and description" would not include silverware, linens and china, so she added the phrase which specifically included those articles. There is grave doubt whether such articles of household use would be included within "personal effects" in the absence of language showing such an intent. She so carefully defined what she had in mind by "personal effects" that, had she intended impersonal articles such as automobiles to be included, she would have so specified.

The majority opinion points out that the will was drafted before these specific automobiles were acquired. Just what help that fact is in ascertaining the testatrix' intent is not clear. Certainly, it cannot be implied that by mentioning silverware, linens and china, she intended to include automobiles not yet purchased. By Paragraph Sixth she either carefully excluded all personal property except of the types mentioned (and this would exclude automobiles) or she entirely forgot about the fact that she then had, or might later acquire, automobiles. In either event, automobiles are not included.

There are other words in Paragraph Sixth that throw some light on the subject. After disposing of her jewelry and some of her silverware the testatrix stated that "all of the rest" of her "personal effects" should go to her daughter. By the use of the word "rest" the testatrix indicated with unusual clarity what she had in mind, namely, the other articles similar to the ones just mentioned. The rule of construction to be applied in such cases is clear. It is not unusual in construing a statute or a contract or a will to find, as here, general and specific words associated together. In such event it is the usual rule of construction that the general words take color from the specific ones and the general words will be restricted, in the absence of a contrary expressed intent, to a sense analogous to the specific words. This is the doctrine of ejusdem generis. It means simply that when the legislature, the contracting parties or a testator use general words in connection with an enumeration of particular things, in the absence of a contrary expressed intent, experience has shown that in most cases the general words were used to describe things of the same general nature or class as those specifically enumerated. The reason for this common sense rule of construction is obvious. If the general words were intended to prevail in their broadest sense the special words need not, and would not, have been employed at all. See, generally, 23 Cal.Jur. p. 755 § 130. The doctrine is, of course, applicable to the construction of wills. In re May's Estate, 135 Minn. 299, 160 N.W. 790; Brandon v. Yeakle, 66 Ark. 377, 50 S.W. 1004; In re Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 A. 58; In Campbell's Estate, 171 Misc. 750, 13 N.Y.S.2d 773; Carr v. Railton, 66 R.I. 225, 18 A.2d 646, 20 A.2d 374. In Richmond v. Rhode Island Hospital Trust Co., 46 R.I. 113, 125 A. 228, the court held that general words somewhat similar to those here involved could not be interpreted to include an automobile because the specific enumeration in the clause in question, which was a much broader specification than is here involved, limited the general words, under the rule of ejusdem generis.

This rule of construction should be followed in this case unless there is something expressed in the will itself to show that it is not applicable. In this case but one construction of the clause is reasonable. When the testatrix stated "all of the rest of my personal effects of every kind and description," she obviously was referring to things similar to jewelry and silverware—articles she had just mentioned. The word "rest" as there used is synonymous with "other," and it is the same as if she had said "all of my other personal effects." Had she used the word "other," there can be no doubt but that the doctrine of ejusdem generis would be applicable. Matter of Petition of Johnson, 167 Cal. 142, 138 P. 740; People v. Strickler, 25 Cal.App. 60, 142 P. 1121; see cases collected 50 Am.Jur. at p. 250, footnote 3; 59 C.J. at p. 982, footnotes 64 and 65.

There is another phrase in the paragraph in question that is of some assistance. After disposing of the "rest" of her "personal effects" the clause continues "including all of the rest of my silver, and all of my linens and china." I have no doubt that by this phrase the testatrix expanded the ordinary meaning of the phrase "personal effects." Normally, as already pointed out, it is very doubtful if silver, linens and china would be included within the meaning of the words "personal effects." The majority opinion is undoubtedly correct in holding that the word "including" is usually a word of "enlargement," and implies that something "has been given beyond the general language which precedes it." But the real question is not whether the word "including" is a word of "enlargement" or a word of limitation, but whether, assuming it is a term of enlargement, how far has the class been enlarged or opened up? On this point the testatrix left no doubt. She enlarged the meaning of "personal effects" to include silver, linens and china—articles, which, while not as intimate as the usual things included within the meaning of "personal effects," are still personal to a woman and to a homemaker. By no reasonable interpretation can it be said that the class was opened up to include such articles as automobiles.

The majority seek some support for their construction from a phrase appearing in Paragraph Seventh of the will. This is the residuary paragraph of the will. After bequeathing the residuum to her four living children, share and share alike, the testatrix states that in the event the legatees entitled to share in her estate "as provided in this paragraph number 'Seventh'" cannot agree to the division of the property, then the executors are authorized to partition the property "in order to avoid the distribution of undivided interests." A reading of the paragraph demonstrates to a certainty that the last-quoted phrase applies by specific limitation only to Paragraph Seventh, and has no application at all to Paragraph Sixth. To so construe it is a strained, unnatural and, in my opinion, an improper construction.

It is my view that the decree of partial distribution should be reversed.

70 Cal.App.2d 415

LOZANO et al. v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.

COHN et al. v. SAME.

Civ. 7146, 7147.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 31, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Negligence 🔑2, 56(1)

To constitute actionable negligence, there must be legal duty to use due care, breach of such duty, and proximate causation between such breach and injury.

2. Electricity 🔑14(1), 15(1)

A corporation, owning, maintaining, and operating electric power line, over partnership's premises, owed every person rightfully on premises duty to use care to avoid injuries to persons or property, and such duty was obviated only as to trespassers and individuals unlawfully on premises.

3. Electricity 🔑15(2)

Employees' acts in pushing employer's portable floodlight tower against electric power line, constructed over employer's premises by electric company having easement for such purpose, did not constitute interruption of company's use and possession of premises and deprivation of electricity owned by it, so that it was not absolved from liability for employees' resulting deaths by electrocution, as such easement was not exclusive of employer's and its agents' or servants' ordinary use of property.

4. Electricity 🔑19(9)

In actions for deaths of employees, electrocuted as results of contact between employer's portable floodlight tower, being pushed by them, and electric power line constructed by electric company over employer's premises under contract with employer, whether such company fully discharged every duty owed such employees by it was a fact question for jury.

5. Electricity 🔑19(5)

In actions for deaths of employees, electrocuted when employer's portable floodlight tower being pushed by them came into contact with defendant electric company's power line over employer's premises, evidence warranted jury's finding of defendant's breach of duty to decedents in maintaining uninsulated wires at insufficient height.

6. Electricity 🔑14(1)

One maintaining wires carrying electricity must exercise care that person of ordinary prudence would exercise under circumstances, including well-known dangerous character of electricity and inherent risk of injuries to persons or property if it escapes, to prevent such injuries, and care used must be commensurate with such danger.

7. Electricity 🔑16(2)

Wires carrying electricity must be carefully and properly insulated by parties maintaining them at all places where there is reasonable probability of injuries to persons or property therefrom.

8. Electricity 🔑16(2)

An electric company was not under absolute duty to insulate electric wires installed and maintained by it over partnership's premises under contract, nor to make wires safe in any particular manner, but owed duty to make them safe under all exigencies offered by surrounding circumstances.

9. Electricity 🔑16(1)

An electric company's duty of due care to make electric wires installed and maintained by it safe, consisted not only in proper installation of such dangerous instrumentalities, but in maintenance thereof in safe condition at all times and places and under changing circumstances, and company's nonaction or failure to remedy hazardous condition arising after proper installation of such equipment would constitute culpable negligence.

10. Electricity 🔑16(4)

An electric company was not relieved of liability for deaths of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower being pushed by them and such company's elecric power line over partnership's premises, on ground that there was no reasonable probability of injury from installation of such line because company could not have been supposed to know that such towers would be used in area wherein accident occurred, where such area was not set apart or isolated from other parts of premises and was free of buildings.

11. Negligence 🔑59

To render corporation liable for deaths resulting from its negligence, its anticipation of precise accident which occurred was unnecessary, but only existence of circumstances, from which accident of general nature of such accident could reasonably have been anticipated, was necessary.

12. Electricity 🔑19(5)

In actions against electric company for deaths of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower being pushed by them and uninsulated electric power line installed by defendant over partnership's premises, evidence justified jury's finding that defendant had actual or constructive notice of unsafe condition of premises because of installation and maintenance of such lines at insufficient height.

13. Electricity 🔑16(5)

The duty of due care in installation and maintenance of electric wires and equipment requires reasonably prompt and frequent inspection thereof and electric company's failure to comply substantially with such rule charges it with notice of defective or dangerous condition which diligent inspection would have revealed.

14. Electricity 🔑16(4)

An electric company's substantial compliance with Railroad Commission's general orders in installing electric power line over partnership's premises did not establish company's due care relieving it of liability for deaths of partnership's employees electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower being pushed by them and uninsulated electric wires placed at insufficient height.

15. Electricity 🔑16(2)

The absence of statutory requirement, expressly imposing on electric company duty to insulate wires installed by it over partnership's premises or to remove them from harm's way, did not relieve company from liability for deaths of partnership's employees electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower and such wires.

16. Electricity 🔑19(5)

In actions for deaths of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower and uninsulated electric wires installed over partnership's premises by defendant electric company, evidence that insulation of power lines carrying loads of such wires was not customary practice was not evidence of company's freedom from fault in failing to insulate wires, and did not excuse such failure, unless it was consistent with due care necessary under circumstances.

17. Negligence 🔑136(25)

Whether original negligence was proximate cause of injuries is proper question for jury, unless evidence leaves no room for reasonable difference of opinion.

18. Electricity 🔑19(9)

Evidence was sufficient to take to jury question whether electric company's negligence in installing and maintaining uninsulated high voltage wires over partnership's premises at insufficient height was proximate cause of deaths of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower, being pushed by them, and such wires.

19. Appeal and error 🔑999(1)

A jury's determination of fact question, properly submitted thereto by trial court on sufficient evidence, will not be disturbed on appeal.

20. Electricity 🔑18(1)

A partnership's employees, undertaking to move partnership's portable floodlight tower, did not assume risk of death by electrocution because of resulting contact between tower and uninsulated electric wires installed and maintained by electric company over partnership's premises at insufficient height, in absence of evidence disclosing dangerous situation, which was either open, obvious, or notorious, or showing that employees had any knowledge of danger involved.

21. Evidence 🔑314(1)

In actions against electric company for deaths of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower and uninsulated electric wires installed and maintained by defendant at insufficient height over partnership's premises, testimony as to conversations between defendant's agents and partnership's managing agent when contract for installation of wires was entered into, offered by defendant to show that partnership did not contemplate use of such towers in area wherein accident occurred, was properly excluded as hearsay.

22. Appeal and error 🔑1058(1)

Exclusion of proffered evidence similar to admitted evidence was harmless to party offering excluded evidence.

23. Appeal and error 🔑1170(7)

In action for death of partnership's employees, electrocuted as result of contact between partnership's portable floodlight tower and uninsulated electric wires installed by defendant electric company over partnership's premises at insufficient height, exclusion of testimony, offered by defendant to show that partnership did not contemplate use of such towers in area wherein accident occurred, did not result in miscarriage of justice, in view of jury's finding of negligence in maintenance of such line. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; M. G. Woodward, Judge.

Actions by Mary Lozano and others and Pearl G. Cohn and another against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company for the deaths of Philip Lozano and Albert Cohn by electrocution when a portable floodlight tower being pushed by them came into contact with an electric power line installed over their employer's premises by defendant. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Neumiller & Ditz, by George A. Ditz, all of Stockton and Thos. J. Straub and John J. Briare, both of San Francisco (W. R. Dunn, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Gumpert & Mazzera, J. Calvert Snyder, Wainard G. Herrick, R. L. Gianelli, and J. B. Freeman, all of Stockton, for respondents.

PEEK, Justice.

Respondents by their complaints sought to recover for the alleged wrongful death of their respective husbands and fathers proximately caused by the negligence of appellant. Appellant in its answer to the complaints denied its negligence and charged that the deaths were caused by the contributory negligence of the decedents. The matters were tried before a jury which rendered verdicts for the respondents. Appellant's motion for a new trial was denied and it then perfected this appeal from the judgments entered upon the verdicts of the jury. By stipulation the appeals in both cases were consolidated and are presented on a single reporter's transcript.

On February 25, 1942, appellant Pacific Gas & Electric Company entered into a written contract with Hickinbothom Brothers Construction Division, a copartnership, whereby said company was to furnish electric energy for a shipyard to be constructed by the partnership on Banner Island, Stockton. Under the contract the company agreed to provide all electric energy for "welding crane power and lights for steel shipbuilding." A further provision stated that "customer hereby grants Pacific a right of way over the shortest practical route for any pole lines which it may be necessary to build over Customer's premises for the purpose of making delivery hereunder."

The power service installed by the company so far as is material here, consisted of what is termed a tap line composed of three uninsulated copper wires carrying a load of 11,000 volts and was connected with the company's main line which ran along a street adjoining the customer's shipyard. The tap line was carried into the premises on four poles which were approximately 100 feet apart. On the crossarms of the poles were "High Voltage" signs. At the point where the accident occurred the elevation of this line was approximately 43 feet above the ground. The tap line and transformers were the property of the company and were maintained and operated by it. For the most part the tap line ran along the west side of the customer's main building, some fifteen feet therefrom. A spur track, used to bring materials to the plant also ran along the same side of the building but removed from it at an average distance of twenty-five feet. Farther to the west of the spur-track, and obliquely under the power line, were work tables and large benches used for prefabricating and welding, as well as platforms for unloading the gondola cars.

On the day of the accident there were three portable flood light towers and three diesel engine cranes in operation in the yard. The forty-eight foot towers were mounted on rubber tired wheels and carried transformers and cords which could be plugged in at any one of the many socket outlets throughout the yard. The booms on the cranes varied in length from twenty-five to seventy-five feet. Both the cranes and light towers were made of steel but were not posted with warning signs. Ordinarily operations involving smaller and lower equipment only were conducted between the spur track and the building along which the power line ran. However, near the transformer bank and under the end of the line was a clear space where the light towers were frequently used to unload cars at night. According to the testimony it was difficult to tell from the ground whether the towers would clear the wires or not. Mr. E. T. Woodruff, appellant's commercial and industrial power engineer, testified he did not know that the towers were higher than the tap lines and that he made no examination to determine this question, while his brother, E. C. Woodruff, also an agent for the company, testified that during a visit to the plant in July or September he discovered the type of light towers that were being used and found they were higher than he had assumed them to be.

On the morning of the accident, November 13, 1942, Philip Lozano, a truck helper, and Albert Cohn, a leaderman flanger or welder, were working in the vicinity of the spur track. Cohn and his helper, one McCarty, were finishing work on a plate upon one of the welding tables to the west of the spur track and were in need of another steel plate. This plate was being brought to them by a large movable crane which was carrying the plate dangling from its boom. As the crane approached the spot where the men were working it became apparent that the light tower would interfere with the movement of the crane and that before the crane could come up to the table with the plate it would be necessary to move the tower. Several of the workmen, including Lozano and Cohn, took hold of the tower and started pushing it away. It had traveled ten or fifteen feet when it came in contact with the tap line to the east of the spur track, with the result that Lozano and Cohn received a charge of 11,000 volts of electricity, from the effects of which they died.

[1] It is well established that to constitute actionable negligence three elements must occur: (1) The legal duty to use due care; (2) a breach of that duty, and (3) proximate causation between the breach and the injury. Jackson v. Utica Light & Power Co., 64 Cal.App.2d 885, 889, 149 P.2d 748; Monroe v. San Joaquin Light & Power Co., 42 Cal.App.2d 641, 647, 109 P.2d 720.

[2] In the present case the duty of appellant to use care so as to avoid injury to persons or property was established by a clear showing that the company owned, maintained and operated the power line in question. Jackson v. Utica, etc., supra; Irelan-Yuba Gold Quartz Mining Co. v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 18 Cal.2d 557, 116 P.2d 611. Such duty extended to every person rightfully on the premises and was obviated only as to trespassers and individuals unlawfully there at the time of injury. Monroe v. San Joaquin, etc., supra; Fike v. San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation, 73 Cal.App. 712, 239 P. 344.

[3] Upon this qualification of the rule appellant predicates its first contention, arguing that as it admittedly had an easement over the owner's realty, therefore the acts of the decedents in pushing the tower against the tap line thereby diverting the energy from the line was an interruption of appellant's use and possession of the premises and a deprivation of the electricity which was its property. With such contention we cannot agree. Obviously if such were the case the very purpose for the installation of the line would be defeated. In other words it would prevent the very activity for which the line was admittedly installed. The right of way granted to the company to construct, maintain and service its lines on or over the customer's private property was not exclusive of the ordinary use of the property by said owner and its agents or servants. Anderson v. Southern California Edison Co., 77 Cal.App. 328, 246 P. 559.

It is also established that where such contractual relationship is present a duty arises which otherwise would not exist. This rule is recognized with particularity in one of the cases relied upon by appellant. Hayden v. Paramount Productions, 33 Cal.App.2d 287, 91 P.2d 231, 235. There the court in affirming the judgment of nonsuit stated: "There was no contractual relation between the city and appellant or his employer. The work in which appellant was engaged at the time of his injury had no relation to the business of respondent city." That such relationship may be a determinative feature was also evidenced by the Supreme Court in a further case relied upon by appellant. Leslie v. City of Monterey, 139 Cal.App. 715, 34 P.2d 837. Furthermore all of the cases cited by appellant in support of this contention, including the two mentioned herein, were based upon facts which show that the questions therein at issue did not concern persons injured in the exercise of a lawful occupation in a place where they had a right to be and where they were liable to come in contact with high voltage wires.

[4-7] Appellant further urges that it fully discharged every duty it owed the decedents. The issue so presented was purely one of fact for the jury to determine, and we must conclude that under the evidence disclosed by the record the jury was warranted in finding that there was a breach of duty on the part of the company in maintaining its wires as it did. It is now well settled that:

"On the subject of negligence the standard of care is, that one maintaining wires carrying electricity is required to exercise the care that a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances. Among the circumstances are the well known dangerous character of electricity and the inherent risk of injury to persons or property if it escapes. Hence, the care used must be commensurate with and proportionate to that danger. (Citing cases). Specific application of that standard requires that wires carrying electricity must be carefully and properly insulated by those maintaining them at all places where there is a reasonable probability of injury to persons or property therefrom." (Citing cases.) Polk v. City of Los Angeles, 26 Cal.2d 519, at p. 525, 159 P.2d 931, 934.

Here the wires were not insulated and the happening of the accident shows that they were not maintained at a sufficient height. Anstead v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 203 Cal. 634, 265 P. 487; Giraudi v. Electrical Imp. Co., 107 Cal. 120, 40 P. 108, 28 L.R.A. 596, 48 Am.St.Rep. 114.

[8] The record herein shows that there was ample evidence to permit the jury to conclude that the appellant company could have prevented the accident either by insulating the wires, by placing them at a greater height above the ground, by running them in an underground conduit or by guarding them in some other fashion. While the appellant was not under an absolute duty to insulate or make the wires safe in any particular manner it was "its duty * * * to make the wires safe under all the exigencies offered by the surrounding circumstances." Royal Indemnity Co. v. Midland Counties Public Service Corporation, 42 Cal.App. 628, 632, 183 P. 960, 961.

[9] The duty of due care with which the company was charged consists not only in the proper installation of the dangerous instrumentality but in the maintenance thereof in a safe condition at all times and places and under the changing circumstances of the particular case. Even if at the outset of the installation of the equipment the company may have been entirely free from fault, yet, if, under changing circumstances, a hazardous condition arose, non action or the failure to remedy such condition would constitute culpable negligence. Polk v. City of Los Angeles, supra; McCormick v. Great Western Power Co., 214 Cal. 658, 8 P.2d 145, 81 A.L.R. 678.

[10-13] Appellant has sought to remove the instant case from the rule of the Polk case and the cases cited therein on the ground that there was no reasonable probability of injury from the installing of overhead lines, and in support of such position contends that it could not have been supposed to know of the type of operation that would take place in close proximity to the line or that flood light towers would be used in the particular area where the accident occurred. The record does not bear out this contention. This area was not set apart or isolated from the other activities of the yard. In fact the very nature of the area being free of buildings rendered it, under the circumstances, a most obvious place to park light towers, cranes or similar equipment. It was not necessary for the defendant to anticipate the precise accident which did occur; it was only necessary that from all of the circumstances an accident of the general nature of the one which occurred could reasonably have been anticipated. Royal Indemnity Co. v. Midland Counties Public Service Corporation, 42 Cal.App. 628, 183 P. 960; Jackson v. Utica, etc., supra. In this regard the record discloses that both before and after the installation of the high tension line company agents had notice or knowledge of the fact that large portable equipment such as mobile cranes and flood light towers were to be used and later saw them in use. According to the testimony of Mr. E. C. Woodruff, he knew on April 14, 1942, that portable light towers were to be used; that he saw them when he was in the yard in July or September of that year but that he did not know they were to be used in the particular area where the accident later occurred. His brother, E. T. Woodruff, knew before the accident occurred that portable flood light towers were to be used and that motorized mobile cranes were to be part of the equipment but that he understood such equipment would be confined to the area where actual assembly or construction of boats and barges was taking place. E. C. Woodruff further testified he had been told that one inspection was made during the several months the plant was in operation and prior to the fatal accident, but apparently nothing ever came of that inspection. No report was made nor was any action taken except perhaps in respect to the placing of warning signs on the crossarms of the poles. Additional testimony shows that on their several visits to the yards the previously mentioned agents of the company and several others made no inspection to determine the safety of the line as related to the then existing conditions in the yard, or the kind of appliance used in the general vicinity of the line, yet its agents carefully examined the premises with a view of placing the line underground. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the jury improperly found that the company had actual or constructive notice of the unsafe condition of the premises. The authorities are uniform in holding that the duty of due care with respect to electric wires and equipment requires reasonably prompt and frequent inspection, Polk v. City of Los Angeles, supra; Stasulat v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 8 Cal.2d 631, 67 P.2d 678; Irelan-Yuba, etc. v. Pacific, etc., supra; Dow v. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co., 157 Cal. 182, 106 P. 587, and want of substantial compliance with this rule charges the utility with notice of the defective or dangerous condition that diligent inspection would have revealed. In the case of Roberts v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 102 Cal.App. 422, 431, 283 P. 353, 356, this court stated as follows:

> "It is well settled that it is the imperative duty of such a company not only to install proper appliances, but also to make reasonable and proper inspection of such appliances, and to use due diligence to discover and repair defects therein, and a failure to do so constitutes negligence. Notice of a defect, in order to charge the company with liability therefor, need not be direct and express; it is enough that the defect has existed for such a length of time that it should have been known." And upon the question of time the court found that failure to inspect the line for a period of two and one-half months created a presumption of constructive notice.

[14] Evidence was offered by appellant to negative this rule by showing that it had substantially complied with the general orders of the Railroad Commission, and from this premise it is now argued that due care on the part of the company was thus established. At most such a showing would only relieve the company of the charge of negligence per se. It does not affect the question of negligence due to the acts or omissions of the company as related to the particular circumstances of the case. The rule has been stated thus: "It does not follow that merely because one has complied with the terms of a statute or ordinance that he is thereby absolved from negligence. One may act in strict conformity with the terms of an enactment and yet not exercise the amount of care which is required under the circumstances." 19 Cal. Jur. 634. See also Campbell v. Fong Wan et al. 60 Cal.App.2d 553, 141 P.2d 43; Sickles v. Mt. Whitney Power & Electric Co., 177 Cal. 278, 170 P. 599; Monroe v.

San Joaquin, etc., supra. In other words the question is whether under all of the circumstances negligence has been shown.

[15, 16] There is no merit in appellant's argument that there was no statutory requirement expressly imposing on it the duty to insulate the wires or to remove them from harm's way. The duty of care exists in the absence of any statute and if care is omitted and injury directly results therefrom liability arises. Polk v. City of Los Angeles, supra. While the company adduced some evidence to show that it was not customary practice to insulate power lines carrying loads of 11,000 volts this was not of itself evidence that the company was free from fault in following such practice and could not excuse defendant unless the practice was consistent with the due care necessary under the circumstances. Polk v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

Appellant next contends that as both ends of the tap line were securely fastened to poles it thus maintained a passive condition into which the decedents pushed the metal tower thereby producing the fatal injuries, and that obviously, therefore, such act on the part of decedents was the sole proximate cause of the accident.

[17] As we have previously stated, sufficient evidence was introduced to justify the jury in finding that the company was negligent. The question then remaining for the jury was whether such facts were the proximate cause of the fatal injuries. Like the other essential elements of actionable negligence, the question whether the original negligence is the proximate cause of an injury is a proper question for the jury, unless it may be said that the evidence is of such a character that there is no room for a reasonable difference of opinion. Jackson v. Utica, etc., supra; Fike v. San Joaquin, etc., supra.

[18, 19] Applying such rule to the facts and circumstances presented herein, we conclude there was ample evidence upon the question of proximate cause which the trial court properly submitted to the jury, and its determination thereon will not now be disturbed. Minter v. San Diego Consol. Gas & Electric Co., 180 Cal. 723, 182 P. 749.

[20] Nor do we find merit in appellant's further argument that decedents in engaging to move the tower thereby assumed the risk of the resulting contact and that such defense is separate and distinct from the defense of contributory negligence. Although respondents question the porpriety of raising such an issue at this stage of the proceedings, we are not convinced that there is such a clear line of demarcation between the two doctrines as contended by appellant, and therefore we have chosen to discuss the applicability of such principle on its merits. In the case of Schleif v. Grigsby, 88 Cal.App. 174, 182, 263 P. 255, 258, it is stated:

" * * * conceding that the theory underlying the doctrine of assumption of risk may have application to cases outside of this particular relationship of employment [master and servant], it goes no farther than the accepted standard of ordinary care under the circumstances. In other words, the doctrine of assumption of risk in other cases does not absolve the wrongdoer of all blame, but places upon the party injured a higher duty if he voluntarily enters a position of known danger." (Citing cases.)

The evidence herein does not disclose a dangerous situation which could be described as either open, obvious or notorious, nor is there any showing that decedents had any knowledge whatever of the danger involved. Though the tower obviously was higher than the tap line even defendant's own witnesses cast doubt upon the ability of one to note the difference from the ground level.

It is also appellant's contention that the judgments are contrary to the law of this state and it cites in support thereof what is said to be all of the decided cases in this state wherein injuries have resulted from an object similar to that herein coming in contact with power lines. While we agree with the conclusions reached in the cases cited by appellant, the factual situations therein set forth are entirely different than that which is presented in the instant case, and therefore are inapplicable to the questions herein presented.

[21-23] Lastly, appellant complains of the ruling of the trial court in excluding as hearsay, on objection by counsel for plaintiffs, certain proffered testimony relating to the substance of conversations at the time the contract was entered into between agents for the company and the customer's managing agent. Such offered proof was apparently designed to show that the customer did not contemplate using portable light towers or cranes in the area where the accident occurred. We are convinced that the trial court was correct in excluding such testimony. The critical time in this case was not when the contract was made nor when the equipment was installed or the operations commenced, but it was any reasonable time prior to the happening of the accident when it could have been avoided. Dow v. Sunset, etc., supra. Even if the proffered evidence was admissible its refusal was harmless, as similar evidence was admitted in the testimony of the Woodruff brothers. 2 Cal.Jur. sec. 608, p. 1022. It cannot be said that the ruling of the trial court resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Sec. 4½, Art. VI, Const.; Anstead v. Pacific, etc., supra. If this court were to follow appellant's contention and send the case back for a retrial of the issue of negligence in the construction of the line, and the jury found that initially there had been no negligence on the part of the company, there would still remain the finding of negligence in the maintenance of the line, and the same verdicts and judgments would logically follow.

The judgments are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and THOMPSON, J., concur.

26 Cal.2d 753

COLUMBIA PICTURES CORPORATION
v. DE TOTH.

L. A. 19083.

Supreme Court of California.

July 30, 1945.

1. Frauds, statute of 🔑53

An oral contract of employment for a period of one year immediately next ensuing with rendition of service to commence on the day after agreement was entered was not within statute of frauds. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 1; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 1.

2. Time 🔑9(1)

Under statute of frauds which requires agreements not to be performed within one year "from the making thereof" to be in writing, the quoted words exclude the day upon which agreement is made, and the year begins with the following day and ends at the close of the first anniversary of the day on which agreement is made. Civ. Code, § 1624 subd. 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "From the Making Thereof".

3. Frauds, statute of 🔑50(1)

A contingency which may extend period of employment for more than one year in option of employer does not bring oral employment contract for one year immediately next ensuing within operation of statute of frauds. Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 1; Civ.Code, § 1624 subd. 1.

4. Frauds, statute of 🔑144

If modification of oral employment contract entered into for one year, by postponement for a few weeks of commencement date and by temporary employment of employee in the interim, was induced by employee's fraudulent representations to employer that he desired postponement because of other business commitments and by employee's promise to reduce terms of agreement thus modified to writing and abide by it, employee would be estopped under such circumstances to assert that employment contract was void under statute of frauds. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 1; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 1.

5. Contracts 🔑32

An oral understanding between the parties that the terms of their agreement will be reduced to writing is not binding and, until the writing is actually executed, no complete and binding contract comes into existence.

6. Action 🔑6

A complaint for declaratory relief is sufficient, if it sets forth facts showing existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of respective parties under a contract and requests that these rights and duties be adjudged by the court. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

7. Action 🔑6

Where, at time complaint was filed seeking a declaration of rights and duties of parties under an oral employment contract, contract had still about three months to run, an actual controversy between the parties was shown so as to warrant declaratory relief. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

8. Action 🔑6

To entitle a plaintiff to seek declaratory relief, it is not essential that he should establish his right to a favorable declaration. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

9. Action 🔑6

The purpose of declaratory judgment is to serve some practical end in quieting or stabilizing an uncertain or disputed jural relation. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

10. Action 🔑6

The court is empowered to determine disputed questions of fact, and hence remedy by declaratory relief is not limited to cases involving a written instrument, and a disputed oral contract may properly be the subject of a declaratory judgment. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

11. Action 🔑6

The fact that oral contract is one of employment, involving personal services and hence not specifically enforceable, does not necessarily render declaratory relief improper or unnecessary, since such fact is merely a factor to be considered by the trial court in determining what declaration would be appropriate. Civ.Code, § 3390; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

12. Action 🔑6

The fact that a cause of action otherwise may have accrued, and that other adequate relief may be available to plaintiff at the time, do not render declaratory relief improper, but are factors to be considered by the court. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

13. Action ⚿6

The remedies provided by declaratory judgments statute are cumulative, and hence declaratory relief may be asked alone or with other relief. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

14. Action ⚿6

Before declaratory relief may be denied on ground of existence of other remedies, it must clearly appear that asserted alternative remedies are available to plaintiff and that they are speedy and adequate or as well suited to plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

15. Action ⚿6

Where allegations in seeking declaration of rights and duties of parties under an oral employment contract did not necessarily show that remedy of declaratory relief might not have been better to plaintiff's needs than the traditional remedies otherwise disclosed, complaint was not insufficient because of other available remedies. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

16. Action ⚿6

Although under declaratory relief statute wide powers have been conferred upon trial court, its discretion is not unlimited, but it is a legal or judicial discretion, hardened by experience into rule, and its exercise is subject to appellate review. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

17. Action ⚿6
Appeal and error ⚿1178(1)

Where a case is properly before a trial court, under a complaint which is legally sufficient and sets forth facts and circumstances showing that a declaratory adjudication is entirely appropriate, trial court may not properly refuse to assume jurisdiction, and, if it does enter a dismissal, it will be directed by an appellate tribunal to entertain the action. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

18. Appeal and error ⚿843(4)

On appeal from judgment for defendant after sustaining general and special demurrer to complaint without leave to amend, Supreme Court, having concluded that complaint was good as against a general demurrer, was not required to pass on question whether trial court erred in sustaining special demurrer.

19. Pleading ⚿225(1)

Where a complaint seeking declaratory relief was good as against a general demurrer, it was error to sustain a special demurrer without leave to amend because of defects in the form of pleading. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a.

20. Appeal and error ⚿1197

Where Supreme Court held that trial court in rendering judgment for defendant after sustaining a general and special demurrer to complaint erred in sustaining general demurrer, trial court upon remanding of cause could require in its discretion the clarification of uncertainties in the pleading.

SPENCE and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred E. Paonessa, Judge.

Action by Columbia Pictures Corporation against Andre De Toth for a declaration of rights and duties of parties under an oral contract of employment. From a judgment of dismissal entered after a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion 154 P.2d 420.

Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp, of Los Angeles, and Samuel V. Cornell, of Merced, for appellant.

Bautzer, Ryan, Ford & Silbert, Robert E. Ford, and Bernard M. Silbert, all of Hollywood, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment of dismissal entered upon sustaining defendant's general and special demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend.

In substance the pleading discloses the following: Plaintiff is seeking a declaration of the rights and duties of the parties under an unwritten contract of employment. On June 6, 1943, plaintiff orally engaged the services of defendant as a motion picture director for a term of one year "immediately next ensuing," at a salary of $250 a week for each week of service actually rendered, with the privilege of a maximum twelve week lay-off during the contract term. Plaintiff was granted the option of renewing or extending the contract for additional terms of one year each for six successive years at rates of compensation gradually increasing from $350 a week for the second year to $1,500 a week for the sixth year. Each exercise of the option for a succeeding year was to be made prior to expiration of the current year.

On June 7th, the day after the oral contract was made, defendant represented to plaintiff that because of certain business commitments he desired to defer the commencement of his services under the contract to a date subsequent to July 19, 1943. He declared that if plaintiff would consent to this modification of the agreement and would give him work on a temporary basis during the period of deferment, he would at any time after July 20th, and after the completion of the temporary employment, enter into a written contract with plaintiff evidencing the extension of time for commencement of his services under the oral contract.

In reliance upon these statements plaintiff consented to the extension of time and employed defendant to direct the photoplay "Nine Girls." But by mutual consent this arrangement was replaced on July 26th by a temporary agreement under which plaintiff employed defendant at a compensation of $350 a week to direct the photoplay "None Shall Escape." The stated rate of compensation for a single picture contract, $100 a week in excess of that provided by the oral agreement, was paid by plaintiff solely in reliance upon defendant's representations that his services would be available to plaintiff for a considerable time thereafter pursuant to the oral agreement of June 6th, as modified and extended on June 7th.

The photoplay "None Shall Escape" was one of unusual merit, the direction of which would ordinarily have been assigned to directors then under term contracts with plaintiff. But plaintiff, in reliance upon defendant's representations, assigned him to direct it, and in connection with the production and filming gave him every possible assistance in the way of exceptional talent and necessary facilities in order to increase and enhance his professional reputation and standing. Such reputation and standing and the value of defendant's services as director were in fact greatly increased through these efforts of plaintiff.

Between July 26th and October 25th, 1943, defendant discharged all of his duties in connection with production of "None Shall Escape." Plaintiff then requested that the oral agreement be reduced to writing. From time to time defendant deferred and postponed the execution of any agreement. Nevertheless he continued to abide by and perform the terms of his engagement and rendered services for persons to whom plaintiff loaned his services pursuant to the provisions of the contract. About December 24, 1943, defendant refused and has ever since refused to perform any services for plaintiff or to reduce the agreement to writing and sign it.

An actual controversy between the parties is asserted. Arbitration of the dispute by the Screen Directors Guild was sought but it is Conciliation Committee could not reach the required unanimous decision and made no findings. Defendant declares that he is no longer bound by the contract; that plaintiff is not entitled to his services; and that the agreement is void and unenforceable by reason of the statute of frauds. Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 1; Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 1. Plaintiff asserts that the agreement as made on June 6th and modified on June 7th is valid and enforceable, and that defendant by his conduct is estopped to rely upon the statute of frauds.

The complaint was filed March 2, 1944. The prayer is for a decree fixing the rights and duties of the parties under the contract and renewal options as modified and extended, declaring it to be a valid and subsisting obligation, and granting such further relief as may be just and proper.

The order sustaining the general and special demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend does not indicate upon what ground the trial court based its ruling. From the allegations as a whole it is apparent that plaintiff sets forth facts which entitle it to seek relief. Although there is some uncertainty in the allegations, the pleading on its face does not reveal any defect impossible of cure by amendment nor does it show conclusively that the cause is barred by the statute of frauds.

[1-3] An oral contract of employment for a period of one year "immediately next ensuing," with rendition of service to commence on the day after the agreement is entered into, is not within the statute of frauds. In applying that provision of the statute, Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 1, requiring an agreement to be in writing which by its terms is not to be performed "within a year from the making thereof," the words "from the making thereof" are now uniformly construed to exclude the day upon which the agreement is made; that is, the year is considered to begin with the following day and to end at the close of the anniversary of the day on which the agreement is made. Nickerson v. President, etc., of Harvard College, 298 Mass. 484, 11 N.E.2d 444, 114 A.L.R. 414, note, p. 416; 49 Am.Jur. § 24, p. 385, § 54, p. 411; Rest., Contracts (vol. 1) § 198, comment d. A contingency which may extend the period of employment for more than one year, such as that created by the option provisions here alleged, does not bring a contract within the operation of the statute. Swift v. Swift, 46 Cal. 266; Hollywood Motion Picture Equipment Co. v. Furer, 16 Cal.2d 184, 105 P.2d 299, 12 Cal. Jur. § 5, p. 858; 49 Am.Jur. § 25, p. 387; 111 A.L.R., note p. 1105.

[4, 5] If a modification of the oral agreement here alleged, by postponement of the commencement date and temporary employment of defendant in the interim, was in fact induced by defendant's fraudulent representations to plaintiff concerning his other business commitments and by his promise to reduce the terms of the agreement as modified to writing, and to abide by it, the circumstances may establish an equitable estoppel. The situation alleged is not one of a mere understanding between the parties that the terms of their agreement will be reduced to writing, for in such case, as defendant contends, it is well established that until the writing is actually executed, no complete and binding contract comes into existence. Spinney v. Downing, 108 Cal. 666, 41 P. 797, Burr v. Pacific Indemnity Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 352, 133 P.2d 24, 6 Cal.Jur. § 33, p. 58. Rather does plaintiff attempt to assert that after a valid oral contract came into existence, plaintiff was induced to consent to its modification by defendant's fraudulent promise of a writing, coupled with his other representations, temporary employment, and part performance; that in reliance upon these fraudulent promises, plaintiff changed its position to its detriment in that it relinquished the valid contract for the less favorable modification and also gave defendant the temporary employment he requested at a higher rate of compensation than he would otherwise have received. The facts set forth indicate that plaintiff may be able to properly and sufficiently plead an estoppel on the part of defendant to rely upon the statute of frauds. Halsey v. Robinson, 19 Cal.2d 476, 122 P.2d 11; Vierra v. Pereira, 12 Cal.2d 629, 86 P.2d 816; Wilson v. Bailey, 8 Cal.2d 416, 65 P.2d 770; Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88, 134 Am.St.Rep. 154; 12 Cal. Jur. §§ 102–106, p. 933 et seq.; 37 C.J.S., Frauds, Statute of, § 246, p. 752.

[6, 7] The plea for declaratory relief is not improper. A complaint for declaratory relief is legally sufficient if it sets forth facts showing the existence of an actual controversy relating to the legal rights and duties of the respective parties under a contract and requests that these rights and duties be adjudged by the court. Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, and cases cited at page 728, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. The allegations here leave no doubt of the asserted existence of an actual controversy between the parties. At the time the complaint was filed, the period of the original oral contract still had about three months to run, and the parties attempted to secure an immediate arbitration of their dispute; failing in this, the present action was filed.

[8-11] It is not essential to entitle a plaintiff to seek declaratory relief, that he should establish his right to a favorable declaration. The purpose of the declaratory judgment is to "serve some practical end in quieting or stabilizing an uncertain or disputed jural relation." Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, and cases cited 23 Cal.2d at pages 728–731, 146 P.2d at page 678, 151 A.L.R. 1062; Anderson, Declaratory Judgments, p. 275; 8 So.Cal.L. Rev. 57. The court is empowered to determine disputed questions of fact and hence the remedy is not limited to cases involving a written instrument. Hess v. Country Club Park, 213 Cal. 613, 2 P.2d 782; R. G. Hamilton Corporation v. Corum, 218 Cal. 92, 95, 21 P.2d 413; Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 242, 57 S.Ct. 461, 81 L.Ed. 617, 108 A.L.R. 1000; Zimmer v. Gorelnik, 42 Cal.App.2d 440, 109 P.2d 34. A disputed oral contract may properly be the subject of a declaratory judgment (Corporation of America v. Durham Mut. Water Co., 50 Cal.App.2d 337, 342, 343, 123 P.2d 81; Herrlein v. Tocchini, 128 Cal.App. 612, 18 P.2d 73; Zimmer v. Gorelnik, supra; Wollenberg v. Tonningsen, 8 Cal.App.2d 722, 48 P.2d 738, 742; 5 Cal. Jur.Supp. § 7, p. 113.) The fact that the oral contract may be one of employment, involving personal services and hence not specifically enforceable, Civ.Code, § 3390; Poultry Producers of Southern California v. Barlow, 189 Cal. 278, 208 P. 93, does not necessarily render declaratory relief improper or unnecessary. This is merely a factor to be considered by the trial court in determining what declaration would be appropriate. Universal Sales Corporation v. California, etc., Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 774, 128 P.2d 665; Blakeslee v. Wilson, 190 Cal. 479, 213 P. 495; Coykendall v. Jackson, 17 Cal.App.2d 729, 62 P.2d 746.

[12-14] That a cause of action otherwise may have accrued and that other adequate relief may be available to plaintiff at the time are also factors to be considered by the court. The remedies provided by the statute are cumulative and declaratory relief may be asked alone or with other relief, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062. Hence a plaintiff's right to proceed is not barred by the fact that the contract sued upon may have already been breached and that traditional or statutory (see Civ.Code, § 3423 (5); Code Civ.Proc., § 526) alternative remedies are available. In Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d at page 732, 146 P.2d at page 680, 151 A.L.R. 1062, this court, in reversing judgments entered on demurrers to complaints sustained without leave to amend, stressed the point that before declaratory relief may be denied on the ground of the existence of other remedies, "it must clearly appear that the asserted alternative remedies are available to the plaintiff and that they are speedy and adequate or as well suited to the plaintiff's needs as declaratory relief. See Ermolieff v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, 19 Cal.2d 543, 549, 122 P.2d 3; Henderson v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., 207 Cal. 215, 216, 277 P. 487; Welfare Investment Co. v. Stowell, 132 Cal.App. 275, 278, 22 P.2d 529; Borchard, Declaratory Judgments, p. 293 et seq."

[15] Testing the present pleading by the standards set forth in the cited cases, its allegations do not necessarily show that the remedy of declaratory relief may not have been better suited to plaintiff's needs than the traditional remedies otherwise disclosed. Furthermore, as stated in Ermolieff v. R. K. O. Radio Pictures, supra, 19 Cal.2d at page 547, 122 P.2d at page 5, "Ordinarily, the alternative remedy, such as damages, injunctive relief and the like would be more harsh, and if he chooses the milder remedy, declaratory relief, the court is not required for that reason to compel him to seek a more stringent one." See, also, Wollenberg v. Tonningsen, supra, and Tolle v. Struve, 124 Cal.App. 263, 12 P.2d 61, where declaratory judgments were affirmed despite assertions of other available remedies; and Phelps v. Loop, 53 Cal. App.2d 541, 128 P.2d 63, where judgment of nonsuit was reversed and the cause remanded for trial on the issues joined by the pleadings.

[16, 17] Although under the declaratory relief statute, Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1060–1062a, wide powers have been conferred upon the trial court, its discretion is not unlimited. It is a legal or judicial discretion, hardened by experience into rule, and its exercise is subject to appellate review. Borchard, Declaratory Judgments, p. 299. As said by a text-writer (Anderson, Declaratory Judgments, p. 525, § 172): "It would seem to be a self-evident principle that this discretion is not an arbitrary one, and is not one that may be granted as a special favor, or one that may be exercised personally by the court; but is a sound judicial discretion and one that is controlled in a great measure by legal principles; and in consonance with the rule that the discretion exercised in these cases by the courts is a judicial or legal one, and must be bottomed upon good reason, it may be generally stated that such discretion is subject to review at the hands of appellate tribunals." Where, therefore, a case is properly before the trial court, under a complaint which is legally sufficient and sets forth facts and circumstances showing that a declaratory adjudication is entirely appropriate, the trial court may not properly refuse to assume jurisdiction; and if it does enter a dismissal, it will be directed by an appellate tribunal to entertain the action. Declaratory relief must be granted when the facts justifying that course are sufficiently alleged.

[18-20] In view of the conclusion that the complaint is not vulnerable to general demurrer, it is unnecessary to pass upon the grounds of special demurrer. When a complaint is good as against a general demurrer, it is erroneous for the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend because of defects in the form of pleading. This is not to hold that the complaint is not subject to special demurrer.

Upon the remanding of the cause the trial court may in its discretion require the clarification of uncertainties or ambiguities in the pleading. Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d at page 737, 146 P.2d at page 682, 151 A.L.R. 1062, Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Medicine, 20 Cal.2d 713, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358; Olivera v. Grace, 19 Cal.2d 570, 122 P.2d 564, 140 A.L.R. 1328; Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 114 P.2d 1.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

SPENCE, Justice (dissenting).

I dissent. The question presented here is not whether the trial court would have been justified, under the facts alleged, in overruling the demurrer and in granting declaratory relief, but whether the trial court was compelled, under the facts alleged, to overrule the demurrer and to grant such relief.

Section 1061 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "The court may refuse to exercise the power granted by this chapter in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances." The majority opinion fails to give effect to the provisions of this section and fails to consider numerous authorities dealing with the discretionary power thereby vested in the trial court, such as City of Alturas v. Gloster, 16 Cal.2d 46, 104 P.2d 810; Rapaport v. Forer, 20 Cal.App.2d 271, 66 P.2d 1242; Sunset Scavenger Corporation v. Oddou, 11 Cal.App.2d 92, 53 P.2d 188; Welfare Inv. Co. v. Stowell, 132 Cal.App. 275, 22 P.2d 529; Hamburger & Sons v. Kice, 129 Cal. App. 68, 18 P.2d 115; and Stenzel v. Kronick, 102 Cal.App. 507, 283 P. 93.

In my opinion, the trial court was not compelled to overrule the demurrer and grant declaratory relief under the allegations of the complaint before it. It affirmatively appeared from said allegations that plaintiff's cause of action, if any, had fully accrued by reasons of defendant's alleged breach of the contract. Assuming the validity of the alleged contract, plaintiff had the alternative remedies of an action for damages or of an action for injunctive relief. Civ.Code, § 3423(5); Code Civ.Proc. § 526. These alternative remedies were clearly available; were both speedy and adequate; and were equally, if not better, suited to plaintiff's needs than the remedy by way of mere declaratory relief. The question of the validity of the alleged contract could have been determined in any action brought in pursuit of any of the traditional remedies, and the trial court was therefore justified in determining that a preliminary action for mere declaratory relief was wholly unnecessary. To entertain an action for mere declaratory relief under the circumstances would encourage a multiplicity of actions where but one action would suffice.

The case of Maguire v. Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062, cited in the majority opinion, recognized the existence of discretionary power in the trial court but on page 732 of 23 Cal.2d, at page 679 of 146 P.2d, 151 A.L.R. 1062, the court said: "Defendants do not point out, nor are we able to ascertain, upon what theory the suggested alternative remedies would be available to plaintiffs, or, if available, that they would be speedy or adequate or serve as well or better than the remedy invoked." Such is not the situation here.

In my opinion, the trial court properly exercised the discretionary power vested in it and the judgment should therefore be affirmed.

EDMONDS, J., concurred.

26 Cal.2d 772

INDUSTRIAL INDEMNITY EXCHANGE v. STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION et al.

S. F. 16980.

Supreme Court of California.

July 30, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 27, 1945.

1. Taxation 🔑387

The statute requiring interinsurance exchanges to pay taxes on all sums paid by their subscribers because of insurance exchanged after deducting premium deposit returns, consideration for reinsurance, and all amounts returned to subscribers or credited to their accounts as savings, imposes taxes on gross amounts so paid, except such portions thereof as are not parts of necessary premiums, but excess over cost of insurance, in view of constitutional provision requiring insurance companies to pay taxes on amounts of gross premiums, less return premiums, received by them. St.1935, p. 573, § 1530; Const. art. 13, § 14¾.

2. Taxation ⚷387

The purpose and aim of gross premium tax on insurance companies is to arrive at true value of thing taxed. Const. art. 13, § 14¾.

3. Taxation ⚷387

The percentage of interinsurance exchange subscribers' savings, payable under agreement with their attorney in fact as compensation for services in exchanging insurance contracts, was not part of such savings within statute requiring exchange to pay tax on all sums paid by subscribers because of insurance exchanged after deducting premium deposit returns, consideration for reinsurance, and all amounts returned to subscribers or credited to their accounts as savings, but was part of cost of participation in reciprocal insurance arrangement. St.1935, p. 573, § 1530.

4. Taxation ⚷387

The use of word "credited", as well as word "returned", in statute requiring interinsurance exchange to pay tax on all sums paid by subscribers after deducting amounts returned to them or credited to their accounts as savings, did not render percentage of such savings, agreed to be paid to subscribers' attorney in fact as compensation for services in exchanging insurance contracts, a part of such savings, for word "credited", as differentiated from "returned", covers situation in which there is lack of actual payment and savings, to be credited to subscribers, must be so set aside for them as to preclude further claims against exchange for current expenses, including such compensation. St.1935, p. 573, § 1530.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Credited" and "Returned".

5. Insurance ⚷12½

An interinsurance exchange is not a corporation, but is an organization which may sue and be sued and is treated under some circumstances, such as liquidation, as an entity distinct from its subscribers and their attorney in fact.

6. Taxation ⚷387

An interinsurance exchange's subscribers, agreeing to payment of 5 per cent. of their savings to attorney in fact as compensation for services in exchanging insurance contracts, have no "savings" within statute requiring exchange to pay tax on all sums paid by its subscribers because of insurance exchanged, less amounts returned to them or credited to their accounts as "savings", until all insurance costs, including such compensation, are paid. St.1935, p. 573, § 1530.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Savings".

SCHAUER, SHENK, and EDMONDS, JJ., dissenting.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Industrial Indemnity Exchange, an interinsurance exchange, against the State Board of Equalization and others to recover the amount of a tax paid under protest. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 152 P.2d 37.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and T. A. Westphal, Jr. and Harold B. Haas, Deputy Attys. Gen., for appellants.

Burbank & Laumeister and Daniel W. Burbank, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

According to the stipulation of facts in this case plaintiff is an organization called an interinsurance exchange dealing in workmen's compensation insurance pursuant to sections 1280–1530 of the Insurance Code, St.1935, p. 564 et seq. The subscribers to the organization exchange insurance contracts with each other. The subscribers have executed contracts appointing Industrial Underwriters, Inc., a corporation, as their attorney in fact to exchange the contracts of insurance between them. The latter corporation generally speaking is in charge of the business of the exchange. Mitchell v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 33 Cal.App.2d 53, 91 P.2d 176. In the agreement with the attorney in fact each subscriber agreed to deposit a sum, "computed as required by the terms and conditions of his policy. * * *" The agreement also stated that "Except as otherwise herein provided, all 'savings accruing to the subscribers shall be returned annually, unless otherwise determined by the Advisory Committee' * * *"; and "As compensation for the services to be performed hereunder, said Attorney after first deducting the cost of any reinsurance, may withhold seventeen and one-half percent of all compensation premium deposits received and in addition the Attorney is to receive a sum equal to five percent of the subscriber's savings; * * *."

In 1936 the exchange received from the subscribers premium deposits amounting to $1,604,514.45. By resolution of the advisory committee of the exchange, $197,702.04 was declared as savings returnable to the subscribers as a refund of distributable surplus and directed the accounts of the subscribers to be credited therewith. Pursuant to the resolution the exchange credited on its books the latter amount to the subscribers' accounts, but paid to such subscribers only 95 per cent thereof (the sum of $187,817.04). The balance of 5 per cent ($9,885.10) was paid to the attorney in fact pursuant to the clause in the agreement last above-quoted. Deducting the sum of $197,702.04 from the sum of $1,604,514.45 leaves a balance of $1,406,812.41. Defendant Board of Equalization assessed as taxable to the exchange the balance remaining after deducting 95 per cent of the $197,702.04 or the sum of $187,817.04 from $1,604,514.45, asserting that inasmuch as the 5 per cent was paid to the attorney in fact and not the subscribers, the mere crediting of the 5 per cent on the books to the subscribers did not bring it within the deductions allowed in computing the tax. Plaintiff having paid the tax assessed under protest recovered judgment and defendants appeal. Plaintiff contends that under the statute involved it is sufficient that the full $197,702.04 was credited as savings to the subscribers to make that sum not subject to the tax, and that it is immaterial that 5 per cent thereof was not paid to the subscribers, for the payment of the latter to the attorney was the discharge of the individual obligation of the subscribers to the attorney with which the exchange had nothing to do.

[1, 2] The taxing statute reads: "In lieu of all other taxes, licenses or fees whatever, State or local, each exchange shall pay * * * an annual tax upon all sums paid in the preceding calendar year by subscribers in this State by reason of the insurance exchanged, whether termed premium deposit, membership fee, or otherwise, after deducting therefrom premium deposit returns or cancellations, consideration for reinsurance and all amounts returned to subscribers and/or credited to their accounts as savings; * * *." (Emphasis added.) Insurance Code, § 1530.

We take it that the foregoing section should be considered as fitting within the wording of the constitutional provision on the taxation of insurance companies or associations which provides that every insurance company or association "shall annually pay to the State a tax, * * * of two and six-tenths per centum upon the amount of the gross premiums, less return premiums, received upon its business done in this State, * * * provided, that there shall be deducted from said two and six-tenths per centum upon the gross premiums the amount of any taxes paid by such companies on real estate owned by them in this State." Cal.Const., art. XIII, § 14¾. The term companies is declared to include "persons, partnerships, joint stock associations, companies and corporations." It is apparent from that provision that the tax is upon gross premiums rather than net premiums. The only deductions or amounts that are not a part of the gross premiums are expressly mentioned as return premiums and reinsurance. The only deduction is taxes paid on real estate. However, such dividends, or savings as are present in the instant case, payable because of the excess of the payment stated in the policy over the cost of insurance, are really not a part of the gross premium. See Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Richardson, 192 Cal. 369, 219 P. 1003. Harmonizing section 1530 of the Insurance Code with that provision it appears that the tax on inter-insurance exchanges is on all sums (gross amount) paid by subscribers by reason of insurance exchanged whatever term may be used to describe such sums. The sums mentioned are similar to gross premiums and the tax is on such gross amount. Likewise, to render any portion of that amount nontaxable, it should appear that such portion of the sums was in effect not a part of the necessary premium or stated amount paid by the subscribers but was the excess over the cost of the insurance, that excess being described in section 1530 as savings to the subscribers. That portion being of such a character it was really not a part of the gross premium. Hence, in the instant case in determining whether or not the 5 per cent involved should be considered a part of the savings within the words "returned to subscribers and/or credited to their accounts as savings" used in section 1530, we should consider whether or not this item made up a part of the cost of the insurance or was really not a part of the sums paid by reason of insurance exchanged. Moreover, the purpose and aim of the gross premium tax is to arrive at the true value of the thing taxed. See Camden Fire Ins. Ass'n v. Johnson, 42 Cal. App.2d 528, 531, 109 P.2d 447.

[3, 4] It is clear that the 5 per cent is in the same category as the 17½ per cent mentioned in the last above-quoted excerpt from the agreement with the attorney in fact, which was also paid to the attorney. Both were compensation for its services. Merely because the 17½ per cent was based upon a different figure (the total sums paid) rather than the savings is unimportant. It was nothing more than a different method of calculation to arrive at the same thing, compensation, not a payment for a different purpose. The word "savings" in section 1530 must be viewed from the standpoint of the subscribers, that is, were there savings as to them? No other corporation, person or association of persons is concerned. Certainly there were no savings to the subscribers when the 5 per cent yet remained to be deducted. That was a part of the cost of its participation in a reciprocal insurance arrangement as much as any other item of expense. The use of the word "credited" as well as "returned" with reference to the savings does not alter the situation. The word "credited" as differentiated from "returned" must cover a situation where there was a lack of actual payment. To be "credited" it must have been so set aside for the subscribers that there would be no further claims against it for the current expenses including the compensation of the attorney. To say to the subscribers in one breath you have a savings credit of a certain amount, and in the next, but we are taking 5 per cent away to meet other existing and binding obligations, is sham and pretence. They have no savings credited in reality until all of such items have been deducted. The gross sum paid by the subscribers less the savings is not truly reflected until the savings are fairly ascertained.

[5] Plaintiff argues that the language of section 1530 is clear and needs no interpretation; that a tax statute may not be extended by interpretation; and that the tax provided for by section 1530 is imposed upon the exchange rather than upon the subscribers. But applying the statute to the particular facts before us it is obvious that the savings are not in truth such until the 5 per cent compensation to the attorney has been deducted. It is true that the exchange must pay the tax. Insurance Code, § 1530. It is also true that while an exchange is not a corporation, it is an organization that may sue and be sued and is treated under some circumstances, such as liquidation, as an entity distinct from the subscribers and attorney. Mitchell v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 33 Cal.App. 2d 53, 91 P.2d 176. But it does not follow that the 5 per cent agreed to be paid to the attorney by the subscribers is a matter entirely separate from the transactions of the exchange as an entity in determining what are savings. Realistically viewed, the exchange does not have savings. There may be strings attached to the payment of the surplus to the subscribers in case of insolvency or in other situations. While the organization represents the subscribers and controls the funds, we must look at the subscribers' side of the picture to ascertain what constitutes savings. The subscribers must act through the governing board of the exchange organization. The status of an exchange and its subscribers is discussed in Mitchell v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, supra, at page 59 of 33 Cal.App.2d at page 180 of 91 P.2d where the court said: "From what has been said, it is apparent that a reciprocal 'organization' differs in many respects from the ordinary stock or mutual insurance company. It has no stock and no capital as such. Its operating fund consists of the premiums paid for its policies and the earnings on any investment of those premiums. The contingent liability of the subscribers, Sec. 2, to pay sums in addition to their premiums stands in the place of the capital of the stock company and the liability of the subscribers to meet such contingent liability may be likened in some respects to the liability to pay unpaid stock subscriptions to a stock company. The plan appears to be designed for those who desired to assume the positions of both the insurer and insured with a view to eliminating that part of the ordinary insurance premium which goes into profit." The agreement between the subscribers and the attorney speaks of the savings as belonging to the subscribers rather than to the exchange. It states: "all savings accruing to the subscribers shall be returned annually, unless otherwise determined by the Advisory Committee." If the 5 per cent compensation to the attorney was considered an individual and separate obligation of the subscribers with which the exchange had nothing to do in computing the savings, then by the same reasoning the ultimate result would be no gross premium to tax. All of the expenses of the exchange of insurance including losses would be the independent liability of the subscribers, and the exchange as an organization, having no expenses, could claim that all of the premiums paid were savings. There would be no obligations to deduct therefrom because there would be none. We do not believe it was the intention of the Legislature that its act could be rendered so ineffective by a mere bookkeeping procedure. The relation between and status of the attorney, subscribers and exchange cannot be so segregated that the payment of the tax imposed may be avoided in whole or in part.

[6] It is urged that the payment of the 5 per cent is contingent upon there first being savings in existence, and once they exist, they are deductible even though the subscribers must pay 5 per cent of them to the attorney. Looking beyond that situation however, it cannot be doubted that as to the subscribers there are no savings until all of the expenses in connection with the insurance have been met. There are savings before the 5 per cent is deducted to pay the attorney but only in the sense that there is a sum left over after meeting all expenses except the 5 per cent compensation to the attorney. The 5 per cent must still be paid, and to the subscriber, there is no saving until all the costs of his insurance have been met.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., TRAYNOR, J., and PETERS, J. pro tem., concurred.

SCHAUER, Justice.

I dissent. The taxing statute (Insurance Code, § 1530) is applicable to the exchange as an entity, not to the individual subscribers. It provides that the "exchange shall pay * * * an annual tax upon all sums paid in the preceding calendar year by subscribers in this State by reason of the insurance exchanged, whether termed premium deposit, membership fee, or otherwise, after deducting therefrom premium deposit returns or cancellations, consideration for reinsurance and all amounts returned to subscribers and/or credited to their accounts as savings * * *." (Italics added.) The stipulation of facts upon which the case is presented recites that "plaintiff exchange did credit * * * apportioned amounts as savings to subscribers' accounts on the books of plaintiff exchange; that the aggregate of such sums credited was $197,702.04; that thereafter plaintiff paid by check to subscribers, 95 per cent of the sum credited to each subscriber and paid to said attorney in fact five per cent thereof." (Italics added.)

It is upon this five per cent of the savings that the controversy centers. Plaintiff claims that such five per cent is exempt as a part of the duly credited savings while defendants contend that it is not a part of the savings.

It appears to me that the five per cent so paid to the attorney in fact was paid for the accounts of the respective subscribers. It was, in effect, a payment to them. The obligation was their obligation, not that of the exchange. The payment was a disposal of the subscribers' money; the exchange had completed its function and effected the savings. The savings had been duly credited to the subscribers and under the unambiguous terms of the statute such savings, so credited, were deductible from the taxable base.

Accordingly it is my view that the trial court reached the proper conclusion. I am satisfied that the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division Two, prepared by Mr. Presiding Justice Nourse (reported in 152 P.2d 37) in affirming the judgment, correctly disposes of the issues involved. Reference is made to that opinion for its more complete statement of the essential facts and discussion of the applicable principles of law and logic.

SHENK and EDMONDS, JJ., concurred.

Rehearing denied; SHENK, EDMONDS, and SCHAUER, JJ., dissenting.

26 Cal.2d 780

PEOPLE v. LINDLEY.

Cr. 4614.

Supreme Court of California.
July 30, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⚷625

The certification of superintendent of state hospital for insane as to sanity of defendant in criminal case before he can be tried for alleged offense is not required to be made in any particular form or to be produced in court as a prerequisite to right to proceed to trial, but is at most merely a formal statement made to sheriff and district attorney that defendant is not insane, and there is no specific requirement that such certification be filed. Pen. Code, § 1372.

2. Criminal law ⚷625

Where superintendent of state hospital for insane notified sheriff and district attorney that defendant in murder prosecution who had been committed to state hospital, was sane, and no point to contrary was mentioned until on motion for new trial, claim that there was no evidence of defendant's sanity because of sheriff's failure to produce certificate signed by superintendent showing that defendant had been discharged from hospital could not be considered, in absence of showing that sufficient certification of sanity was not duly made, or if demanded it could not have been produced. Pen.Code, § 1372.

3. Criminal law ⚷322

The presumption, in absence of contrary evidence, is that duties of superintendent of state hospital for insane and other officials in connection with certification of sanity of defendant in murder prosecution were properly performed, that defendant was duly discharged from hospital, and that he was brought into court for trial as prescribed by statute. Pen. Code, § 1372.

4. Criminal law ⚷625

The "doubt" mentioned in statute requiring trial judge, in case of doubt as to accused's sanity, to order question as to accused's sanity to be determined, is a doubt arising in mind of trial judge rather than in mind of counsel for defendant or third person. Pen.Code, § 1368.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Doubt".

5. Criminal law ⚷625, 1148

The determination of a motion for hearing on issue of defendant's sanity at time of trial rests within trial court's sound discretion, and appellate court cannot measure to a nicety the basis for trial court's ruling and trial judge must be allowed a wide latitude. Pen.Code, § 1368.

6. Criminal law ⚷625

In murder prosecution, evidence established that trial judge did not abuse his discretion in denying motion for inquiry at trial into question of defendant's sanity and in proceeding with the trial. Pen. Code, § 1368.

7. Homicide ⚷235

Evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction for murder in the first degree for a homicide committed in perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape. Pen.Code, § 189.

8. Homicide ⚷268, 332(6)

The weight to be accorded testimony of witnesses in prosecution for first-degree murder based on homicide allegedly resulting from perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape was a question exclusively for determination of jury, as against defendant's categorical denial of guilt, and verdict of conviction approved by trial judge on denial of motion for new trial could not be disturbed on appeal for insufficiency of evidence. Pen.Code, § 189.

9. Homicide ⚷18(1)

Where murder is committed in perpetration or attempted perpetration of any of felonies enumerated in statute, offender is guilty of murder in first degree by force of the statute regardless of absence of independent proof of premeditation or deliberation. Pen.Code, § 189.

10. Homicide ⚷332(2)

Even if evidence does not conclusively establish that homicide was committed in perpetration or attempt to perpetrate one of enumerated felonies so as to constitute murder in first degree, nevertheless, if record affords substantial support for conclusion that one of enumerated felonies was perpetrated or attempted, and that killing was committed in such perpetration or attempt, a first-degree murder conviction must be affirmed. Pen.Code, § 189.

11. Criminal law ⚷1144, 1159(2)

After conviction, all intendments are in favor of judgment, and verdict will not be set aside unless record clearly shows that on no hypothesis is verdict supported by sufficient substantial evidence.

12. Homicide ⚿18(4)

In prosecution for murder in first degree based on homicide resulting from perpetration or attempt to perpetrate rape, it was not essential to establish bleeding, since evidence of any sexual penetration, however slight, is sufficient to complete the crime. Pen.Code, §§ 189, 263.

13. Criminal law ⚿778(5)

In murder prosecution, court should not have given instruction, based on statute, that commission of homicide by defendant being proved, the burden of providing circumstances of mitigation or to justify or excuse homicide devolved on defendant unless proof of prosecution tended to show that crime committed only amounted to manslaughter or that defendant was justifiable or excusable, even though court added thereto the correct statement that defendant is only required to produce evidence of circumstances of the killing to raise reasonable doubt of his guilt. Pen.Code, § 1105.

14. Criminal law ⚿1172(2)

Any error in giving instruction based on statute as to when burden of proof shifts to defendant in murder case as to circumstances in mitigation, justification, or excuse, did not prejudice defendant's rights, where only crime of which he could have been found guilty was a killing in perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape which, under statute, is first-degree murder. Pen.Code, §§ 189, 1105.

15. Homicide ⚿311

Giving an instruction that, if jury found defendant guilty of first-degree murder and also found extenuating circumstances, it was within their discretion to pronounce such sentence as would relieve defendant from extreme penalty, but that, if evidence showed no such circumstances, it was jury's duty to find simple verdict of first-degree murder and leave with the law the responsibility of fixing punishment, was not error. Pen.Code, § 189, 1105.

16. Homicide ⚿308(2)

Where trial judge, by four instructions, fully and correctly explained essential elements of first and second degree murder, complaint that jury was not adequately informed concerning such difference was unwarranted. Pen.Code, § 189.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; Arthur Coats, Judge.

William Marvin Lindley was convicted of murder in the first degree, and an appeal was taken under the automatic appeal statute.

Affirmed.

Desmond A. Winship, of Yuba City, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

When he was charged with having murdered a 13-year-old girl, William Marvin Lindley pleaded not guilty, but before the date set for trial it was brought to the attention of the court that a doubt had arisen concerning his sanity. Following a hearing upon that issue he was committed to the Mendocino State Hospital. Ten months later he was released to the sheriff and brought to trial upon the murder charge. The case is now before this court upon an automatic appeal from the judgment imposing the death penalty which was entered upon the verdict of the jury which found him guilty and the order denying a new trial.

The record discloses that on August 16, 1943, two days before Jackie Hamilton, the victim of the tragedy, was found under conditions which resulted in her death shortly afterward, she had arrived at Yuba City with her father and mother and three sisters, Willa Mae, Barbara, and Shirley, who were then 17, 15, and 3 years of age, respectively. The family established a camp at a place which was between the levee of the Feather River and the stream. Clumps of trees dotted the area and the terrain was irregular. Some 200 yards to the northeast, built directly on the stream, was a boathouse inhabited by William Owens, his nine-year-old son, a man called Shorty, and Lindley. Owens had known Lindley for about five years and had always called him "Red." The men maintained a store in the boathouse, selling soft drinks and merchandise to the riders and campers who frequented the vicinity.

The Hamilton family made camp about noon on Monday but did not go to the boathouse that day. On Tuesday, Barbara went down to find out where they could get water, and visited the boathouse several other times. The next day, a little boy took the three older girls, Willa Mae, Barbara and Jackie, across the river in a boat. On the opposite bank they saw a sheepherder and his flock. When they returned Barbara and Jackie went in swimming, and later Willa Mae joined them.

Meanwhile Mr. Hamilton had become acquainted with the men at the boathouse. He agreed to drive Owens and "Red" to a place a few miles outside the city where they could collect wages due them for peach picking. The three men left in the automobile shortly after noon. Some time later Barbara and Jackie left the water. They went up to the boathouse to change to dry clothing. Shorty was the only man there, and he told Jackie to wrap herself in a blanket and get her clothes from a tub in which she had placed them. She did so, and Barbara helped her dress in the men's restroom. Jackie then said she would go back to camp.

Willa Mae, still in the water, saw "quite a ways off," "a man with a brown hat and khakis * * * in the willows. * * * It looked like he was shaking a pole going back and forth. Shaking the willows." About this same time, which was probably around 2 o'clock, the three men had returned from town after completing their errands and making grocery purchases, and within five minutes after their arrival "Red" had taken some ale which they had bought and walked with it in the direction of the boathouse. Owens had stayed in camp to visit with Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton.

"Red" was wearing a khaki suit, a "kind of brown khaki," shirt and pants, and a brown hat. It was a brown hat, or one similar to it, that had been given to him by Owens.

When Jackie reached the camp, 200 yards from the boathouse, her father, Owens, her mother and Shirley were there but "Red" had left. Owens was drinking from a jug of wine bought in town; Mr. Hamilton had about two tablespoons of it. Jackie did not mention having seen "Red" on the way. She stayed only about five minutes and then walked back toward the river. During this brief interval Barbara was at the boathouse; Willa Mae had left the water and started back to camp for dry clothes. The man was still in the willows when she left the river, so she took the trail to the house, without passing the place where he was. "He was there when I got through swimming," she testified, "in the willows and I just went on to the house. I kind of got scared and went to the house." She did not recognize the man as anyone she had seen and she had never met "Red." After reaching camp she stayed there quite a while, then changed her clothes and took Shirley down to the boathouse. On the way there, she did not see or look for the man in the willows.

Meanwhile at the boathouse "Red" had come in and joined Barbara and Shorty about 15 or 20 minutes after Jackie left for camp. He did not mention having stopped in the willows on the way, or having met and injured Jackie, if he did so. His whereabouts over the period of 15 minutes is not accounted for unless he was the man in the willows. He sat around drinking beer and smoking one cigarette after another.

Five or six minutes after "Red's" arrival, Willa Mae came in with Shirley, and about 15 or 20 minutes after that two boys, Richard and Lawrence, who were riding horses, stopped at the boathouse. The group talked for 20 or 25 minutes and then the two boys went to get their horses. Willa Mae, the baby and Barbara started to walk toward the camp. A period of 60 or 70 minutes had then elapsed since Jackie left the boathouse and paid her five-minute visit to the camp.

The group of young people came upon Owens sitting on a hump of bermuda grass on the hill. He had left the camp after sitting around with Mr. Hamilton for an hour or an hour and a quarter. He said he was taking sand out of his shoe. That took him three or four minutes, and he then went on down to the boathouse and joined Shorty and "Red." Three or four minutes after he reached the boathouse, and while Barbara, Willa Mae, and the baby were watching the two boys mount their horses, they heard Jackie call out "help, I am drowning," and similar cries. Willa Mae and Barbara were not alarmed as Jackie had been fooling them all morning by calling for help and pretending that she was drowning. Willa Mae went on to camp with the baby and told her mother she guessed her sister had fainted. She knew Jackie had not been well because of successive bouts with rheumatic fever and its effect upon her heart, but she was "gaining and getting very stout. A very healthy looking little girl."

Barbara remarked to the boys, "She is fooling; she has been fooling all day like that," but the boys said they would go down and see. Richard went part way on his horse and called, "you are not going to drown in the sand." But Jackie had recognized Barbara's voice and said "help, Barbara, help." Then Barbara also cried out for help and the father went to the aid of the girls. He placed the time of the cry as 10 minutes or less after Owens left the camp. It was estimated as 3:15 or 3:20, or an hour and a quarter after the men returned from town.

Jackie was lying outside the willows on the sand. She was on her side with her face turned partly into the sand. There was a little spot of blood on her cheek, dry blood in her nose and "great big reddish blue purple spots on her little throat like somebody had hold of her throat." According to her father's testimony, she said, "Daddy, that old red headed man; that dirty liar at the boathouse." Barbara testified that in suggesting to her father, "Daddy, let's take her to the boathouse," Jackie replied, "No, that old man at the boathouse, he did it, the dirty liar." The father also told the jury that she kept saying, "The old red headed man, the dirty liar, did it."

The clothing on the child was torn in front. She had on only the waist and skirt in which Barbara had helped dress her with no shoes, stockings or panties. The dress had not been torn when she put it on after her swim. She was so weak and bruised she could not walk. With the help of the boys the automobile was brought near and she was placed in it.

The men at the boathouse had heard Barbara scream and holler "Bill" (Owens). Shorty was in the house; "Red" was sitting in front on a box; and Owens was lying on a pad or mattress he had thrown on the floor. Owens jumped up and ran to the automobile, arriving as they were getting Jackie into the car. He asked to ride to the hospital with them. En route they stopped at the sheriff's office for directions and the sheriff, in his car, cleared the road for them to the hospital. The little girl passed away on the operating table about 15 minutes after arrival. This was between 3:45 and 4:15.

The physician who examined her testified: "When she was brought to the hospital she was in very poor condition. As a matter of fact she was breathing her last. She was quite blue and you might say she was shocked to death. * * * The cause of death was asphyxiation. * * * It can occur from a variety of causes"; it could come from being choked. He said the girl bore no evidence of drowning. But coming to consciousness after being choked and left with her face in sand might induce the same sensation as drowning.

An autopsy revealed marks on the girl's body, those on the throat not deep enough to bleed, such as might have been caused by fingernail scratches. There were two abrasions on the lower part of the abdomen inside the pelvic bone, and an abrasion just within the vaginal wall, inside the vagina. The abrasions near the groin were about the size of a quarter each, where the skin had been rubbed off, and they could have been caused by a hard object such as a knee being pressed upon that portion of the body. The abrasion inside the vaginal wall was "Just where the skin had been rubbed off," and could have been caused by the "insertion of anything." The physician testified that the girl's heart condition, caused by rheumatic fever, was not the cause of her death.

In further explanation of the cause of death, the doctor said that if a person "were actually strangled and oxygen prevented from getting in," death would occur right away but that it was hard to tell how long before arrival at the hospital Jackie was choked; that if she were strangled but not completely choked to death and became unconscious, she might live until enough fluid collected in her lungs to kill her. "It might be quite a period of time." A heart attack, he stated, would not have caused the girl to grab her own throat, and there was no evidence of such an attack or of self-inflicted wounds.

A deputy sheriff who was immediately dispatched to the scene of the crime testified that the ground showed some evidence of a struggle there but "not a great deal"; that "it is pretty heavy sand." In walking in the neighborhood he picked up a pair of torn panties like the pair Barbara had helped Jackie put on after the swim. None of the clothing in which Jackie dressed at the boathouse was then torn.

The sheepherder whom the girls had seen across the river was a 16-year-old grammar school boy, then in the seventh grade. At the trial he gave testimony which, along certain lines, such as that regarding the color of bathing suits, showed a tendency to give an affirmative answer to each question asked, although his answers were inconsistent. But on certain basic points, under cross-examination and recross-examination, he was unshakable.

He testified positively that while sitting under a tree he had watched two girls swimming. He saw them leave the water and enter the boathouse. He later noticed one of them go toward home and then observed a girl come down to the water and wash her feet. When she went back toward the levee, he said, she started fighting with "Red" and they went down behind the willows. He positively identified "Red" as one of two men he had seen around the boathouse during the previous two weeks, and said that on the afternoon Jackie died he saw "Red" walking back and forth in the willows, wearing a brown hat, brown pants, and brown shirt. He picked "Red" out in the jail, there learning his name, and recognized him in the courtroom, even against suggestions of other identity.

In his account of what he saw, the boy said that he heard the cries for help about 15 minutes after the fight. He had then left his position under the tree and walked 200 or 300 feet toward a tomato patch. He told his father and mother when they came down to see the sheep that afternoon of all he had witnessed, and later told the sheriff. His position on the east side of the river gave him a clear view of the willows area; he could have seen a man above the height of the willows and distinguished colors and persons.

At the time of Lindley's arrest, George Main was in the county jail on a charge involving a girl slightly under 20 years of age. Main was assigned to cook for the other inmates and had opportunity for conversation with them. He told the jury that in talking with Lindley a week or so before the trial, the man seemed to be in a normal state of mind and said to him: "You are a mind reader; I am guilty and you know it. I might as well tell you I followed this little girl to the river and grabbed her and choked her and throwed her in the bushes and went back to the bunk house for an alibi." Main reported the remark to the sheriff, but, he testified, not for the purpose of securing any advantage for himself.

Lindley is a man who has had little, if any, education. He can write his name but is unable to read. He is a native of Texas and was convicted of burglary in that state. At the time of his trial he was 49 years of age. As a witness in his own behalf, he recalled seeing Jackie down on the river, but claimed that when he returned from town he went directly from the camp to the boathouse, joining Shorty, Barbara and the others there. He denied any confession to a fellow prisoner. He also told the jury that when Jackie was found and the call for help came he went up to the car and made inquiry as to what had occurred.

The judgment based upon this testimony is challenged upon four grounds. First, it is said, the record shows no evidence that Lindley had regained his sanity. The second point relied upon for reversal is the asserted insufficiency of the evidence to establish that Lindley committed the homicide. As also justifying a new trial, counsel points out that the evidence is insufficient to establish the crime as murder of the first degree. Finally, complaint is made of certain instructions to the jury.

[1-3] The contention that there is no evidence tending to prove Lindley's sanity at the time of the trial is based upon the sheriff's failure to produce a certificate signed by the superintendent of the state hospital showing that he had been discharged from that institution. This point, however, was mentioned for the first time on the motion for a new trial. Although at the opening of the trial, Lindley's counsel stated that he still doubted defendant's sanity, and he unsuccessfully moved the court to determine the question, no further objection was made then or at any time prior to the verdict and judgment.

Section 1372 of the Penal Code reads: "If the defendant is received into the state hospital he must be detained there until he becomes sane. When he becomes sane, the superintendent must certify that fact to the sheriff and district attorney of the county. The sheriff must thereupon, without delay, bring the defendant from the state hospital, and place him in proper custody until he is brought to trial or judgment, as the case may be, or is legally discharged."

The Legislature has made no requirement that the certification of sanity be in any particular form or that it be produced in court as a prerequisite to the right to proceed to trial. It is, as stated in People v. Superior Court, 4 Cal.2d 136, 147, 47 P.2d 724, 729, "at most, merely a formal statement made to the sheriff and district attorney that the defendant is not insane, and there is in fact no specific requirement that it be filed, nor does there appear to be great reason why it should be." In the case of Lindley, it appears that the sheriff received a notice from the hospital, as did also the district attorney. There is nothing to indicate that a sufficient certification of sanity was not duly made or that, if demanded, it could not have been produced. At the commencement of the trial the judge remarked in open court that "the man has been returned to this court as sane." The presumption, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that the duties of the superintendent and other officials were properly performed, that the defendant was duly discharged from the hospital and that he was brought into court in the manner prescribed by statute. Maloney v. Massachusetts, etc., Co., 20 Cal.2d 1, 123 P.2d 449; People v. Superior Court, supra; People v. McGee, 24 Cal.App.2d 391, 75 P.2d 533; People v. Howard, 134 Cal.App. 441, 25 P.2d 498.

[4-6] Section 1368 of the Penal Code provides: "If at any time during the pendency of an action and prior to judgment a doubt arises as to the sanity of the defendant, the court must order the question as to his sanity to be determined * * *." The "doubt" mentioned is one that must arise in the mind of the trial judge, rather than in the mind of counsel for the defendant or in that of any third person (People v. Perry, 14 Cal.2d 387, 399, 94 P.2d 559, 124 A.L.R. 1123, and cases there cited), and the determination of a motion for a hearing upon the issue of a defendant's sanity at the time of trial is one which rests within the sound discretion of the court. Necessarily, an appellate court cannot measure to a nicety the basis for the ruling, and the trial judge must always be allowed a wide latitude. People v. Perry, supra, 14 Cal.2d at pages 397-399, 94 P.2d 559, and authorities there reviewed, 124 A.L.R. 1123; People v. Cramer, 21 Cal.2d 531, 133 P.2d 399; People v. Croce, 208 Cal. 123, 131-134, 280 P. 526; People v. Gilberg, 197 Cal. 306, 311, 312, 240 P. 1000; People v. Keyes, 178 Cal. 794, 801-802, 175 P. 6; People v. Fountain, 170 Cal. 460, 467, 150 P. 341; People v. Hettick, 126 Cal. 425, 58 P. 918; People v. Geiger, 116 Cal. 440, 48 P. 389; People v. Kirby, 15 Cal.App. 264, 269, 114 P. 794; 8 Cal.Jur. § 270, p. 195; 4 Cal.Jur. 10-Yr.Supp. (1943 rev.) 721; 142 A.L.R. note, p. 961, at p. 983. Certainly there is nothing in the record of the present case indicating an abuse of discretion. On the contrary, it appears that the trial judge was well aware of his statutory duty, for in denying the motion for an inquiry into Lindley's sanity at that time he ruled: "The question has once before been raised and the man has been returned to this Court as sane. The Court has no other discretion but to proceed with the criminal case and if it should develop during the trial the Court may stop proceedings at any time." Moreover, Lindley took the witness stand and gave perfectly lucid testimony in his own behalf and the reporter's transcript shows nothing which occurred during the course of the trial tending to raise any "doubt" whatever as to the defendant's then sanity.

[7] Concerning the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury, the testimony of the witnesses for the People shows no material inconsistencies or contradictions. All of them frankly admit to taking no account of time in their movements during the day. Every time estimate given was qualified as being only an approximation, yet much more than a thread of consistency runs through the evidence presented by the prosecution. As the events of the day of Jackie's death were related to the jury, before reaching the boathouse "Red" had ample opportunity to attack the little girl and leave her unconscious at the point where she was found in response to her cries. Unquestionably this testimony and the physical facts are reasonably susceptible of the inference that Lindley went directly from the camp to the willows and was there when Jackie arrived five minutes later. The testimony of Main may have been induced by self-interest, and the sheepherder and Willa Mae were of dull mentality, but the accounts given by Barbara and her father are full and clear, and each of their statements is consistent with the recital of events given by the other witnesses.

[8] There is nothing to indicate that there was any person in the vicinity of the boathouse other than those who were named by the witnesses, and Lindley is the only one described as being dressed in brown clothes and a brown hat. Also, one may conclude with more than reasonable certainty that he is the person to whom Jackie referred as "the red headed man at the boathouse." Moreover, Lindley was positively identified by the shepherd boy as the man whom he saw "fighting" with the little girl. He said: "They went down behind the willows. * * * Red got up and then he started back to the boathouse. * * * I started off to the tomato patch. I got just around the curve and heard them yell and went back * * * the little girl was yelling for help. * * * I saw a man and lady come over the levee and take this little girl up towards the road." It was the duty of the jury to consider this evidence as against Lindley's categorical denial of guilt and his testimony that upon returning from the automobile trip, he walked down the road directly to the boathouse. The weight to be accorded the statement of each of the witnesses was a question exclusively for the determination of the jury and the verdict, which received judicial approval upon denial of the motion for a new trial may not, therefore, be disturbed upon appeal. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 463, 2 P.2d 814; People v. Erno, 195 Cal. 272, 278, 232 P. 710.

Lindley also asserts that the evidence is insufficient to establish murder of the first degree. There is no proof, whatever, he argues, of the commission of that crime.

[9-11] Section 189 of the Penal Code defines as murder of the first degree, "all murder which is perpetrated by means of poison, or lying in wait, torture, or by any other kind of willful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which is committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate arson, rape, robbery, burglary, or mayhem * * *." Where the murder is committed in perpetration or attempted perpetration of any of the enumerated felonies, the offender "is guilty of murder of the first degree by force of the statute." People v. Cabaltero, 31 Cal.App.2d 52, 57, 87 P.2d 364, 366; see People v. Murphy, 1 Cal.2d 37, 41, 32 P.2d 635; People v. Howard, 211 Cal. 322, 329, 295 P. 333, 71 A.L.R. 1385; People v. Sutton, 17 Cal. App.2d 561, 62 P.2d 397. If the evidence establishes conclusively that the murder was so committed, then only a verdict of murder of the first degree may properly be rendered. And even where the showing is not conclusive, if the record affords substantial support for the conclusion that one of the enumerated felonies was perpetrated or attempted, and the killing was committed in such perpetration or attempt, the judgment must be affirmed. People v. Diaz, 26 Cal.2d 318, 158 P.2d 194; People v. Brown, 22 Cal.2d 752, 141 P.2d 1; People v. Waller, 14 Cal.2d 693, 96 P.2d 344; People v. Green, 13 Cal.2d 37, 87 P.2d 821; People v. Martin, 12 Cal.2d 466, 85 P.2d 880; People v. Anderson, 1 Cal.2d 687, 37 P.2d 67; People v. Miller, 121 Cal. 343, 347, 53 P. 816; People v. De La Roi, 36 Cal.App.2d 287, 97 P.2d 836; People v. Meyers, 7 Cal.App.2d 351, 46 P.2d 282. After conviction all intendments are in favor of the judgment and a verdict will not be set aside unless the record clearly shows, that upon no hypothesis whatsoever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support it. People v. Latona, 2 Cal.2d 714, 43 P.2d 260; People v. Green, supra; People v. De La Roi, supra.

Lindley contends that here the evidence fails to sufficiently establish either rape or attempted rape; that there is no proof of lying in wait, as distinguished from the mere fact that the murderer was concealed by the willows (see People v. Miles, 55 Cal. 207; People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 891, 156 P.2d 7); and that there is no evidence that the killing was willful, deliberate, or premeditated. But unquestionably the jury reasonably could have drawn from the evidence the inference that the girl was killed in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape. When found, she was weak, choking, bruised, and close to death. Her clothing was torn and she told those who came to her aid that she had been attacked by the "old red headed man" at the boathouse. Wounds revealed by the autopsy corroborated her charge.

[12] In establishing rape, evidence of any sexual penetration, however slight, is sufficient to complete the crime. Pen.Code, § 263; People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 P. 1116; People v. Britt, 62 Cal.App. 674, 217 P. 767; People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 117 P.2d 321. Counsel argues that none of the abrasions caused bleeding and there was no proof as to when they might have been made. However, it was not essential to establish bleeding and an inference which could reasonably be drawn from the medical testimony is that the abrasions were as newly inflicted as the throat marks. The girl's physical condition, and the marks on her body, coupled with all of the other evidence, amply support the conclusion that death resulted from injuries sustained either in a rape or an attempt to rape committed by Lindley. People v. Diaz, supra; People v. Brown, supra. Under such circumstances, the absence of independent proof of premeditation or deliberation is immaterial. The jury, once satisfied that a rape was perpetrated or attempted and that Lindley was the assailant, had no alternative but to return a verdict of murder of the first degree.

The last point presented concerns two instructions which, it is claimed, are erroneous. By them, counsel argues, the jury was instructed that the homicide by Lindley being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or that justified or excused it, then devolved upon him unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the offense only amounted to manslaughter. Also, the argument continues, the jurors were told that if they found Lindley guilty of murder in the first degree, then in the absence of some extenuating fact or circumstance they should impose the extreme penalty of the law. By these instructions the jury had no alternative but to find Lindley guilty of murder in the first degree or of manslaughter or to acquit him. If they found him guilty of murder in the first degree, according to the instructions, the burden of proving facts and circumstances of mitigation or that justified or excused the homicide was upon Lindley and in the absence of such proof it was the duty of the jury to not relieve him from the extreme penalty of the law. Moreover, it is contended, the jurors were not adequately instructed as to the difference between murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree.

[13, 14] The first of the challenged instructions is based upon section 1105 of the Penal Code. It reads: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon the defendant, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable, but the burden of proof thus placed on the defendant is discharged and satisfied if it raises in your minds a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt." Although the court added to the statute the italicized words correctly stating that a defendant is only required to produce enough evidence of the circumstances of the killing to raise a reasonable doubt of his guilt (People v. Wells, 10 Cal.2d 610, 76 P.2d 493; People v. Madison, 3 Cal.2d 668, 46 P.2d 159; People v. Post, 208 Cal. 433, 281 P. 618), the instruction should not have been given. But the error, if it may be properly characterized as such, did not prejudice the rights of Lindley. Under the evidence the only crime of which he could have been found guilty was a killing in the perpetration or attempted perpetration of rape, and the degree of that crime is fixed by statute.

[15] By the second instruction relied upon as justifying a reversal of the judgment, the jurors were told that if they found the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree and also that there was some extenuating fact or circumstance in the case, it was within their discretion to specify a sentence which would relieve him from the extreme death penalty. But this discretion, said the court, "is not an arbitrary one, and is limited to determining which of two punishments shall be inflicted, and is to be employed only when the jury is satisfied that the lighter penalty should be imposed. If the evidence shows the defendant to be guilty of murder in the first degree, but does not show some extenuating fact or circumstance, it is the duty of the jury to find a simple verdict of murder in the first degree, and leave the law the responsibility of affixing the punishment." In the recent case of People v. Kolez, 23 Cal.2d 670, 145 P.2d 580, this court adhered to a long line of decisions holding that the giving of such an instruction does not constitute error.

[16] Nor is the appellant's complaint that the jury was not adequately informed concerning the difference between murder of the first and of the second degree well founded. By four instructions, the trial judge fully and correctly explained the essential elements of each of these offenses.

An examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, shows no error which has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The evidence quite unerringly points to Lindley as perpetrator of a revolting crime, and he had a fair and impartial trial fully protecting him in every substantial right. After less than two hours of deliberation, the jury returned its verdict requiring that a sentence of death be imposed upon him as punishment for his commission of murder of the first degree. The verdict is amply justified by the law and the evidence.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are, and each of them is, affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

TRAYNOR, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the judgment. The instruction in terms of Penal Code, section 1105, was erroneous for reasons set forth in People v. Thomas, 25 Cal.2d 880, 894-896, 156 P.2d 7, and in my concurring opinion in People v. Albertson, 23 Cal.2d 550, 586-589, 145 P.2d 7. It is doubtful whether such an instruction should be given even if accompanied by a proper explanation, but in any event the sentence that the court added in its instruction to the text of the section did not explain adequately the meaning of the section. I do not believe, however, that the error was prejudicial in this case; it is improbable that a reasonable jury properly instructed would have rendered a different verdict.

I believe that People v. Kolez, 23 Cal.2d 670, 145 P.2d 580, should be overruled for the reasons set forth in my dissenting opinion therein. Until it is, however, an instruction like the one there involved is not erroneous.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 478

OPP v. FRYE et al.

Civ. 3340.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 9, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Husband and wife 🔑264

In action by widow against deceased husband's executors for an accounting, evidence supported finding that funds deposited in husband's bank account opened in 1920, and on which wife was allowed to draw checks were not owned by husband and wife as tenants in common but were either the separate property of the husband or community property of the parties.

2. Joint tenancy 🔑5

Personal property acquired with joint tenancy funds retains the character of joint property unless by some agreement between the parties its character was changed, but such agreement need not be in writing and intention may be shown by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence and by inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom.

3. Wills 🔑6, 800

A will whereby testator placed all his property in trust and gave all the net income to wife for life, and document whereby wife acquiesced in will and waived all claim to any interest in the property, was sufficient evidence of an agreement changing character of joint tenancy property so as to permit property to be disposed of by husband's will.

4. Wills 🔑788

Evidence supported finding that waiver which wife executed contemporaneously with execution of husband's will giving her net income from all the property for life, and under which waiver she waived all claims to any share of property, was not procured by undue influence or fraud, that wife received sufficient consideration therefor, that husband took no advantage of wife and made no misrepresentations and that wife was fully advised of nature and effect of waiver and executed it freely and voluntarily.

5. Wills 🔑785

Where husband in original will bequeathed $2,500 to employee and in a codicil eliminated such provision, codicil did not release wife's waiver whereby she acquiesced in will giving her net income of all the property for life and waived any claim she might have to any interest in the property, and did not cause a failure of consideration for waiver which recited as a consideration the provisions made for wife in will.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Edward J. Kelly, Judge.

Action by Augusta Opp against Frank A. Frye, and another, as executors of the last will of Fred Opp, deceased, for an accounting, the purpose being to establish that part of the property in the hands of the executors was the separate property of the plaintiff, the widow. From the judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Dempster McKee, of San Diego, and Henry T. Moore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gray, Cary, Ames & Driscoll and John M. Cranston, all of San Diego, for respondents.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action brought in the name of the widow against the executors of her deceased husband's estate. While in form it is one for an accounting its real purpose is to establish that all or a large part of the property in the hands of the executors is, in fact, the separate property of the widow.

Augusta Opp and Fred Opp were married in 1880, and lived together in complete harmony for about 60 years, until he died on November 15, 1940. Prior to their marriage Mr. Opp was earning $150 a month as a salesman. Mrs. Opp had saved $1,565.59 from teaching school, which she turned over to her husband, in whom she "had supreme confidence." Some two years after their marriage Mr. Opp went into the wholesale tobacco business for himself. Mrs. Opp testified that throughout their married life she attended strictly to the housekeeping and that her husband attended to all business affairs. That they were both successful in their respective spheres abundantly appears. Her husband's original capital, aside from any possible savings from his salary, consisted of the $1,565 he received from his wife and $1,000 which he borrowed from his father, which he later repaid with interest. When he died he left, in addition to a home in San Diego, the title to which stood in both their names as joint tenants, personal property which was appraised in the estate at $641,318.64. This consisted entirely of municipal bonds, made payable to bearer, with the exception of about $6,700 in cash, an automobile appraised at $250 and his interest in the household furniture appraised at $2,500.

Mr. and Mrs. Opp lived in St. Louis, where his business was, until 1913, when they bought the home in San Diego and Mrs. Opp has since resided there. The court found that Mr. Opp continued to reside in St. Louis until 1919. In any event, during these six years, he spent considerable time in St. Louis looking after his business. He sold his interests there in 1919, and thereafter resided in San Diego until his death. In 1920, he opened a bank account in San Diego and sometime subsequently he authorized the bank to honor checks on this account drawn by Mrs. Opp. In 1931 a new joint account with this bank was created, both Mr. and Mrs. Opp signing the usual joint tenancy card. In 1937 Mr. Opp withdrew the balance in this joint account, amounting to $24,132.76, and opened a new account in his own name which was continued until his death. Large amounts were deposited and withdrawn by Mr. Opp from these respective accounts and some checks were drawn by Mrs. Opp on the first two of them. Some of the securities here in question, of the value of $115,000, were traced to withdrawals from the joint tenancy account during its existence.

In 1935, Mrs. Opp inherited from her brother an interest in real property in Kansas City. While this was at all times recognized as Mrs. Opp's separate property, income therefrom to the amount of $3,809.66 was, with her consent, deposited in the husband's bank account and judgment for that amount was given to the plaintiff. No question with respect to that property or the income therefrom is here raised.

Mr. and Mrs. Opp had only one child, a son. To put it charitably, they were greatly disappointed in his inability to understand the value of money. In 1936 Mr. Opp made a will in which he provided that all of the income from the entire estate should go to Mrs. Opp as long as she lived, and that after her death a $50,000 life insurance policy should be purchased for the son and the remainder of the estate should go to the son's four children, a boy and three girls. In connection with that will, Mrs. Opp signed a waiver similar to the one here involved.

Mr. Opp later told his attorney that he had found that his grandson had no more regard for the value of money than his own son had, that he had already given his son a fortune, that he wanted to treat the son and the grandson alike and provide an annuity for each, and that he wanted to change his will accordingly.

On October 6, 1938, the will here in question was executed. This will gave $2,500 to an old employee, provided he survived the testator, and gave all of his personal effects, his interest in the household furniture and any automobile he might own to his wife. The will then gave "the entire rest, residue and remainder of my estate, of whatsoever kind and character and wheresoever situated, which I may own or in which I may have an interest at the time of my death," in trust to Louis Almgren and Frank A. Frye, who were also named as executors. The trustees were directed to pay all of the net income from the trust estate to Mrs. Opp as long as she lived. It was then provided that upon the death of Mrs. Opp the trustees should purchase certain annuities which would provide an income of $150 per month each to the trustor's son and grandson, so long as they live, and that the remainder of the trust estate should go in certain designated ways to the testator's three granddaughters.

On the same day, Mrs. Opp signed before witnesses a waiver which reads as follows:

"Waiver of Wife to Community and Separate Property, Rights, and Election to Take Under Will.

"I, Augusta Opp, wife of Fred Opp, maker of the foregoing Will dated October 6th, 1938, clearly understanding that my said husband by his said Will disposes not only of all of his separate estate but also all of our community property, in case there is such, including the share thereof which I am entitled to take and receive by law upon his death, as well as his own share or interest therein, being fully convinced in my own mind of the reasonableness and equity of said Will and the wisdom of its provisions, and in consideration of the provisions made for me therein, I hereby elect to and do accept, acquiesce in and consent to said Will and all of its provisions, including disposition at the death of my said husband of all of our community property thereunder, and I hereby waive all claims to my share of any community property, and all and any other claims, rights, interests and estates which I may have at the time of the demise of my said husband upon or in all of his separate property and all of our community property, including all of his property exempt from execution and my right to a probate homestead, but not including, however, and expressly excepting therefrom my right to a family allowance out of the estate of my said husband during the probate administration thereof, and I hereby accept such of said provisions of said will as apply to or concern me, except as above expressly excepted."

On October 2, 1939, Mr. Opp executed a codicil to his will, which revoked the $2,500 bequest in favor of the old employee and which otherwise confirmed, ratified and republished the will of October 6, 1938. Mr. Opp told his attorney in this connection that this employee had had a leg amputated and was severely ill and that he wanted to provide for him during his lifetime. It appears that this provision in the original will would have been ineffective, in any event, as this employee predeceased the testator.

On November 7, 1939, Mrs. Opp executed a will in which she left everything that she might own or in which she might have an interest to her husband should he survive her. This will then referred to the trust provision of her husband's will of October 6, 1938, and provided that in the event her husband predeceased her all of the property which she owned or in which she had any interest should be added to and become a part "of the residuary trust estate created for the benefit of my said granddaughters by Article Five of my husband's said will" and that "I purposely make no bequest to my said son Harold B. Opp or to my grandson Fred Opp, Jr., since adequate provision has been made for them in my husband's will."

After the death of Mr. Opp an action, similar in purpose to the present action, was brought in the name of Mrs. Opp as plaintiff. Mrs. Opp's testimony at the trial of that action was read in evidence at the trial of this action. She then testified that she did not start that action; that she had had nothing to do with it; that she did not read the complaint therein and had no recollection of signing it; that "I was not the plaintiff that did that"; that she had never talked with anyone about bringing or filing that action; that "I haven't been suing anybody"; and that she had not retained any lawyers to bring suit against the executors of her husband's will. She further testified that she did not contend that her husband had taken any unfair advantage of her in connection with the disposition of his estate and that it was not her desire to change any of the plans her husband had for the disposition of his estate on his death, and that "Whatever he did was right." That action was dismissed and a few days later the present action was brought. It not only appears that the former action was brought without the knowledge of Mrs. Opp and contrary to her desires, but it also rather clearly appears that the moving spirit in bringing that action was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Opp.

Circumstances which here appear justify the inference that he is the real plaintiff in this action.

Briefly stated, the complaint herein alleged that shortly after their marriage the plaintiff turned over an unknown amount of money to her husband to manage for her; that the bank account maintained from 1920 to 1931, with all securities purchased therefrom, were the property of herself and her husband as tenants in common; that the securities purchased from the joint tenancy account, opened in 1931, remained as joint tenancy property; that in 1937, her husband closed this account and opened one in his own name without her knowledge; and that her husband had received and deposited in these accounts certain income from property she inherited from her brother. The prayer was for an accounting and for judgment for all amounts found due. The answer raised an issue as to all these matters and pleaded the waiver and election to take under the will above referred to; that plaintiff had accepted partial distribution under the will and was estopped to maintain the action; and that the action was barred by laches.

The court found that the money turned over to the husband after the marriage was given to him by the plaintiff as a gift; that during the marriage the plaintiff had no separate property other than that which she inherited from her brother; that Mr. Opp had received $3,809.66 in income therefrom for which he had not accounted; that while Mr. Opp authorized the plaintiff to draw checks on the bank account opened in 1920 that account was never owned by the parties as tenants in common; that a joint tenancy account was opened in 1931 and that seven items of the securities listed in the inventory came from that source; that in 1937, with the knowledge of the plaintiff, Mr. Opp withdrew the balance in this joint account and opened a new account therewith in his own name; and that he was entitled to dispose of all of the personal property listed in the inventory, and that all this property is a part of his estate with the exception of the $3,809.66. The court then found that the waiver above referred to was executed contemporaneously with the execution of the will and was attached thereto; that this waiver was not procured by undue influence or fraud; that the plaintiff received sufficient consideration therefor; that Mr. Opp took no advantage of the plaintiff in that connection and used no adverse pressure of any kind; that he made no misrepresentations and there was no concealment; that the plaintiff was fully advised of the nature and effect of this waiver and executed the same freely and voluntarily; that the same is in all respects valid and binding; that the plaintiff has accepted certain articles through a partial distribution under the will; that by reason of the foregoing the plaintiff has elected to take under the terms of the will and is estopped to assert any other claim to any of the property in question other than the said sum of $3,809.66; and that the plaintiff at no time prior to the death of Fred Opp repudiated or attempted to rescind this waiver or indicated any dissatisfaction with the terms of the will or with the terms and conditions of the waiver. Judgment was entered awarding the plaintiff $3,809.66 and this appeal followed.

Appellant's contention, that the money turned over to Mr. Opp by Mrs. Opp shortly after their marriage constituted a loan, or at least a trust for which Mr. Opp was expected to and bound to account, may be first considered. Mrs. Opp at no time testified that she lent the money to her husband, or that she gave it to him to hold for her or to invest for her, or that she expected him to account for it. At the first trial, when asked whether, after their marriage, she had turned over to her husband what money she had she replied: "Yes, I felt he was a capable business man, and could best take care of my funds so I gave it all to him." And when further asked for what purpose she had turned the money over to her husband she replied that she "felt he could do more with it, than I could or the bank." At the trial of this action Mrs. Opp, who was then between 85 and 90 years of age, was questioned at her home. Because of her condition, the doctor had ordered that only one person ask her questions and, by stipulation, this was left to the judge. Very few questions were asked. She then testified that after her marriage she had turned over the money she had to her husband, that he handled her affairs, that she had supreme confidence in him, and that he was honest and would not take anything belonging to another. She was then twice asked whether, when she gave this money to her husband, she did it as a loan or whether she expected him to return it, and she replied: "I never thought of it again." After a few questions about the property in Kansas City which she inherited from her brother, and which are not material here, the court asked her whether she "intended to establish a trust when you gave your savings to your husband." She replied "No."

Two witnesses testified that in late years Mr. Opp had told them that he used the money he got from his wife in starting a business of his own. Another witness testified that in 1938 Mr. Opp told her "Mrs. Opp had about $7,000 and I took it and invested it and that is where we got our start in the first place. You know great trees from little acorns grow." The amount saved by the plaintiff and turned over by her to her husband was conclusively fixed at $1,565.59. Assuming that a part of the testimony, and possible inferences therefrom, would support a contrary finding the court's finding in this regard is amply supported by the evidence.

[1] There is no merit in the contention that one of the findings, that funds deposited in the bank account opened in 1920 were not owned by these parties as tenants in common, is not supported by the evidence. While Mrs. Opp's name appears on the signature card that card contained no statement that she was a co-owner of the account and it sufficiently appears that her signature was placed there sometime after the account was opened. A notation on the back of the card refers to Mr. Opp only. Moreover, the first three of the bank's ledger sheets in this account, covering a period of more than a year, contained only the name of Mr. Opp except that on the first one Mrs. Opp's name had been written in with a pen or pencil. A number of subsequent sheets contained only the name of Mr. Opp. There is no evidence that Mrs. Opp ever deposited any funds in this account and the evidence justifies the inference that all deposits therein were made either from Mr. Opp's separate property or from their community property. The court's finding is sufficiently supported. Denigan v. Hibernia, etc., Society, 127 Cal. 137, 59 P. 389.

Appellant's main contentions are that certain of these securities were purchased with funds taken from the joint tenancy account and that property so acquired remains joint tenancy property (see In re Estate of Harris, 169 Cal. 725, 147 P. 967; In re Estate of Harris, 9 Cal.2d 649, 72 P. 2d 873); that the waiver signed by Mrs. Opp attached to the will is invalid; and that, in any event, it was not intended to cover Mrs. Opp's joint tenancy interest in some of these securities.

[2] The rule announced in the Harris cases is that personal property acquired with joint tenancy funds retains the character of joint property "unless by some agreement between the parties its character was changed." None of the cases hold that such an agreement must be in writing and it is well settled that an agreement affecting such rights may be oral, and that the intention of the parties with respect thereto may be shown by circumstantial, as well as by direct, evidence and by inferences reasonably to be drawn therefrom. In re Estate of Sehabiague, 47 Cal.App. 2d 793, 119 P.2d 30; Williamson v. Kinney, 52 Cal.App.2d 98, 125 P.2d 920.

[3] Aside from some other evidence we think this will and waiver are sufficient evidence of such an agreement, and of the intention of the parties to change the character of any joint tenancy property here in question so as to permit the same to be disposed of by the will.

No attempt was made in the will to dispose of the Opps' home in San Diego. They knew and recognized, and Mrs. Opp was told before she signed the waiver, that this property, being held in joint tenancy, would go to her outside of the will. After the bequest to the old employee and one giving the household furniture and the automobile to Mrs. Opp, the will gives "the entire rest, residue and remainder of my estate of whatsoever kind or character and wheresoever situated, which I may own or in which I may have any interest at the time of my death," to the trustees on certain trust conditions. The title of the waiver not only includes all the separate property rights of the wife but the body thereof includes the statement that she clearly understands that the will disposes of all of the husband's separate estate, all of their community property and also "including the share thereof which I am entitled to take and receive by law upon his death." There is then the statement that she accepts all of the provisions of the will which apply to or concern her, with the sole exception that she reserves the right to a family allowance.

All, or nearly all, of the property here in question was originally the community property of these parties or would have been had they resided in this state at all times. To them, it was property they had accumulated together. If, as the appellant contends, nearly all of this property was actually the separate property of the wife, if it were so considered by the wife, and if the husband was merely attempting to dispose of the remainder, the trust created by the will would have been entirely insufficient to provide for the purposes sought to be accomplished, and the making of the main provisions of the will would have been an idle act. The language used in the will and the waiver, and the facts surrounding their execution, fully support the inference and justify the conclusion that the parties no longer intended to be governed by any legal relationship arising from any joint tenancy status with respect to this personal property, and that they were dealing with and treating all of the property which they had accumulated during their married life as a whole, aside from the home property, and as being the estate of the husband. It appears that the attorney who prepared the will did not know that any of this personal property had ever been held in joint tenancy, and it clearly appears that neither Mr. nor Mrs. Opp were relying or acting on such a fact.

The facts here are essentially like those in Security-first Nat. Bank v. Stack, 32 Cal.App.2d 586, 90 P.2d 337, 341, and similar principles should be applied. In that case the court said: "The term 'estate' is comprehensive, and as has been hitherto declared, 'One of the most common uses in which the word "estate" is used is to denote and describe in a most general manner the property composing the assets of a deceased,' and, 'During the lifetime of the husband, he is the owner and entitled to the possession of all the community property.' In re Estate of Sayre, 114 Cal.App. 649, 300 P. 833, 834. It is likewise evident as heretofore noted in effect that upon the death of the husband the property purchased with funds from the joint bank account, by agreement of the parties, became and was a part of the 'entire community estate' referred to in the will, and hence 'property disposed of by said will' as provided in the election and waiver. Any other construction would in effect extend legal sanction to the unwarranted repudiation of a valid contract, and would as well defeat the obvious intent of the testator."

In Estate of Stewart, 74 Cal. 98, 15 P. 445, 446, the court said: "Every clause in the will bears a clear and indisputable badge of that intention. He dealt with the property just as he had been accustomed to deal with it through a long, active, and successful business life; just as he had in accumulating and disposing of the property during his lifetime, without consulting his wife, or asking her to join with him in any conveyance. He uses the phrase 'my estate' in the sense that he had been accustomed to use it all of his life."

The trial court has construed the will and waiver as an agreement, and as indicating an intention that these bearer bonds, which were purchased with joint tenancy funds, should constitute a part of the estate covered by the will, and this interpretation is a reasonable one even though it be conceded that another is possible. It sufficiently appears that these parties intended the will and waiver to cover and dispose of all of this personal property which they had accumulated together, and that they referred to the estate of the husband in this sense.

The appellant contends that the fact that Mrs. Opp was told that their home, being held in joint tenancy, was not covered by the will, and the fact that joint tenancy property was not otherwise mentioned, conclusively proves that there was no intention to change the status of any personal property held in joint tenancy. This creates no more than a conflict and the other evidence is sufficient to support the court's interpretation and conclusion. If the parties had any ideas in this connection they may have thought, as was then generally understood, that a joint tenancy in real property could not be changed except by deed. The fact that they did not mention any joint tenancy property other than the home is, under the circumstances, more consistent with the idea that they then had no intention of treating any of the personal property as being in joint tenancy, than with the idea that they did not intend the will to affect this large part of their accumulations. In any event, the evidence, as a whole, supports the inference that these parties intended to deal with all of this personal property as a unit and irrespective of its kind or character.

There is also other evidence supporting the court's conclusions in this regard. Mrs. Opp had signed a similar waiver two years before and the matter was one which she had ample time to consider. A year after this waiver was signed she quite effectively ratified and confirmed this disposition of the property, and disclosed her own intentions in this regard, by the provisions of her own will. Moreover, she testified at the first trial that she had never claimed any interest in these securities which Mr. Opp purchased. She further testified that it was not her desire to change any of the plans her husband had for the disposition of his estate, that she did not contend that her husband had taken any unfair advantage of her in this regard, and that "He couldn't do that. He wouldn't do that." When asked if her husband had ever abused the confidence she had in him, she replied: "Oh no, no, no." After repeatedly denying that she had any part in this litigation she exclaimed: "Oh, I am getting so tired, Mr. McKee, of this drama, I wish it were in Halifax." Even after the first action was brought, when she was presumably advised of her possible rights by counsel supposed to be representing her, she still asserted that she had not been imposed upon, and that she was satisfied with and had no desire to change her husband's disposition of the estate. At no time did she testify that she intended anything to the contrary when she signed the waiver.

It is further contended that this waiver must be held invalid because of various presumptions of undue influence arising from the marriage relation, inadequacy of the consideration, failure to disclose all of the facts and the absence of independent advice. It is argued that this case closely parallels the case of Gaines v. California Trust Co., 48 Cal.App.2d 709, 121 P.2d 28. In that case a judgment sustaining a waiver was reversed because the judge had assumed that the property was separate property when he was required to assume that it was community property, and because there was no evidence to overcome a presumption of undue influence.

In addition to the information given her when she signed the former waiver, it appears that Mrs. Opp was thoroughly informed of the provisions of this will and the waiver before she signed the latter, that her husband took no part in this, and that she apparently understood completely what was being done and expressed herself as in agreement therewith. The attorney who drew the will testified that he considered he was acting as attorney for both Mr. and Mrs. Opp, and that he prepared the will and gave it to Mr. Opp some two weeks in advance; that he went to their home and sat down at a table with Mrs. Opp while his partner and Mr. Opp were looking at art objects; that he went over the will with Mrs. Opp paragraph by paragraph; that when he explained the trust provision providing for an annuity of $150 a month to the son and grandson Mrs. Opp stated she understood it and that she considered it for the best; that he read the waiver word for word, including the title, explaining it as he read it; that he told her that the law was uncertain and that it would be difficult in this case, because of the manner in which the property had been acquired, to determine what part was separate property and what part community property, but that whatever it was the waiver covered the entire estate; that he told her that if she signed the waiver she would receive the income from the entire estate while she lived, and that after her death annuities would be purchased for her son and grandson and the rest of the estate would go to the three granddaughters; that he told her that this "would be a waiver of all her interest in the estate, whether it was separate property or whatever kind of property it was" and that "if she signed this, it covered the entire estate, both Mr. Opp's interest in it and any interest which she might have in it", except for the home and the right to a family allowance; that he then asked her if she understood this and if it met with her approval and she replied in the affirmative; and that Mr. Opp then executed the will and Mrs. Opp then signed the waiver, which was witnessed by the same persons.

[4] Not only does it appear that Mrs. Opp signed this waiver voluntarily and with the intention to accept the provisions of the will as covering all of the property owned by herself and her husband, with the exception of the home and that which she had inherited from her brother, but the testimony of Mrs. Opp herself rather completely dispels any presumption of undue influence which could have existed. Any possible conflict which may be said to arise from isolated portions of the evidence has been resolved by the trial court and the evidence is entirely sufficient to support the findings in this regard.

[5] Some contention is made that the execution of a codicil by Mr. Opp in 1939 released the waiver. In Re Estate of Johnston, 197 Cal. 28, 239 P. 397, which is relied on, a bequest which was the sole consideration for the execution of the waiver was changed by a codicil. A quite different situation here appears. As a matter of fact, the codicil here had no actual effect as the old employee, who had been given $2,500 in the event he survived the testator, died before Mr. Opp's death. Moreover, the waiver declares that the consideration for its execution is "the provisions made for me therein" and it clearly appears that an additional consideration was Mrs. Opp's desire to protect her son and grandson to the extent of assuring them something to live on, and to provide for her granddaughters through the trust. Mr. Opp had already taken care of this old employee in his lifetime, there is no failure of consideration, and no such alteration appears as would upset and release the waiver.

It is unnecessary to discuss a further point relied upon by the respondents. The material findings are not only supported by the evidence but it would be peculiarly inequitable to reverse this judgment under the circumstances which appear to justify the inference that the only advantage taken of this aged and infirm lady is being taken by others and was not taken by her husband.

The judgment is affirmed.

MARKS, J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 517

HYDE et al. v. HAGEN et al.

Civ. 12876.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 17, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 15, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 15, 1945.

1. Master and servant 🔑80(10)

In action for damages for alleged breach of promoters' contract providing that plaintiff should be elected vice president and be employed as saleswoman at $100 per month salary, plaintiff was not entitled to recover $100 per month for period which included date on which she took a leave of absence and date on which she subsequently made demand to be reemployed and was refused, where neither date was proved.

2. Judgment 🔑251(1)
Trial 🔑396(2)

Where complaint for money judgment for alleged breach of promoters' contract did not allege payment of increased salaries voted to certain officers of defendant corporation, and answer did not affirmatively introduce that issue, finding of such issue was not responsive to pleadings or evidence and judgment for plaintiff on such issue could not be sustained. Code Civ. Proc. § 580.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Action by Alex Hyde and another against P. O. Hagen and others to recover damages from alleged breach of contract. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for appellants.

Clarence E. Todd, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

The plaintiffs Alex Hyde and Mae Sewell commenced an action against the defendants P. O. Hagen, Margery Hagen, his wife, Robert P. Hagen, his son, and Hagens, Inc., to recover damages for an alleged breach of contract. The defendants answered and the action was tried before the trial court sitting without a jury. The court made findings in favor of the plaintiffs and from the judgment entered thereon all of the defendants have appealed.

Prior to August 1, 1940, the defendant P. O. Hagen was the owner and operating a store in San Mateo. For a few months prior thereto Mrs. Mae Sewell occupied space in the store and was engaged in selling corsets. Shortly prior to August 1, 1940, Mr. Hagen and Mrs. Sewell commenced conversations regarding the investment by Mrs. Sewell in the business so conducted by the defendant Hagen. In those conversations the matter of opening other stores was mentioned and discussed. Mrs. Sewell advised Mr. Hagen that she had financial backing by the plaintiff Alex Hyde, and at times Mr. Hyde appeared and took part in said conversations. Prior to said conversations Mr. Hagen from time to time wrote down certain memoranda and afterwards the parties met and discussed said memoranda. The first document discussed by them was as follows: "Officers of Corporation would be as follows P. O. Hagen, Pres. Mae Sewell V. Pres. Robert Hagen Secy. & Treas. Suggested salaries P. O.H. 200.00 pr. mo. Mrs. Sewell 150

Robert No salary until needed. These could be changed as profits would permit. The reason I want Robert in, is to train him to be able to take charge of the business in the future and would take him in when we could and when the buying and managing would be too much for one. P.O.H."

Mr. Hyde was dissatisfied with said document, claiming it was incomplete. The parties met later and Mr. Hagen produced a document in words and figures as follows:

"Mr. Hyde Proposed Plan for incorporating—Stock to P. O. Hagen for net worth of present store and good will ($1000) should be about $4500 Mr. Hyde and Mrs. Sewell to subscribe for $4000 to be issued and paid for as needed—Salaries until profits would permit increases P.O.H. 150 Mrs. Sewell 100 Mae Hagen 100. Stock in present store to be taken at cost value (It is practically all new) and fixtures at cost."

At a later meeting Mr. Hagen produced another document which is as follows:

"Suggested plan for expansion Incorporate (100 shares @ 100 ea. $10,000. Issue stock as follows—Take in San Mateo store in which mds. and fixtures would be about .... net.	$3500

Good will	1000
Stock to P. O. Hagen	$4500
Would sell to Mrs. Sewell or others	4000
	$8500

Leaving 15 shares open."

Later the parties formed a corporation having a capital stock of 100 shares of the par value of $100 each. Forty shares were issued to Mr. Hagen, twenty-five shares to Mr. Hyde, and five shares to Mrs. Sewell. That left thirty shares of stock unissued. After the corporation was formed a meeting of the stockholders was held at which Mr. Hagen, Mrs. Hagen, and Mrs. Sewell were elected directors. The directors met and chose Mr. Hagen as president, Mrs. Sewell as vice president, and R. P. Hagen as secretary and treasurer. As so organized the corporation proceeded to conduct business.

Mrs. Sewell stopped her corset business and commenced to work for the corporation immediately after it was formed and continued until the latter part of June, 1941. The exact date is not stated in the record. At that time she stated to Mr. Hagen that she was going to take a leave of absence. Mrs. Sewell acted as a director until the 6th day of January, 1942, when, as alleged in the answer of defendants, "she was deposed and deprived of her said position as director and vice president." On a date not stated in the record she reported for work and Mr. Hagen stated to her that he had all of the help that the business needed and could not employ her at that time.

Prior to Christmas in the year 1941 Mr. Hyde and Mrs. Sewell went to Oregon on a visit. While there and on December 24, 1941, Mr. Hyde wrote to Mr. Hagen giving the latter his post office address as Harbor, Oregon. In that letter he stated: "Believe your stockholders meeting is the second Tuesday in January. I'll be back before that time." On the 27th of December Mr. Hagen wrote Mr. Hyde acknowledging receipt of that letter. Among other things he stated: "Received your letter, hope you are having a good time—yes our meeting is as you state." Later Mr. Hyde left Oregon and returned. On January 2, 1942, Mr. Hagen wrote Mr. Hyde as follows: "Just discovered that our meeting is the first Tuesday in January at 2 p.m." That letter was mailed to Harbor, Oregon. The first Tuesday in January, 1942, was January 6. The letter was not received by Mr. Hyde until after that date. Neither Mr. Hyde nor Mrs. Sewell attended the stockholders meeting.

After the organization of the corporation on the 28th day of August, 1940, a resolution was adopted fixing the salary of P. O. Hagen as president at $150 per month and the salary of Mrs. Sewell as vice president at $100 per month. At a meeting of the board of directors on the 24th day of March, 1942, a motion was duly carried "that the salary of P. O. Hagen, President, be increased to $250 per month beginning April 1st, 1942." Later, at a meeting of the board of directors on the 5th day of January, 1943, a motion was duly carried "to elect Mr. P. O. Hagen to continue as president of the corporation at a salary of $3000 for the year 1943." As a part of the same resolution it was ordered that Mrs. M. B. Hagen be elected vice president for the year 1943 with salary of $1500.

At the same meeting of the stockholders held January 5, 1943, Mrs. C. Todd appeared as a proxy representing Mr. Hyde and Mrs. Sewell as stockholders. At a proper time and in a proper manner she made a motion that Mrs. Sewell be elected a director. In support of her motion she cumulated the shares held by her under her said proxy and offered to vote the cumulated shares in favor of Mrs. Sewell. Her offer was refused and the stockholders purported to elect P. O. Hagen, M. B. Hagen and R. P. Hagen.

The plaintiffs pleaded a cause of action seeking a money judgment. As to the payment or non-payment of said increased salaries to P. O. Hagen and Margery Hagen the pleadings contain no allegations or denials. No evidence thereon was offered by either party. The trial court rendered a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants (1) that Mae Sewell to have judgment against P. O. Hagen and Hagens Inc. in the sum of $100 for each month after June, 1941; (2) that defendant P. O. Hagen repay to Hagens Inc. $100 per month beginning with the month of April, 1942; (3) and that Margery Hagen repay to said Hagens Inc. the sum of $25 per month beginning with the month of January, 1943.

The defendants contend that the findings are not supported by the evidence and that the findings do not support the judgment.

It was the theory of the plaintiffs that the parties entered into a promoters contract agreeing to organize a corporation, distribute the corporate stock among them, elect Mr. Hagen president, elect Mrs. Sewell vice president, and to fix the salary of Mr. Hagen at $150 per month, the salary of Mrs. Sewell at $100 per month, and the salary of Mrs. Hagen at $100 per month. Each and all of those steps were duly taken. No evidence was tendered by either party as to what salaries or the amount thereof was paid to any one of said persons. It was also the theory of the plaintiffs that the contract provided that Mrs. Sewell should be elected vice-president and that she should be employed as a saleswoman and that such contract was a continuing contract.

[1] As recited above Mrs. Sewell left her position in the latter part of June, 1941. The exact date does not appear. Later she returned and asked to be reemployed. The date of that request is not shown in the record. Manifestly she could not recover for the period between the date when she took the leave of absence and the date when she made a demand to be reemployed. Neither date having been established any right to recovery by her cannot be ascertained. Therefore, the judgment in favor of Mrs. Sewell must be reversed.

[2] The judgment in favor of the corporation must also be reversed because the matters on which it was based were not within the issues made by the amended complaint and answer thereto. The amended complaint does not allege the payment of the increased salaries. The answer did not affirmatively introduce that issue. The finding thereon was not responsive to the pleadings or the evidence. Therefore that part of the judgment must also be reversed. Morrow v. Morrow, 40 Cal.App.2d 474, 485, 105 P.2d 129; Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 580; 14 Cal.Jur. 975, Judgments, sec. 62; 2 Cal.Jur. 1031, Appeal & Error, sec. 613; 24 Cal.Jur. 983, Trial, sec. 212.

The judgment appealed from is reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 339

PEOPLE v. KEITH RY. EQUIPMENT CO.

Civ. 7119; Sac. 5670.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 27, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 27, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 24, 1945.

1. Taxation 🔑594

Under provision of Private Car Tax Act that certificate of tax delinquency shall be prima facie evidence of levy of tax, of delinquency, and of Equalization Board's compliance with act, defendant's motion for nonsuit was properly denied in state's action to recover delinquent taxes allegedly due under the act where certificate of delinquency was introduced in evidence. St. 1937, pp. 621–624, §§ 4, 6, 11, 18.

2. Trial 🔑419

Even if trial court erred in denying defendant's motion for nonsuit, such error would not justify reversal of judgment where defendant did not rest on its motion but proceeded to introduce evidence, which cured any defect in plaintiff's case.

3. Taxation 🔑587

A foreign corporation engaged in business of furnishing private railroad cars to shippers for transportation of property, which failed to file the report with State Board of Equalization required by Private Car Tax Act, failed to petition for reassessment, and failed to exhaust or even take advantage of administrative remedy, could not secure judicial relief and have court, in state's action to recover taxes allegedly due from such corporation, review and condemn method by which board arrived at its conclusion in assessing tax. St.1937, pp. 621–623, §§ 4, 6, 11.

4. Officers 🔑103

One complaining of administrative action, before seeking judicial relief, must exhaust his remedies before the administrative body of whose action he complains.

5. Taxation 🔑587

Though, in California, findings of fact of purely administrative agencies may be reviewed by courts in proper proceedings, litigants may not, by refusing or neglecting to submit issues of fact to such agencies, by-pass them, and call upon courts, in a suit by state to recover delinquent taxes, to determine matters properly determinable originally by such agencies.

6. Evidence 🔑75

Where corporation, engaged in furnishing private railroad cars to shippers, failed to produce its own records to show exact number of its cars used in California during taxable years involved in state's action to recover taxes allegedly due under the Private Car Tax Act, though it could have done so, such failure warranted trial court's conclusion that if produced such records would not have been favorable to such corporation's claim that tax assessed was excessive. St.1937, pp. 621–623, §§ 4, 6, 11.

7. Constitutional law 🔑229(1)
Taxation 🔑37

That apportionment of taxes under Private Car Tax Act on basis of average number of private cars owned in state and furnished to shippers for transportation of property by corporation engaged in such business may not result in mathematical exactitude is not a constitutional defect, but rough approximation rather than precision is as practical matter the norm in such tax system. St.1937, p. 621 et seq., § 1 et seq.; Const. Cal. art. 11, § 12; art. 13, §§ 10, 14; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 6, § 2; Amend. 14.

8. Taxation 🔑593(3)

In action to recover taxes, testimony that defendant corporation furnished private cars to shippers, that shipper paid railroads the regular freight charges, that railroads paid defendant 1½ cents for each mile the car traveled, and that generally no charge was made by corporation directly to shipper, justified conclusion that corporation's cars were not leased to railroads and hence were not excluded from operation of Private Car Tax Act. St.1937, p. 621 et seq., § 1 et seq.

9. Taxation 🔑166

The constitutional provision imposing tax on actual valuation of property of car loaning companies applied to foreign corporation engaged in business of furnishing its privately owned railroad cars to shippers, as against contention that such constitutional provision as amended in 1933 applied only to public service corporations. Const. art. 13, § 14, as amended in 1933.

10. Constitutional law 🔑26

The Constitution is not a grant of power, but rather a limitation on powers of Legislature, which limitation must be strictly construed, and unless there is some constitutional provision prohibiting a legislative enactment it cannot be said that Legislature was without power to enact it.

11. Taxation 🔑37, 38, 40(3), 253

The Private Car Tax Act is not violative of constitutional provision that all property shall be assessed in county, city, town or township, or district in which it is situated, or constitutional provision that Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes on inhabitants of counties, cities, or towns for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, in view of constitutional provision empowering Legislature to tax all forms of tangible personal property and to classify all kinds of personal property for taxation in proportion to value different from any other property subject to taxation. St.1937, p. 621 et seq., § 1 et seq.; p. 623 § 13; Const. art. 11, 12; art. 13, §§ 10, 14.

12. Taxation 🔑40(7)

The Constitution does not require complete uniformity of taxation, since it exempts some property from taxation altogether, provides that solvent credits shall be taxed at a lower rate than that imposed on other classes of property, and provides that property on the unsecured rolls shall be taxed at rate for previous year and that on the secured rolls at current rate. Const. art. 13, §§ 1, 9a.

13. Taxation ⟹42(1)

Taxpayers may be treated differently if they are of different classes, and the law sufficiently meets constitutional requirement of uniformity of taxation if it acts uniformly upon the whole of any single class of individuals or objects and the classification is founded on some natural, intrinsic, or constitutional distinction. Const. art. 13, §§ 1, 9a.

14. Constitutional law ⟹46(2)

In action by State to recover taxes claimed to be due from taxpayer under Private Car Tax Act, argument of corporate taxpayer, that tax imposed on freight cars owned by railroads was lower than tax imposed on taxpayer's freight cars which it furnished shippers, and that such tax therefore violated Constitution, could not be sustained as assuming something not in evidence for failure to show that rates applied to taxpayer exceeded rates applied to similar property of railroads or that counties and school districts containing no railroads have very high rates of taxation. St.1937, p. 623, § 13.

15. Taxation ⟹40(1)

Exact equality is not possible under any system of taxation notwithstanding constitutional requirement of equality and uniformity.

16. Constitutional law ⟹229(1)
Taxation ⟹42(1)

The Private Car Tax Act is not violative of state or federal constitutional mandate regarding equality and uniformity of taxation, on theory that it attempts to classify cars belonging to private owners in a separate class from cars of same kind owned by railroads and because cars belonging to railroads are taxed only in taxing districts in which they are used and at rates applicable in such taxing districts, whereas cars belonging to private owners are taxed for state purposes at average rate of taxation computed as provided therein, and that such differentiation is unreasonable and arbitrary, in absence of proof that this results in a higher tax rate on privately owned cars. St.1937, pp. 621–623, §§ 1 et seq., 2(a), 13; Const.Cal. art. 11, § 12; art. 13, §§ 10, 14; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 1; art. 6, § 2; Amend. 14.

17. Taxation ⟹42(1)

The inequality which necessarily results to some degree in every selection of persons for regulation does not place classification of such persons for taxation within constitutional prohibition against inequality or lack of uniformity in taxation, but the prohibited inequality or lack of uniformity must be arbitrary. Const. Cal. art. 13, § 1; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 1.

18. Constitutional law ⟹48

When legislative classification is questioned, if any state of facts can reasonably be conceived that would sustain it, such facts are presumed to exist and burden of showing arbitrary action rests on one who assails the classification. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

19. Constitutional law ⟹70(1)

The question of propriety of classification in statute is generally one for legislative power, determined in light of its knowledge of all the circumstances and requirements, and Legislature's discretion will not be overthrown unless palpably arbitrary. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

20. Constitutional law ⟹48

In determining reasonableness of classification in statute, it will be presumed that Legislature inquired whether there were evils to be remedied and that classification made was based on result of such inquiry. U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

21. Taxation ⟹42(1)

Property may be classified for purposes of taxation as long as classification is reasonable.

22. Constitutional law ⟹48

The Private Car Tax Act is presumed to be constitutional. St.1937, p. 621, § 2(a).

23. Constitutional law ⟹48

All presumptions and intendments are in favor of constitutionality of a statute, and all doubts are to be resolved in favor of validity of statute, and before a statute may be declared unconstitutional any such conflict with Constitution must be clear, positive, and unquestionable.

24. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)

In absence of a record of consideration which moved Legislature to enact laws, court cannot assume that action of Legislature was capricious or that, with its informed acquaintance with local conditions to which the legislation was to be applied, Legislature was not aware of facts affording reasonable basis for its action.

25. Trial 🔑45(1)

In state's action to recover taxes allegedly due under Private Car Tax Act, defendant's purported offer of proof that, if records of State Board of Equalization demanded by subpoena duces tecum had been produced, defendant would have been able to show thereby the imposition on defendant's property of a tax rate higher than that imposed on property of identical nature owned by others, was not an "offer of proof", but mere conclusion which called for no ruling by court. St.1937, p. 621, §§ 1 et seq., 2(a).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Offer of Proof".

26. Witnesses 🔑16

Demands for production of records in subpoenas duces tecum must be reasonable and must be direct and specific in their terms and not couched in general terms, and the relevancy and materiality of documents requested must be made to appear.

27. Witnesses 🔑16

In state's action to recover taxes claimed to be due under Private Car Tax Act, defendant's request that state be served with subpoena duces tecum requiring production of records of State Board of Equalization and of state showing all tax rates of counties, cities, and school districts and all general and special taxes used in computing the private car tax rate for certain years, and books and records of board and of state showing tax rate fixed for railroads operating freight cars of same kind, etc., was too broad and sought information which defendant could have obtained from railroads. St.1937, p. 621 et seq., § 1 et seq.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California against Keith Railway Equipment Company to recover taxes claimed to be due from defendant for the years 1937 and 1938 under the Private Car Tax Act. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Leon S. Hirsh, of Chicago, Ill., and Jerome L. Schiller and John D. Costello, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and A. A. Kragen & John L. Nourse, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

This action was brought by the state to recover taxes claimed to be due from defendant for the years 1937 and 1938, under the Private Car Tax Act, Stats.1937, p. 621. The amended complaint alleged that defendant, an Illinois corporation, during 1937 and 1938 owned private cars which were furnished to shippers for the transportation of property; that defendant did not file a report with the State Board of Equalization as required by Section 4 of aforesaid act; that the Board, from information in its possession, estimated that defendant, during 1937, had habitually within this state an average of 56 private cars which were operated during that year upon railroads in California; that the Board assessed said cars at $29,600 and, pursuant to Section 6 of the Act, added a penalty of 10%; that defendant was served with written notice of the action of the Board, but that defendant failed to petition for a reassessment pursuant to Section 11 of the Act; that thereafter the Board fixed a tax rate of $3.60 for $100 of assessed valuation, and duly levied a tax of $1,172.60 upon defendant's cars; that notice of this action was mailed to defendant with a demand for payment, but that defendant failed to pay same, whereupon an additional penalty was added. The prayer was for judgment for $1,289.38 with interest.

Defendant answered and admitted that during 1937 and 1938 it had tank and refrigerator cars operating upon railroads in California, which were not carrying defendant's own property, but denied that it offered to furnish same to anyone. It admitted that the Board had assessed it, as alleged in the complaint, but denied that the assessment was based upon information which was pertinent, and alleged that the Board's determination of the number of cars and their value was "wholly arbitrary, grossly unreasonable, and fraudulently excessive." It denied that it habitually had "any where near" 56 cars in California during 1937-1938 or that the value of its cars would "even approximate $29,600.00." As a special defense it alleged that the Private Car Tax Act is repugnant to the 14th Amendment and Article VI, Section 2, of the United States Constitution and violates Article XI, Section 12, Article, XIII, Sections 10 and 14, of the Constitution of California. Also it alleged that it owns private cars which it rents to common carrier railroads at a specified rate of compensation fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that it is not engaged in the transportation of commodities for hire, or otherwise. It further alleged that the several common carrier railroad companies operating in California and certain "Equipment companies" own and operate freight cars of the same kind and that there is no difference in the nature, kind, basic classification and utilization between their cars and defendant's; that the cars of the common carrier railroads and the equipment companies are assessed in a different manner, and that the situs of same for taxation is fixed in the taxing districts within which their cars are actually utilized, and only in proportion to the extent of such utilization and track mileage of the railroad therein, and that tax rates applied thereto are solely for local purposes. It further alleged that the Board's action as to defendant results in a tax burden in excess of that placed upon real property by the state; that many taxing divisions have no railroads and that in those where railroad equipment is utilized there is great variance in the amount of such utilization; also that it comes within certain exemptions provided in the act, that the act discriminates against defendant, denies to it the equal protection of the laws, and deprives it of its property without due process.

The trial court found the facts to be substantially as alleged by plaintiff; that defendant's cars were furnished to shippers for the transportation of various commodities upon railroads in California, and elsewhere; that the shippers did not pay any sum directly to defendant for the use of the cars but paid the regular freight charges to the railroad companies which paid defendant 1½¢ per mile; that defendant did not engage in transportation for hire or otherwise, and did not hold itself out to the public as being ready to furnish cars to whomever might require them without reserving the right to refuse to those considered undesirable; that there was no mileage or through-line contract arrangement between defendant and any railroad company operating in California, nor were defendant's private cars leased to any such railroad company. There were findings as to the action taken by the Board as alleged by plaintiff, and the failure of defendant to report to the Board, to petition for reassessment, or to pay the tax. Further it was found that railroad companies operating within this state own cars of approximately the same character as those owned by defendant, that certain railroads lease similar private cars from owners other than defendant, and that certain of such railroads operate similar cars owned by railroad companies not operating in this state and compensate the owners thereof either upon a per diem or upon a mileage basis in amount identical with that paid to defendant. Judgment for plaintiff followed.

Defendant has appealed from said judgment, contending that the Private Car Tax Act is unconstitutional; that it does not apply to the cars of defendant; that it imposes a different and higher tax upon cars owned by defendant than is applied to identical cars owned by others; that the method of computing taxes under the act used by the Board violates constitutional mandates in that it is without relation to benefits conferred upon the property, and without consideration of the situs and use of the cars; that the method of computing the number of defendant's cars in California was not reasonably suited to achieve a correct result; that plaintiff did not make a prima facie case at the trial, because it merely introduced the certificate of delinquency as provided by section 18 of the act, and that a motion for a nonsuit made by defendant should have been granted; and, finally, that the trial court erred in sustaining plaintiff in its refusal to produce the records of the Board of Equalization upon demand by defendant.

[1, 2] Appellant's contention that its motion for a nonsuit should have been granted will be disposed of first. Respondent relies upon People v. Mahoney, 13 Cal. 2d 729, 91 P.2d 1029, wherein a certificate of sales tax delinquency was relied upon as making a prima facie case. The provisions of section 18 of the Private Car Tax Act are the same as those contained in section 30 of the Retail Sales Tax Act, St. 1935, p. 1265, and the decision in the Mahoney case is controlling here. But even if the trial court had erred in denying the motion for a nonsuit, such error could not be relied upon to justify a reversal of the judgment, since defendant did not rest upon its motion, but proceeded to introduce evidence which cured any defects in the state's case. Peters v. Southern Pacific Co., 160 Cal. 48, 52, 116 P. 400; Parra v. Cleaver, 110 Cal.App. 168, 170, 294 P. 6; Huston v. Schohr, 63 Cal.App.2d 267, 272, 146 P.2d 730.

[3] Regarding appellant's complaint of the method used by the Board in determining the average number of defendant's cars in the state during the taxing period, we are of the opinion that appellant is not entitled to have that method questioned on this appeal. Under the terms of the act, section 4, appellant was required to report to the Board setting forth specifically information to enable it to make the assessment prescribed by the act, and where no report is made the Board is required to make an estimate "based upon any information available to it * * * of the matters required to enable the board to complete the assessment required." Section 6. Provision is then made for notice to the owner of the property assessed, who is thus given an opportunity to protest the correctness of the estimate. After the assessment is made it is open to inspection between the first and third Mondays in August of each year, during which time the owner of the property assessed may be heard by the Board upon a petition for reassessment. Also it is provided that after the tax is levied the Board shall mail a notice to each person against whom it is levied. Appellant made no report to the Board, and, though forms for returns and the notices provided for as above set forth were mailed to it, it did not petition the Board for a reassessment. Having failed to avail itself of the remedy provided by the act and failed to exhaust or even to take advantage of its administrative remedy, it cannot secure judicial relief and seek to have the court, in an action such as this is review and condemn the method by which the Board arrived at its conclusions, and secure a determination by a court of matters properly determinable by the Board.

[4, 5] One complaining of administrative action must, before seeking judicial relief, exhaust his remedies before the administrative body of whose action he complains. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715. This rule involves a policy of procedure which favors a preliminary sifting process by the established administrative agency which is authorized to take evidence and determine facts; and while in this state it is held that the findings of fact of purely administrative agencies may be reviewed by the courts in proper proceedings, nevertheless litigants may not, by refusing or neglecting to submit issues of fact to such agencies, by-pass them, and call upon the courts to determine in a suit such as this, matters properly determinable originally by such agencies. Universal Consol. Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 361, 362, 153 P.2d 746; Dawson v. County of Los Angeles, 15 Cal.2d 77, 81, 98 P.2d 495; Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 165, 121 P. 384, 9 A.L.R. 1277; Miller & Lux, Inc., v. Richardson, 182 Cal. 115, 187 P. 411; City of Los Angeles v. Glassell, 4 Cal.App. 43, 48, 87 P. 241; Gorham Mfg. Co. v. State Tax Comm., 266 U.S. 265, 45 S.Ct. 80, 69 L.Ed. 279, 282; First Nat. Bank v. Board of County Com'rs, 264 U.S. 450, 44 S.Ct. 385, 68 L.Ed. 784; Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp., 303 U.S. 41, 58 S.Ct. 459, 82 L.Ed. 638.

In Gorham Mfg. Co. v. State Tax Comm. and in First Nat. Bank v. Board of County Com'rs, above cited, where appellants contended that taxes had been assessed and collected in contravention of the due process and equal protection clauses of the 14th Amendment, it appeared that they had not availed themselves of the provisions of state laws providing for applications for relief to administrative bodies, and, therefore, had not exhausted the administrative remedies available to them. The Supreme Court refused to consider whether or not the tax was vulnerable to the challenge in respect to its validity on any of the grounds set forth. Myers v. Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corp. and the Gorham Mfg. Co. case are both cited in the Abelleira case in support of the decision that the rule of exhaustion of administrative remedies is jurisdictional.

[6, 7] But whether or not appellant was entitled to attack at the trial the method used by the Board in determining the number of cars it had in the state during the taxing period, appellant failed to show the actual number of such cars, or their actual value, or to produce any testimony to show that the method used by the Board resulted in an incorrect conclusion. It produced none of its records. Its witness Clifford stated that he "would estimate" that they had twenty or thirty cars at the most in California in the period toward the end of 1937, "waiting, loading"; that it would be very difficult to determine the average number of cars in the state in 1937; that he did not have his records with him, but that he would say he had 25 to 30 cars "throughout the state at all times during the month at or in loading position." It is apparent that appellant, had it desired to do so, could have produced its own records to show the exact number of its cars; and its failure to do so warranted a conclusion by the trial court that if produced they would not have been favorable to appellant's contentions. It was said in Illinois Central R. Co. v. Minnesota, 309 U.S. 157, 161, 60 S.Ct. 419, 422, 84 L.Ed. 670, 674: "That the apportionment may not result in mathematical exactitude is certainly not a constitutional defect. Rough approximation rather than precision is, as a practical matter, the norm in any such tax system."

[8] Appellant also contends that the Private Car Tax Act does not apply to it because its cars are leased to railroads, and under the terms of the act cars leased to any railroad operating in the state are excluded. The answer to this is that the trial court found to the contrary. Appellant produced no evidence that any lease arrangements were made by it with any railroad operating in the state. The only testimony produced by defendant in this connection was given by John J. Clifford, who stated that he was Pacific Coast representative of defendant, and also acted as a broker for other private car owners. He testified as to the manner in which business for defendant was secured by him, stating that he would be contacted by shippers of such products as were transported in cars such as were owned by the private car companies, and that he then furnished such cars as the shippers required; that the cars were sent to the shippers who loaded them, and they were then hauled by the railroad company over whose lines they were routed by the shipper; that the shipper paid to the railroad companies the regular freight charges on the products shipped, and the latter paid defendant 1½¢ per mile for each mile the car moved; that "generally speaking" no charge was made by the Keith Company directly to the shipper. There was no testimony regarding any contract between any railroad company and appellant, and it is clear from Clifford's testimony that the railroad companies did not control appellant's cars as a lessee would have a right to do. He (Clifford) furnished the cars to shippers, and the shippers routed them as they desired; appellant and not the railroad companies determined whether its cars were to be used for certain purposes, and it refused to furnish them if a haul was not remunerative; they did not permit their cars to go into Mexico because Mexican lines were slow payers, etc. This testimony fully justified the conclusion of the trial court that appellant's cars were not leased to railroads.

[9] Appellant next argues that it is not within the provisions of Article XIII, Section 14, of the Constitution because that section is applicable only to public service companies, and that the trial court found that it is not a common carrier. It relies upon Cudahy Packing Co. v. Johnson, 12 Cal.2d 583, 86 P.2d 348, which held that Section 14 of Article XIII, as enacted in 1910, was not intended to and did not apply to property of a private corporation such as plaintiff in that action which owned certain livestock, refrigerator and tank cars used exclusively for the transportation of its own products. The conclusion of the court in that case, however, was based upon the history of the amendment, and the fact, appearing from the report of the commission appointed by the Governor which drafted and sponsored it, that it was intended to apply only to public service corporations which should be assessed for state purposes upon the basis of their gross receipts. The decision was also influenced by the fact that the state had not, for nineteen years, assessed the plaintiff company for state purposes, during which period defendant had paid an ad valorem tax on its tangible property within the state.

However Article XIII, Section 14, was amended in 1933, at which time its provisions were substantially changed, a tax based upon the actual valuation of the property instead of one based upon gross receipts being provided for therein. It is not shown here, as it was shown in the Cudahy Packing Company case, that the sponsors of the amendment had under consideration only public service corporations, and we find nothing in the measure itself so limiting it.

[10-16] Appellant next attacks the validity of the Private Car Tax Act on the ground that it violates constitutional mandates both state and federal regarding equality and uniformity of taxation. Const. Cal. art. 13, § 1; Const. U.S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 1. It argues that the act attempts to classify cars belonging to private owners in a separate class from cars of the same kind owned by the railroads, and that this results in lack of uniformity; that the cars belonging to the railroad companies are taxed only in the taxing district in which they are used, and at the rates applicable in such taxing districts, while cars belonging to private owners are taxed for state purposes at the average rate of taxation computed as provided by section 13 of the act; that such a differentiation is unreasonable and arbitrary; and it asserts, though it did not prove, that this results in a higher tax rate on its cars.

We find nothing in the provisions of the Constitution of this state which prohibits the enactment of such a statute as the Private Car Tax Act. As pointed out by the Supreme Court in Collins v. Riley, 24 Cal. 2d 912, 152 P.2d 169, and restated in Delaney v. Lowery, 25 Cal.2d 561, 568, 154 P. 2d 674, the Constitution is not a grant of power, but rather a limitation or restriction upon the powers of the Legislature, which restrictions or limitations must be strictly construed against the limitation; and unless there is some constitutional provision that prohibits a legislative enactment, it cannot be said that the legislature was without power to enact it. Appellant purports to find such prohibitions in Section 12 of Article XI and Section 10 of Article XIII; but in citing these sections appellant ignores the fact that section 10 of Article XIII contains the words "except as otherwise in this Constitution provided," and that Section 12 of Article XI was amended in 1933 by the addition of the words "Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution." These sections therefore cannot be said to conflict with Section 14 of Article XIII, which provides that "The Legislature shall have the power to provide for the assessment, levy and collection of taxes upon all forms of tangible personal property" and "may classify any and all kinds of personal property for the purposes of assessment and taxation in a manner and at a rate or rates in proportion to value different from any other property in this State subject to taxation * * *."

Obviously our Constitution does not require complete uniformity of taxation, since it exempts some property from taxation altogether, provides that solvent credits shall be taxed at a lower rate than that imposed on other classes of property, and provides that property on the unsecured rolls shall be taxed at the rate for the previous year and that on the secured rolls at the current rate. Art. XIII, sec. 9a. As stated in Abrams v. San Francisco, 48 Cal.App.2d 1, 7, 119 P.2d 197, 200: "But taxpayers may be treated differently if they are of different classes and a law sufficiently meets the constitutional requirement if its acts uniformly upon the whole of any single class of individuals or objects, and the classification is founded upon some natural, intrinsic or constitutional distinction. Fullerton Oil Co. v. Johnson, 2 Cal.2d 162, 39 P.2d 796; In re Weisberg, 215 Cal. 624, 12 P.2d 446; Heron v. Riley, 209 Cal. 507, 289 P. 160; People v. England, 140 Cal.App. 310, 35 P.2d 565."

Appellant's argument that the tax imposed on freight cars owned by railroads is lower than the tax imposed upon its freight cars and that the act therefore violates constitutional mandates requiring equality and uniformity of taxation, is that the act (sec. 13) subjects private cars to "the average rate of taxation * * * computed by adding the county, city, school district or other general or special taxes, not including special assessments, and dividing the amount so obtained by the total assessed valuation" in the state as shown by the county tax rolls for the same year, etc., and that inasmuch as this disregards the existence of railroad mileage in some taxing districts, and because with it go the rates levied in districts having the highest tax rates though such high rate taxing subdivisions have but a small proportion of the railroad and track mileage and hence would have but a small proportion of the time that such transient rolling stock was present in the state, and because with this average go the "very high rates of taxation in the outlying counties and school districts which contain no railroads whatsoever," the effect is to subject appellant's property to a higher rate than that imposed upon rolling stock of the railroad companies, and thus to discriminate against it.

Appellant's argument, however, assumes something not in evidence, for appellant failed to show that the rates applied to it exceed the rates applied to similar property of the railroads, or that the rates of taxation in counties and school districts which contain no railroads have very high rates of taxation. But even if it were so there would not necessarily be a violation of constitutional mandates. Exact equality is not possible under any system of taxation. Adams Express Co. v. Ohio State Auditor, 165 U.S. 194, 17 S.Ct. 305, 41 L.Ed. 683.

In Michigan Central Railroad Co. v. Powers, 201 U.S. 245, 26 S.Ct. 459, 50 L.Ed. 744, a statute of Michigan provided that the board of tax commissioners should assess the railroad and certain other corporate property in the state, and that the rate applicable to such property should be the rate which such board should ascertain and determine was the average rate levied upon other property upon which ad valorem taxes were assessed for state, county, township, school and municipal purposes. One of the grounds for urging that this statute violated constitutional prohibitions, both state and federal, was that it resulted in requiring the railroad company to pay at a rate determined in part by rates in portions of the state where it had no property and whose benefits it did not enjoy. But the court said that such considerations appealed to the discretion of the legislature and did not make against its power; that unless there was some provision in the State Constitution compelling other action the state might treat its entire territory as comprising a single taxing district, and deal with all property as within the district and subject to taxation accordingly; that sometimes a portion of the taxes thus collected is distributed pro rata to the counties along the lines of the roads, but that the power of the state to apply the taxes from railroad property to state purposes only could not be doubted and is often exercised. It added that, so far as the restraints of the Federal Constitution are concerned, it is within the power of a state to separate a particular class of property, subject it to assessment and taxation in a mode and at a rate different from that imposed upon other property, and apply the proceeds to state rather than to local purposes. It quoted from Kentucky Railroad Tax Cases, (Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Kentucky) 115 U.S. 321, 327, 6 S.Ct. 57, 29 L.Ed. 414, 419, to the effect that:

"But there is nothing in the Constitution of Kentucky that requires taxes to be levied by a uniform method upon all descriptions of property. The whole matter is left to the discretion of the legislative power, and there is nothing to forbid the classification of property for purposes of taxation and the valuation of different classes by different methods. The rule of equality, in respect to the subject, only requires the same means and methods to be applied impartially to all the constituents of each class, so that the law shall operate equally and uniformly upon all persons in similar circumstances." [201 U.S. 245, 26 S.Ct. 465.]

In General American Tank Car Corp. v. Day, 270 U.S. 367, 46 S.Ct. 234, 70 L.Ed. 635, plaintiff sued to enjoin the collection of a tax assessed by the State of Louisiana under a statute imposing a tax of 5½ mills on the dollar on all property within the state, but which imposed an additional tax of 25 mills on the dollar of the assessed value of rolling stock of nonresident corporations operated over any railroad in the state. This additional tax was contested on the ground that it violated the provision of the Louisiana Constitution that all taxes should be uniform, that it violated the Federal Constitution by imposing a burden on interstate commerce, and that it denied equal protection of the laws and discriminated against nonresidents. The Louisiana Constitution provided that nonresident owners of rolling stock should be taxed for state purposes only, and at a rate not to exceed 40 mills on the dollar of assessed value. The court said that the Louisiana state courts had upheld the constitutionality of the 25 mill tax (Union Tank Car Co. v. Day, 156 La. 1071, 101 So. 581), and that disposed of the objection to the tax under the state constitution. Regarding the contention that the United States Constitution was violated it said that since all local taxes throughout the state averaged approximately 25 mills and the tax imposed on appellant was substantially the equivalent of the local tax in lieu of which it was assessed, there was no unjust discrimination against nonresidents—that such a classification was not necessarily discriminatory; that "Where the taxing statute, which is in lieu of a local tax assessed on residents, discloses no purpose to discriminate against nonresident taxpayers, and in substance does not do so, it is not invalid merely because equality in its operation as compared with local taxation has not been attained with mathematical exactness. In determining whether there is a denial of equal protection of the laws by such taxation, we must look to the fairness and reasonableness of its purposes and practical operation, rather than to minute differences between its application in practice and the application of the taxing statute or statutes to which it is complementary. Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Connecticut, supra [185 U.S. 364, 22 S.Ct. 673, 46 L.Ed. 949]; and see [In re] State R. Tax Cases, 92 U.S. 575, 612, 23 L.Ed. 663 [673]; Shaffer v. Carter, 252 U.S. 37, 56, 40 S.Ct. 221, 64 L.Ed. 445, [458]." [270 U.S. 367, 46 S.Ct. 235]

It was further argued by appellant in that case that the finding of the district court that the local tax throughout the state would average about 25 mills was erroneous; that it would average only about 21 mills. But the court said that in the absence of a purpose to discriminate, disclosed by the legislation itself, it would not say that a 4 mill variation would be unconstitutional. Also it said that appellant's contention was not borne out by the record, which showed that in some parishes the total of all state and local taxes exceeded 30¼ mills, etc.; and it concluded by saying that appellant had failed to show that the tax was discriminatory either in principle or in its practical operation, and had laid no foundation for assailing its constitutionality.

From Union Tank Car Co. v. Day, supra, it appears that appellant was taxed the 5¼ mills plus the 25 mills. It sought to enjoin only the 25 mills, urging that no such tax was levied upon any real or personal property, or upon rolling stock or cars owned by residents, and that the tax was discriminatory and arbitrary. The court there said that under the state constitution all property in the state was subject to the 5¼ mills tax; also that it was subject to the payment of local, municipal and district taxes by other provisions of the organic law; that the only difference in the manner of assessment and collection of local taxes levied on the rolling stock of nonresidents, and that levied on rolling stock owned in the state, was that the one was collected by and for the state only, in the form of an additional lieu tax, and the latter was collected by local tax collectors, and apportioned to the locality in which the owners were domiciled; that the constitution and statutes had for their purpose the fixing of a general average rate of local taxation as to the rolling stock of nonresidents so as to make such rate conform, as nearly as practicable, to the local tax rate paid by residents and thereby approximate a general equality of the burden that should fall upon the two classes of property, and that plaintiff had failed to prove that the additional tax was in excess of what would be legitimate as a general average local tax. Also it said that: "The validity of legislation of this character depends, not upon the ability of courts to indicate some other form of taxation which might result in greater equality of burden, but upon judicial determination whether the necessary operation of such legislation results in an unjust discrimination." [156 La. 1071, 101 So. 584] And as to appellant's contention that the uniformity of taxation provision of the Lousiana Constitution was violated, the court said that it would be difficult to conceive a more uniform state tax in lieu of local taxes than that which is based upon the general average of local taxes, widely varying in rates, and which is imposed upon all tank cars owned by nonresident owners throughout all local districts in which such cars are operated; that (citing 26 R.C.L. 93, 167) it is not required that the tax on nonresidents and residents with respect to the same property be identical, and if substantial equality is provided it can make no difference that in particular cases a nonresident is taxed higher than a resident with respect to the same property. It concluded that plaintiff was taxed in "substantial uniformity" with other property holders in the state and that was all the law required.

Also in Nashville, C. & St. L. Railway v. Browning, 310 U.S. 362, 368, 60 S.Ct. 968, 972, 84 L.Ed. 1254, under a Tennessee statute the property of public service corporations was assessed by a state commission; all other property by local officials; and it was contended that as the property assessed by the commission was assessed at its full value, and that assessed by county officials at less than its full value, there was an unlawful discrimination which violated the 14th Amendment. The court said that petitioner's property was not shown to have been assessed differently from other properties in the same class; that none of the cases relied upon by petitioner denied power to the state to apply different yardsticks to different classes of property; "That the states may classify property for taxation; may set up different modes of assessment, valuation and collection; may tax some kinds of property at higher rates than others; and in making all these differentiations may treat railroads and other utilities with that separateness which their distinctive characteristics and functions in society make appropriate—these are among the common-places of taxation and of constitutional law."

The wide discretion that may be exercised by legislative bodies in classifying property for taxation without overstepping constitutional limitations, is also pointed out in New York Rapid Transit Corp. v. City of New York, 303 U.S. 573, 58 S.Ct. 721, 82 L.Ed. 1024, and in Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., 301 U.S. 495, 509, 510, 57 S.Ct. 868, 81 L.Ed. 1245, 1253, 109 A.L.R. 1327.

Appellant relies heavily upon the decision of the Supreme Court of South Dakota in Ewert v. Taylor, 38 S.D. 124, 160 N.W. 797, 802. But in that state the constitution provided that "all taxes shall be uniform on all property." In Puget Sound Power & Light Co. v. King County, 264 U.S. 22, 27, 44 S.Ct. 261, 263, 68 L.Ed. 541, the court, commenting on Ewert v. Taylor and similar cases which were there relied upon by appellant, said that they "involved the application of somewhat stringent provisions of state Constitutions as to equality of taxation on all kinds of property which left but little room for classification"; that "Such restrictions have much embarrassed state Legislatures because actual equality of taxation is unattainable."

In the Puget Sound P. & L. case plaintiff was a street railroad company. Under a statute of the State of Washington, the properties of street railroads were assessed and taxed as personal property, though this was not done as to the property of other railroads. This, it was contended, violated the requirements of uniformity of both the State and the Federal Constitutions. The Supreme Court of the State in Puget Sound Power & Light Co. v. City of Seattle, 117 Wash. 351, 201 P. 449, 453, 207 P. 689, said regarding the statute:

"There is no vested right, either in a corporation or natural person, to have property assessed in any particular way. Such matters rest entirely within the control and discretion of the Legislature. Heilig v. [City Council of] Puyallup, 7 Wash. 29, 34 P. 164. It is a question of uniformity and equality in the classes. 'The classification of property for assessment, where uniformity and equality exist in the classes, is a matter of legislative policy.' Ridpath v. Spokane County, 23 Wash. 436, 63 P. 261. That there is ample reason for the classification made by the statute in this case is easily perceived. Street railways have no fee in the streets, their properties are largely personalty, while the commercial steam railways own their rights of way, and own extensive freight yards, termini and station grounds."

And when the matter came before the United States Supreme Court, that court said regarding the contention of plaintiff that the statute violated the 14th Amendment: "We do not think, considering the very wide discretion a Legislature has in such a case, that it was arbitrary to tax the whole street railway unit as personalty"; and it held that there was no violation of the 14th Amendment.

[17, 18] But appellant argues that the power of the legislature to classify property for taxation is exceeded by the Act under review; that it is "invidious and without rational foundation." But in People v. Western Fruit Growers, 22 Cal.2d 494, at pages 506, 507, 140 P.2d 13, at page 20, the court said:

"Problems of classification under the California constitution are thus similar to those presented by the federal equal protection of the laws clause of the 14th Amendment. Under either provision, the mere production of inequality which necessarily results to some degree in every selection of persons for regulation does not place the classification within the constitutional prohibition. The discrimination or inequality produced, in order to conflict with the constitutional provisions, must be 'actually and palpably unreasonable and arbitrary,' or the legislative determination as to what is a sufficient distinction to warrant the classification will not be overthrown. Radice v. New York, 264 U.S. 292, 296, 44 S.Ct. 325, 327, 68 L.Ed. 690; Arkansas Natural Gas Co. v. Arkansas Railroad Comm., 261 U.S. 379, 384, 43 S.Ct. 387, 67 L.Ed. 705; In re Livingston, 10 Cal.2d 730, 740, 76 P.2d 1192; Rainey v. Michel, 6 Cal.2d 259, 57 P.2d 932, 105 A.L.R. 148; Los Angeles City School Dist. v. Griffin, 3 Cal. 2d 651, 46 P.2d 141; In re Weisberg, supra [215 Cal. 624, 12 P.2d 446]; Martin v. Superior Court, supra [194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762]; Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 P. 398; In re Cardinal, 170 Cal. 519, 526, 150 P. 348, L.R.A. 1915F, 850. When a legislative classification is questioned, in any state of facts reasonably can be conceived that would sustain it, there is a presumption of existence of that state of facts, and the burden of showing arbitrary action rests upon the one who assails the classification. In re Fuller, 15 Cal.2d 425, 437, 102 P.2d 321; McCreery v. McColgan, 17 Cal.2d 555, 562, 110 P.2d 1051, 133 A.L.R. 800; In re Livingston, supra; Sequoia Nat. Park Stages Co. v. Sequoia & General Grant Nat. Parks Co., 210 Cal. 156, 291 P. 208; Martin v. Superior Court, supra; In re Cardinal, supra [170 Cal. 519, 150 P. 348, L.R.A. 1915F, 850]; County of Los Angeles v. Hurlbut, 44 Cal.App.2d 88, 111 P.2d 963; Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Moore, 37 Cal.App.2d 91, 98 P.2d 819."

[19, 20] And in Livingston v. Robinson, 10 Cal.2d 730, 740, 76 P.2d 1192, it is stated that the question of classification is generally one for the legislative power, to be determined by it in the light of its knowledge of all the circumstances and requirements; that its discretion will not be overthrown unless it is palpably arbitrary, but it will be presumed that the legislature made inquiry to determine whether or not there were evils to be remedied and that the classification made was based upon the result of the inquiry.

[21] Also in Delaney v. Lowery, supra, 25 Cal.2d at page 573, 154 P.2d at page 680, the court said: "Clearly, property may be classified for the purpose of taxation as long as the classification is reasonable, and that is especially true where, as seen, the effect through the years will probably be insignificant."

We are not prepared to say that the classification of private cars, set forth in Section 2(a) of the Act, is "actually and palpably unreasonable and arbitrary"; and we conclude that the determination of the legislature that there is a sufficient distinction between private cars as defined in section 2 (a) and those excepted in said section, to justify the classification. Especially is this true in light of the provisions of Article XIII, Section 14, supra, authorizing the legislature "to classify any and all kinds of personal property for the purposes of assessment and taxation in a manner and at a rate or rates * * * different from any other property in this State subject to taxation."

[22-24] The Private Car Tax Act is presumed to be constitutional. In Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 13 Cal.2d 620, 636, 91 P.2d 577, it was said that it is a well-established and universally recognized principle of law that all presumptions and intendments are in favor of the constitutionality of a statute enacted by a legislature; that all doubts are to be resolved in favor of and not against the validity of a statute; and that before an act may be declared invalid by the judiciary for the reason that it is in conflict with the Constitution, such conflict must be clear, positive and unquestionable. Also see Delaney v. Lowery, supra; Ray v. Parker, 15 Cal.2d 275, 101 P.2d 665; Hart v. City of Beverly Hills, 11 Cal.2d 343, 348, 79 P.2d 1080; People v. Western Fruit Growers, supra, 22 Cal.2d at page 499, 140 P.2d 13; 5 Cal.Jur. 626–630; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th Ed., p. 372. In Carmichael v. Southern Coal & Coke Co., supra, 301 U.S. at page 510, 57 S.Ct. at page 872, 81 L. Ed. at page 1253, 109 A.L.R. 1327, the court said:

"A state legislature, in the enactment of laws, has the widest possible latitude within the limits of the Constitution. In the nature of the case it cannot record a complete catalogue of the considerations which move its members to enact laws. In the absence of such a record courts cannot assume that its action is capricious, or that, with its informed acquaintance with local conditions to which the legislation is to be applied, it was not aware of facts which afford reasonable basis for its action. Only by faithful adherence to this guiding principle of judicial review of legislation is it possible to preserve to the legislative branch its rightful independence and its ability to function."

[25-27] Regarding appellant's contention that the trial court erred in failing to compel compliance by respondent with a subpoena duces tecum issued at appellant's request and served upon respondent, as the subpoena does not appear in the record we are unable to determine its scope. No attempt to compel compliance with it was made prior to the trial, but during the course of the trial appellant's counsel stated that it had requested (and did then request) that respondent produce records of the State Board of Equalization and of the State of California showing any and all tax rates of county, city, and school districts and all general and special taxes used in computing the private car tax rate for the years 1937–1938 and subsequent years; books and records of the Board and of the State showing: The tax rate fixed and paid by common carrier railroad companies operating freight cars of the same kind and nature as the freight cars of the defendant herein; the tax rate fixed and paid by equipment companies operating freight cars of the same kind and nature as the freight cars of the defendant herein; in what counties and taxing districts there was assessed and apportioned during the years 1937–38, and the amount thereof, of cars owned by common carrier railroad companies operated in the State of California, and cars owned by common carrier railroad companies not operated or doing business within the State but rented to railroad companies operating and doing business within the State, cars owned by equipment companies and rented to common carrier railroad companies doing business in the State, together with the nature, kind and physical classification of said cars; in what counties there are railroad lines and in what counties there are no railroad lines; the rate of tax and valuation, if any, placed upon railroad cars other than private cars in the State for the years 1937–38 and subsequent years; the railroad track mileage in the year 1937–38, and subsequent years, in incorporated cities and towns of the State and territory located outside of incorporated cities and towns; and the mileage traveled by each and every car of the defendant herein in California, and in each county or incorporated city or taxing district traveled and traversed by said cars in the years of 1937—38, and subsequent years. Objection to the request was interposed on the grounds that it was too broad and not sufficiently specific, that some of the information was contained in the property statements made to the State by the railroad companies for the purpose of assessing their property under entirely different acts, which statements were not public documents; that no request had been made for the compilation of figures from the records requested; that appellant had not shown that the records requested were material, and that information which defendant desired from the railroad companies' records should be secured by defendant from the railroad companies themselves. Later in the case the subject of these records was again brought up by defendant, when, it now says, it made an offer of proof but the court "persisted in adhering to its former ruling." But defendant's so-called offer of proof was not, in fact, such an offer. What its counsel said was: "I want to make an offer of proof here that if the records of the State Board of Equalization demanded had been produced we would have been able to show by those records that the tax rate demanded and fixed by the Board of Equalization resulted from the imposition upon the property of the defendant of a tax rate higher than that imposed upon property of identical nature, kind, basic classification, and use owned by others but deemed private cars under the definition of Section 2(a) of the Act as construed and interpreted by the board." There was more to the same effect, which it is unnecessary to recite since it is obvious that this did not constitute an offer of proof, but a conclusion of counsel as to what he thought he could have shown had the records been produced. Furthermore there was no ruling on this so-called offer, and obviously none was called for. A little later on in the case the court did say: "I might say that by way of further discussion in connection with the matter of producing records that the other side has made an offer of proof which I know nothing about, but from what I have heard here there are many things in your offer of proof that you would not be able to prove; it is one of those omnibus affairs where you offer to prove almost everything. I take it that you are required to be more specific and not merely say that with the records of the State Board of Equalization you could prove all you have indicated because I am quite sure there are things there that you never could prove by the records of the Board of Equalization, so we will leave that up in the air. If you gentlemen have some things you can prove, some specific facts by resort to specific portions of records or specific documents, that is one thing, but to say that you offer to prove all these things you have mentioned in this very general way is to my mind insufficient." Thereupon defendant modified its request stating that if it could get from the statements of the railroad companies the track mileage, it thought that, with what was already shown, it could establish what it had offered to prove. But the testimony of the witness for the state was that it would take a week or ten days to compile these figures. There was no request by defendant for a continuance for that purpose. We find no error in the court's rulings in this connection. It is well established that demands for the production of records, and subpoenas duces tecum must be reasonable and must be direct and specific in their terms and not couched in general terms, and that the relevancy and materiality of the documents requested must be made to appear. McClatchy Newspapers v. Superior Court, 26 Cal.2d 386, 159 P.2d 944. Furthermore information regarding the track mileage could have been secured by defendant directly from the railroad companies had defendant seen fit to take the proper steps to secure it; but its position as stated by its counsel was "Why should the defendant be burdened with the necessity of subpoenaing each and every railroad in the State when the Board has the information."

We find no error in the rulings of the trial court and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

THOMPSON and PEEK, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; TRAYNOR, J., not participating.

70 Cal.App.2d 432

REMMERS v. CICILIOT et al.

Civ. 14641.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 1, 1945.

1. Evidence ⚷113(19)

Tax assessor's valuation is not evidence of market value, sought to be established in action for specific performance of agreement to exchange realty.

2. Evidence ⚷543(3)

An adjoining landowner and real estate brokers familiar with realty involved in action for specific performance of exchange agreement were properly allowed to express opinions as to value thereof, as against objections to several of brokers that they had no knowledge of sales in vicinity. Code Civ.Proc. § 1872.

3. Specific performance ⚷121(8)

Evidence establishing that agreement for exchange of real property was just and reasonable as to both parties, that the consideration therefor was adequate, and consent to exchange was given freely and without fraudulent representations, sufficiently supported judgment decreeing specific performance.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1176(1)

Where judgment decreeing specific performance of an agreement for exchange of real property did not require conveyance of personal property and bakery equipment described in exchange agreement, the trial court will be directed to require that a bill of sale for personal property described in the exchange agreement be executed and delivered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

On rehearing.

Judgment of the superior court modified and, as modified, affirmed.

Prior opinion 159 P.2d 77.

Julius V. Patrosso, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Clark & Morgan, of Alhambra, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by defendants from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiff in an action for specific performance of an agreement for the exchange of real property. The following grounds are urged in support of a reversal of the judgment:

"1. The evidence does not support the trial court's finding that the properties of the respondent and of the appellants were of equal value or its conclusion that the consideration was adequate to the appellants and the contract just and reasonable as to them;

"2. The findings do not support the judgment in that the trial court failed to make findings upon the issues raised by the pleadings (a) as to the respective values of the properties of the respondent and the appellants, and (b) as to the representations made by respondent to appellants as to the cost or value of her property;

"3. The judgment, while compelling a full performance by the appellants, does not require like performance by the respondent."

This is the second trial of the instant cause, a judgment in favor of appellants as a result of the first trial having been reversed on the ground of insufficiency of the findings to support the judgment. Remmers v. Ciciliot, 59 Cal.App.2d 113, 138 P.2d 306.

On July 29, 1941, the parties to the instant action met at respondent's property located at Monrovia, and entered into a contract whereby it was agreed that appellants would exchange their parcel of improved real property situate at Pomona, free of incumbrance, and $100 in cash, for respondent's parcel of real property at Monrovia, improved with a building then used as a bakery and the fixtures and equipment therein contained, said property being subject to a trust deed for $2,500. A memorandum in the form of a receipt was executed and an escrow opened at a bank to effect the proposed exchange, the parties signing the escrow instructions substantially in accordance with the terms of the memorandum, except that in addition to the $100 cash payment therein provided to be paid by appellants, they also agreed to pay an additional $150 which was deposited with the escrow agent at the time the instructions were executed.

Thereafter, to-wit, on September 25, 1941, and before the escrow was closed, appellants served notice of cancellation and rescission of the exchange agreement upon respondent and demanded the return of the sum of $250 theretofore paid by them, upon the ground that respondent had made material misrepresentations to them concerning her property.

On September 30, 1941, respondent filed her complaint for specific performance of the agreement of exchange. Appellants answered, admitting the execution of the agreement and alleging that they had been induced to enter therein by fraudulent representations to the effect that the respondent's property had cost her $6,000, and had a cash market value of that amount; that it was under lease to one Voltura for a five-year term at a rental of $40 per month for the first year, $45 per month for the second year and $50 per month for the remainder of the term, and that said Voltura was financially responsible; whereas, in fact, Voltura had no financial responsibility; was merely acting as agent and dummy for respondent, and was posing as her lessee to enable her to dispose of the property. It was also alleged that the exchange was unjust, unfair, unreasonable and inadequate; that said properties were not of equal value and that the consideration for such exchange was inadequate as to appellants.

When the cause came on for trial, respondent was permitted to file an amended complaint adding: (1) An allegation to the effect that she was still ready and willing to exchange her Monrovia property in accordance with the exchange agreement, and (2) a new paragraph, to-wit: "That the property owned by defendants at Pomona was and is the fair and reasonable value of the equity of the property owned by plaintiff at Monrovia. That the Pomona property was and is of the value of approximately $2800.00, and the value of the Monrovia property owned by plaintiff was and is of the value of approximately $5500.00 and that the consideration for the said exchange was thereby just, reasonable and adequate to the defendants."

The trial court found in favor of respondent in that the agreement for the exchange of the properties of the respective parties was executed as alleged; that appellant on September 25, 1941, served upon respondent a notice of rescission; that respondent had performed all of the conditions of the agreement upon her part to be performed and that appellants had refused to complete the transaction; that the agreement for the exchange and the escrow instructions were signed by the parties after each had inspected the property of the other; that appellants up to the time that they discovered that Voltura (lessee of respondent's property) had assigned his lease "were satisfied with the exchange and agreeable thereto and had no complaint as to the exchange"; that "it is not true that the agreement of exchange between plaintiff and defendants was fraudulently had or induced or obtained by deceitful or false or fraudulent representations made by plaintiff to the defendants; that it is not true that the plaintiff represented to the defendants that her property had cost $6,000.00 or was of the cash market value of $6,000.00 or that plaintiff represented to defendants that the tenant S. J. Voltura was financially responsible; that it is not true that S. J. Voltura was a dummy or agent of Rosa T. Remmers or that she executed the lease to him merely posing as her lessee for a sufficient length of time to exchange her property with the defendants, and it is not true that said property was bringing in no income or that it had not brought in any income during the term of said lease.

"It is not true that defendants were misled or deceived by plaintiff through any representations by plaintiff to enter into said agreement, and it is not true that plaintiff signed the escrow instructions under any misrepresentations at all. * * *

"The court finds that it is not true that said exchange of properties was unjust or unfair or unreasonable or inadequate, and it is not true that said properties were not of equal value as far as the equities of the exchange, but it is true that they were of equal value and it is true that on or about September 25, 1941, the defendants served a notice of cancellation and rescission on the plaintiff that they had cancelled said agreement and demanded the return of their property that they had placed in said escrow and demanded the return of their deed, but the court finds that said notice was without justification and has no legal effect."

Appellants urge that "before a decree of specific performance may be entered it must affirmatively be made to appear that the consideration for the contract is adequate. Moreover, not only must this fact be established by competent evidence, but in order to sustain a judgment decreeing specific performance, there must be a finding of facts from which it appears that the consideration was adequate as to the defendant. In the absence of such evidence or finding, a decree of specific performance cannot be sustained." (Emphasis included.)

[1] Over the objection of appellants, respondent in an effort to establish the market value of the properties covered by the exchange agreement introduced in evidence certified copies of the assessment roll of the county of Los Angeles for the year 1941 showing the assessed value of the properties in question. In overruling appellant's objection to the admission of this evidence, the trial court stated: "The court will take judicial notice of the fact that the valuations fixed by the assessor are a certain percentage of the actual value." The valuation placed upon the property by the assessor is not evidence of market value. Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Edmands, 50 Cal.App. 444, 450, 195 P. 463.

[2] Eliminating the assessor's record above referred to, the evidence respecting the value of appellants' property consists of the testimony of M. C. Trautwein and H. N. Wood. Mr. Trautwein testified that he had lived in Pomona for 22 years and had been engaged in the real estate business for a period of eight years; that he was familiar with appellants' property and had appraised it in 1941; that he dealt in Pomona property and had sold property in that vicinity; that he was familiar with values in that locality, and in his opinion $2,500 was the fair and reasonable market value of appellants' property as of July, 1941.

Mr. Wood, real estate broker and auctioneer, over the objection of appellants that "there is nothing shown that this man made any inquiry as to sales in that vicinity" was permitted to testify that in his opinion the value of the Pomona property was between $2,000 and $2,500.

With respect to the value of respondent's property, Mr. Wood testified upon cross-examination that he sold the Monrovia property to respondent at an auction sale some four to six weeks before the exchange went into escrow for $300 subject to a mortgage of $2,500.

Mr. Roy A. Watts, a resident of El Monte, a real estate broker and builder, testified that he had been employed as an appraiser by the real estate department of Southern California Builders, a loan association, from May 1933, to October, 1937; that for ten months prior to October, 1943, he had been leasing conversion units in California, Arizona and Wyoming for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and was familiar with the respondent's property in Monrovia, which he had inspected in June of 1941. This witness was permitted to give his opinion as to the value of this property over the objection of appellants that he had "not shown himself familiar with the value of property in that particular vicinity at the time of the transaction in 1941," because he testified that his estimate of value was "based purely on the fact of the physical conditions of that particular piece of property, the size of the lot, and the character of construction"; the "locality and surrounding territory" and "not on any personal knowledge of sales in that immediate vicinity in Monrovia." His estimate of the value of said property was given as $5,504.80.

Mr. C. H. Clark, who had been engaged in the real estate business, loans and insurance, for a period of thirty-five years at Monrovia, maintaining offices a block from respondent's property, testified that the value thereof was $2,800 as of July, 1941.

Mr. Bell, the owner of property adjoining that of respondent, testified he had been familiar with respondent's property over a period of ten years, and that "$1500.00 would be a big price for it."

The foregoing testimony was supplemented by photographs of the respective properties introduced in evidence, and by descriptions thereof given by the witnesses.

In De Freitas v. Town of Suisun City, 170 Cal. 263, 266, 149 P. 553, 555, is stated the procedure by which the value of property may be proved: "By preliminary questions the examiner should elicit the facts relating to the qualifications of the witnesses; for example, that he has seen and examined the land, or that he knows something of its character and condition, or the market values of land in that vicinity, if such values have been established, or the values of land similarly situated, and the like. He may, thereupon, be asked to give his opinion of its respective values * * *."

Again in Re Estate of Ross, 171 Cal. 64, 66, 151 P. 1138, 1139, it was stated with respect to this subject: "The party calling a witness to give his opinion on value may qualify him by showing his familiarity with the property and with other property in the neighborhood, his experience in the business, his familiarity with the state of the market and with sales of similar property in the vicinity, and any other facts tending to show his knowledge of the subject and capacity to give an opinion thereon."

Tested by the principles of law just enunciated, the evidence respecting market value of the two properties was competent, hence the trial court was justified in finding that the two pieces of property were of equal value. Moreover, on the question of inadequacy of consideration, it appears from the record that appellants in exchange for their property which had a maximum value of $3,000, plus $250 in cash, were to receive, subject to a mortgage for $2,500, a piece of property improved with a building containing bakery equipment which had a value of at least $750.

[3] An examination of the entire record discloses evidence establishing that the exchange agreement here in question is just and reasonable as to both parties thereto; and that the consideration therefore is adequate to appellants and that their consent thereto was given freely and was not induced by fraudulent representations of the respondent. In this state of the record, the judgment decreeing specific performance is amply supported.

This rehearing of the instant cause was granted by the court of its own motion, because, in order to avoid misunderstanding, it is deemed advisable to eliminate from the decision heretofore filed (— Cal.App.2d —, 159 P.2d 77) certain dictum which expressed rules of law as they existed prior to the enactment of section 1872 of the Code of Civil Procedure, added by Stats. 1937, p. 1606, and which rules were unfortunately quoted with approval in the cases of Thompson v. Stoakes, 1941, 46 Cal.App.2d 285, 293, 115 P.2d 830, and United States v. Certain Tracts of Land in Los Angeles County, D.C., 1944, 57 F.Supp. 739, 740.

Appellants also urge that the judgment is erroneous because while it requires full performance by appellants, it does not require respondent to convey to appellants the personal property and bakery equipment described in the exchange agreement. Respondent argues that the judgment is sufficient in form, but if insufficient, may be modified.

[4] Accordingly, the trial court is directed to require respondent to execute and deliver to appellants a bill of sale for the personal property described in the exchange agreement, and as so modified, the judgment is affirmed.

RATTRAY v. SCUDDER. *

Civ. 3172.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

July 31, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 27, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Brokers 🔑3

In order to justify real estate commissioner in revoking real estate broker's license for misconduct, broker must have been acting in capacity of broker as agent for injured party. St.1943, p. 841, § 10176 (f).

2. Brokers 🔑3

Real estate commissioner improperly revoked real estate broker's license on charge that broker had been guilty of dishonest dealings with owner of building in beating down the asking price for the property, where it did not appear that broker had acted in his capacity as broker in his dealings with owner. St.1943, p. 841, § 10176(f).

3. Mandamus 🔑174

In action for writ of mandate to compel real estate commissioner to cancel order revoking plaintiff's license as real estate broker, a finding that plaintiff's conduct in attempting to beat down owner's asking price for building would not warrant denial of plaintiff's application for a license or application for its renewal was improper as going beyond issues. St.1943, pp. 838, 841, §§ 10150, 10176.

---

* Subsequent opinion 169 P.2d 371.

4. Brokers ⚿3

Real estate commissioner improperly revoked real estate broker's license, where it appeared that complaint filed with commissioner against broker was not verified as required by statute. St. 1943, p. 841, § 10176.

5. Mandamus ⚿190

Where copies of transcript of proceedings before real estate commissioner were produced and paid for by plaintiff in action for a writ of mandamus compelling commissioner to annul his order revoking plaintiff's license as real estate broker, and plaintiff prevailed in the action, plaintiff was entitled to recover cost of preparing transcripts.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Warren Stockton, Judge.

Action by W. S. Rattray against Hubert E. Scudder, as real estate commissioner of the State of California, for a writ of mandate to annul defendant's order revoking plaintiff's license as a real estate broker. From a judgment granting peremptory writ of mandate and from an order taxing costs, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

See, also, 153 P.2d 433.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Carl S. Kegley, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Mack, Werdel & Bianco, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment granting a peremptory writ of mandate annulling an order of defendant, Real Estate Commissioner of the State of California, which revoked the real estate broker's license of plaintiff, and from an order taxing costs.

Plaintiff had been a real estate broker for many years and at all times material here had held a State license as such. For about a year prior to October, 1943, he had been officing with and working out of the office of Edward A. Kelly, another licensed broker of Bakersfield.

John Leonard Humston, a 2nd Lieut. in the United States Army, was the owner of a court in the city of Bakersfield. He was stationed at Middletown, Ohio.

On January 19, 1943, on the letter head of Kelly & Son, petitioner Rattray wrote Humston a letter stating that "We have a client who is interested in purchasing property in this district, and thought you might wish to sell your property," and asking price and terms. Under date of February 4th, Humston replied stating the property was for sale for $13,000 and that a small second mortgage might be acceptable.

On February 11, 1943, Rattray wrote Humston that the property had been appraised by a competent appraiser; that there had been a heavy depreciation of the building and furniture; that a fair price would be $12,000; that "to this we would have to add the selling commission." A 60-day option dated February 15, 1943, was enclosed in favor of Kelly & Son giving them the right to purchase the property for $12,000. Humston inserted after the purchase price, "$10,000 cash, $2,000 at 8%", signed the option and returned it.

Rattray inserted an advertisement in a Bakersfield paper offering the property for sale at $15,000. This was reduced to $13,500 in later issues. Edward L. Espey contacted Rattray and wanted to buy the property. He said he thought it was worth $12,500 but that he might pay $13,500 for it if he could be financed. He had very little money but had other property in Bakersfield. At least the first conversation between Rattray and Espey occurred some time in March, 1943, probably before March 20th.

On March 20, 1943, Rattray wrote Humston, who was then stationed at Fort Rosecrans in San Diego, in part as follows:

"As the property was purchased through this office, we are able to arrive at a more definite valuation than some other office who might not be as well posted as we are.

"Our purpose for writing you this morning is to inquire whether you would consider $10,000.00 cash, as we have a prospect now who will likely purchase this property providing we can do some financing for him.

"Since buying the property through this office some years ago, there has been a depreciation of 3% a year, which would total at least $2,000.00. We, therefore, believe that under present conditions you would be wise in accepting this cash offer, providing we are able to arrange the financing as hereinabove referred to."

Under date of April 2, 1943, Rattray wrote Humston informing him that the customer had telephoned twice about the sale and urging Humston to accept $10,000 cash for the property. On April 6th, Humston telegraphed Rattray: "WILL TAKE TEN THOUSAND SEVEN FIFTY NET."

Rattray telephoned Humston, probably three times about the sale. Descriptions of the two earlier calls are indefinite both as to time and subject matter. The third call was placed by Rattray at about 4:15 o'clock on the afternoon of April 15, 1943. This conversation is described by Humston as follows: "Well, the—he said he had a prospect to buy the property, and he had to know right away, and he could not get the money I asked for the property, and that $10,000 was the most he could get. And I said I would not accept that, and he said—I told him—he said he had the deal made, and suggested I go ahead and make—they act for me—to go ahead and make the deal, and I told him I would take $10,500, and he said he could not make a deal like that, and I finally said I would take $10,250, and he said if I accepted $10,250 I would have certain expenses to pay out of that. I said I would accept $10,250 but I would not pay any expenses out of it—in other words that is the least I would take, and he said that I would have to pay title transfer—something—$14. I told him I would not pay it. He said, 'You wire me to the effect you will take $10,250 net', and I did that that night, April 15th."

Rattray detailed the conversation as follows: "I told Lt. Humston that I was unable to sell his property for the price he had placed upon it, and the only way we could get him $10,000 cash would be to buy it ourselves. He said 'I won't accept it; I will accept $10,500, if that is all you will give.' I said 'We will not pay $10,500; we will pay $10,000.' He said, 'Will you pay $10,250?' I said 'Will you accept $10,250?' 'Yes', he said, 'I think I will.' I said 'Will you confirm that by wire?' That was the entire conversation as I recall."

Humston telegraphed Rattray; "WILL TAKE TEN THOUSAND TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY NET CASH WITHIN THIRTY DAYS." The following appears on the face of the telegram: "1943 Apr 15 PM 11 47."

Rattray testified that he telephoned Espey early on the morning of April 16th and informed him that Kelly was buying the property and would sell it to him; that about 9:30 or 10 o'clock that morning he instructed the Title Insurance and Trust Company to prepare escrow instructions; that between 12 o'clock noon and 1 o'clock p.m. he took Espey to the office of the title company where he signed the instructions agreeing to buy the property for $13,500 and deposited a check for $400 on account.

In a letter dated April 15, 1943, the title company sent Humston escrow instructions and a deed, also dated April 15, 1943, conveying the property to Edward A. Kelly. This deed was acknowledged by Humston and his wife in San Diego April 23, 1943. The escrow instruction signed by Humston and his wife were dated April 23, 1943, and were received by the title company April 27, 1943.

Espey signed a promissory note dated April 16, 1943, for $12,500 payable in instalments to Steve Ceccarelli and Margherita Ceccarelli. This note was secured by a deed of trust, bearing the same date, on the property involved here and other property belonging to Espey. The acknowledgement on the deed of trust was dated April 14, 1943, and was executed by Emmett E. Wilson who was manager of the title company. Mr. Wilson had no material record of this acknowledgement. He testified that the deed of trust was actually signed and acknowledged by Espey on April 19, 1943; that the date, April 14, in the certificate was due to a mistake of the stenographer who filled in the blanks. Another employee of the title company corroborated this testimony.

The escrow instructions executed by Espey were dated and signed by him on April 16, 1943. They referred to the purchase of the property, the Ceccarelli note and deed of trust, and a chattel mortgage on the furniture in the court. The escrow instructions of Edw. A. Kelly were dated May 7, 1943. They referred, among other things, to a note of Espey to Kelly for $700 secured by a second deed of trust on the property in question here.

Mrs. Ceccarelli paid $7100 of the $12,500 loan on April 16, 1943, and the balance of $5400 on April 30, 1943.

The letters giving statements of disbursements of the funds in the escrow were dated May 17, 1943. They show that the total cash paid into escrow was $13,496.65; that Humston received $10,250 for his property; that Kelly received $2326.25 in cash besides the $700 promissory note. The evidence shows that Kelly paid Rattray over $900, being half of the net cash profit on the transaction.

Steve Ceccarelli, a resident of Mojave, California, was called as a witness. He testified that Kelly and Frank Simon (a broker who officed with Kelly) had handled loans for him for many years; that his wife was in Bakersfield and was contacted by either Kelly or Simon about the loan subsequently made to Espey; that she favored the loan but would not finally approve it until Ceccarelli had seen the property; that one morning Simon drove from Bakersfield to Mojave and took Ceccarelli back to Bakersfield where he looked at the property and approved the loan. The date of this trip is not fixed in the record but we know that it involved two tedious journeys through the Tehachapi Mountains. If all these things happened on the morning of April 16, in time to permit Espey to make his deposit and sign his escrow instructions during the noon hour on that day there was dispatch and speed involved that was unusual.

The foregoing facts are all gleaned from the transcript of the evidence taken before the deputy commissioner who tried the charges filed by Humston against Rattray. Upon this evidence the commissioner concluded that Rattray had been guilty of dishonest dealings with Humston in violation of subdivision "f" of section 10176 of the Business and Professions Code, St.1943, p. 841, and revoked his license.

Rattray then filed this action in the superior court seeking a writ of mandate to compel the commissioner to revoke the order cancelling his license and to restore the same. The only evidence introduced in the superior court action was the transcript of the proceedings before the commissioner.

On this evidence the trial court found as follows: "It is true that at neither of said hearings was there any evidence that the plaintiff herein was acting as the agent for the complainant John L. Humston; it is true that said John L. Humston never agreed to pay any commission to the plaintiff herein for any of the services of the plaintiff; it is true that the complainant John L. Humston on February 15, 1943, executed to the plaintiff herein and his associates an option to purchase the real property of the complainant; it is true that at no time pertinent herein did the relationship of principal and agent ever exist between the plaintiff herein and the said complainant John L. Humston; it is true that at no time herein did any relationship of trust and confidence ever exist between the plaintiff herein and the complainant John L. Humston; it is true that the plaintiff herein in handling the transaction referred to in the complaint of said John L. Humston filed with the defendant herein was not guilty of any conduct which constituted fraud or dishonest dealing and had not acted or conducted himself in any manner which would have warranted the denial of his application for a license or for the renewal of his then existing license."

Section 10176 of the Business and Professions Code provides in part as follows:

"The commissioner may, upon his own motion, and shall upon the verified complaint in writing of any person, investigate the actions of any person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a real estate licensee within this State, and he may temporarily suspend or permanently revoke a real estate license at any time where the licensee within the immediate preceding three years, while a real estate licensee, in performing or attempting to perform any of the acts within the scope of this chapter has been guilty of any of the following: * * *

"(f) Any other conduct, whether of the same or a different character than specified in this section, which constitutes fraud or dishonest dealing."

Were it not for the case of Schomig v. Keiser, 189 Cal. 596, 209 P. 550, we would have no hesitancy in holding that on the evidence before it, the trial court should have found that Rattray had been guilty of dishonest dealings with Humston in beating down the asking price for the property by concealing the true facts and by misrepresentations, and should have sustained the commissioner in revoking his broker's license. There seems to be little reason to doubt that the Ceccarelli loan had been approved and the sale to Espey for $13,500 thereby assured before Rattray telephoned Humston at about 4:15 o'clock on the afternoon of April 15th. At least these things must have happened before Rattray received Humston's telegram of acceptance. The letter of the title company and the deed conveying the property to Kelly, both dated April 15, sent to Humston with the escrow instructions, as well as the evidence in the case, make this conclusion reasonably certain.

[1, 2] However, this conclusion does not enable us to reverse the judgment. The trial court found in effect that the relation of principal and agent never existed between Humston and Rattray and that Rattray did not act in his capacity as broker in his dealings with Humston. This finding has evidentiary support and may not be questioned on appeal. In Schomig v. Keiser, supra, the Supreme Court held that in order to justify the commissioner in revoking a license, the broker must have been acting in that capacity as agent for the injured party. The trial court's finding on the question of agency and the decision of the Supreme Court seem decisive of this appeal.

[3] The balance of the finding to the effect that the conduct of Rattray would not warrant the denial of his application for a license or an application for its renewal, has no place in the findings. It goes far beyond the issues of the case. The law governing the issuance of a license differs materially from that controlling the revocation of a license. The applicant for a license must produce evidence that he "is honest, truthful and of good reputation", Sec. 10150, Business and Professions Code, so those characteristics become material when a license is to be issued. Certainly, in his dealings with Humston, Rattray used the truth with frugality. That fact might assume importance in the mind of the commissioner should Rattray again apply for a broker's license as his old license has long since expired. Glick v. Scudder, Cal. App., 160 P.2d 90.

[4] Another reason for affirming the judgment, although no point is made of it by counsel, may be found in the fact that the complaint filed by Humston with the commissioner does not seem to be verified as required by section 10176 of the Business and Professions Code.

[5] The memorandum of costs filed by Rattray included an item of $139.45 for copies of the transcript of the proceedings before the commissioner. As these transcripts were apparently produced and paid for by Rattray the cost of preparing them was recoverable by him as he prevailed in the action. Dare v. Board of Medical Examiners, 21 Cal.2d 790, 136 P.2d 304.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BARNARD, P. J., concurs.

70 Cal.App.2d 542

PEOPLE v. ONE 1940 BUICK 8 SEDAN, LICENSE NO. 1F500, ENGINE NO. 74019475, et al.

Civ. 12877.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 18, 1945.

1. Forfeitures 🔑5

Finding that automobile was used to transport a narcotic unlawfully was supported by evidence of inspectors that they saw registered owner drive up and park automobile outside his residence and then remove from automobile and throw into gutter a cigarette butt containing three grains of marihuana. St.1939, p. 767, § 11610 et seq.; St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

2. Forfeitures 🔑5

Forfeiture of automobile under statute because of use in unlawfully transporting narcotic does not depend upon proof of transportation of any definite quantity of narcotics, or use of automobile to traffic in narcotics. St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

3. Forfeitures 🔑5

Evidence that conditional vendor of automobile was an aider and abettor of occupant of automobile used to unlawfully transport marihuana was not a prerequisite to forfeiture of conditional vendor's interest in automobile. St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

4. Forfeitures ⚷5

Claimant, in order to prevent forfeiture of his interest in automobile used to transport narcotics unlawfully, has burden of proving that such interest was created only after investigation required by statute which is an affirmative defense. St. 1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

5. Forfeitures ⚷5

Whether a proper investigation was made before claimant's interest in automobile was created so as to protect such interest against forfeiture because of use of automobile to unlawfully transport narcotics is a question of fact to be tested by the legal standards ordinarily applied to such fact questions. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

6. Forfeitures ⚷3

What is a reasonable investigation of moral responsibility, character, and reputation of purchaser within statute permitting proof of such investigation before creation of claimant's interest in automobile as a defense against forfeiture of such interest because of use of automobile to unlawfully transport narcotics must be governed by the facts of each case. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

7. Forfeitures ⚷3

Investigation into financial standing or credit rating of automobile purchaser is not such a "reasonable investigation" of moral responsibility, character, and reputation as will protect conditional vendor's interest in automobile against forfeiture because of use of automobile in unlawfully transporting narcotics. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Reasonable Investigation".

8. Forfeitures ⚷3

A "reasonable investigation" of automobile purchaser sufficient to protect conditional vendor's interest against forfeiture because of use in transporting narcotics should reveal home address, past or present employer, source of income, family or social connections, and, in case of a stranger, some inquiry as to prior location and his standing in that community. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex. Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

9. Forfeitures ⚷5

Evidence sustained finding that interest in automobile of purchaser of conditional sales contract was not created after such a reasonable investigation of moral responsibility, character, and reputation of conditional buyer as was necessary to protect interest of purchaser of contract against forfeiture because of use of automobile to unlawfully transport narcotics. St.1939, p. 768, § 11620; St.1940, 1st Ex. Sess., p. 23, § 11610.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Proceeding by the People of the State of California to forfeit the interests of George Morris, registered owner, Kelley Kar Company, and F. C. Macy and others, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Automobile Investment Company, legal owner, in a certain 1940 Buick 8 Sedan, License No. 1F500, Engine No. 74019475, on the ground that such vehicle was used to unlawfully conceal or transport marihuana. From a judgment forfeiting to the State the interests of all concerned, F. C. Macy and others, doing business under the fictitious name and style of Automobile Investment Company, appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Combs & Murphine, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Ralph W. Scott, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This proceeding was instituted by the state under § 11610 et seq. of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, p. 767, to forfeit the interests of George Morris, the registered owner, the Kelley Kar Company, and the Automobile Investment Company, a partnership, the legal owner, of a certain 1940 Buick Sedan, on the ground that such vehicle was used to unlawfully conceal, convey, carry, or transport marihuana in violation of the provisions of the Health and Safety Code, supra. Morris filed an answer denying the charge, but did not defend the action. He subsequently pleaded guilty to unlawful possession of narcotics based on the transaction here involved. The Kelly Kar Company had sold its interest in the automobile to the Automobile Investment Company prior to the date of the seizure and has no interest in this proceeding. The Automobile Investment Company alleged in its answer that the Kelley Kar Company sold the automobile to Morris by a conditional contract of sale which was subsequently purchased by it; that when the Kelley Kar Company executed the original contract of sale it made a proper investigation of the moral responsibility, character, reputation and credit of Morris, the nature of which investigation is set forth in detail and will be later discussed; that Kelley Kar Company when it sold the contract to defendant informed defendant of the nature, extent and results of its investigation. This defendant also denied that marihuana was ever unlawfully possessed by an occupant or that the vehicle was used to unlawfully conceal, convey or transport marihuana. It denied any knowledge that the vehicle was to be so used.

The trial court found that the Buick in question on October 16, 1943, was used by Morris "to unlawfully conceal, convey, carry and transport a certain narcotic, i. e., marihuana" contrary to the provisions of the Health and Safety Code, and that the interest of defendant "was not created therein after a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character and reputation of the said George Morris." Based on these findings the interests of all concerned were forfeited to the state. From this judgment the Automobile Investment Company appeals, contending (1) that there is no evidence to support the finding that the automobile was used to transport narcotics; (2) that before the interest of a lien holder may be forfeited on the ground that a narcotic is unlawfully kept, deposited or concealed therein the lien owner must be particeps criminis with the occupant; and (3) that, in any event, the evidence shows, as a matter of law, that the investigation required by the statute to protect the lien holder was here made. All of these contentions are without merit.

[1] The finding that the automobile was used to transport a narcotic unlawfully is amply supported by the evidence of the two arresting inspectors. They testified that they seized the vehicle and arrested Morris on October 16, 1943; that on that evening they were waiting for Morris to return to his home at 2753 Golden Gate Avenue, San Francisco; that they were parked in their car across the street from that address; that late in the evening Morris drove up in the Buick and parked in front of that address; that with Morris was his wife; that Morris got out of the car and started to lock the door; that they got out of their car and started towards the Morris car; that the Morris car was parked near a street light; that as they approached within a few feet of the Morris car, Morris appeared to observe them, opened the front door of the Buick, reached into the car near the steering wheel and removed something therefrom, and then dropped a paper into the gutter by the curb. Inspector Carpenter testified that he picked up that paper and that there was no other paper near it in the gutter. Upon being analyzed the paper was found to be a cigarette butt containing three grains of cannabis sativa—marihuana. Morris denied that the cigarette was his and "he stated that he had not sold any marihuana for a long time." The two inspectors then accompanied Morris and his wife into the Morris house. Inspector Armstrong accused Morris of having gone to Tia Juana and returned with a large shipment of marihuana. Morris admitted just having returned from Tia Juana, but denied bringing in narcotics and stated that he had not had anything to do with peddling marihuana for a long time. Morris pleaded guilty to possession of narcotics based on this transaction.

[2] This evidence supports the finding that Morris was unlawfully transporting three grains of marihuana at the time and place in question. The officers saw the car moving on the public street, and saw Morris remove the narcotic from the car and drop it in the gutter. Defendant contends not only that three grains of marihuana is an insufficient quantity to constitute a violation of the act, but also that the act is violated only upon a showing that the occupant used the car to traffic in narcotics. The difficulty with these contentions is that they disregard the language of the statute. Although the prevention of the traffic in drugs is the basic aim of the statute, in order to effectually accomplish this purpose the legislature has seen fit to provide that "A vehicle used to unlawfully transport any narcotic, or in which any narcotic is unlawfully kept, deposited or concealed, or in which any narcotic is unlawfully possessed by an occupant thereof, shall be forfeited to the State." § 11610, Health and Safety Code, St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 23. Traffic in drugs is not made an indispensable element of any portion of this statute. Nor is any definite quantity of narcotics specified. As was said in People v. One Ford Coupe, etc., 10 Cal.App.2d 321, 323, 51 P.2d 882, 883, in answering a similar contention: "If a forfeiture for the transportation of such a small quantity of narcotics seemed a drastic penalty, it nevertheless was a matter within the domain of the Legislature, and was not a matter to guide the judgment of the court."

That no specific quantity of narcotics need be involved to result in a forfeiture seems so obvious from a reading of the statute that the point would not require further discussion were it not for some unfortunate dicta appearing in People v. One 1941 Cadillac Club Coupe, 63 Cal.App.2d 418, 147 P.2d 49, decided by a divided court and in which three justices of the Supreme Court voted for a hearing. The only real question involved in that case was the sufficiency of the examination by the conditional vendor and its assignee. In the course of its discussion of this problem the court quoted § 11610 of the Health and Safety Code and then stated (63 Cal.App.2d at page 421, 147 P.2d at page 51): "To transport means to carry or convey from one place to another. And it must clearly appear that the vehicle was being used for such a purpose. The incidental discovery of a single marihuana cigarette in a vehicle is not sufficient to establish the fact that the vehicle was being used to transport narcotics. The forfeiture provisions of the Health & Safety Code are designed to aid in the suppression of the traffic in narcotics. There is no evidence in the record tending to prove, or that even suggests, that the automobile in question was being used for such a purpose."

It is somewhat difficult to ascertain what the court meant by the quoted language. So far as the opinion discloses, the arresting officers did not observe the automobile in motion. The opinion simply states that (63 Cal.App.2d at page 419, 147 P.2d at page 50) "while the automobile was, with the consent the registered owner, under the sole control and in the temporary possession of one Andrew Pekara, certain narcotic enforcement officers made a search of the vehicle and in a depression in the seat thereof * * * found a single marihuana cigarette." If the first quoted portion of the opinion merely holds that to prove an offense under the transportation portions of § 11610 there must be some evidence that the car was moved while the narcotics were therein, the opinion is undoubtedly correct. This element of proof was supplied in the instant case. The arresting officers saw Morris drive up and remove the narcotic from the car. If the portion of the opinion first above quoted should be interpreted to mean that the finding of one marihuana cigarette in an automobile that was observed to be moving in traffic does not constitute a violation of the transportation provisions of § 11610, supra, or that the state must prove that the occupant of the car was actually engaged in the drug traffic, then the opinion must be disregarded as being directly contrary to the provisions of the pertinent statute. At any rate the language quoted was not necessary to the opinion and was clearly dicta.

[3] So far as the contention that to forfeit a conditional vendor's interest there must be evidence that he was an aider and abettor of the occupant is concerned, it is obvious that the section provides for no such requirement. This point has recently been determined by the Supreme Court in a decision rendered after the trial of this case and after the briefs were prepared. In People v. One 1941 Ford 8 Stake Truck, 26 Cal.2d 503, 159 P.2d 641, it was held that the legal and registered owner's interest would be forfeited even where the occupant, there an employee, was using the car on a personal errand and in direct violation of instructions. It was also held that the only defense permitted was that the legal or registered owner had made a proper investigation, and that no other defense, except that the car is used without the owner's consent—i.e., is stolen—is permitted by law.

The next contention is that the finding that the defendant did not make a reasonable investigation before purchasing the contract is unsupported by the evidence. Section 11620 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, p. 768, provides: "The claimant of any right, title, or interest in the vehicle may prove his lien, mortgage or conditional sales contract to be bona fide and that his right, title, or interest was created after a reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character, and reputation of the purchaser, and without any knowledge that the vehicle was being, or was to be, used for the purpose charged." There is no doubt that the conditional sales contract here involved was bona fide and that neither the Kelley Kar Company nor the defendant had any knowledge that the car was to be used to transport narcotics.

In interpreting the above-quoted section certain principles have been definitely settled:

[4] 1. The defense that the investigation required by the statute has been made is an affirmative defense, and the burden of proof on the issue rests with the claimant.

[5] 2. The question as to whether a proper investigation has been made is one of fact and is to be tested by the legal standards ordinarily applied to such fact questions.

[6] 3. The statute does not prescribe the maximum or minimum of the investigation that must be made. It requires a "reasonable" investigation of the factors involved. What is reasonable must be governed by the facts of each case.

[7] 4. An investigation into the financial standing or the credit rating of the car purchaser is not sufficient—the law requires an investigation of the "moral responsibility, character, and reputation of the purchaser." See cases cited later in this opinion.

There have been many cases decided by the appellate courts discussing what constitutes a sufficient investigation. Some have held that the investigation made in the particular case complied with the statutory requirements. People v. One 1933 Buick Sedan, 43 Cal.App.2d 482, 111 P.2d 378; People v. One Ford V8 Coach, 21 Cal.App.2d 445, 69 P.2d 473; People v. One Plymouth Sedan, 21 Cal.App.2d 715, 69 P.2d 1011; People v. One 1939 Plymouth 6 Coupe, 41 Cal.App.2d 559, 107 P.2d 266; People v. One 1940 Chrysler Coupe, 48 Cal.App.2d 546, 120 P.2d 117; People v. One 1939 Buick Coupe, 56 Cal. App.2d 163, 132 P.2d 308. All of these cases involved situations where the trial court found the investigations were sufficient, and it was held that the finding was supported.

There are other cases affirming the finding that the investigation was insufficient. People v. One 1938 Buick Sedan, 39 Cal. App.2d 42, 102 P.2d 447; People v. One Packard 6 Touring Sedan, 26 Cal.2d 150, 79 P.2d 130.

There are also a series of cases where the trial court found the investigation was sufficient to comply with the statute, but the appellate courts held that the finding was unsupported, and the judgments for the lien claimants were reversed. People v. One Harley-Davidson Motorcycle, 5 Cal.2d 188, 53 P.2d 155; People v. One 1939 Buick 8 Coupe, 43 Cal.App.2d 411, 110 P.2d 1013; People v. One 1937 Packard, 50 Cal.App.2d 761, 123 P.2d 900; People v. One Lincoln Eight, etc., 12 Cal.App.2d 622, 55 P.2d 925. This last cited series of cases are of particular importance because they involved situations where it was held that the investigations there made, as a matter of law, were insufficient. In the 5 Cal.2d 188, 53 P.2d 155, case the conditional vendor secured the names of three references from the purchaser, one of whom was the employer of the purchaser. The employer was interviewed. It was held that the investigation as a matter of law did not comply with the statute.

In the 50 Cal.App.2d 761, 123 P.2d 900, case the purchaser made certain statements as to his background to the manager of the bank, among which was the statement that he lived with his parents. The manager knew the parents of the purchaser and had had business dealings with them for over ten years. He knew the parents had a fine reputation and was satisfied, when the father of the purchaser agreed to endorse the purchaser's note. A finding that the investigation complied with the statutory requirements was reversed.

In the 12 Cal.App.2d 622, 55 P.2d 925, case the testimony showed an investigation was made of the financial responsibility of the purchaser, and that an inquiry was made of two references and one stated the purchaser was a "good old soak" and the other that the purchaser was a "very fine gentleman." The finding that a proper investigation had been made was reversed.

[8] One of the best reasoned cases dealing with this problem is the one appearing in 43 Cal.App.2d 411, 110 P.2d 1013. In that case the salesman that sold the car had known the prospective purchaser for a period of over six months. He called at the purchaser's home at least once and knew the purchaser frequented a certain eating place. He inquired of the proprietor about the reputation of the purchaser and was told that the prospective purchaser was of "good character," was of good morals and of "good reputation." No inquiry was made at the prospective purchaser's home or business address. A financial report was secured from a credit association. In holding that the finding that a proper investigation had been made was unsupported the court stated (43 Cal. App.2d at page 416, 110 P.2d at page 1016): "It is clear, however, that the burden of proving an investigation of the kind and to the extent required by the statute rests upon the claimant, and although the question of the scope and reasonableness of such an investigation is primarily one of fact, it must meet cartain legal requirements. It would seem that a bona fide investigation should, among other essentials, reveal the home address of the prospect, his employer, either past or present, the source of his income, his family or social connections, and as in the case here of a stranger, some inquiry as to his prior location and his standing in that community."

[9] Tested by these standards we cannot hold that the challenged finding is unsupported as a matter of law. The record shows that when Morris purchased the automobile on August 30, 1943, he was a stranger to the seller and that he gave the seller, Kelley Kar Company a "purchaser's statement." In this statement he stated that his residence was 439 Lisbon Street, San Francisco; that for the past three years he had been employed as a watch salesman and by the Merchant Marine; that his salary was $300 per month payable on the first of each month; that the name of his previous employer was the Yellow Cab Company in San Francisco; that he was married and had one child. He gave the names of three persons in San Francisco as personal references, and stated that he had purchased a car through a designated seller in San Francisco.

The record shows that the C. I. T. Corporation refused to purchase this contract; that nevertheless the Kelley Kar Company, pursuant to prior arrangements, asked the Los Angeles office of the Universal C. I. T. Corporation for a report on Morris. This request was forwarded to the San Francisco office of the C. I. T. Corporation. That company referred the request to the Retail Credit Association in San Francisco. That company reported that they had a card in their files dated December 12, 1926, which showed the occupation of the proposed purchaser was that of fruit peddler and that he owed a jewelry company $30 and had not paid it. The report also stated that the Yellow Cab Company reported that he had been employed by that company but had left their employ in July of 1943. The report also stated that Ed's Vehicle Company had sold him a car but that a finance company had purchased the contract and that Ed's Vehicle Company had no record of the transaction. The report concluded: "Sorry we could not get more for you."

This information was forwarded to the Kelley Kar Company in Los Angeles. The defendant company purchased the contract from the Kelley Kar Company on September 20, 1943, in the regular course of business. They had purchased several hundred thousand dollars worth of contracts from the Kelley Kar Company. The Automobile Investment Company made no independent investigation but relied on that made by Kelley Kar Company, the results of which they knew.

There is another report of the Retail Credit Association that appears in the record. This report is dated November 29, 1943. This report also states that Morris had been employed by the Yellow Cab Company; that in 1936 he was reported to be a fruit peddler but "we were unable to learn details"; that a sister of Morris informed the question that Morris was in the Merchant Marine and that his wife was believed to be with the Yellow Cab Company; that the Morrises no longer live at 439 Lisbon Street; that their present address is unknown; that the Yellow Cab Company has no record of the employment of the wife; that "without a residence address we are unable to learn details of his activities. Due to emergency restrictions the U. S. Merchant Marine refuses information"; that "their financial status is unknown." There is considerable doubt as to whether defendant had the information in this report prior to September 20, 1943, when it purchased the contract. The defendant contends that the information in the November report was telephoned to Kelley Kar Company September 8, 1943. This is not entirely clear from the testimony of the representatives of the Retail Credit Association. The trial court would have been justified in finding that the defendant did not have the information contained in the November report at the time it purchased the contract. However, we are of the opinion that even if both reports of the Retail Credit Association were before the defendant before it purchased the contract the investigation did not, as a matter of law, comply with the statutory requirements.

Morris was a stranger to the Kelley Kar Company and to defendant. The automobile was purchased in a locality where the purchaser was unknown. The investigation made was primarily a credit investigation. No real investigation was made at the place of employment given on the questionnaire except to discover that he was no longer there employed. The investigation did disclose that neither Morris nor his wife lived at the address given by Morris. No check at all was made of the personal references given. The investigation disclosed that Morris had been a peddler and not a watch salesman as he had stated, and that he had failed to pay a $30 bill. Certainly the investigation here made cannot be held, as a matter of law, to constitute a "reasonable investigation of the moral responsibility, character, and reputation of the purchaser" as required by § 11620 of the Health and Safety Code. The finding that no real investigation of the purchaser's moral responsibility was made is amply supported.

Defendant makes the usual arguments made in these forfeiture cases, namely, that the statute is a harsh one, that it must be strictly construed, that their investigation was as thorough as is practical in modern business dealings, and that their reliance on established credit agencies was reasonable. The law has seen fit to provide a forfeiture of the innocent vendee's interest except where a proper investigation is made. The legislature has determined that such forfeitures are reasonably necessary to carry out the beneficent purposes of the statute. It is not for the courts to try to relax the clear terms of the statute. The answer to defendant's contentions is to be found in the case of People v. One 1941 Ford 8 Stake Truck, 26 Cal.2d 503, 507, 159 P.2d 641, 643, where it was stated: "Clearly shown by the terms of section 11610 et seq. is a legislative policy that the vicious traffic in narcotics, with its disastrous effect upon the unfortunate members of society, is so great an evil as to justify the drastic penalty of confiscation of vehicles used to transport the contraband. The public interest to be protected against the drug and its victims outweighs the loss suffered by those whose confidence in others proves to be misplaced, and although, in some cases, hardship may result from the enforcement of the statute, no constitutional guarantees are invaded."

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 454

KAPITAN v. SMITH.

Civ. 12847.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Aug. 7, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1945.
Hearing Denied Oct. 1, 1945.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(35)

Evidence, including defendant's testimony that he did not see plaintiff until she was lying in highway and testimony of witnesses who heard skidding of defendant's vehicle and the impact when it struck plaintiff, supported finding of negligence on ground that defendant was traveling at an excessive speed.

2. Automobiles 🔑217(3), 245(72)

A pedestrian is not prohibited from crossing a public highway where pedestrian crossings are not marked, and if pedestrian is negligent in so doing it is a question of fact to be decided under all circumstances.

3. Automobiles 🔑244(50)

Evidence supported finding that plaintiff, who was struck by automobile when attempting to cross highway, was not guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross at a place where pedestrian crossing was not marked.

4. Appeal and error 🔑891

Denying defendant's motion for leave to take additional evidence, based upon his affidavit that witness who was unavailable at time of trial would testify that lights were burning on defendant's automobile after the accident and that skid marks appearing on the highway were beyond and ahead of point where defendant's automobile was stopped, was not error, where proposed testimony as to lights after automobile was stopped would not aid defendant, and testimony regarding location of skid marks would merely create an immaterial conflict.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Action by Merle Kapitan against Robert Hayes Smith for injuries suffered by plaintiff when struck by defendant's motor vehicle. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Robert Hayes Smith, of Hillsborough, in pro. per.

Lewis E. Lercara, of Oakland, and Shirley, Robb & Saroyan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

In a trial to the court sitting without a jury the plaintiff had a judgment for damages for injuries suffered when struck by defendant's motor vehicle. When the cause was called for oral argument the defendant moved to take the testimony of a witness who was not present at the trial. Three questions are presented for decision—the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding of defendant's negligence, the question whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law, and the demand to take additional evidence.

At about 8:30 p. m. on August 20, 1943, plaintiff was a pedestrian walking in a westerly direction across El Camino Real in the town of Milbrae at a point in a twenty-five mile zone where there were no pedestrian cross-walks. The highway at that point had four lanes. When plaintiff reached the curb she paused to let a north bound vehicle pass, stopped in the middle of the highway at the double line and looked for traffic coming from the north. She saw nothing and proceeded in her course to the westerly outer lane where she was struck by defendant's vehicle and thrown to the ground. She testified that the vehicle was traveling without head lights and two witnesses corroborated her. These two witnesses were seated in an apartment about two hundred feet from the point of collision. They testified that they were aroused by the noise of the skidding tires and by the sound of the impact. Defendant testified that he did not strike plaintiff, that he first saw her when she was lying in the highway, and that, though his lights were on, the accident occurred during the "dim out" period. It was shown, however, that the dim out regulations were not applicable to this territory.

[1] As to appellant's negligence, respondent relies on her proof that he was traveling without lights and that the skidding of the vehicle showed that he was traveling at an excessive speed. Either factor was sufficient to support the finding of negligence. The appellant testified that he did not see respondent until she was lying in the highway. This testimony taken with that of the witnesses who heard the skidding of the vehicle and the impact merely supports the inference that appellant was driving negligently at an excessive speed. There is no conflict on this issue except in appellant's statement on one occasion that he was traveling at a speed of five miles an hour, on another occasion that his speed was fifteen.

[2, 3] The issue of contributory negligence is not debatable. There is no rule of law that prohibits a pedestrian from crossing a public highway where pedestrian crossings are not marked. If one is negligent in so doing it is a question of fact to be decided under all the circumstances of the particular case. Here the trial court found that respondent was not negligent and that finding cannot be disturbed. Casalegno v. Leonard, 40 Cal.App.2d 575, 578, 105 P.2d 125; Bushey v. Rigby, 34 Cal.App.2d 41, 45, 92 P.2d 1032.

[4] Appellant's motion for leave to take additional evidence is based upon his affidavit that a witness who was unavailable at the time of the trial would testify that the lights were burning on appellant's car after the accident and that the skid marks appearing on the highway were beyond and ahead of the point where the car was stopped. It does not appear that the proposed witness saw the collision or that he saw the lights on the car before it was stopped. His testimony as to the lights after the car was stopped would not aid appellant. The testimony regarding the location of the skid marks would merely create a conflict which is not material. If the question of excessive speed presented the only issue of negligence, the testimony of those witnesses who heard the tires skidding before the impact was sufficient evidence of excessive speed—and that testimony was not controverted.

The motion is denied and the judgment affirmed.

GOODELL, J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 472

GOLDBERG v. PACIFIC EMPLOYERS INS. CO. et al.

Civ. 12846.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 9, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑709

Under the "bunk house rule" where employee by contract with, or requirement of, employer resides on employer's premises, an injury incurred by employee while on employer's premises, though incurred while not actually engaged in doing any work for employer, is compensable.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Bunk House Rule".

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑164

Household domestic servant who was actually employed less than 52 hours per week in rendering services for employer in whose home she lived was not employed by one employer for over 52 hours per week so as to be an employee within coverage of Workmen's Compensation Act, though, including sleep and free time, she spent considerably more than 52 hours per week on employer's premises. St.1937, p. 265, § 3202; St. 1939, pp. 2873, 2874, §§ 3352(g), 3358.5, 5704.5.

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑53

The Workmen's Compensation Act is to be liberally construed to extend its benefits for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment, but must nevertheless be construed to carry out legislative intent as expressed in language used in legislative enactments. St.1937, p. 265, § 3202.

4. Workmen's compensation 🔑164

Time actually spent in rendering services is the proper measure to be applied in determining whether household domestic servant is employed by one employer for over 52 hours per week so as to be an employee within the coverage of Workmen's Compensation Act. St.1937, p. 265, § 3202; St.1939, pp. 2873, 2874, §§ 3352(g), 3358.5, 5704.5.

5. Workmen's compensation 🔑1345, 1427

The burden of proving that injured household domestic servant was excluded from coverage under Workmen's Compensation Act was fully met by servant's own testimony showing that she was engaged less than 52 hours per week in actually performing services for employer, and any presumption in servant's favor was thereby effectively destroyed. St.1937, pp. 265, 299, §§ 3202, 5705(a); St.1939, pp. 2873, 2874, §§ 3352(g), 3358.5, 5704.5.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Katherine Devens, claimant, opposed by Joseph Goldberg, employer, and Pacific Employers Insurance Company. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California in favor of claimant, the employer brings certiorari.

Award annulled.

George C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and R. C. McKellips, both of San Francisco, for respondent Commission.

S. Norman Hays, of San Francisco, for respondent Pacific Employers Ins. Co.

Henry G. Sanford, of San Francisco, for respondent Devens.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

This is a proceeding in certiorari to review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission in favor of the respondent, Katherine Devens. Taking the evidence of Mrs. Devens, which is the most favorable to her case, the following facts appear:

Mrs. Devens was for many years engaged in household domestic service. It was her practice to work by the day or half day in the homes of several employers each week. Among these part time employers were the petitioner Joseph Goldberg and his wife. In the fall of 1943 the Goldbergs suggested to her that she come to their home to live. Mrs. Goldberg at first proposed that Mrs. Devens should pay for a room in their home and that the Goldbergs would continue to pay her for whatever household work she might do for them. This proposal was not carried out but instead, about two weeks before Christmas, 1943, Mrs. Devens moved into the Goldberg home under an oral agreement whereby she was to perform certain services for the Goldbergs in exchange for her room. It was further understood that Mrs. Devens would continue to work in the homes of other employers, as before, and that if she rendered any services for the Goldbergs in addition to those agreed to be performed in payment for her room the Goldbergs would pay her for such services. The hours of service which Mrs. Devens testified that she performed weekly in exchange for her room were as follows: One hour each week-day morning, from 7 to 8 o'clock, preparing breakfast; four hours each Sunday morning; two days per week from 1 p.m. to 8 p.m.; one day per week from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m.; and on three nights per week two hours per night washing dishes. The total hours per week so testified to comes to thirty-four. The Sunday after Christmas Mrs. Devens worked fifteen hours for the Goldbergs, for which she was paid in cash. Since this fifteen hours was inclusive of the four hours which she normally worked on Sunday morning it would appear that during that week she had worked a total of forty-five hours. On no other occasion between the time that she went to live in the Goldberg home and the date of her injury was she called upon to do any additional work in the Goldberg household. It should be added that Mrs. Devens did at one time testify that she worked for the Goldbergs "about 51 hours altogether here", but her detailed testimony above outlined failed to support this general statement.

Mrs. Devens was injured on January 15, 1944, when a porch of the Goldberg home collapsed while she was standing on it cleaning a rug.

Section 3358.5 of the Labor Code, St. 1939, p. 2874, provides that: "Any person engaged in household domestic service who is employed by one employer for over fifty-two hours per week is an employee under this division."

The respondent Commission found that "the applicant was engaged in household domestic service by said employer for over fifty-two hours per week."

This finding is attacked as totally unsupported by any evidence.

[1] It is not claimed by the respondents that there was any evidence produced before the Industrial Accident Commission that the time that Mrs. Devens was actually engaged in doing household work in the Goldberg home amounted to fifty-two hours per week. The respondent Commission relies on the "bunk house" rule to support the finding attacked, citing Associated Oil Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 191 Cal. 557, 217 P. 744; Larson v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 193 Cal. 406, 224 P. 744; State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Indus. Acc. Comm., 194 Cal. 28, 227 P. 168; and Employers', etc., Corp. v. Indus. Acc. Comm., 37 Cal.App.2d 567, 99 P.2d 1089. Those cases were not concerned with the question here presented. They dealt with the question whether or not an injury incurred by an employee while not actually engaged in doing any work for his employer was none the less compensable where the employee by contract with, or requirement of, the employer resided on the employer's premises and incurred an injury while on the premises. The cases cited hold that such an injury is compensable. They do not discuss or consider the question here involved, whether an employee employed by one employer to perform actual services covering less than fifty-two hours per week shall be considered in law to be "employed by one employer for over fifty-two hours per week" because under the terms of his employment he resides on the premises of the employer.

[2] The "bunk house" rule in this respect is no different from certain other well recognized exceptions to the general rule that an injury to an employee to be compensable must occur during the time that he is actually engaged in performing services for his employer. Among these well recognized exceptions may be cited the rules that an employee is entitled to compensation when he is injured while being transported to or from his work in his employer's conveyance (27 Cal.Jur. 383); while he is eating lunch on his employer's premises (27 Cal.Jur. 387); and while he is entering his employer's premises to commence his work or leaving his employer's premises after his work is finished for the day (27 Cal.Jur. 387 et seq.). We cannot believe that in computing the number of hours per week for which an employee was employed by his employer the time consumed in going to and from the job in his employer's conveyance, the time consumed in eating lunch on his employer's premises, or the time consumed in entering the premises before commencing work or in leaving the premises after the work is finished should be included. No more do we believe that the Legislature intended that a domestic servant actually employed to do less than fifty-two hours per week should be considered "employed * * * for over fifty-two hours per week" because during the time when she was not hired to work, and actually was not working for her employer, she lived upon the employer's premises.

If respondents' contention in this regard is correct some surprising results would follow. A servant residing upon an employer's premises might be reasonably assumed to spend at least eight hours per night in her room or fifty-six hours per week. If she agreed to perform services for only eight hours per week, or four or even one, in exchange for her room, she would be employed over fifty-two hours per week by that employer under respondents' theory. Indeed, under that theory, it would be practically impossible to employ any domestic servant residing on the premises without employing her for fifty-two hours per week, however little work per week she was actually engaged to do.

Section 1350 of the Labor Code provides that: "No female shall be employed in any * * * hotel, public lodging house, apartment house, hospital * * * more than eight hours during any one day of twenty-four hours or more than forty-eight hours in one week." In State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Indus. Acc. Comm., supra, 194 Cal. 28, 227 P. 168, one of the cases cited and relied upon by respondents, the Supreme Court applied the "bunk house" rule to a hotel maid whose contract of employment required her to live in the hotel, holding an injury received by the maid while leaving the hotel on her day off to be compensable. Applying the reasoning contended for by respondents, this maid and every other female employee of a hotel, lodging house, apartment house or hospital who resided on the employer's premises under her contract of employment would do so in violation of section 1350, Labor Code.

[3] Our Workmen's Compensation Act, now embodied in the Labor Code, is to be liberally construed to extend its benefits for the protection of persons injured in the course of their employment. Labor Code, § 3202, St. 1937, p. 265. With this beneficent purpose in mind it must still be construed to carry out the legislative intent as expressed in the language used in the legislative enactments. Labor Code, § 3358.5, was enacted in 1939. Stats. 1939, pp. 2873, 2874. The entire statute contained three sections. Section 1 of that statute amended section 3352 of the Labor Code by rearranging its subdivisions and adding to the former subdivision (b) (rearranged as (g) in the amendment) the words which we italicize in the following quotation:

> "'Employee' excludes:
>
> *　*　*　*　*　*
>
> "(g) Any person engaged in household domestic service except as provided in section 3358.5."

The effect of this amendment together with the adoption of section 3358.5 hereinabove quoted (by section 2 of the statute) was to bring within the coverage of the Compensation Act for the first time a limited class of household domestic servants, i. e., those "employed by one employer for over fifty-two hours per week."

Section 3 of the same statute added section 5704.5 to the Labor Code. Section 5704.5, so added, reads: "A written contract entered into between a person engaged in household domestic service and his employer shall raise a rebuttable presumption that the hours of employment specified therein are the hours actually worked per week by such household domestic for that employer."

We quote section 5704.5 not because there was a written contract of employment in this case. There was none. But because it sheds light on the legislative intent in adopting section 3358.5, as a part of the same statute. There would be no purpose in creating a rebuttable presumption that the hours of employment specified in a written contract "are the hours actually worked per week" unless the hours actually worked per week was the measure to be applied in determining whether the household domestic servant is "employed by one employer for over fifty-two hours per week" within the meaning of section 3358.5.

[4] It seems clear that the time actually spent in rendering service is the proper measure to be applied and that respondent commission erroneously took into consideration free time spent on the premises solely because the injured servant resided thereon.

[5] It is further argued that the burden of proof was on the employer to prove that Mrs. Devens was an excluded employee. Labor Code, § 5705 (a). The burden was fully met by Mrs. Devens' own testimony and any presumption in her favor was thereby effectively destroyed. Mar Shee v. Maryland Assurance Corp., 190 Cal. 1, 210 P. 269.

Our conclusion on this phase of the case makes it unnecessary to consider the questions of insurance coverage also argued.

The award is annulled.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

Hearing denied; GIBSON, C. J., and CARTER, J., dissenting.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 492

FERRARI v. MAMBRETTI et al.

Civ. 12888.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 10, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 8, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Continuance 🔑25

In action for value of plaintiff's services, it was not error to deny plaintiff's motion for continuance on ground that two nonresidents could not attend for two months, where their testimony would deal with only a small part of plaintiff's services, and there was no showing that they were the only witnesses who could testify to the facts.

2. Continuance 🔑19

The right of parties to be present at trial is not unqualified, as regards right to continuance.

3. Continuance 🔑7

The granting or denial of continuance rests in sound discretion of trial court.

4. Appeal and error 🔑966(1)

The granting or denial of continuance will be reversed only on satisfactory showing of abuse of discretion.

5. Continuance 🔑19

In action for value of plaintiff's services to decedent, though there was no counter showing against plaintiff's motion for continuance due to inability to leave nursery business to attend trial, judge could consider that action had been pending for 3½ years, that plaintiff could not be a witness, that case had been tried once before, that plaintiff would be in city of forum, etc.

6. Continuance 🔑19

In action for value of plaintiff's services to decedent, denial of plaintiff's motion for continuance due to inability to leave nursery business to attend trial was not abuse of discretion under facts, in view of plaintiff's incompetence as witness and counsel's familiarity with case because of prior trial, etc. Code Civ.Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Action by Louis Ferrari against Palmira Mambretti, as administratrix of the estate of David Ferrari, alias, deceased, for the value of services allegedly performed by plaintiff for the deceased. From a judgment dismissing the action, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Frank J. Perry and George Olshausen, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Anthony S. Devoto, of San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

This appeal is prosecuted by the plaintiff from a judgment dismissing the action. The case was regularly set for trial on November 6, 1944, and the judgment of dismissal was ordered on that date following the statement of plaintiff's counsel that "I am standing on the grounds that I am not ready to go to trial at this time." It was and is appellant's position that the trial court abused its discretion in denying appellant's motion for a continuance of the trial date to January, 1945.

A previous judgment for appellant in the same case was reversed in this court. Ferrari v. Mambretti, 58 Cal.App.2d 318, 136 P.2d 326. The nature of the action sufficiently appears from that opinion. After the remittitur was filed in the trial court appellant made a motion to file an amended complaint, which was denied. The motion was twice renewed and the last order of denial was made on June 21, 1944. On July 14, 1944, appellant filed a memorandum of motion to set the cause for trial and on August 29, 1944, a motion of respondent to advance the cause for trial was granted and the cause set for trial on October 16, 1944. Thereafter the court continued the case for trial to November 6, 1944.

On October 30, 1944, appellant moved the court for a continuance of the trial to some time in the month of January, 1945. This motion was supported by an affidavit of the plaintiff, one of plaintiff's counsel, the affidavits of two men who were familiar with plaintiff's business, and the affidavits of two witnesses for plaintiff, Voight and Wilson.

The motion for continuance was based upon two grounds: (1) That the requirements of plaintiff's business are such that he could not attend the trial of his action during November or December without suffering irreparable financial loss, and (2) that the witnesses Voight and Wilson, who resided in Lake County beyond the reach of subpoena, could not attend the trial during those months.

[1] The second ground may be summarily dealt with. The testimony of these witnesses would deal with only a small part of plaintiff's services, a few trips to Lake County with his uncle to buy turkeys. There was no showing in any of the affidavits that these two witnesses were the only ones who could testify to these facts. "In order to obtain a continuance it should further appear that the facts expected to be proved by the absent material witness cannot be otherwise proved." 5 Cal.Jur. 992, 993.

The sufficiency of the showing of plaintiff's inability to be in continuous attendance on a trial of the length of this one (the first trial consumed nine days) may be conceded. The affidavits showed quite fully that he is a partner in a wholesale nursery business, that the business is largely seasonal and during November and December of each year requires all of his time, and that this was particularly true in 1944 because of war-time shortage of help and the illness of a partner. There was, however, no showing by affidavit that the plaintiff's continuous attendance on the trial was necessary or essential to its prosecution, and it was conceded on the argument of the motion that he could not be a witness by reason of the prohibition of Code Civ.Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

The following quotations from the transcript of the argument on the motion for continuance may serve to evoke some of the atmosphere of, and the interplay of ideas that occurred in, the trial courtroom:

"The Court: Well, that is right, the plaintiff is foreclosed under 1880 from testifying.

"Mr. Perry: That is correct. But we put the plaintiff on the stand and objection was made that he could not testify; but in a trial for any substantial amount of money, if the plaintiff does not appear, it is tantamount to losing the case.

"The Court: Oh well, no; he does not have to be in court. * * *

"Mr. Perry: * * * As I stated before, to force my client to trial—and your honor takes a different view than I do, that there is no necessity in him coming in; and I feel that plaintiff needs every possible advantage in the case, to present a case and let the jury look at the plaintiff and see what his conduct and demeanor is during the course of the trial, and put the plaintiff on the stand and make counsel go through the formality of objecting to his testimony under 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

"The Court: But that should not take more than one day.

"Mr. Perry: I understand that. But it is my idea as attorney for the plaintiff that I feel the plaintiff should be present during the entire trial. That is the position we are in. It is not a point where we just want to get a continuance for the sake of getting it. It has turned out to be an economic point on the part of my client as to whether or not he is going to lose more money in his business if the case goes to trial in this court now, as against an amount he may get from a verdict.

"The Court: If there is any question, he can let the case go ahead and come in now and then. As long as he is not testifying, I don't think it is necessary for him to be there all along. Anyway, that is the order. * * *"

We quote this portion of the argument because, as noted above, the affidavits in support of the motion for continuance did not state, or set out any facts tending to prove, that the plaintiff's continuous presence in the courtroom was necessary or essential.

Appellant leans heavily on Jaffe v. Lilienthal, 101 Cal. 175, 35 P. 636, 637, and argues in effect that a plaintiff is always entitled to be present at the trial of his cause and must be granted a continuance where it is shown that his absence on the date set for trial through no fault of his own will be unavoidable. The facts in the cited case were not at all similar to those here presented. In Jaffe v. Lilienthal, supra, the plaintiff was unavoidably detained out of the state of California and the affidavits expressly showed "that his presence at the trial was indispensably necessary; that he was the only person who knew the whereabouts of the witnesses necessary to be called on his behalf; that their names had not been communicated to his attorney, nor the matters to which they would testify." In the case before us the plaintiff resided and had his business in San Francisco, the place of trial. The case had once been tried and presumably all of the witnesses' names were known to plaintiff's counsel. If not, it is not shown that the exigencies of plaintiff's business were such that he could not meet and counsel with his attorney.

It is true that in Jaffe v. Lilienthal the court used the following language, 101 Cal. 177, 35 P. 637:

"It seldom happens that a trial can be properly had in the absence of the plaintiff, even where he is disqualified as a witness, especially where it is to be tried upon oral testimony. With all the care that can reasonably be taken by both attorney and client, some matter of vital importance is liable to be overlooked by them until the trial calls it to the recollection of the plaintiff, and this is especially true in relation to matters purely in rebuttal. It is the right of parties to be present at the trial of their cases."

[2] Subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court make clear that the right of parties to be present at the trial of their cases is not absolute and unqualified. Lynch v. Superior Court, 150 Cal. 123, 88 P. 708; Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 116 P. 44; Mission Film Corporation v. Chadwick Pictures Corporation, 207 Cal. 386, 278 P. 855. The court said in Sheldon v. Landwehr, supra, 159 Cal. at page 781, 116 P. at page 45:

"The circumstance that the witness who is unable to attend is at the same time one of the parties should no doubt be regarded as strengthening the showing in favor of a continuance (citing Jaffe v. Lilienthal, supra), but it has never been held in this court that the unavoidable absence of a party necessarily compels the court to grant a continuance."

See also Sonstelie v. Bush, 102 Cal.App. 396, 283 P. 336; Ross v. Thirlwall, 101 Cal.App. 411, 281 P. 714; Johnson v. Johnson, 59 Cal.App.2d 375, 139 P.2d 33; Queirolo v. Queirolo, 129 Cal. 686, 62 P. 315; 17 C.J.S., Continuances, § 27, pp. 211–212.

[3-6] The granting or denial of motions for continuance rests in the sound discretion of the trial court and the trial court's action thereon will only be reversed on a satisfactory showing that this discretion has been abused. 5 Cal.Jur. 968–970. While there was no counter showing by affidavit or testimony on defendant's part, the trial judge was entitled to take into consideration the facts shown by the record that the action had been pending since April 26, 1941; that it was against the administratrix of an estate; and that the estate could not be closed while the action was pending; together with the further facts that appellant could not be a witness on his own behalf; that the case had already once been tried and counsel was therefore familiar with the witnesses on both sides and their previous testimony; that appellant would be present in San Francisco to counsel and advise with his attorney during the course of the trial; and, as the trial judge put it, "If there is any question he can let the case go ahead and come in now and then." Upon the whole record we can find no abuse of discretion in the trial court's order denying the continuance.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the question, also presented, of the propriety of the orders denying leave to further amend the complaint.

Judgment affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

70 Cal.App.2d 470

PEOPLE v. LONG.

Cr. 636.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 8, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⇨1159(3)

Mere conflict in the evidence furnishes no ground for reversal if there is substantial evidence supporting the verdict and judgment.

2. Criminal law ⇨338(2)

The fact that a weapon was used in committing a crime may be proved by circumstantial, as well as by direct, evidence, like any other fact in the case.

3. Mayhem ⇨5

In prosecution for mayhem, evidence was sufficient to support conclusion drawn by jury that defendant had some sharp instrument in his hand when he struck prosecuting witness over the eye and that such instrument pierced the eyeball. Pen.Code, § 203.

4. Mayhem ⇨1

Where defendant's injury of another with a weapon caused the loss of an eye, defendant was properly convicted of mayhem. Pen.Code, § 203.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. A. Leonard, Judge.

Willard Long was convicted of mayhem, and, from the judgment pronounced and an order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Duckworth, Mussell & King, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerome B. Kavanaugh, Dist. Atty., of San Bernardino, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment pronounced on defendant after his conviction of the crime of mayhem, and from an order denying his motion for new trial.

[1] The only ground urged for a reversal of the judgment is that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. There is a sharp conflict in the evidence on several material points between that offered by the People and that of the witnesses for the defendant. As the jury evidently believed the witnesses for the prosecution and rejected some of the other testimony, we need only outline the portions of the evidence tending to support the verdict and judgment as mere conflicts in the evidence furnish no ground for reversal if there is substantial evidence supporting the verdict and judgment.

Calvin Enfield was the owner of concessions in a carnival that was operating in the city of Colton, among which was a dart game. The dart has a sharp steel point and is thrown at a card. The successful player receives a prize.

Defendant, members of his family and some friends visited the carnival on the evening of November 8, 1944. He played the dart game and won a chalk dog. He played other games and after a short time missed the dog. He returned to the dart game and engaged in an argument with a Mrs. Lewis, the operator. Enfield saw that an argument was in progress and came to the concession. The two men entered into an argument and blows were exchanged. Defendant struck Enfield over the eye with his fist which cut his face both above and below the eye socket. His eyeball was pierced by a sharp instrument and so badly injured that it had to be removed. No one saw anything in the hand of defendant with which he struck Enfield. The fight occurred within between two and seven feet in front of the dart concession where there were darts stuck into a board. There is evidence supporting the conclusion that no one other than defendant struck Enfield in the face though this was contradicted by witnesses for defendant.

It is admitted that a blow from a clenched fist alone could not have caused a rupture of the eyeball unless it was of sufficient force to crush the bony structure protecting the eye.

A physician who treated Enfield's eye, and finally had to remove the eyeball, testified that the puncture of the eyeball was caused by a sharp instrument and could have been caused by a dart held in the fist of defendant when he struck Enfield. He was of the opinion that it could not have been caused by the blow from defendant's fist alone.

[2] The fact that a weapon was used in committing a crime may be proved by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence, like any other fact in a case.

[3, 4] The evidence offered by the prosecution was sufficient to support the conclusion drawn by the jury that defendant had some sharp instrument in his hand when he struck Enfield over the eye, and that such instrument pierced the eyeball. As this injury caused the loss of the eye the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction of mayhem. Sec. 203, Penal Code.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BARBARD, P. J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 407

FRANK v. REPP & MOTT et al.

Civ. 14782.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 31, 1945.

1. Auctions and auctioneers 🔑11

Where it was undisputed that former employee had stolen furniture from employer and had delivered it to auctioneer who had sold it, instruction that defendant auctioneer was liable was proper.

2. Payment 🔑16(1)

When a note is taken for a pre-existing debt, it is not payment of the debt unless there is an express agreement to that effect, and the presumption is that note was not taken in payment, and the burden of showing that it was is upon the maker.

3. Trial 🔑208

In action against auctioneer for conversion of furniture which plaintiff's employee had stolen and auctioneer had sold, where evidence was insufficient to support a finding that employee's note was given in payment or part payment of the indebtedness or to support a finding that plaintiff released employee or the defendant from the obligation, it was not error to instruct jury not to credit the amount of the note on the amount found to be the value of the goods.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1048(2)
Evidence 🔑543(4)

Plaintiff who testified that he had been in the furniture business since 1921 and that he had familiarized himself with the value of furniture was qualified to testify as an expert on values, and instruction that jury should consider such expert opinion and should weigh the reasons, if any, given for it was not prejudicial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Swain, Judge.

Action by Nat Frank against Repp & Mott, a corporation, Hiram E. Repp, Kenneth L. Mott and Paul S. Muir, for conversion of furniture. From a judgment for plaintiff for $1,500 damages and $300.12 interest, the defendant Repp & Mott, a corporation, appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

F. A. Knight, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Fred M. Riedman and Clock, Waestman & Clock, all of Long Beach, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff owned and operated a retail furniture store. Defendant Muir had been employed by him as a truck driver to deliver furniture. Repp & Mott, a corporation, hereinafter called the defendant, operated an auction business in which furniture and other articles, received from stores and individuals, were sold at public auction on a commission basis. At various times Muir had stolen furniture from plaintiff's store and delivered it to defendant which sold it at auction to various persons. In a jury trial of this action for damages for conversion of the furniture, the plaintiff obtained judgment for $1,500 damages and $300.12 interest. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

[1] Defendant asserts that the court erred in instructing the jury to return a verdict against defendant. After the evidence had been presented and before the arguments were made, the trial judge stated to the jury: "I think I might as well state to the jury what I have stated there so they can follow the argument. I stated to counsel here that I was prepared to instruct the jury that there is no conflict of evidence as to the matters on which liability is founded, and therefore, I will instruct the jury at the proper time, that there is liability on the part of Repp & Mott, a corporation, as a matter of law, and the only thing the jury needs to determine is the reasonable value of the furniture and furnishings. I think that will simplify your work and will simplify the argument, so we will proceed to the argument if you wish, but it will be confined to the question of the value of the furniture." After the argument the court instructed the jury: "You are also instructed to return a verdict in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant Repp & Mott, a corporation. The amount of the award is for you to determine. The amount of the award will be the fair wholesale market value F. O. B. Long Beach, Calif. of the goods belonging to the plaintiff which you find that the defendant Paul S. Muir took without the consent of the plaintiff and delivered to the defendant Repp & Mott, a Corporation, and which were sold by said corporation. * * * The amount of the note which the defendant Muir gave to the plaintiff is not to be credited by you on the amount you find to be the value of said goods." The jury was also instructed that: "The plaintiff has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence what goods belonging to him were taken by the defendant Muir without plaintiff's consent and sold by the defendant Repp & Mott, a corporation. The plaintiff also has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence what was the value of the goods so sold."

Defendant had furnished to plaintiff a list of property which it had sold for Muir during the time from April 2, 1941, to August 13, 1941 (the time involved herein). Muir testified, by deposition, that the property described on that list had been stolen by him from plaintiff and had been sold by defendant. Mr. Mott testified that he went over the list with Muir and Muir said there were several articles thereon which did not come from plaintiff's store and pointed out those articles on the list; that he (Mott) could not designate the articles which were so referred to, but he knew that Muir said that two of those articles, a radiant heater and a range, did not come from plaintiff's store. It was established by uncontradicted evidence that defendant was liable to plaintiff for the goods which were stolen by Muir and sold by defendant. The court left it to the jury to determine what goods were so stolen and sold. It was not error to instruct the jury that there was liability on the part of defendant.

Defendant asserts further that the court erred in instructing the jury that "The amount of the note which the defendant Muir gave to the plaintiff is not to be credited by you on the amount you find to be the value of said goods." His argument is that it was a question of fact for the consideration of the jury as to whether the $750 note was given and received in payment or part payment of plaintiff's claim. Plaintiff asserts that the note was not taken in payment or partial payment, but was only to be used as part payment in a contemplated compromise which was not consummated.

Plaintiff prepared in his handwriting a promissory note for $750, dated December 11, 1941, payable to himself in annual payments of $375 each, the first payment being due December 11, 1942, and Muir took the note and signed it as the maker. Plaintiff testified that "he didn't believe that Muir signed it in his presence." Muir testified that he signed the note in the presence of plaintiff. Muir gave the note to a person who was a truck driver for defendant, and that driver gave it to defendant.

Mr. Aspinwall, who had been the attorney for defendant, testified that while he was such attorney he received a telephone call from Mr. Riedman, who was attorney for plaintiff at that time, in which Riedman asked him to bring Muir's promissory note to his office; that he asked Riedman what note he was referring to and Riedman replied, "The note of Paul Muir for Nat Frank"; that he asked Riedman if there was such a note and Riedman said that defendant had it; that he went to the office of defendant and obtained the $750 note which had been signed by Muir; that he took the note to Riedman's office and placed it on his desk or handed it to him, and Riedman held the note and looked at it; and that he left the note with Riedman.

Mr. Riedman, who was one of the attorneys for the plaintiff at the time of the trial, testified that in a telephone conversation with Aspinwall they discussed the $750 note and that he told Aspinwall that plaintiff would settle the claim on the basis of defendant paying $1,050 and Muir giving a note for $750, and that his client had told him that Muir had made such a note; that he (Riedman) told his client (plaintiff) to give the note to defendant and that when the entire matter was straightened out they would take the note and a check and give the releases; that it was stated between them (Riedman and Aspinwall) in one of their conversations that Aspinwall was to get the note and defendant's check for $1,050, that he (Riedman) was to prepare the releases, and that the note and check would be exchanged for the releases; that Aspinwall came to his office with the note and handed it to him or laid it on his desk; that he asked Aspinwall where the check was; that he did not remember his answer; that he told Aspinwall that he had no authority to accept the note until the entire matter was settled, and that he had no use for the note; and that when he offered to return the note to Aspinwall he did not take it, but "he ran like a scared jackrabbit."

Mr. Aspinwall testified on redirect examination that there was "No conversation in which there was any agreement relating to the giving up the note and the check for $1,050.00"; that he told Riedman, "you have gone behind our backs to settle with this man and taken a note without our knowledge in this matter of settlement and there will be no check—we will not have anything further to do along that line"; that he saw a release when he was in Riedman's office; and that he did not run out of the office.

On May 12, 1942, Muir signed a written statement regarding the note. That statement, offered in evidence by defendant and received, was as follows: "Paul S. Muir voluntarily makes the following statement regarding the promissory note dated December 11, 1941, in the sum of $750.00, payable to Nat Frank, a photostatic copy of which is attached hereto. That on or about the date of said note, Nat Frank requested me to come to his place of business in the City of Long Beach, California, which I did. At that time we discussed certain furniture, household furnishings and personal property which he accused me of having sold, through the auction house of Repp & Mott, and said Frank demanded that I give him a promissory note in payment of the value of the same. We discussed at some length the value of the furniture and finally he presented me with the said note and I then and there signed the same and delivered it to Nat Frank upon his stating to me that he would not prosecute me nor hold me liable in any manner for taking the goods except by the payment of the note. At that time I stated to Nat Frank the full value of said goods, and thereupon Nat Frank asked that I deliver said promissory note to Repp & Mott, but did not state to me why I was to take the note to Repp & Mott. No one was present at this conversation except ourselves. A few days after receiving this note from Nat Frank I delivered the note to a man whose name I do not know but who was a driver of one of the Repp & Mott trucks, and I requested him to hand the note to Repp & Mott."

On January 12, 1943, Muir wrote a letter to Mr. Aspinwall regarding the note. That letter, offered in evidence by defendant and received, was as follows: "Dear Sir, Received your letter. Very sorry that you were unable to see me. Sorry I haven't sent you my new address. Well, there isnt much I can write about, as I told you on phone Mr. Frank wrote me several time more or less I think just to see if I were still here. he had very little to say about case, but he though that it would come up soon, he never has mention fact that he has sue me for any amount, other than the note, which I sgin, Seem to be kind worried about that note, some what, of course, I never ask him why, as far as every collect, more than $750.00 I think he kind crazy. I cann seem find letter from Mr. Reedman but here one of Mr. Frank letter, they are about all same. As far as he, can expect to, sue me he crazy after sgin Note for every cent I owe him then turn around, and file for three time the amount will kill that, very quick, Well if there any news. Please let me know, Your Truly,"

Muir was not present at the trial but he testified by deposition that he gave the note for every cent that he owed the plaintiff.

The note was produced at the trial by the plaintiff. It was offered in evidence by defendant and was received in evidence over the objection of plaintiff. Muir's deposition, which was read in evidence, was offered by plaintiff.

[2, 3] At the time the note was made it was not delivered by Muir to plaintiff, but was delivered on a later day to defendant. The circumstances under which the note was left with plaintiff's attorney did not show that it was retained as payment or part payment of the amount due plaintiff. There was no express agreement or any agreement that the note was taken or was to be taken in payment or part payment. No part of the note was paid. When a note is taken for a pre-existing debt, it is not payment of the debt unless there is an express agreement to that effect; the presumption is that such a note was not taken in payment, and the burden of showing that it was in payment is upon the maker. See Selig Cahn, Inc., v. California W. Co., 9 Cal.2d 617, 619, 71 P.2d 1113. The evidence showed that plaintiff would have been willing to accept Muir's note for $750 and defendant's check for $1,050 in settlement of his claim, but the check was not offered to plaintiff and the contemplated compromise was never consummated. Although Muir testified at length by deposition and was cross-examined by defendant's counsel, he did not testify that the matters contained in his written statement, above quoted, and his letter, above quoted, were true, except he did testify that he had given the note for every cent he owed the plaintiff. He did not testify as to any conversation with plaintiff concerning the purpose in giving the note. The testimony of plaintiff was that the note was never handed to him and that he did not accept it or intend to accept it as payment or part payment of the obligation of Muir and defendant to reimburse him for the goods. The evidence was not sufficient to support a finding that the note was given in payment or part payment of the indebtedness, or to support a finding that plaintiff released Muir or the defendant from the obligation. It was not error to instruct the jury not to credit the amount of the note on the amount found to be the value of the goods.

[4] Defendant contends further that the court erred in instructing the jury that it should consider, as expert testimony, the testimony of plaintiff as to the value of the furniture. During the trial when plaintiff was a witness the following proceedings were had:

"Q. [by counsel for plaintiff] In Plaintiff's Exhibit 2, it shows the first sale made was 4-2-41 and the last one made was 8-13-41. Will you give us the reasonable market value for those goods in this locality, laid down at your store on those dates?

"Mr. Knight [counsel for defendant]: We object to the question as no foundation being laid. That calls for a conclusion of the witness and no qualification of the witness shown.

"The Court: Objection overruled.

"Q. Answer the question.

"The Court: The owner can testify to the value of the goods—

"The witness: Yes, sir.

"Q. What is the value? A. $1,800.00." The court gave the following instruction: "The rules of evidence ordinarily do not permit the opinion of a witness to be received as evidence. An exception to this rule exists in the case of expert witnesses. A person who by education, study and experience has become an expert in any art, science or profession, and who is called as a witness, may give his opinion as to any such matter in which he is versed and which is material to the case. In this case, the plaintiff gave his opinion as to the value of the property in question. You should consider such expert opinion and should weigh the reasons, if any, given for it. * * *"

It appears that the court, in receiving plaintiff's testimony as to value of the furniture, limited his testimony to his opinion as the owner of the furniture. The plaintiff had testified that he had been in the furniture business since 1921 and that he had familiarized himself with the values of furniture. He testified that he arrived at the amount, $1,800, by going over the list of stolen articles with Mr. Mott and Mr. Repp and that he checked the list from his inventory. It appears that plaintiff was qualified to testify as an expert. No evidence as to value of the furniture was introduced by defendant. The instruction wherein plaintiff's testimony was referred to as that of an expert was not prejudicial.

The judgment is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

WOLSKI v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 7160.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

July 31, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 28, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Workmen's compensation 🔑900

Under Labor Code, employer of one-eyed man, losing sight of good eye as result of industrial accident, is not liable for compensation based on rating of total permanent disability, but only for portion of disability due to injury to good eye. St. 1937, pp. 284, 285, §§ 4662, 4750.

2. Workmen's compensation 🔑900

An employee, having impaired and defective left eye, insufficient without his good right eye to enable him to pursue his occupation of logger, at time of industrial accident resulting in destruction of sight of right eye, was "suffering from previous disability or physical impairment" within statutory provision that employee so suffering shall not receive compensation for later permanent injury in excess of that allowed for such injury alone. St.1937, pp. 284, 285, §§ 4662, 4750.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Suffering from Previous Disability or Physical Impairment".

3. Workmen's compensation 🔑845

The general rule that workmen's compensation statutes must be liberally construed in employees' favor does not mean that statutory mandate that permanently injured employee, suffering from previous permanent disability or physical impairment, shall not receive compensation for later injury in excess of that allowed for such injury alone, is to be ignored. St. 1937, p. 285, § 4750.

* * *

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Joe Wolski, also known as Joseph Wolski, claimant, opposed by Sterling C. Linebaugh and another, employers, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, insurance carrier. From an award of compensation for permanent partial disability by the Industrial Accident Commission, claimant appeals.

Affirmed.

Virgil M. Airola, of San Andreas, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and R. C. McKellips, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner Wolski, aged 55 years, on December 2, 1943, while employed as a logger by respondents Sterling C. Linebaugh and Tena I. Linebaugh, sustained injury arising out of and occurring in the course of said employment, when a chip of wood struck his right eye and completely destroyed the sight thereof. The employers' insurance carrier was State Compensation Insurance Fund, and both employer and employee were subject to the Workmen's Compensation Laws of California. After a hearing the Industrial Accident Commission found the facts as above stated and further found that petitioner's injury caused permanent disability, the percentage of said disability for petitioner's age and occupation being 28¼% of total disability, entitling him to 113 weeks of disability payments of $25 each in the total sum of $2,825.

Petitioner in this proceeding contends that in making its award as aforesaid the Commission acted without and in excess of its jurisdiction and that the award is unreasonable and not justified by the evidence, because petitioner since childhood has possessed an impaired and defective left eye (squint eye) which eye alone and without his good right eye was not sufficient to enable him to pursue the occupation of a logger; and that since the injury to his right eye destroyed its vision, petitioner is now practically blind and unable to carry on his occupation as a logger, or in fact any occupation of any importance and that he is entitled to a total permanent disability rating.

The question before us thus is, whether, under Section 4750 of the Labor Code St.1937, p. 285, petitioner is entitled to compensation as for total permanent disability or for only that portion of his disability which is due to loss of vision in the right eye as though no prior disability or impairment of the left eye had existed.

Section 4750 of the Labor Code provides:

"An employee who is suffering from a previous permanent disability or physical impairment and sustains permanent injury thereafter shall not receive compensation for the later injury in excess of the compensation allowed for such injury when considered by itself and not in conjunction with or in relation to the previous disability or impairment.

"The employer shall not be liable for compensation to such an employee for the combined disability, but only for that portion due to the later injury as though no prior disability or impairment had existed."

Petitioner cites and relies upon Liptak v. Industrial Accident Comm., 200 Cal. 39, 251 P. 635; Ford Motor Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 202 Cal. 459, 464, 261 P. 466; Bartlett Hayward Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 203 Cal. 522, 524, 265 P. 195; United States Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 204 Cal. 88, 93, 266 P. 805; Edson v. Industrial Accident Comm., 206 Cal. 134, 136, 140, 273 P. 572; and Harris v. Industrial Accident Comm., 204 Cal. 432, 268 P. 902. Respondents argue that the foregoing cases were decided upon the law as it existed prior to its amendment in 1929, and that they are no longer applicable to a case such as is presented by petitioner.

We think respondents' contention must be sustained. Prior to 1929, Sec. 9(b) 2 (10) a of the Workmen's Compensation Act provided (see Stats.1925, Ch. 354, p. 643, and Stats.1919, Ch. 471, p. 916): "The percentage of permanent disability caused by any injury shall be so computed as to cover the permanent disability caused by that particular injury without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby." Also Sec. 9(b) 2 (9) provided, as does Sec. 4662 of the Labor Code today: "Any of the following permanent disabilities shall be conclusively presumed to be total in character: (a) Loss of both eyes or the sight thereof."

[1] In the Liptak case, above cited, petitioner, who had previously lost the sight of one eye in a non-industrial accident, lost the sight of the other eye in an industrial accident. The Industrial Accident Commission, following rules which it had applied in previous proceedings, awarded him disability payments based upon a finding of about 26¼% permanent disability. Petitioner contended that he should have been given a total permanent disability rating. Respondent invoked the provisions of Sec. 9(b) 2 (10), but the court held that the language of said section as it then read was ambiguous and uncertain, that it was susceptible of a construction favorable to petitioner's contention, and that, in view of the provisions of Sec. 9(b) 2 (9), supra, and of Sec. 69, par. (a) of the act, St.1917, p. 877, which called for a liberal construction of its terms in favor of an injured person, the uncertainty and ambiguity must be resolved in petitioner's favor. Other cases cited by petitioner, decided prior to 1929, follow the ruling in the Liptak case, though in Edson v. Industrial Accident Comm., supra, the court to some extent departed from the rule thereof. However in 1929 Sec. 9(b) 2 (10) was amended to read as Sec. 4750, supra, does today; and we think that said section clearly and unambiguously provides that where, as here, an industrial accident destroys the sight of a one-eyed man's sole good eye, his employer may not be held liable for compensation based on a rating of total permanent disability, but only for the portion of the disability due to the injury to the one eye, as if petitioner had had two good eyes and the sight of the one only had been destroyed. It is said in 1 Campbell's Workmen's Compensation, p. 737, Sec. 826:

"The Legislature in 1929 amended the Act to insure that each injury should be considered by itself and, so far as the liability of the employer is concerned, be rated as if prior injuries had not been suffered. This restores the former rule."

This is also the holding in Gardner v. Industrial Accident Comm., 28 Cal.App.2d 682, 83 P.2d 295, 296, decided in October, 1938. There the applicant, in June, 1937, sustained an injury to his left leg necessitating its amputation above the knee. He had, in a previous accident in another state, sustained an injury to his right leg that impaired its efficiency. His total permanent disability was rated at 58¾%, but 12% was deducted therefrom for the prior disability. The court cited Section 4750 of the Labor Code, and said: "The general rule is that industry is to be charged only for those injuries arising out of and in the course of employment and only for the result of that particular injury when considered by itself and not in conjunction with or in relation to a previous injury." Hearing in the Supreme Court was there denied. Also see State Compensation Fund v. Industrial Accident Comm., 43 Cal.App.2d 233, 235, 110 P.2d 510.

[2] Petitioner, seeking to avoid the effects of Sec. 4750, supra, alleges that prior to his injury his ability to compete with other laborers in the open market, and to perform the duties of a logger, for which occupation he had qualified himself, and to earn the same wages as others similarly engaged, was not lessened or diminished in any manner by reason of the defective left eye; and that he was not, therefore, prior to the injury to his right eye, suffering from any disability in his chosen occupation by reason of the defect in the left eye. We do not construe the words "suffering from a previous permanent disability or physical impairment," as used in Sec. 4750, to be so limited. The word "suffer" is defined in 60 Corpus Juris 990 as follows: "To be affected by; to bear; to undergo; to endure; to support." Webster's New International Dictionary, Second Edition, also contains the following as definitions of the word "suffer": "To submit to or be forced to endure the infliction, imposition, or penalty of; to bear as a victim or the like; as, to suffer martyrdom, severe losses, or a year's imprisonment; * * *. To undergo; to experience; to go or pass through; as to suffer alteration or deterioration; * * *. To be injured; to sustain loss or damage; as business suffers greatly from a long-continued depression." It cannot be denied that petitioner prior to the accident to his right eye "was affected by" the condition of his left eye and that he did "bear as a victim" the condition of same; and he alleges that he had since childhood been possessed of an impaired and defective left eye which alone and without his good right eye was not sufficient to enable him to pursue the occupation of a logger. We therefore hold that petitioner was, prior to the injury to his right eye, "suffering from a previous permanent disability or physical impairment" within the meaning of Sec. 4750 of the Labor Code, and that his employers were liable to him for compensation only for that portion of his disability due to the injury to his right eye as though no prior impairment of the left eye had existed.

[3] While it is provided by the Workmen's Act itself, and generally held by the courts, that such statutes are to be liberally construed in favor of the employee, this does not mean that the legislative mandate of Sec. 4750 is to be ignored. As stated by Campbell in Vol. 1 Workmen's Compensation, p. 737, sec. 827, the purpose of such legislation is to remove any reasonable ground for an employer to refuse to hire one-armed, one-legged, or one-eyed men. In short, it is intended for the long-range benefit of handicapped workmen, and it is not for the court to say that it is not calculated to effect that result.

The award is affirmed.

THOMPSON and PEEK, JJ., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 457

PEOPLE v. HUGHES.

Cr. 2346.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Aug. 7, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⇨1159(5)

In prosecution for robbery and mayhem, where record disclosed no possible ground for ascribing any improper motive to complaining witness, a consideration of the motive and propensities of witnesses did not require the acceptance of defendant's testimony in support of defense of alibi as conclusive proof of that defense.

2. Criminal law ⇨572

Evidence sustained conviction of robbery and mayhem as against defense of alibi.

3. Criminal law ⇨1134(2)

Defendant's willingness to take witness stand in his own defense, to talk freely with arresting officers and to district attorney as indicative of his innocence are appropriate in an argument to court or jury as triers of fact but present no issue on appeal.

4. Criminal law ⇨1159(5)

Where complaining witness in prosecution for robbery and mayhem who was permanently blinded in the commission of offense upon him, on issue of identity, identified one of his assailants as a man with whom witness had worked, testified as to the name which such person had then used, described his physical features and his voice, and jury was in position to determine whether description fitted defendant, jury's finding on issue of identity could not be disturbed on appeal.

5. Criminal law ⚷792(3)

Proposed instruction in prosecution for mayhem and robbery that if jury were satisfied that defendant was present at time offenses were alleged to have been committed but did not act to aid and abet such offenses jury should find defendant not guilty was properly refused as an incomplete statement of the law.

6. Criminal law ⚷59(3)

Presence of a defendant at the commission of a felony by another is evidence to be considered together with all the circumstances immediately preceding, attending and following the perpetration of the felony as tending to show defendant's complicity in the offense. Pen.Code, § 31.

7. Criminal law ⚷726

Under the circumstances, district attorney's interruption of argument of defendant's counsel to the jury was not misconduct.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Francisco County; Frank T. Deasy, Judge.

Joe C. Hughes was convicted of robbery and mayhem and from the judgments of conviction and order denying his motion for new trial, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph A. Garry, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener and Miriam E. Wolff, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Informations charging defendant with robbery and mayhem were consolidated and tried to a jury which returned verdicts of guilty on both charges. Defendant's motion for a new trial was ordered denied. He appeals from the judgments and the order.

Nelson, the complaining witness, testified that he had known and lived with defendant for about two months at a farm where they had both been sent after conviction of drunkenness. On June 8, 1944, Nelson went to Oakland after work to see a doctor, returned to San Francisco and entered a tavern at First and Mission streets at "approximately close to nine o'clock" to have a sandwich and beer. While drinking the beer he noticed defendant and another man and started conversing with them. One of the men told Nelson that "they had a bottle" and invited him outside for a drink. He thereupon opened his wallet; paid his check and left with the two men. Upon reaching a gasoline station at Main and Howard streets the unidentified man demanded Nelson's pocketbook. The victim handed the man a wallet containing identification cards but upon further demand gave him the wallet in which he kept his money. Throughout the altercation between Nelson and the other party the defendant stood a few feet away and did nothing other than to serve as a lookout for his associate. Nelson told defendant that it was a serious offense in which the men were engaged and that he would do time at the penitentiary, whereupon the other man raised his arms and Nelson recalled nothing more. He was found the next morning by the gas station attendant and was sent to the hospital. A streetcleaner found Nelson's wallets nearby and turned them over to the police. Nelson was taken to a hospital where his eyes were found to be so badly ruptured and so swollen that no examination was possible for eleven days; his face was badly bruised and his mental condition was such that no case history could be provided until two months after the beating. The injury to the eyes was such that he became permanently blind.

The defendant denied that he had any participation in the altercation, denied that he had ever been in the tavern, and testified that he was in another part of the city at the time of the attack. He was substanially contradicted in all his testimony and left the jurors no course other than to decide whether they would believe the straightforward testimony of the victim or the denials of the defendant.

On this appeal his first ground urged for a reversal is that this court should overturn the verdict of the jury and determine that his testimony in support of his defense of "alibi" should be accepted as conclusive proof of that defense. He rests his argument on the statement in Herbert v. Lankershim, 9 Cal.2d 409, 471, 71 P.2d 220, 251, relative to the function of the reviewing court where the issue of the sufficiency of the evidence is raised and reading: "This rule, however, does not relieve an appellate court of its duty of analyzing the evidence in the light of reason and human experience and giving consideration to the motives and propensities which tend to influence or prompt human action, in an effort to solve the question as to whether the judgment is reasonably and substantially sustained by the evidence."

[1, 2] A consideration of the "motives and propensities" of the witnesses would not aid appellant. There is no possible ground for ascribing any improper motive to the complaining witness. His testimony was straightforward and no reason is suggested why it should be rejected. On the other hand it is elementary that a defendant in a criminal case will tell his story in the light most favorable to his defense. Here the complaining witness testified that he entered that tavern at "approximately" 9 o'clock in the evening and noticed appellant and his companion about fifteen minutes later. The appellant testified that he worked until 9:15, took a bus downtown, and ate supper at a cafeteria a few blocks from the tavern. Neither witness was shown to have looked at a clock or watch in fixing the time. As appellant states in his brief "we had a hopeless conflict between the evidence for the prosecution and the evidence for the defense." It was a conflict for the jury to decide. The defense of alibi is a good defense if the jurors believe it, but when the evidence is conflicting the jury's findings will not be disturbed on appeal. People v. Spillard, 15 Cal.App.2d 649, 652, 59 P.2d 887.

[3, 4] The repeated references in appellant's brief to his willingness to take the witness stand in his own defense, to talk freely with the arresting officers and to the district attorney as indicative of his innocence are all appropriate in an argument to the court or jury as triers of the fact; but they present no issue on the appeal. The same may be said as to the evidence identifying the appellant. The testimony of the complaining witness was clear and definite both as to description of the physical features of appellant, as to his voice, and as to the name by which he was known when they worked together. This was done by a blind man in the presence of the jury and the jurors were in a position to determine whether the description fitted the individual who stood before them. This finding of the jury on that issue cannot be disturbed. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459, 463, 2 P.2d 814.

The appellant criticizes the action of the trial court in repeating "practically the same instructions" on aiding and abetting. Cases are cited in which the reviewing court admonishes the trial court that this is not good practice and should be avoided. No case is cited holding that it is reversible error.

[5] The appellant assigns error in the refusal to give his proposed instruction reading: "If, on the other hand, you should be satisfied to a moral certainty and beyond all reasonable doubt from the evidence that the defendant was present at the time the offenses are alleged to have been committed, but that he did no act to aid and abet the same, you should find the defendant not guilty."

[6] The proposed instruction is an incomplete statement of the law though it was approved in People v. Woodward, 45 Cal. 293, 13 Am.Rep. 176. A more correct statement is found in People v. Torrillo, 60 Cal.App.2d 755, 759, 141 P.2d 472, 474, where it is said: "Presence of a defendant at the commission of a felony by another is evidence to be considered, together with all of the circumstances immediately preceding, attending, and following the perpetration of the felony, as tending to show defendant's complicity in the crime. People v. Erno, 195 Cal. 272, 278, 232 P. 710; People v. Yeager, 194 Cal. 452, 460, 229 P. 40; People v. Woodward, 45 Cal. 293, 294, 13 Am.Rep. 176; People v. Ho Kim You, 24 Cal.App. 451, 462, 141 P. 950."

This is in accord with the express provisions of section 31 of the Penal Code reading, in part: "All persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether it be felony or misdemeanor, and whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, * * * are principals in any crime so committed." Here the jury was properly instructed in accordance with these authorities whereas the instruction proposed by appellant might have confused the jury as to whether it was necessary to find that appellant took an active part in the physical assault or in the robbery.

[7] Finally it is argued that there was some sort of misconduct on the part of the district attorney when he interrupted the argument to the jury of appellant's counsel. Both parties had got off the record in their controversy and the trial judge brought them back to a discussion of the evidence. He thereafter instructed the jury to disregard all statements of counsel not supported by the record. The charge of misconduct is too trivial for further treatment.

The judgments and the order are affirmed.

GOODELL, J. and DOOLING, J., pro tem. concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 330

In re LAIR'S ESTATE.

SHNELL et al. v. BRUNTON.

Civ. 14368.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

July 27, 1945.

1. Trusts 🔑227

Where testamentary trustee died and his attorney was appointed administrator of his estate, the superior court had jurisdiction to award attorney's fees direct to the attorney for the trustee for legal services rendered during the life of the trustee. Probate Code, §§ 911, 1120, 1122.

2. Trusts 🔑227

Where testamentary trustee died and his attorney was appointed administrator of his estate, such administrator in presenting the account of the deceased trustee was acting in a representative capacity as administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee, and the fees for his services as such representative should be awarded to him in his representative capacity and not to him individually, and an award to him individually would be a direct judgment for money in favor of a person not a party to the proceeding and would be void. Probate Code, §§ 911, 1120, 1122.

3. Trusts 🔑227

A testamentary trustee who acts as attorney for himself cannot be given compensation for his services as such attorney. Probate Code, §§ 911, 1120, 1122.

4. Trusts 🔑227

Where testamentary trustee died and his attorney was appointed administrator of his estate and claimed fees for services rendered both before and after the death of such trustee and there was an award for his services as attorney and as administrator, it must be assumed that lump-sum judgment included an award for legal services after the death of the testamentary trustee, and so far as the judgment did so it was erroneous and would be reversed. Probate Code, §§ 911, 1120, 1122.

5. Trusts 🔑227

Where court had determined that beneficiaries' efforts to charge testamentary trustee personally for lien against estate and to remove him were unwarranted and it was necessary for court to determine ownership of corpus, it was proper for trustee and his attorney to call to court's attention the efforts of the remainder-beneficiaries to impair the provisions of the trust in violation of the contest provision in the will and the trustee and his attorney did not thereby attempt to destroy the trust so as to prevent the allowance of attorney's fees. Probate Code, §§ 911, 1120, 1122.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George A. Dockweiler, Judge.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of Nancy Ray Lair, deceased, on petition of A. W. Brunton, individually and as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of John W. Lair, deceased trustee, for settlement of an amended and supplemental first and final account which was contested by John W. Shnell and others. From judgment settling the account and awarding a lump-sum fee to A. W. Brunton for services as attorney and administrator of the estate of John W. Lair, deceased trustee, and distributing the trust estate to the remainder-beneficiaries, the contestants appeal.

Judgment in accordance with opinion.

Prior opinion 157 P.2d 16.

Charles W. Cradick, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

A. W. Brunton, of Los Angeles, in pro. per., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment settling an amended and supplemental first and final account rendered by the legal representative of a deceased trustee of a testamentary trust; awarding a "lump sum" fee to A. W. Brunton "for services as attorney and administrator of the estate" of the deceased trustee; and distributing the trust estate to the remainder-beneficiaries. Although the notice of appeal states that the appeal is from the whole judgment, the brief of appellant states that the appeal is directed only to the following portion thereof: "It is further Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed, that the said A. W. Brunton be and he is hereby allowed the sum of $800.00 for his services as attorney and as Administrator of the Estate of John W. Lair, rendered in the above entitled matter, and that the said A. W. Brunton have a lien upon all of the assets of said trust estate to secure the payment of said sum of $800.00."

Appellants contend in part that the court was without jurisdiction to award attorney's fees direct to the attorney for the trustee; that an administrator or a testamentary trustee who acts as attorney for himself cannot have compensation for his services as attorney; and that when a part of a lump sum allowance for fees has been made upon an improper basis and there is no means of segregating the improper part from the total allowance, the whole order for fees should be reversed.

The appellants are the husband, son and daughter of a deceased sister of the trustor, Nancy Ray Lair, deceased, which sister was one of four remainder-beneficiaries of the corpus of the trust. The appellants were the objectors to the account herein. The other beneficiaries have not appealed.

In 1936 John W. Lair became the trustee of the testamentary trust of his deceased wife, Nancy Ray Lair. Under the provisions of the trust he was to receive the income from the trust during his life and upon his death the corpus of the trust was to be distributed to her brother and three sisters. In 1939 he filed his first account as such trustee. The remainder-beneficiaries objected to the account upon the ground, among others, that the trustees should be charged personally with $850 which had been made a lien upon the corpus of the estate during the administration and before distribution to the trustee. That objection was sustained, but the order was reversed on appeal. In re Estate of Lair, 38 Cal.App.2d 737, 102 P.2d 436. Upon a rehearing of the account after the reversal, the trial court found that an item of $55.11 (which the trustee had listed as income) was a part of the corpus, and ordered that said sum should be charged against the trustee personally; and further ordered that no expenses should be charged against the corpus of the estate. Those orders were reversed on appeal. In re Estate of Lair, 52 Cal. App.2d 222, 126 P.2d 133. Soon after the trial court in 1939 had ordered that the trustee be charged personally with the $850, the remainder-beneficiaries filed a complaint, designated a bill in equity, to remove the trustee. That action was tried and submitted on January 20, 1941. On February 6, 1941, before the decision therein was rendered, the trustee John W. Lair died. While the first appeal, above mentioned, was pending the trustee filed a second account, and after the reversal on that appeal he filed an amended and supplemental second account which was set for hearing on February 7, 1941. Mr. Lair having died prior to the date for that hearing, the matter of said second account was placed off calendar pending the appointment of a legal representative of the deceased trustee. A. W. Brunton, an attorney at law who had been the attorney for the trustee John W. Lair, was appointed administrator with the will annexed of the estate of John W. Lair, deceased, on March 11, 1941. As such administrator, Mr. Brunton was substituted in place of Mr. Lair in the action which had been submitted on January 20, 1941. That action was decided on June 5, 1941, and it was therein adjudged that plaintiff recover $55.11 from defendant for the benefit of the corpus of the trust estate. That judgment was reversed on apeal. Shnell v. Brunton, 52 Cal.App.2d 226, 126 P.2d 135.

On November 20, 1942, Mr. Brunton, as such administrator of the deceased trustee's estate, filed the amended and supplemental first and final account, petition for fees, and petition to determine ownership of corpus, which are involved herein.

In the petition for fees the administrator asked that fees in the sum of $50 be allowed A. W. Brunton as administrator for services rendered by the deceased trustee, and that fees in the sum of $3,000 "be allowed A. W. Brunton as attorney for said trustee and as Administrator" of his estate for services rendered as such administrator. The petition alleged that, in connection with the action to remove the trustee, Mr. Brunton rendered sixty-nine hours of services as attorney for the trustee prior to the death of the trustee, and that after the death of the trustee Mr. Brunton rendered fifty-five hours "appearing in pro. per." as administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee; that he spent five hours in preparing the first account and ten additional hours in preparing a first account rendered by himself as administrator (not the one now before the court); that he had spent ten hours in preparing the account now before the court and he would spend ten additional hours in the hearing of the account and preparing the findings and decree; and that he spent more than one hundred hours in connection with the first account filed by the trustee, including the appeals involved therein. Mr. Brunton submitted evidence in support of those allegations.

It therefore appears that the petitioner sought an allowance for the services of the deceased trustee, and sought an allowance for the services of himself as attorney rendered before and after the death of the trustee, and for services as administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee; that the court made no allowance for the services of the deceased trustee although it found (in its general findings) that he had rendered services of the value of $50; and that the court made a lump sum allowance of $800 to A. W. Brunton individually "for his services as attorney and as Administrator."

[1] Appellants assert, as above stated, that the court was without jurisdiction to award attorney's fees direct to the attorney for the trustee. Their argument is that there is no statutory provision authorizing the court to award attorney's fees in such manner; that Section 1122 of the Probate Code, which provides that "the court shall allow the trustee his proper expenses," is the only statute providing for the payment of fees for the services of the trustee's attorney and, by reason of that provision, such fees must be awarded to the trustee and not direct to the attorney; that the only exception to the requirement that such fees be awarded to the trustee is that when the trustee is without funds of the estate in his possession he may by agreement require the attorney to look solely to the trust estate for his fees, and under such circumstances the attorney could proceed in equity to satisfy his claim from the trust estate; that such an exception does not exist herein; that the provisions of Section 911 of the Probate Code, whereby the court is authorized to award attorney's fees direct to an attorney who has rendered services to an executor or administrator, do not apply in the matter of awarding fees for services of an attorney for a trustee; that amending Section 1616 of the Code of Civil Procedure (from which Section 911 of the Probate Code was taken) to allow the court to award payment direct to an attorney for an executor or administrator, and the failure to amend Section 1700 of the Code of Civil Procedure (from which Section 1122 of the Probate Code was taken) in such manner as to allow the court to award payment direct to an attorney for a trustee, and the failure to so amend Section 1122 of the Probate Code, show that it was not the intention of the Legislature that such an award be made direct to an attorney for a trustee. Section 1120 of the Probate Code provides that: "When a trust created by a will continues after distribution, the superior court shall not lose jurisdiction of the estate by final distribution, but shall retain jurisdiction for the purpose of * * * settling the accounts * * * of the trustee * * *." In the Estate of Smead, 16 Cal.2d 204, 105 P.2d 589, wherein fees for services of an attorney for a testamentary trustee had been awarded direct to the attorney, it was said that in a former appeal in the Estate of Smead, 12 Cal.2d 20, 82 P.2d 182, "it was determined that the court in settling the accounts of the testamentary trustee was acting in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction. That jurisdiction was continuing and attached to the corpus of the trust when it passed from the respondent as executor to himself as testamentary trustee. Thus it was proper for the court to make provision for attorney's fees in its decree settling the trustee's accounts in conformity with the law applicable to decedent's estates". [16 Cal.2d 204, 105 P.2d 590]. Under the authority of the Estate of Smead, 16 Cal.2d 204, 105 P.2d 589, the superior court in the present case, involving a testamentary trust, had jurisdiction to award attorney's fees direct to A. W. Brunton, the attorney for the trustee, for legal services rendered by him while Mr. Lair was trustee. Whether the circumstances herein were such as would justify an award direct to the attorney for the trustee was for the court in probate to decide.

[2] The respondent, A. W. Brunton, as administrator with the will annexed of the Estate of John W. Lair, deceased, contends in his supplemental brief that since the Smead Estate decision determines that an award of attorney's fees may be direct to the attorney for the trustee, the court should also have power to award fees for services of the administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee direct to the administrator. His argument in that behalf is that the services he performed as administrator were for the testamentary trust created by Mrs. Lair and were not for the estate of Mr. Lair. Mr. Brunton, in presenting the account of the deceased trustee, was acting in a representative capacity as administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee, and the fees for his services as such representative should be awarded to him in his representative capacity and not to him individually. As an individual he was a stranger to the proceeding. An award to him individually would be a direct judgment for money in favor of a person not a party to the proceeding and would be void. In Garra v. Superior Court, 58 Cal.App.2d 588, 137 P.2d 31, which was a proceeding to prohibit the trial court from enforcing an order that attorney's fees be paid direct to the attorney for a guardian, it was said at pages 590, 591 of 58 Cal.App.2d, at page 32 of 137 P.2d: "* * * the decree * * * in so far as it purports to award attorney's fees directly [to the attorney] is void, as the court had no jurisdiction to award 'judgment' to a person not a party to the proceedings." There is no statutory provision authorizing an award of fees from a trust estate to an administrator of the estate of a deceased trustee, individually, for his services as such trustee. Mr. Brunton was entitled to compensation for his services as administrator of the estate of the deceased trustee, and it would have been proper to make an award for such services to him as such administrator.

[3, 4] Appellants' further contention, that a testamentary trustee who acts as attorney for himself cannot be given compensation for his services as such attorney, is sustained. In Re Estate of Parker, 1926, 200 Cal. 132, at page 135, 251 P. 907, at page 909, 49 A.L.R. 1025, it was said: "An executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee who is himself an attorney at law may properly employ another attorney to render the necessary legal services for the estate. * * * But if the executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee, being himself a practicing lawyer, elects to act as his own attorney * * * the general rule is that he will not be entitled to an allowance against the estate for his professional services, in the absence of some statutory provision entitling him thereto." That rule is one of public policy forbidding one who acts in a fiduciary capacity to become his own employer. Estate of Parker, supra, 200 Cal. at page 136, 251 P. 907, 49 A.L.R. 1025. Respondent asserts that the circumstances herein bring him within the exception to that rule, which exception is stated in the Estate of Lankershim, 6 Cal.2d 568, 572–574, 58 P.2d 1282. In that matter an attorney and a bank were appointed special administrators with the apparent consent of all parties in interest. The attorney, by reason of his previous relations with the decedent and the appellants therein, was completely familiar with the affairs of the estate. It was apparent to all parties therein and to the court at the time of the appointment that the bank should perform the principal part of the routine duties of administration and that it would be greatly to the interest of the estate to have the duties of legal counsel performed by that attorney. Although it was openly stated to all the parties that the attorney proposed to waive fees as special administrator and look only to such allowance as might be made for his legal services, the appellants therein made no objection to the arrangement until the services had been performed. The court therein held that the appellants were estopped by their conduct in permitting the attorney to perform such services without affording him an opportunity of self protection if there was to be any challenge of his claim for compensation. In the present case the attorney was familiar with the affairs of the trust estate, but it does not appear that the appellants consented to the appointment of the attorney as administrator or that they in any way indicated approval of his dual position, but on the contrary it appears that at the time of his appointment as administrator the attorney and the appellants were involved in litigation which had been extended over a long period of time and in which their interests were adverse. In the present case estoppel is not involved and respondent is not within said exception. The petition for fees and the evidence in behalf of the petitioner are to the effect that some of the services for which fees were sought were legal services rendered by Mr. Brunton in propria persona as administrator of the deceased trustee's estate. The court found that "the services alleged in the petition for fees were rendered as alleged therein," and the court then enumerated in its findings various specific items of legal services rendered by Mr. Brunton after the death of Mr. Lair. It does not appear from the findings or the judgment that the amount awarded for fees did not include an award for such legal services rendered after the death of Mr. Lair, but it does appear from the judgment that the award was for Mr. Brunton's "services as attorney and as administrator," and under these circumstances it is to be assumed that the judgment included an award for legal services of Mr. Brunton after the death of Mr. Lair. Insofar as the judgment included an award for legal services of Mr. Brunton as attorney for himself as administrator of the deceased trustee's estate, it was erroneous.

Another contention of appellants is that since the allowance for fees is based partly upon services for which the court had no power to order payment, and since the fees were awarded in a lump sum and the condition of the record is such that the improperly allowed fees cannot be segregated from the total allowance, that the whole order for fees should be reversed. This contention is sustained. As above mentioned, it cannot be determined from the record what portion of the total award, if any, was awarded for legal services rendered during the life of Mr. Lair, and it cannot be determined therefrom what portion, if any, was awarded for legal services rendered after the death of Mr. Lair while Mr. Brunton was acting in propria persona. The fees awarded for legal services, and for services rendered as administrator, and for services of Mr. Lair as trustee, if any, should have been stated separately in the judgment in order that the interested parties might consider whether the amounts awarded for specific items were reasonable, whether the amounts were for services rendered by a person acting in a double capacity as attorney and administrator, and whether they were awarded upon any illegal basis.

Respondent asserts that the decision in the Estate of Scherer, 58 Cal.App.2d 133, 136 P.2d 103, is applicable here. In that matter, wherein an executor asked for $20,850 as executor's fees and attorney's fees for himself and was allowed $8,000, the items not being segregated, the court held that it was apparent that when all the services which might be characterized as "legal" were eliminated there would remain within the sphere of executor's services a sufficient amount of work for which an award of $8,000 could not be considered unreasonable. In the present case it appears that the legal services were much more extensive than the services as administrator, and it should not be concluded from the record on this appeal that if the legal services were eliminated the $800 allowed would be a reasonable sum for the services as administrator.

[5] Another contention of appellants is that the trustee and the administrator of the deceased trustee's estate sought to destroy the trust and therefore attorney's fees should not be allowed. The assertion that they sought to destroy the trust is based upon an allegation, in the petition herein to determine ownership of the corpus of the estate, to the effect that all of the remainder-beneficiaries had forfeited their interests in the trust because they had attacked the will of Nancy Ray Lair in violation of a contest provision in the will. The alleged violation was based upon their effort to charge the trustee personally with the $850 lien against the estate, and their efforts to remove him as trustee. The court had stated in the Estate of Lair, 1942, 52 Cal.App.2d 222, at page 225, 126 P.2d 133, at page 134, that the action, designated a bill in equity, to cancel the $850 lien and to remove the trustee was "an unfounded action" and "clearly there was no occasion for the filing of the suit," and that the $850 was charged properly against the corpus. It was necessary that the trial court herein determine the ownership of the corpus, and it was not improper to call the court's attention to the efforts of the remainder-beneficiaries to impair the provisions of the trust. Said contention of appellants is not sustained.

The portion of the judgment wherein A. W. Brunton was allowed "$800.00 for his services as attorney and as Administrator," which portion is the third paragraph of the judgment appealed from, is reversed; and the superior court is directed to fix and separately state and to secure by a lien on the assets of the trust estate, the fees, if any, properly payable: (1) For services rendered by John W. Lair as trustee; (2) for legal services rendered by A. W. Brunton as attorney for John W. Lair while Mr. Lair was trustee; and (3) for services rendered by A. W. Brunton as administrator with the will annexed of the estate of John W. Lair, deceased, in connection with said trust matters. The fees, if any, for items (1) and (3) just referred to should be awarded to A. W. Brunton, administrator with the will annexed of the estate of John W. Lair, deceased. The fees, if any, for item (2) for legal services rendered by A. W. Brunton as attorney for John W. Lair while Mr. Lair was trustee may be awarded direct to A. W. Brunton. The judgment as to all portions other than the third paragraph is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 439

PEOPLE v. VAUGHN.

Cr. 3887.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 2, 1945.

1. Indictment and Information 🔑3

The offenses of kidnapping, rape, assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, and violation of the Deadly Weapon Act could be prosecuted by information, rather than by indictment. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1970, § 2; Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 4; Const. art. 1, § 8.

2. Rape 🔑54(1)

The uncorroborated testimony of prosecutrix will sustain rape conviction. Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 4.

3. Rape 🔑51(2)

Testimony of prosecutrix, physician who examined her, and chemist who analyzed smears taken from her vaginal canal sufficiently established corpus delicti to sustain rape conviction. Pen.Code, § 261, subd. 4.

4. Criminal law 🔑1202(4)

Where accused prosecuted for violation of Deadly Weapon Act provision against possession of weapon by one convicted of a felony, and for other offenses, denied prior felony conviction charged in information, such prior conviction could be proved to jury. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1970, § 2; Pen.Code, §§ 969, 969a, 1025, 1093.

5. Assault and battery 🔑92
Criminal law 🔑572
Kidnapping 🔑5
Rape 🔑51(4, 7)
Weapons 🔑17(4)

Evidence supported conviction of kidnapping, rape, assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, and violation of the Deadly Weapon Act, as against contentions of improbability, lack of identification, lack of resistance, and alibi. Gen.Laws 1937, Act 1970, § 2; Pen. Code, § 261, subd. 4.

6. Criminal law 🔑1159(2, 4)

The determination of trier of facts on issue involving credibility of witnesses and weight of their testimony is conclusive on reviewing court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Robert F. Vaughn was convicted of kidnapping, rape, assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, and violation of the Deadly Weapon Act, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Robert F. Vaughn, in pro. per.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Everett W. Mattoon, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

On September 28, 1944, the District Attorney of Los Angeles County filed a second amended information containing six counts, the first three counts of which charged defendant with the commission on April 11, 1944, of the offenses of kidnapping, rape, and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury upon Mrs. Marion Davis. Counts 4 and 5 charged kidnapping and assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury committed by defendant on May 15, 1944, against Helen Rogers. Count 6 charged a violation on April 22, 1944, of the deadly weapon act, and in addition, defendant was charged with two prior convictions of felonies, i. e., burglary and perjury. He admitted the prior conviction of the crime of perjury, and the jury found him guilty on all six counts of the said information; that he was armed at the time he committed the offenses charged in counts 1, 2 and 3, and that he had suffered the prior conviction for the crime of burglary and had served a term of imprisonment therefor. This appeal is prosecuted from the judgment of conviction and also from the order denying the motion for a new trial.

Appellant appears in this court in propria persona, and makes many specifications of error which, he urges, entitle him to a reversal of the judgment and the order appealed from.

With respect to the offenses with which appellant was charged in the first three counts of the said information, Mrs. Davis testified that she was employed as a mail clerk at the Terminal Annex, United States Postoffice at Los Angeles, and left there at 2:30 a. m. on April 11, 1944; that she boarded a street car at Alameda and Macy Streets and went to Fifth and Spring Streets, where she transferred to a "U" car, from which she alighted at Washington Street and Central Avenue; that she proceeded to walk a block and a half to her home at 1232 East 20th Street; that when she reached the house next door to her home, she was accosted by appellant, who had stopped his automobile in the street; that he ran toward her, aiming his gun at her and forced her into his car, on the pretext that she was a woman named Rosa, who had some money belonging to him and that he was taking her to the police station; that after driving for twenty or thirty minutes, he stopped his car and accomplished an act of sexual intercourse with Mrs. Davis, against her will and without her consent, whereupon he drove her back to her home and left her there about 4:30 a. m. Later that morning Mrs. Davis, accompanied by a friend, reported the occurrence to the police, who took her to the police department hospital for an examination.

Willie Jones, who occupied an apartment in the same building in which Mrs. Davis lived, testified that around 3:20 in the morning of April 11, 1944, he was awakened by the voices of a man and a woman "talking awfully loud," and immediately thereafter he heard an automobile drive off; that he did not recognize the voices and did not hear what was said; that about an hour later, Mrs. Davis knocked on the door of his apartment; that she was crying and her knees were bruised, and at that time she related to him what had happened to her.

With respect to counts 4 and 5 of the said information, Mrs. Helen E. Rogers testified that in May of 1944, she was working at the Margold Cafe, 5259 South Central Avenue, and on May 14th she left there at 11:30 in the evening, walked to 51st and Central where she boarded a street car, later transferring to a bus in which she rode to Jefferson and San Pedro Streets. Within a block of this intersection, San Pedro curves into Avalon, and as the witness proceeded along Avalon toward 35th Street, a man "walked up toward me and stopped just before I reached the corner (of Avalon and 35th Street) * * * and asked me could I direct him to a person by the name of George Wright. * * * I told him no. * * * I continued to walk, and as I turned the corner, the gentleman stepped a little behind me and grabbed me." It was then about 12:05 a. m. of May 15th. Continuing, Mrs. Rogers testified that: "When he grabbed me I screamed, and as I started screaming he grabbed me around my neck and started choking me and dragging me at the same time toward the car which was parked on 35th Street facing Avalon. * * * he was pushing and pulling me toward this car. * * * He had both hands around my neck * * * choking me, and I was screaming all at the same time. * * * When he grabbed me he pinned my arms to my side. * * * I was on my feet until I reached the grass part of the pavement * * * about four feet (from the car) * * * As I reached the grass part I fell down on my knees by the force of his pushing me, dragging me over there to the car door * * * when he got me to the car door he turned my neck loose to open the door, holding me with one arm. Well, I was on my knees and I went, I fell onto the ground, with one of my knees, my right knee, to be exact, under me. I reached down and grabbed one of my shoes and pulled it off and struck him * * * somewhere around his temple, the side of his head * * * when I struck him he struck me * * * on my forehead, just above my left eye." By this time appellant had the door of his car open and had pushed the witness partly inside the car, but she continued to struggle, whereupon appellant struck her again, stunning her and breaking her glasses. She then "started screaming and crying and begging him not to strike me again, and whimpering, telling him I would go with him if he would not hurt me any more * * * I grabbed his tie and in that way tried to choke him * * * he was bending over me, still trying to get me in the car * * * I asked him to please let me get my shoes. It was then I realized both of them were off. * * * He told me he would get my shoes, but for me to turn his God damn tie loose, which I did, and he raised up and over me as if to go and get my shoes, and I rolled out of the car, and when I rolled out of the car I was half way on the curbing off the street, and half way in the street—not underneath the car, but just enough off the street that I wasn't lying completely on the sidewalk. He jumped over me and into the car and drives off and leaves me lying there."

In the meantime, the witness Cleophos Mack was on his way home from his girl friend's house, and in company with another boy, was sitting in a car near Jefferson and San Pedro, a short block from 35th and Avalon, when he heard "a woman's screams." He jumped out of the car and ran from Jefferson to 35th Street where he observed a man dragging a woman toward a car; the woman "was rolling on the ground when I saw her." When the witness Mack and his friend were within 10 or 11 feet of the automobile, "the man turned around and ran and got in the car and drove off. * * * He drove right past me and I got the license number and I saw the man," whom he identified as being the appellant. "I went over and helped the lady up, and I picked her pocket book up, and her glasses, and her shoes, and I took her home (a distance of 30 or 40 yards). * * * Her stockings were torn, her heels of her shoes were sort of bruised, and her glasses broken, and her blouse was torn, and she had a hicky on her head. When Mrs. Rogers reached home, the police were called and the witness Mack gave them the license number of appellant's car.

The prosecutrix Davis testified upon cross-examination, that the next time she saw appellant after April 11, 1944, was around 5:15 p. m. of May 15th; that she was sitting at Central Avenue and Washington Street waiting for a street car when she saw him pass in an automobile; that she was between 15 and 18 feet from him, got a good look at him and immediately recognized him as the man who had forced her into his car on April 11th; that she took the license number of his car and called the police. She further testified that the car which appellant was driving on May 15th stopped for the signal and drove on after the light changed, and that appellant did not see her; that when she identified appellant at the police station, four or five prisoners, all colored men, were lined up and she was brought into the room in which they were standing and made her identification of appellant to the police officers, McGruder and Broady.

The violation of the Deadly Weapon Act, charged in Count 6, was established by admissions of appellant and the testimony of the witness Chester Spencer to the effect that appellant on April 22, 1944, pawned a Colt's 38 caliber revolver, number 44325, at the pawn shop where the witness worked at 4368 South Central Avenue, and the original pawn ticket and the revolver were admitted in evidence as People's Exhibits 1 and 2. Appellant admitted that the signature on the pawn ticket was in his own handwriting and that he wrote it on April 22, 1944, and that he personally took the gun to the pawn shop; that he brought the gun from Texas on March 20, 1944, and kept it in his trunk in Los Angeles from that date until April 22, 1944, when he carried it to the pawn shop. He also admitted having been convicted of the crime of perjury in the State of Texas in December of 1938.

[1] There is no merit in appellant's first specification of error, that the offenses charged against him should have been by indictment instead of information. Const. Art. I, sec. 8; People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 83, 86, 60 P. 670.

Appellant's complaints that he was denied a fair and impartial trial, that the rules of evidence were disregarded, that the witnesses called by the State were prompted and coached, that there was prejudice on the part of the trial court, and that he was not properly represented by defense counsel, are not supported by reference to any particular instance or instances. However, a careful examination of the entire record fails to substantiate such claims, but as a matter of fact discloses that appellant was ably represented and that he had a fair and impartial trial.

[2] It is claimed that the corpus delicti was not established as to the charge of rape, in that the prosecution "did not make a showing to prove the substance of the crimes." The corpus delicti of the crime of rape consists of "an act of sexual intercourse, accomplished with a female not the wife of the perpetrator," where the victim "is prevented from resisting by threats of great and immediate bodily harm, accompanied by apparent power of execution * * *." Sub. 4, Sec. 261, Pen.Code. These elements were established by the testimony of the prosecutrix Davis, it being settled law that the uncorroborated testimony of a prosecutrix is sufficient to sustain a conviction of rape. 22 Cal.Jur. 399 and cases there cited; People v. Gidney, 10 Cal.2d 138, 143, 73 P.2d 1186; People v. Akey, 163 Cal. 54, 56, 124 P. 718. In People v. Gallagher, 108 Cal.App. 128, 129, 291 P. 626, 627, the court stated as follows: "The first point made for reversal is that there was no testimony proving the corpus delicti of the offense alleged. A review of the testimony of the complaining witness reveals that she testified that she had sexual intercourse with the defendant at the time and place set forth in the information. This testimony completely answers the appellant's contention. The argument of appellant likewise, that he was convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the complaining witness furnishes no ground for a reversal of the judgment. A review of the cases cited in 22 California Jurisprudence, p. 399, shows clearly that, if the jury accepts the testimony of the complaining witness as true, nothing further is required to sustain a conviction. The cases cited are all one way, and it is unnecessary to refer to any authorities other than those cited in California Jurisprudence to which we have referred."

In the instant case, however, there was corroboration of the testimony of the complaining witness by the doctor who examined her immediately after the alleged attack, and also by the chemist who analyzed the smears taken by the doctor from the vaginal canal of the prosecutrix.

[3] The claim that penetration was not proved and that no male spermatozoa was produced ignores the testimony of the prosecutrix Davis and the corroborating testimony of the doctor and chemist hereinbefore mentioned.

[4] Appellant urges that the prosecution violated section 1025 of the Penal Code when they branded him an "ex-convict during the trial procedure of the gun act, before prosecuting the First, Second, Third, Fourth and Fifth Counts of said Information." Sections 969 and 969a of the Penal Code require that all known previous convictions of felonies must be charged in the indictment or information and the defendant required to plead thereto. In the instant cause, the information charged appellant with two prior convictions. He admitted one, that of perjury, but he denied that he had previously been convicted of the crime of burglary. It is only when an information charges a defendant with the commission of a felony and also charges a previous conviction which is confessed by the defendant, that the charge of such previous conviction cannot be read to the jury nor alluded to at the trial. Secs. 1025 and 1093, Penal Code. Hence, in the procedure followed at the trial in the instant case, there was no violation of section 1025, because appellant having denied the prior conviction of the crime of burglary, it became necessary to establish such prior conviction in connection with Count 6 of the information which charged a violation of section 2 of the so-called Deadly Weapon Act to-wit: "* * * no person * * * who has been convicted of a felony under the laws of the United States, of the state of California, or any other state * * * shall own or have in his possession or under his custody or control any pistol, revolver or other firearm capable of being concealed upon the person." Act 1970, Deering's General Laws.

[5] With respect to the claim that the evidence was highly improbable, it was held in People v. Asavis, 27 Cal.App.2d 685, 688, 81 P.2d 595, 596, that: "We are not directed to, nor do we find in this record, anything that would justify this court in stamping the story of the prosecutrix as inherently unbelievable or even improbable. As was said in People v. Haydon, 18 Cal.App. 543, 123 P. 1102, 1108, 1114, 'A statement, to bear upon its face the brand of improbability, or which may be said to be unbelievable per se, must involve, we think, a claim that something has been done that it would not seem possible could be done under the circumstances described, or involve conduct that no one but a person of a seriously calentured mentality would be likely to do.'" The stories of the two complaining witnesses with respect to what occurred upon the two occasions hereinbefore set forth, which were corroborated by other witnesses, instead of being highly improbable, were entirely reasonable and probable.

The claim by appellant that he was not sufficiently identified does not find support in the record. As to the commission of the offenses against Mrs. Davis on April 11th, she had ample opportunity to scrutinize her assailant, both when he was standing over her threatening her with his gun, and later in the automobile, when, in addition to his other features, she noted his gold tooth. She had no difficulty in picking him out of a group of colored men in a line-up at the police station. As the perpetrator of the offenses committed against Mrs. Rogers on May 15th, he was positively identified not only by Mrs. Rogers, whom he approached under the street light on Avalon near 35th Street, but also by Mr. Mack, who rescued her.

Appellant also argues that there was lack of resistance on the part of prosecutrix Davis as to the offenses committed against her on April 11th. The testimony of Mrs. Davis is replete with evidence of her attempt to flee from appellant in order to reach her home, also of her pleas to be released when caught and her extreme fear of the revolver used by appellant in the accomplishment of his purpose.

[6] As a final point urged as a ground for reversal of the judgment herein, appellant asserts he established alibis in that he proved "by witnesses where he was at the time and during the alleged attacks." With respect to the offenses committed after three o'clock on the morning of April 11, which included the offense of rape, his testimony, which is uncorroborated by any of the three persons in whose company he claims to have been, was that he was at the Little Harlem Cafe until about 1:30 a. m., and that "at the early hours of the morning I was at home." No corroboration of this testimony was offered, and no further attempt was made to establish an alibi for the offenses committed between the hours of 3:20 and 4:30 of that morning. As for the offenses committed shortly after midnight on May 15th, he testified that he went to Miss Smith's house at about 11:15 p. m. on May 14th and "stayed there two or three hours," returning to his home from there. Miss Smith testified that appellant came to her house and remained two hours, but on cross-examination when asked whether anything unusual occurred to make her note the time he left, she replied, "No; I just estimated that he stayed there for about two hours." In this connection, appellant urges that he "proved he was employed and was engaged in working during those times whereupon the attacks took place," is not supported by the record. The timekeeper of the Southern Pacific Company testified that the records of the company showed that appellant appeared at work at 10:00 a. m., on May 15th, working on the train which went to San Francisco on that day, and returned to Los Angeles at 1:00 p. m. on May 16th. No offenses were charged as having been committed during any of this period. The crimes nearest in time to the period so testified to were perpetrated shortly after midnight on May 15th. Appellant was in Los Angeles at that time, and did not report for work until over nine hours thereafter. The question of the claimed alibis, which are weak at best, involves the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be accorded their testimony, therefore the determination of the trier of the facts is conclusive upon this court.

One discrepancy in the testimony of Mrs. Davis is pointed out in respondent's brief, to-wit: This witness testified that she saw appellant at about 5:15 p. m., of May 15th at Central and Washington, where she was sitting on a seat waiting for the street car and saw him pass; that he was in the same car that she saw and rode in on April 11th and she took the license number of it; that she was 15 to 18 feet from him and recognized him, and also saw a bottle of lotion in the car which she had noticed when she was in the car on April 11th; that she was sure of the lotion and sure of the identity of the man and that she put the license number down and called the police. Thereafter, the timekeeper of the Southern Pacific Company testified from his records that appellant reported for work at 10:00 a. m. of May 15th and went to San Francisco on a train that day, returning to Los Angeles on May 16th at 1:00 p. m. From this it would appear that Mrs. Davis was either confused or mistaken as to the date upon which she saw appellant pass her in his car.

An examination of the record herein discloses that appellant was accorded a fair and impartial trial, remarkably free from error, and that the evidence presented was sufficient to support the verdicts of the jury finding appellant guilty, as charged.

For the reasons stated, the judgment and the order appealed from are, and each of them is, affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 508

PEOPLE v. FINKEL.

Cr. 2304.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 14, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 13, 1945.

1. Burglary 🔑41(1)

Evidence supported conviction on count of indictment charging defendant with burglary in entering an apartment with felonious intent to commit theft, though no theft was committed, where it was a fair inference that such was one of defendant's intentions. Pen.Code, § 459.

2. Assault and battery 🔑91

Evidence supported conviction of simple assult under a count in indictment charging assault with intent to commit rape.

3. Burglary 🔑41(1)
Rape 🔑51(1), 53(2)
Robbery 🔑24(1)

Evidence, including identification of defendant by victims, supported conviction of rape, robbery and burglary of premises of one of victims as charged in sixth, seventh and eight counts of indictment, and of assault with intent to commit rape and of burglary of premises of another victim as charged in counts nine and ten. Pen. Code, § 459.

4. Criminal law 🔑737(1)

The strength or weakness of identification of defendant is a matter for jury's determination.

5. Criminal law 🔑1134(3)

Question whether trial court erred in refusing to instruct jury to acquit on one of counts of indictment became moot, where sentence on that count had been served before appeal was perfected.

6. Criminal law 🔑768(1)

Where uncontradicted evidence other than that of prosecutrix showed that a criminal attack had been made in middle of night after an unlawful entry into woman's bedroom, and prosecutrix' testimony relating to the assault was corroborated by other circumstances, a cautionary instruction that such charges were easily made and difficult to disprove was unnecessary.

7. Criminal law 🔑1173(1)

In prosecutions such as for rape, circumstances would determine whether failure to give cautionary instruction that such charges were easily made and difficult to disprove constituted prejudicial error.

8. Rape 🔑59(12)

Where burden of defense was an attack upon testimony of witnesses identifying defendant as party committing crimes, an instruction that fact that complaining witnesses made prompt complaint to authorities could be considered in corroboration of other testimony given by them was not error.

9. Criminal law 🔑1169(11)

A reversal can be had on ground that testimony as to offenses other than those charged were admitted over defendant's objection only when claimed error appears to have been prejudicial.

10. Criminal law 🔑1169(5)

In prosecution under indictment charging rape, robbery, burglary, and attempt to commit rape in respect to five different women, admission of testimony of police officer detailing his conversation with defendant relating to similar offenses committed elsewhere or charged to him, which was thereafter stricken on defendant's motion and jury was instructed to disregard it, did not entitle defendant to a reversal, where defendant did not attempt to show how testimony could be deemed prejudicial.

11. Grand jury ⚷36

Grand jury was not required to compel defendant to appear before it when he was under investigation for purpose of enabling witnesses to identify him. Pen. Code, § 920.

12. Indictment and information ⚷140(1)

If there is some evidence to support indictment, court will not inquire into its sufficiency on motion to quash.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Francisco County; Edward P. Murphy, Judge.

Joseph Finkel was convicted of rape, robbery, burglary, attempt to commit rape, and simple assault, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged in thirteen counts of an indictment with rape, robbery, burglary, and attempt to commit rape in respect to five different women. On a trial to a jury he was acquitted on the charges alleged in counts 1 to 3, inclusive, and counts 11 to 13, inclusive. He was convicted on the charges found in counts 4, 6 to 10, inclusive, and guilty of the lesser offense of simple assault on the charge of assault with intent to commit rape found in count 5. The jury also found that the charge of a prior offense of attempt to commit rape in Honolulu was true. Consecutive sentences were imposed for the various offenses of which he was found guilty and his motion for a new trial was denied. His appeal is from the judgment and the order denying a new trial.

A brief statement of the facts will suffice, as it cannot be seriously argued that the evidence relating to the various assaults is insufficient to support the verdicts.

The transactions upon which the counts of the indictment were based differ in detail, but in substance they were all similar. Briefly, it appeared that each of the women involved resided in either a basement room or apartment in San Francisco. In each case, no other adult was present except the victim. In each instance, except in the case of Mrs. Wilhelmson, the woman awoke at night to find a man choking her. Mrs. Wilhelmson heard a noise, got out of bed, and found the man standing in the clothes closet. He attempted in each case to bind and blindfold the victim. He then, except in the case of Miss Brockman and Miss Farris, committed an act of rape, and upon its conclusion extracted money from the victim's purse. In all instances he informed the victim he would not hurt them if they were "nice to him," and he stifled their outcrys by choking them. The women all appeared to have a similar impression of his voice. Miss Brockman struggled successfully with him and he was unable either to rape or rob her, and finally fled after inflicting numerous scratches and bruises on her body. It was on this transaction that defendant was convicted only of simple assault and burglary and was sentenced to five months in the county jail on the former. Miss Farris' room-mate returned home while the man was binding her and he ran out without accomplishing his purpose.

The women all identified their attacker as a negro, or as a white man with negro blood or features, or as a Mexican or "foreigner". However, four of these women picked Finkel in the police line-up and identified his picture beforehand, picking it out of a group of five. The police originally traced him through a laundry mark bearing the initial "F" found torn off of a piece of linen used to bind and gag one of the victims.

It was also shown that a fellow prisoner—formerly a barber—had been giving Finkel skin bleaching treatments with a preparation containing Fuller's earth while the defendant was confined in the county jail awaiting trial. The barber had also cut Finkel's naturally kinky hair into waves and had shaved his eyebrows, which altered his appearance greatly. This testimony was denied by witnesses for the defense, whose testimony, however, was fully impeached.

[1] Appellant attacks the fourth count of the indictment on which he was found guilty as not supported by the evidence. It charged him with the crime of burglary in entering the apartment of Ann Brockman "with the felonious intent * * * to commit theft." Appellant argues that the only evidence of intent was that he intended to commit the crime denounced by section 288a of the Penal Code; that the evidence shows that he was prevented from doing so by the resistance of his intended victim, that no theft was committed, and hence no proof of a burglary. The argument is facetious. In substance it is that if a man enters the bedroom of a strange woman in the middle of the night, finds her asleep in bed, blindfolds her and ties her hands, tries to attack her, but is kicked out of the bed by the intended victim who throws the bed over on him and sets up such an outcry that he has to flee, his statement that he just wanted a glass of water must be taken as conclusive proof that his entry was without criminal intent. Burglary is defined in section 459 of the Penal Code as an entry "with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony." "* * * one can commit burglary by entering a building with intent to commit any felony, such as rape, robbery, arson, or murder." People v. Devlin, 143 Cal. 128, 129, 76 P. 900. Though the indictment charge "intent to commit theft" and no theft was committed, it was a fair inference from all the evidence that such was one of his intentions.

The evidence amply supports the verdict on this count and the identification of the appellant was complete. He was recognised by the complainant and two other occupants of the apartment house who saw him escaping from the premises.

[2] No good purpose can be served in an extended treatment of appellant's attack upon the verdict in respect to count five. He was charged with an assault with intent to commit rape and was convicted of a simple assault. He argues that from the evidence that he stated he intended to commit sodomy and not rape the "simple assault" was an offense included in the major offense of sodomy which was not charged. As we said in reference to the fourth count the intent of the assailant in a case of this character may be determined from his actions and the surrounding circumstances. Though appellant has now served the sentence on this count and the questions raised are moot (except his argument that this count and the evidence supporting it were improperly added by the prosecution for the sole purpose of creating prejudice against him) we are satisfied that the charge was properly pleaded, that the evidence was sufficient to prove the charge as made, and hence it was necessarily sufficient to support the verdict of guilty of the minor offense.

[3] On the sixth, seventh and eighth counts appellant was convicted of rape, robbery and burglary of the premises of Mrs. Wilhelmson. She was awakened about 4:30 a. m. She got up and walked into the hall way. An electric light was burning in the bath room. The appellant came from a closet through the path of this light and the complainant had a full view of his face and features. Appellant seized her by the throat and threatened to kill her. He then walked her out of the house to a patio where an act of rape was committed. He walked her back into the house where he forced her to give him her purse and took all the money she had. The complainant's testimony was complete and sufficient to sustain the conviction on all three counts. Her identification of appellant was unmistakable and was not shaken by any competent evidence.

On counts nine and ten appellant was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape and of burglary of Mary Farris. She was awakened about 11 p. m., after she had gone to bed, by a man choking her. He followed the same tactics as in the other instances—threatening severe punishment while choking her, tying her hands behind her back, and blindfolding her. He used the same kind of bandanas for this purpose, wore soft shoes and gloves, and demanded money. The evidence of the two offenses is clear and sufficient. The identification is also complete and unmistaken. In addition the roommate of the complaining witness returned as appellant was running from the room. This room was well lighted and both women had a good look at the intruder.

Evidence covering counts 1 to 3, inclusive, and 11 to 13, inclusive, on all of which appellant was acquitted showed similar tactics on the part of the intruder, but the complaining witnesses had been blindfolded before they were able to see the party attacking them and the jury no doubt believed that the evidence of identification was not satisfactory.

As we understand the argument of appellant it is that the testimony of all these witnesses was the result of hallucinations, and that it was discredited on cross-examination. He labors the point that some of them at first thought he was a negro or a Mexican, or a white man with some negro blood, and that some said he had a little mustache. Their testimony was corroborated by that of a barber in the county jail detailing treatments he had given appellant before the trial to bleach his face and to alter the cut of his hair and eyebrows. Though appellant testified that he had never worn a mustache the State produced his identification badge and card from the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Company where he was employed during the time when these attacks were made. This picture showed him with a mustache and another employee of the company testified that he wore a mustache while at work during the period in question.

[4] All these circumstances bring the issue of identification squarely within the rule that the strength or weakness of the identification is a matter for the determination of the jury. People v. Farrington, 213 Cal. 459–463, 2 P.2d 814; People v. Knight, 44 Cal.App.2d 887, 891, 113 P.2d 226; People v. Harsch, 44 Cal.App.2d 572, 575, 112 P.2d 654.

[5] As to the claimed error in the refusal to instruct the jury to acquit on count 5 it is unnecessary to say more than that the question has become moot because the sentence on that count had been served before the appeal was perfected.

[6, 7] Appellant complains of the refusal of the trial court to give his proposed cautionary instruction citing People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 129 P.2d 367, and People v. Trumbo, 60 Cal.App.2d 681, 141 P.2d 225. The court instructed the jury as follows: "And while it is true that the law does not require in this character of case that the prosecuting witnesses be necessarily supported by another witness or witnesses, or by corroborating circumstances, still I charge you that the law does require in this class of cases that you examine their testimony with caution." The assignment of error should be confined to the conviction under count 6. It can have no application to the convictions for burglary, robbery, or assault with intent to commit rape. The latter must be eliminated because in each instance the witness was fully corroborated, either by the physical evidence showing that an assault had been made or by other witnesses identifying the appellant immediately following the inflicting of physical injuries upon the victim of the assault. In all those instances the physical assault having been proved and corroborated, the intent to commit rape stood proved by the circumstantial evidence of the attack in addition to the direct evidence of the complaining witness. Those cases holding that it was error to refuse to give the cautionary instruction were based upon the reviewing court's analysis of the testimony of the prosecuting witness and the court's conclusion that it was inherently improbable, or that it might have been motivated by spite or vindictiveness. Where, however, the uncontradicted evidence other than that of the prosecutrix shows that a criminal attack was made in the middle of the night after an unlawful entry into a woman's bedroom and the victim's testimony relating to the assault is corroborated by other circumstances, as in this case, the rule applicable is that stated in People v. Fleming, 58 Cal.App.2d 37, 47, 136 P.2d 88, 94, reading: "It further follows that in a case where the reason for the rule, viz., a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix is not present, the rule does not apply. As was said in People v. Putnam, 20 Cal.2d 885, 892, 129 P.2d 367, 370, relied upon by appellant, 'The circumstances of the case must determine whether the failure to instruct the jury constitutes prejudicial error.'" Cases in harmony with this statement are cited in People v. Roberts, 50 Cal.App.2d 558, 568, 123 P.2d 628.

[8] It is significant that the appellant does not attack the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the crimes charged. He states that the "claim that rape had been committed was not disputed because the defense knew nothing to the contrary." No one of the prosecuting witnesses was cross-examined on this issue, nor on the issues of burglary or robbery. The burden of the defense in the trial court was an attack upon the testimony of those witnesses identifying the appellant as the party committing the crimes. Hence, there was no error in the instruction that the fact that the complaining witnesses made prompt complaint to the authorities could be considered in corroboration of other testimony given by them. This evidence showing that in every instance the witness made immediate complaint and disclosure of the fact that an assault was committed by someone negatives any claim that the charges were motivated by spite or vindictiveness against this appellant, because when the complaints were made no one of the witnesses knew whom to charge.

Hence, the "reason for the rule" calling for a cautionary instruction is not present.

[9, 10] Appellant complains of the admission over his objection of the testimony of a police officer detailing his conversation with appellant relating to similar offenses committed elsewhere, or charged to him. The testimony was stricken on motion of appellant and the jury was instructed to disregard it. Appellant does not attempt to show how the testimony could be deemed prejudicial. The Honolulu affair was a conviction of attempt to commit rape which appellant admitted but sought to excuse because the attack was made upon a "Japanese girl." (The conviction was had on May 21, 1934. The trial in the instant case commenced on October 8, 1943.) The testimony relating to affairs in Long Beach and Omaha, Nebraska, discloses minor offenses. We are unable to discover in what respect the testimony was prejudicial. We may assume from the manner of presentation of the point that the appellant has not been able to show wherein the rulings might be prejudicial. Certainly the incidental references to minor troubles resulting from drunkenness were far less damaging to the defense than appellant's admission that he had theretofore been convicted of assault with intent to commit rape. It is only when the claimed error appears to have been prejudicial that a reversal can be had on that ground. People v. Jordan, 24 Cal.App.2d 39, 52, 74 P.2d 519; People v. Pianezzi, 42 Cal.App.2d 270, 280, 108 P.2d 685.

[11, 12] Appellant assigns error in the denial of his motion to quash the indictment and in the order overruling his demurrer. No argument is made as to the latter. His motion to quash was based upon the theory that no legal evidence was taken by the grand jury identifying him with the offenses charged. In this connection he refers to the testimony of the several witnesses who had picked him out at the police line up as conclusions when they referred to the one who had committed the offenses as "Joseph Finkel." The appellant was not called as an exhibit before the grand jury and he now states that he was within the same building and could have been called so that the witnesses could have pointed to him and so identified him as the offender. What possible advantage this would have served appellant does not appear. There was no question about his name at any stage of the proceedings. If any of the witnesses made a mistake in his identification that is a question going to the weight of the evidence and counsel concedes that the question now raised is in substance the same as his attack upon the credibility of these witnesses. We know of no rule which requires the grand jury to compel one under investigation to appear before it either as a witness or as an "exhibit." In fact section 920 of the Penal Code provides that: "The grand jury is not bound to hear evidence for the defendant; * * *." Appellant relies upon Greenberg v. Superior Court, 19 Cal.2d 319, 121 P.2d 713, 715, but it does not help him. There an indictment was returned against five persons charging conspiracy to commit grand theft. The supreme court said there was "no evidence even remotely supporting the charges made against petitioner." However, in the same opinion it was said (page 322 of 19 Cal.2d, page 715 of 121 P.2d): "If there is some evidence to support the indictment the courts will not inquire into its sufficiency (see cases collected in 59 A.L.R. 573), but the lack of any evidence conclusively establishes that the grand jury has exceeded its authority in returning an indictment." Here there was evidence supporting the indictment in all particulars. If appellant would claim that the "Joseph Finkel" referred to by the witnesses is some one other than himself, that claim should have been made in the trial court where it could have been met properly by the evidence.

We find no prejudicial error in the record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

GOODELL, J., and DOOLING, J., pro tem., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 530

PEOPLE v. BURKE.

Cr. 1906.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Aug. 17, 1945.

1. Criminal law 🔑554

In murder prosecution in which defendant was impeached by proof that he had previously been convicted of a felony, jury was entitled to disbelieve his testimony in which he denied that he stabbed deceased and that he had a knife during the affray.

2. Homicide 🔑236(1)

In murder prosecution, evidence was sufficient to identify knife found behind fence as weapon with which defendant stabbed deceased.

3. Homicide 🔑250

Evidence supported conviction for manslaughter.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Joe Burke was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

George E. Foote, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Robt. W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Ward Sullivan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

[1] The defendant was charged with murdering Harold Rannells. A jury convicted him of manslaughter. In an affray which occurred in Sacramento, September 9, 1944, between the defendant and Harold Rannells the latter was stabbed in the abdomen, as a result of which he died nine days later. From the judgment of conviction of manslaughter the defendant has appealed. The only contention of the defendant on appeal is that the verdict and judgment are not supported by the evidence for the chief reason that there is a total lack of evidence indicating that the defendant stabbed the deceased or that the knife with which he was stabbed belonged to the defendant. The defendant denied that he stabbed the deceased, that he had a knife during the affray or that the knife which was found and received in evidence belonged to him. But the defendant was impeached by proof that he had been previously convicted of a felony, and the jury was entitled to disbelieve his testimony.

The judgment is adequately supported by the evidence.

About 10 o'clock at night on September 9, 1944, the defendant who had been in the merchant marine, and his wife, together with their friends Louis Hill and his wife, were walking westerly on the northern sidewalk of K Street in Sacramento between 6th and 5th Streets. The defendant had been drinking intoxicating liquor to some extent, but he was not noticeably drunk. Two unidentified men, who were not witnesses at the trial, accosted the group and made disparaging remarks about the women. A fight between the defendant and those two men ensued on the sidewalk near the middle of the block. The deceased, Harold Rannells, took no part in that affray. There is no evidence that he even knew the defendant or his assailants. Rannells was then leaning against an automobile parked some distance away near the corner of Sixth and K Streets, from which point he watched the fight. The defendant was knocked down and badly bruised above his eyes and about his face. The defendant bled considerably as a result of the beating. Witnesses testified that they saw a knife or knives in the hands of the strangers during that brawl, but they said the knives were soon put in their pockets and that the defendant was not cut. The inference is that one of the strangers might have subsequently stabbed Rannells. There is no evidence to reasonably support that theory. That contingency is improbable. Evidently the deceased was not acquainted with any of the parties to that affray. He did not participate in that conflict. He stood 20 feet or more away from the location of the fight. No occasion was shown for the strangers to stab the deceased. At least it was the sole province of the jury to determine from the evidence whether it was the defendant who stabbed the deceased in the subsequent affray which occurred between them. The jury concluded that the defendant stabbed the deceased. The evidence supports that conclusion.

After the defendant had been knocked down once or twice by the strangers during that first affray, he and his associates left the scene of that conflict and walked easterly along the sidewalk toward 6th Street. As they passed Rannells, who was leaning against the automobile parked near the corner, something was evidently said by him. The defendant stopped, turned about and returning to where Rannells stood, he struck him in the face. A violent struggle promptly ensued between the defendant and Rannells. They were striking and clinching each other and scuffling about in a lively manner. Suddenly, in the midst of that affray, the deceased disengaged himself and "hollered out he was stabbed". No one pretends the two strangers who instigated the first conflict with the defendant were then present. The deceased at once pulled up his shirt and at least one witness observed the wound in the abdomen where he had been stabbed. The defendant and his associates promptly left, turning southerly onto 6th Street. Three disinterested witnesses testified substantially to the foregoing facts. There is no evidence to the contrary, except that the defendant and his wife deny that he had a knife or that he stabbed Rannells. Manuel Mauricio, who watched the encounter from a position near by, said: "Burke was walking—he walked a few feet [after he passed Rannells], then he came back and he struck Rannells; they got in quite a clinch, then pretty soon Rannells comes out hollering that he was stabbed, and Burke had disappeared. * * * He [the deceased] had his shirt up; he said his stomach was stabbed. * * * I seen the stab."

Mr. Yannoyan, a private first class in the United States Army, who was then stationed on duty as a military policeman in that vicinity, in company with Sergeant Fambro, watched the fight from across the street. When the defendant and his wife and friends left the scene of the affray, the soldiers followed them down 6th street to N Street where they overtook them near an alley. Sergeant Fambro testified that as a military officer he ordered the defendant to stop for the purpose of placing him under arrest; that Burke started toward him in a threatening manner and the witness then drew his revolver and ordered him to "stay back"; that the defendant then had his right hand behind his back and he backed up against the fence at the alley and dropped an object which he held in his right hand over the fence. The defendant was then taken in custody. Ambrose Reyes, who lived close to that alley, heard the commotion and looking from his window he saw the group standing near the fence. Evidently he saw the defendant drop the weapon over the fence. After the defendant and the officers had gone, Reyes immediately went down and found the knife in the grass just over the fence, where the defendant had evidently thrown it. It was subsequently delivered to the officers and received in evidence.

After the affray, the victim, Harold Rannells, was taken to the Emergency Hospital on a stretcher. While he was being questioned there by James Lyons, a police officer, the defendant was brought into their presence. Referring to the defendant Lyons asked Rannells if that was the man who cut him. He replied "That is the man." He declared that he was positive the defendant was the man who cut him. Mr. Burke, who then stood beside the stretcher, failed to deny that charge. He made no reply whatever. Nine days later Rannells died from peritonitis as a result of the wound in his abdomen.

[2, 3] While it is true that no witness testified he actually saw the defendant cut the deceased, or that a knife was seen in the defendant's hands during the melee, it is evident that the deceased was stabbed in the struggle between him and the defendant, for he suddenly abandoned the conflict and declared he had been cut. He immediately pulled up his shirt and exhibited the wound. There was then no other person who could have cut the deceased. The knife was sufficiently identified as the weapon which was used to stab the deceased. The defendant was followed by the Military Police and when he was placed under arrest he backed up to the fence and threw the knife away. It was found immediately afterward over that fence in the grass. Moreover, the deceased charged the defendant in his presence with cutting him, and defendant failed to deny that charge. The evidence is therefore sufficient to identify the knife as the weapon with which the defendant stabbed the deceased. The verdict and judgment of manslaughter are adequately supported by the evidence.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

26 Cal.2d 795

PEOPLE v. SIMEONE.

Cr. 4628.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 3, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⚷1160

In prosecution for four robberies and two murders, verdict of guilty on all counts resolved the matter of the defendant's identification against him, and verdicts were approved by trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a new trial, and could not be disturbed on appeal where supported by competent evidence.

2. Homicide ⚷253(1)
Robbery ⚷24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of four robberies of the first degree and of two murders of the first degree.

3. Criminal law ⚷1036(1), 1044

Where evidence of collateral offense was received without objection and defendant did not move to strike out the evidence, there was no proper foundation to complain of its admission on appeal.

4. Criminal law ⚷369(2)

In prosecution for four robberies and two murders, admission of evidence of robbery and the shooting of a person with a .38-caliber revolver, 13 days before the first of the series of robberies and murders for which the defendant was tried, was proper to show that defendant possessed a .38-caliber revolver prior to the time when the offenses for which he was on trial were committed.

5. Witnesses ⚷277(2)

Where defendant charged with four robberies and two murders testified on direct examination that he had bought revolver for himself as a birthday present, and prior declarations of defendant received without objection included admission that he bought the revolver with the intention of perpetrating robberies and a denial that he was carrying a revolver at the time he was arrested, cross-examination, whether the defendant did not know that as an ex-convict he had no right to even have possession of a revolver for any purpose, was proper.

6. Witnesses ⚷277(3)

Where defendant on direct examination testified that in a wallet which he allegedly bought from another were the driver's license which was taken at one of the robberies allegedly committed by defendant, and some other credentials, and on cross-examination had testified that one of the union cards may have been and the other was in the wallet when it was allegedly purchased, cross-examination to show that defendant had obtained certain union cards in a robbery which had no connection with the offenses for which the defendant was on trial was proper, not only to contradict defendant's testimony as to how he came into possession of the union cards, but also to discredit his entire story as to the manner in which he obtained the wallet.

7. Criminal law ⚷1036(1)

Defendant could not for first time on appeal object to admission of evidence showing collateral offense, proof of which had gone in without objection.

8. Witnesses ⚷277(3)

Where defendant charged with robberies and murders testified in his own behalf, he was properly asked on cross-examination whether he had not told a doctor that soon after his parole he bought a gun and started out to hold up cafes.

9. Criminal law ⚷784(1), 1186(4)

Where prosecution's case was based primarily on direct testimony of eyewitnesses, and circumstantial evidence was merely incidental and corroborative of the direct evidence, refusal to charge that if jury could draw two equally reasonable conclusions, one of guilt and the other of innocence, it was jury's duty to adopt the latter, was error but not prejudicial. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

10. Criminal law ⚷829(13)

Refusal to give charge concerning evidence of collateral offenses was not error, where the matter was covered in subsequent instruction unduly favorable to defendant.

11. Criminal law ⚷824(8)

Where defendant had failed to request an instruction limiting evidence of collateral offense, he could not complain that none was given by the trial court.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Albert Simeone was convicted on four counts of robbery of the first degree and on two counts of murder of the first degree with no recommendation as to penalty, and, from an order denying his motion for new trial and from the whole of the judgment, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Martin S. Ryan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Fred N. Howser, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan and Thomas W. Cochran, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

A jury found defendant guilty of four counts of robbery of the first degree and two counts of murder of the first degree and, as to the two counts of murder, made no recommendation as to penalty. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and he was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law on each robbery count and to suffer the death penalty on each murder count. He appeals from the order denying his motion for new trial and from the whole of the judgment.

Defendant urges as grounds for reversal that (1) the evidence, particularly as to counts I through IV (which counts include two robberies and the two murders), is insufficient to sustain his conviction, (2) the admission (without objection) of evidence of asserted prior offenses was prejudicial error, (3) the court erred in permitting cross-examination of defendant (in some instances without objection) as to offenses unconnected with the crimes for which he was on trial, and (4) the court erred in failing to give certain instructions. We have concluded that the evidence is legally sufficient to support the verdict as to each count and that the record is free from prejudicial error. The judgment therefore must be affirmed.

The four robberies were of cocktail lounges and bars in the city of Los Angeles and were committed during the period from February 8 through March 8, 1944. The two murders were committed in the perpetration of two of such robberies. The defendant testified that he did not commit any of the six crimes charged and introduced evidence of an alibi covering the time of the commission of one robbery and murder (counts III and IV).

Counts I and II

The Robbery and Murder of Joseph Martinez

On the night of March 8, 1944, Joseph Martinez, owner of a cafe located at 2230 Whittier Boulevard, Los Angeles, was robbed and fatally shot. From the testimony of five witnesses it appears that on the evening of March 8 defendant was at the bar of the cafe from some time before 9:10 until after 11:45, when the bar closed. During this time defendant drank several Scotch and sodas. Mrs. Martinez testified that when the bar had closed and only she, Mr. Martinez, and defendant remained in the cafe, defendant produced a revolver, announced, "This is a hold-up," and forced Mr. and Mrs. Martinez to accompany him to their safe. Martinez opened the safe and handed defendant a bag of money. Defendant shot Martinez twice and ran out. As a result of the bullet wounds Martinez died on about March 11, 1944. The five witnesses (Mrs. Martinez, a waitress, and three customers) identified defendant with degrees of certainty ranging from "I am positive" to "I believe it is." They further testified that defendant wore a dark suit which resembled People's Exhibit 14 (a suit of defendant) and a gray hat which resembled People's Exhibit 15 (a hat which was found in defendant's car when he was arrested and which belonged to one Breckenridge, who was arrested at the same time). These witnesses had previously testified at the preliminary hearing of one Jetton that Jetton was the man whom they had seen at the Martinez cafe on March 8, but when they thereafter saw defendant they concluded that they had been mistaken in their identification of Jetton.

One Stoner, a police officer, testified that at a police show-up Mrs. Martinez said to defendant, "You are the man that killed my husband," and defendant replied, "If you say I am, lady, I guess I am." Defendant testified, "I might have said that. * * * Mrs. Martinez had told me that I was the man that shot her husband because of the suit I was wearing, and I laughed when she said that, because I knew I only wore that suit twice ever since I had it. * * *"

Counts III and IV

The Robbery and Murder of Jack Asch

On Tuesday night, February 8, 1944, at about 9 o'clock a man (identified by three witnesses as defendant) armed with a .38 caliber revolver entered a cafe at 8201 Avalon Boulevard, Los Angeles, and announced, "This is a hold-up." The bartender, Jack Asch, at defendant's direction opened the cash register and took out money. Defendant shot Asch, took the money, and ran out. As a result of the bullet wound Asch died on about February 11, 1944. The robbery and shooting were completed and defendant ran from the cafe within three to five minutes. The three identification witnesses were seated at the bar and were from two to fifteen feet from defendant. They further testified that defendant wore a dark jacket which resembled People's Exhibit 30 (a jacket of defendant) and a dark hat.

Defendant testified, as alibi for the night of February 8, that on that evening from 7:30 until 11 or 11:30 o'clock he was at a school operated by one Nichols; that he left with Mr. and Mrs. Nichols and one June Ganahl. Mrs. Slee, a member of the school staff, Miss Ganahl, and Mrs. Nichols corroborated defendant's testimony that he was at the school on the night of February 8 and that he did not leave the building until about 11 o'clock. Defendant, however, was not continuously under the observation of any of these witnesses during the period of time when, they testified, he was at the school. Defendant and his witnesses testified that they recalled the date because on February 8 Miss Ganahl took an examination.

A police officer testified that, to check the time, he drove from the school to 8201 Avalon, entered the cafe, remained there for four minutes, and returned to the school, at no time exceeding a speed of 35 miles per hour; that the elapsed time was eight minutes.

On August 28, 1944, defendant and Nichols were confined in adjacent cells in which, unknown to them, a microphone was installed. At this time the police had not informed defendant of the dates on which the murders of which he was suspected were committed. (He was then being held on robbery charges other than those for which he is here prosecuted; it does not appear on what charge Nichols was held.) A transcript of the recorded conversation of Nichols and defendant was received in evidence and includes the following:

"Simeone: Do you remember when you closed the school up? * * * What nights did you have school? * * * Monday, Wednesday and Friday, or what?

"Nichols: Sometimes every night. * * *

"Simeone: That's where I was a couple of days, you see. * * * I know the place [the cafe at 8201 Avalon] because I went there a couple of times, and I saw the date on the folder, the 10th [italics added] of February. * * * I wasn't operating at that time. * * * Mrs. Slee can prove I was there [at school], and if it was on a Monday, Wednesday and Friday, I can prove I was there to be there with June. * * *

"Nichols: Did that fall on one of those days?

"Simeone: I don't know. I am just hoping it falls on one of those nights. * * * Is my name on that list [the school records]?

"Nichols: Oh, sure, sure.

"Simeone: It is? Well, then, I have that beat."

Mrs. Slee's testimony as to the school records was as follows:

"Q. Was he [defendant] a student there at the school? A. Sometimes he was in classes.

"Q. Now, Mrs. Slee, you know what I mean when I say, 'Student', don't you? A. Not that I remember, that he was on the books.

"Q. As a matter of fact, you know that he wasn't don't you? A. Yes."

The transcript of the conversation of August 28 between Nichols and defendant continues:

"Simeone: * * * [The police] told me where the place was on Avalon, 8201 Avalon. * * * [O]n up to seven months ago I stopped in two or three times and nobody has ever said anything to me. * * * So if they don't remember me then how * * * are they going to remember me in February if it was me? * * * There's proof that I wasn't even there. And besides when I went to that place it was real dark. * * * Do you remember when June took that test? * * *

"Nichols: I know you were there the night she was taking the examination. * * * June is your best bet. * * * It might be on that day when you were over there [with June Ganahl].

"Simeone: It will be on that day.

"Nichols: She kept dates pretty accurately on everything, I think.

"Simeone: It will be on that day.

"Nichols: Sure.

"Simeone: * * * I have got to find out of it was after seven * * * if it was before seven I don't know but I think it was after seven and I will ask them the time, and I will say, 'Who was shot? A man or a woman? How was the guy dressed?' I will say, 'That's funny. I have been there two, three or four times, six times, and nobody ever said anything when I was in there. * * * If they couldn't identify me then, how do they know I was in there?' * * * I didn't do anything. They charged me with it."

Defendant stated to Nichols several times that he was so certain that he could "beat the two murder raps" that he intended to "dicker" with the police—to ask them to drop the robbery charges and to try him only on the murder charges.

February 10, the date on which defendant at the time of the above conversation believed the murder at 8201 Avalon was committed, was a Thursday. Mrs. Nichols testified for defendant that Monday, Wednesday, and Friday were the regularly scheduled nights on which Nichols conducted the school "and sometimes * * * on a Tuesday also." (Asch was shot on a Tuesday.) On cross-examination she testified that Nichols sometimes held classes on Saturday and Sunday nights, thus leaving Thursday the only night on which, according to her testimony, school was never held.

Count V

The Robbery of Fletcher Marsh

According to the testimony of Fletcher Marsh, at about 10 o'clock on the night of March 2, 1944, the defendant entered Mr. Marsh's cocktail lounge at 4900 West Adams Boulevard, Los Angeles. Defendant wore a tan checked sports jacket and a gray hat. He drank three or four Scotch and sodas, which were served by Marsh. Shortly before 11 o'clock defendant produced a .38 caliber revolver, forced Marsh to open the cash register, and took the brown leather folding wallet of Mr. Marsh and the money which was in the cash register. In defendant's possession when he was arrested were Mr. Marsh's driver's license and notice of draft classification.

Defendant testified that in March, 1944, he purchased from one Sova (who immediately thereafter left Los Angeles) a brown leather folding wallet which contained Marsh's driver's license "and some other credentials"; that Sova, before he handed the wallet to defendant, took from it "a lot of money"; that defendant kept the papers and threw away the wallet. Also in defendant's possession when he was arrested were two union cards bearing the name "Fletcher Marsh" which, Mr. Marsh testified, were not his. Defendant testified that he had typed the name on the cards; that he took the cards from one Hawkins on August 16, and over objection, that he obtained them in a robbery.

Miss Bobby Lee Barney testified for defendant that she had seen a worn brown pocketbook with "a lot of money in it" in Sova's possession about a week before he left Los Angeles in March or April and that she had seen defendant at Sova's home. A photograph of Sova was in evidence.

Count VI

The Robbery of Mrs. West Eichen

Mrs. West Eichen and one Zenor, a bartender, testified that shortly after 11 o'clock on the night of March 2, 1944, defendant entered the cafe of Mrs. Eichen at 5611 West Adams Boulevard, Los Angeles. Defendant wore a sport jacket with green sleeves and a brown or dark hat. He sat at the bar and drank 10 or 12 Scotch and sodas. At about 12 o'clock, when the other customers had gone, he produced a .38 caliber revolver, ordered Mrs. Eichen and Zenor to lie down behind the bar, and took money from the cash register.

Miss Barney testified for defendant that Sova had a tan sport coat with green sleeves.

Evidence Showing Collateral Offenses

The prosecution without objection introduced evidence that on the night of January 26, 1944, at about 10 o'clock defendant robbed a cafe at 1408 West 54th Street, Los Angeles. Defendant is not charged with the crimes assertedly committed on that occasion. Paul H. Mark testified that defendant, armed with a .38 caliber revolver, entered the cafe, announced, "This is a hold-up," and fired two shots downward, one of which struck Mark's leg; that the bartender at defendant's direction handed money to defendant and defendant left. According to Mark, defendant then wore a dark jacket which resembled People's Exhibit 30 (except that Mark believed the jacket had a zipper fastening, whereas defendant's jacket had button closure) and a dark hat. Two other witnesses who had been with Mark on January 26 testified to the same effect. Defendant testified that he had never been in the 54th Street cafe. Bobby Lee Barney testified that Sova owned a black jacket with zipper fastening.

Circumstantial Evidence and Admissions of Defendant

Defendant when he was arrested was carrying a .38 caliber Colt revolver (People's Exhibit 13) in a paper bag. This gun, according to the testimony of the identification witnesses, resembled the gun used by defendant in the commission of the crimes above described. Bullets taken from this revolver and bullets found in a paper bag in defendant's car were received in evidence. According to the testimony of ballistics experts of the Los Angeles Police Department, in their opinion one of the bullets which struck Martinez was fired from People's Exhibit 13; the bullet which killed Asch and a bullet found imbedded in the wooden bar of the 54th Street cafe were so badly damaged that the experts could offer no opinion as to whether they were fired from People's Exhibit 13; they were fired from a .38 caliber Colt (or a Spanish imitation) and could have been fired from People's Exhibit 13. The three bullets were reloads with characteristics similar to those of the bullets found in defendant's car when he was arrested.

Defendant testified that he obtained the gun in May, 1944 (i.e., after the commission of the crimes); that prior to that time he had no gun; that he bought the gun through a newspaper advertisement from a man who lived in the vicinity of Baldwin Park and whose name and address he did not know; that he bought the gun as a birthday present for himself and not with the intention of using it to commit robberies, although such purpose later occurred to him. Mrs. Nichols testified that in March and April she helped defendant look through newspapers in search of an advertisement of a gun for sale.

There is testimony of admissions of defendant that he owned the revolver in February and March and of contradictory statements of defendant as to when and where he bought the gun, the amount he paid for it, and the purpose for which he bought it. Defendant at one time denied to the police that he was carrying the gun when he was arrested. In explanation of his changes of story with reference to the gun, defendant testified variously that he thought the police "were joking, so I was joking back with them"; that "when I saw the officers were not trying to help me I thought I would not try to help them"; and that he wished to avoid argument with the officers. He was asked, "You remember telling the police officers that you had this gun in February, don't you?" and testified, "I may have said that; that is correct. * * * I also said I had it in March and January, too, and April. * * * I told him several months, because that was a way of trying to recall when I had it."

Other testimony of and on behalf of defendant was that he did not wear his suit or his jacket or a hat on the nights in question and that he did not drink Scotch and sodas. He admitted that he had told a doctor who examined him after his arrest that "I have been drinking quite a bit the past several months, Scotch and sodas and Bourbon and sodas."

Defendant's Contentions; Points of Law

[1,2] Defendant's argument as to the identification evidence concerns its probative force rather than its legal sufficiency. The matters to which he calls attention were considered and resolved against the defendant by the jury; their findings were approved by the trial court when it denied defendant's motion for a new trial; such findings are supported by competent evidence and we cannot disturb them. (People v. Waller, 1939, 14 Cal.2d 693, 700, 701, 96 P.2d 344; People v. Castro, 1945, Cal.App., 157 P.2d 25; 8 Cal.Jur. § 585, p. 594; 4 Cal. Jur. 10-Yr.Supp. (1943 rev.) § 581, p. 970, § 585, p. 974.)

Before we discuss separately defendant's contentions as to the evidence of collateral offenses, we note that the jury at defendant's request were erroneously told (by an instruction hereinafter quoted in full) that they could not consider any of such evidence, whether or not it was relevant. An examination of each of defendant's assignments of error discloses that no improper inquiry as to collateral offenses was allowed over objection.

[3,4] Defendant contends that the admission of the evidence of the robbery of the 54th Street cafe and the shooting of Mark on January 26 (13 days before the first of the series of crimes for which defendant was on trial) was prejudicial error. As above stated this evidence was received without objection. Defendant did not move to strike the testimony. Therefore, he has no proper foundation on appeal to complain of its admission. (People v. Ferlin, 1928, 203 Cal. 587, 600, 265 P. 230; People v. Porter, 1932, 123 Cal.App. 618, 624, 11 P.2d 894; 8 Cal.Jur. § 516, pp. 500, 501), but even if we consider this belated objection it has no merit. Regardless of whether such evidence of the January 26 robbery was admissible as tending to show a general criminal plan or design on the part of defendant to rob cafes (see People v. Thorne, 1938, 10 Cal.2d 705, 708, 76 P.2d 491; People v. David, 1939, 12 Cal.2d 639, 647, 86 P.2d 811; People v. King, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 521, 527, 90 P.2d 291; People v. James, 1940, 40 Cal.App.2d 740, 744, 745, 105 P.2d 947), it clearly was admissible to show that defendant possessed a .38 caliber revolver prior to the time when the offenses for which he was on trial were committed. (People v. Nakis, 1920, 184 Cal. 105, 114, 193 P. 92; People v. Burkhart, 1931, 211 Cal. 726, 732, 297 P. 11; People v. Stoerkel, 1927, 87 Cal.App. 336, 341, 262 P. 825; People v. Wilson, 1941, 46 Cal.App.2d 218, 224, 115 P.2d 598.) In further corroboration of such fact there was testimony (contradicted by defendant) that defendant admitted to one Dr. Sisson that soon after his parole from Folsom State Prison in September, 1943, he bought a gun and "started out to hold up cafes and cocktail rooms."

[5] The following four instances of cross-examination of defendant as to asserted collateral offenses are assigned as error:

Defendant was asked, "Didn't you know that as an ex-convict (defendant admitted four prior convictions of felony) that you had no right to even have the possession of a gun for any purpose?" His objection was overruled and he answered, "Yes." As above stated, defendant had testified on direct examination that he bought the gun as a birthday present for himself; prior declarations of defendant, received without objection, included admissions that he bought the gun with the intention of perpetrating robberies and a denial that he was carrying a gun at the time he was arrested. The question objected to was proper inquiry into defendant's purpose in buying and possessing the gun.

[6] Defendant over objection testified on cross-examination that he obtained certain union cards on August 16, 1944, in a robbery which had no connection with the offenses for which he was on trial. On direct examination defendant had testified that in the wallet which he bought from Sova in March, 1944, were Marsh's driver's license and "some other credentials." On cross-examination he had testified that one of the union cards may have been and the other was in the wallet which he purchased from Sova. Thus the cross-examination complained of was proper not only to impeach defendant's testimony as to how he came into possession of the union cards, but also to discredit his entire story as to the manner in which he obtained Marsh's wallet. (People v. Gallagher, 1893, 100 Cal. 466, 476, 35 P. 80; People v. Morales, 1904, 143 Cal. 550, 553, 77 P. 470; People v. Madison, 1935, 3 Cal.2d 668, 678, 46 P.2d 159.)

The transcripts of a statement of defendant to police officers and of defendant's recorded conversation with Nichols, as to which there was no objection, motion to strike, or assignment of error, tend to show that defendant, with one Breckenridge, before and at the time of his arrest was engaged in attempts to cash stolen and forged checks, using stolen credentials as identification, and that it was this activity which led to his apprehension. A possible relation of this activity to the Marsh robbery (count V) is shown in the record in that on cross-examination defendant without objection testified as follows:

"Q. Calling your attention to People's Exhibit 37. * * * Is that the check that you say you were attempting to cash at the time you were arrested? A. Yes, that is correct.

"Q. Did you put Fletcher J. Marsh's name on there? A. Yes, I did.

"Q. You typed that on your typewriter? A. That is correct.

"Q. But you did not endorse the check? A. No, sir, I didn't."

[7] Defendant now contends that it was error to allow such cross-examination. Regardless of the merit or lack of merit of such contention he cannot properly for the first time on appeal assign the admission of the testimony as error. (People v. Johnson, 1933, 132 Cal.App. 265, 267, 22 P.2d 543; 8 Cal.Jur. § 516, pp. 500, 501).

[8] Defendant contends that he should not have been asked on cross-examination whether, as Dr. Sisson testified, he (defendant) admitted that soon after his parole from Folsom he bought a gun and "started out to hold up cafes." To this question there was no objection and defendant denied having made such statement. Plainly the question was proper.

Defendant next asserts that the trial court erred to his prejudice in refusing to give certain instructions requested by defendant and in failing to give other instructions of its own motion.

[9] Defendant requested that the jury be instructed that "if, from the facts offered in this case, the jury finds that they can draw two equally reasonable conclusions, one of which points to the guilt of the defendant, and the other of which points to the innocence of the defendant, it is the duty of the jury to adopt that conclusion which is consistent with the innocence of the defendant and to find him not guilty [etc.]." The instruction was refused on the stated ground that "Where as here the evidence is direct, there is no occasion for giving the instruction." Defendant argues that as to counts I and II (robbery and murder of Martinez) the jury may not have believed the identification witnesses, in which event the sole prosecution evidence remaining for their consideration was circumstantial; i. e., the evidence connecting the bullet taken from Martinez' body with the gun which defendant had in his possession at the time of his arrest. Defendant's argument is technically sound but in the circumstances the refusal of the instruction does not warrant a reversal (Const. art. VI, § 4½), since the prosecution's case was based primarily on direct testimony of eyewitnesses and the circumstantial evidence was merely incidental and corroborative of the direct evidence. (See People v. Lapara, 1919, 181 Cal. 66, 70, 183 P. 545; People v. Holden, 1910, 13 Cal.App. 354, 359, 109 P. 495; People v. Gorman, 1916, 31 Cal.App. 762, 763, 161 P. 757; People v. Ortiz, 1923, 63 Cal.App. 662, 667, 219 P. 1024; People v. Heuss, 1928, 95 Cal.App. 680, 684, 273 P. 583; People v. Williams, 1933, 134 Cal.App. 232, 236, 25 P.2d 259; People v. Marvich, 1941, 44 Cal.App.2d 858, 861, 113 P.2d 223.)

[10] Defendant contends that the court erred in refusing the following instruction requested by him: "The defendant is charged in this Information with 2 counts of Murder and 4 Counts of Robbery and is not charged with any other offense. If the evidence has convinced you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant has committed some other offense, that fact should not induce you to vote for a verdict of guilty as to any count in this information unless you are convinced beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense charged in the said count was committed. The defendant is not on trial for any other offenses other than those set forth in this Information. The jury should not convict the defendant of such offense unless convinced of that identical offense and beyond a reasonable doubt." The quoted instruction was a proper statement of applicable law and could well have been given. But any error in refusing such instruction was cured by the giving of the following instruction which was requested by, and errs in favor of, the defendant: "Where evidence is produced against the defendant unrelated to a particular offense, but tending to show the commission of other offenses by him, no matter how great the weight of such unrelated evidence to such other offenses, it must not be considered by you in any way as affecting the guilt or innocence of the defendant as to such particular offense. Each count in the information is to be considered separately and upon the evidence as to such count only, without reference to accusations or evidence of other offenses." By the last sentence of the quoted instruction the jury were incorrectly told, in effect, that they could not consider any evidence of any collateral offense for any purpose.

[11] Finally, defendant contends that the court of its own motion should have charged the jury that the evidence of the robbery of the 54th Street cafe on January 26 could be considered only to show that defendant at that time had possession of a gun. The defendant, having failed to request such an instruction, cannot now complain that it was not given. (People v. Northey, 1888, 77 Cal. 618, 631, 19 P. 865, 20 P. 129; People v. Fultz, 1895, 109 Cal. 258, 262, 41 P. 1040; People v. Findley, 1901, 132 Cal. 301, 306, 64 P. 472; People v. James, 1940, supra, 40 Cal.App.2d 740, 746, 105 P.2d 947). Moreover, as above stated, the jury at defendant's request were instructed in general terms that they could not consider evidence of a collateral offense even for such limited and proper purpose.

For the reasons above stated, the judgment as to all counts and the order appealed from are affirmed.

SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

26 Cal.2d 824

Ex parte BYRNES.

Cr. 4531.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 14, 1945.

1. Habeas corpus ⚷=4

A writ of habeas corpus ordinarily may not be employed as substitute for appeal.

2. Habeas corpus ⚷=1

The writ of habeas corpus may be used to present law questions which cannot otherwise be reviewed or are so important as to justify extraordinary remedy.

3. Criminal law ⚷=1104(6)

One prevented by state officers from presenting record, on which his appeal, regularly taken, from judgment of conviction, can be heard, should have opportunity to present record.

4. Criminal law ⚷=1083

Timely notices of appeal from judgments of conviction gave District Court of Appeal jurisdiction, which was not affected by lack of record on appeal.

5. Criminal law ⚷=1104(6)

A defendant failing to perfect his appeals from judgments of conviction within required time after giving timely notices of appeal in 1932, was required to apply to trial court for relief from default, and determination as to whether he used due diligence rested largely on exercise of judicial discretion.

6. Criminal law ⚷=1104(6)

Where reporter's transcript was available for purpose of preparing record, which appellant was prevented by state officers from presenting on appeal from judgments of conviction, and there was nothing to indicate that reporter's transcript in another such case could not be prepared from phonographic reporter's notes, superior court was directed to hear appellant's motions for relief from default in presentation of record within 90 days after filing of appellate court's opinion.

7. Criminal law ⚷=1026

The fact that one prevented by state officers from presenting record on his appeals from convictions on two indictments served full terms of imprisonment imposed under judgments in first case did not bar his right to appeal from such judgments for purpose of clearing his name in event that trial court relieved him from default in presentation of record.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by Frederick John Byrnes for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from the state prison.

Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Rosalie S. Asher, of Sacramento, and Alphonse Matthews, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards and David K. Lener, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

EDMONDS, Justice.

In a petition for a writ of habeas corpus, Frederick John Byrnes, now an inmate of the state prison at Folsom, asserted that after his trial and conviction upon two separate indictments, he was unable to perfect his appeal from each of the judgments because, in one case, the transcript of the proceedings was not furnished to him, and, in the other case, the transcript was wrongfully taken from him by prison officials. The writ issued and as the attorney general, by answer and stipulation, has admitted the truth of the essential facts related in the petition, the question for decision concerns the status of Byrnes under these circumstances.

Byrnes is now under sentences imposed upon him in 1932 by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County following two trials. He was first convicted of three offenses separately charged in the indictment. (Case No. 48763.) A month later he was tried and convicted upon a second indictment which charged him with the commission of four other crimes. (Case No. 48765.) By its judgments, the court ordered that the sentences for these seven offenses, which include kidnapping, rape and a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, should run consecutively.

In the first trial, Byrnes was represented by counsel appointed by the court to defend him. His counsel noticed an appeal within the required time, obtained an order for the preparation of a transcript and then withdrew from the case. No transcript was completed in the form required for an appeal, but a copy of the testimony, in several parts as written up each day by the stenographic reporter, is now on file in the office of the District Attorney of Los Angeles County. Following his conviction in the second trial, Byrnes gave timely notice of appeal, but his request for a transcript was denied upon the ground that he had each day been furnished with a record of the proceedings. However, upon the statement of Byrnes that some portions of the testimony which he had received during the trial were lost or stolen from him, at the request of the trial judge, the district attorney agreed to loan Byrnes copies of the missing volumes. The records of the district attorney's office show that there were 14 volumes of this transcript; all of them were taken from the office on August 26, 1932, and there is no information obtainable as to their present whereabouts.

Byrnes was granted a stay of execution upon each of the sentences in order that he might, before leaving the county jail, prepare his appeals. The officer then acting as chief jailor has a "faint recollection" of the petitioner reading a transcript. Other persons in the cell block were found reading this transcript, which included testimony of an obscene character. The jailor does not remember distinctly whether he had the transcript removed from the petitioner's cell or whether Byrnes made any demand for it when he left the county jail to be taken to the state prison. Upon various occasions while he was in the county jail, due to fighting and refusal to cooperate with the officers, he was removed from the cell block to the dungeon. Books and papers taken from a cell after a prisoner is removed from it are kept for a time and then destroyed. The jailor does not know where the transcript is; it may have been destroyed. In January, 1944, a search was made among old records and elsewhere but the transcript was not found.

It is urged on behalf of the petitioner that a writ of habeas corpus should be granted or an order made requiring the appeals from the judgments of conviction to be heard and determined. Necessarily, in this connection counsel argue that the petitioner's right to relief is not barred by reason of laches. More specifically, the position of the petitioner is that as the recent tendency has been to enlarge the relief obtainable upon the writ of habeas corpus beyond a consideration merely of jurisdictional questions, the prevention by state representatives of an exercise of the right of appeal constitutes a denial of due process of law and affords grounds for release from custody. Although it is conceded that, as the petitioner has served his full term for the offenses of which he was convicted in the first trial, he cannot obtain relief as to them so far as imprisonment is concerned, the question presented is not moot and he is entitled to an appeal from the judgments in that case for the purpose of clearing his name. The attorney general does not challenge the petitioner's right to prosecute the two appeals which, it is admitted, are now pending; the state's only contention is that, under the facts stated by the petitioner, he is not entitled to be released from imprisonment.

[1, 2] It is well settled that a writ of habeas corpus ordinarily may not be employed as a substitute for an appeal (In re Bell, 19 Cal.2d 488, 492, 122 P.2d 22), yet the scope of inquiry in such proceedings has been broadened rather than narrowed (Johnson v. Zerbst, 304 U.S. 458, 58 S.Ct. 1019, 82 L.Ed. 1461, 146 A.L.R. 357), and the writ may be used to present questions of law that cannot otherwise be reviewed or are so important as to justify an extraordinary remedy (In re Bell, supra, 19 Cal.2d at page 494, 122 P.2d 22; In re Silverstein, 52 Cal.App.2d 725, 126 P.2d 962). And although circumstances such as those shown in the present proceedings have not before been presented to the appellate courts of this state, in the federal courts the writ of habeas corpus has been used for the purpose of obtaining a determination of the rights of one imprisoned under a judgment which, it is asserted, has not become final because public officers prevented the presentation of an appeal.

[3] The most recent of these decisions is Boykin v. Huff, 73 App.D.C. 378, 121 F.2d 865, in which the petitioner alleged that he had been deprived unconstitutionally of an appeal. It was there held that the statutory right of appeal is not an insubstantial one, nor a matter of such small consequence that it may be given or withheld arbitrarily. And as the rulings of the trial judge in that case prevented the petitioner from perfecting an appeal, the court ordered that he should be allowed to proceed with the presentation of the record on appeal some three years after the judgment of conviction was entered. Likewise, in Tinkoff v. Zerbst, 10 Cir., 80 F.2d 464, although the court refused to order the petitioner's discharge from custody because of the wrongful execution of his sentence during the time he was preparing an appeal, it afforded him an opportunity to complete the record upon which he relied for a reversal of the judgment of conviction rendered against him. See, also, Briggs v. White, 10 Cir., 32 F.2d 108. The conclusions reached in these cases rest upon fundamental principles of justice which compel a determination that one who has been pervented by officers of the state from presenting the record upon which his appeal, regularly taken, can be heard, should have an opportunity to do so.

[4–7] By the timely notices of appeal from the judgments of conviction under which Byrnes is now in custody, the District Court of Appeal acquired jurisdiction over the two actions, and as in the federal courts, lack of a record on appeal does not affect its jurisdiction. People v. Megugorac, 12 Cal.2d 208, 82 P.2d 1108; People v. Sonogui, 1 Cal.2d 364, 35 P.2d 123; In re Johannes, 213 Cal. 125, 1 P.2d 984; People v. Bryant, 207 Cal. 450, 278 P. 1025. At the time these notices were given, an appellant who had not perfected his appeal within the specified time was required to apply to the trial court for relief from default, and the determination as to whether he had used due diligence rested very largely upon the exercise of judicial discretion. Hohnemann v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 31 Cal.App.2d 692, 88 P.2d 748; Wood v. Peterson Farms Co., 131 Cal.App. 312, 21 P.2d 468. Accordingly, as it appears from the record that a reporter's transcript is available for the purpose of preparing a record in case No. 48763 and there is nothing to indicate that a reporter's transcript in case No. 48765 may not be prepared from the phonographic reporter's notes, the Superior Court of Los Angeles County is directed to hear any motion or motions made within 90 days after the date of the filing of this opinion for the purpose of securing relief from default in the presentation of the record upon appeal in either or both of the actions referred to. For although Byrnes served the full terms of imprisonment imposed under the judgments of conviction in the first action, that fact does not bar his right to an appeal from such judgments for the purpose of clearing his name (See, People v. Chamness, 109 Cal.App.Supp. 778, 288 P. 20; In re Lincoln, 102 Cal.App. 733, 283 P. 965; State v. Cohen, 45 Nev. 266, 201 P. 1027, 18 A.L.R. 867, 872) in the event that the trial court relieves him from default in the presentation of the record.

The writ of habeas corpus is discharged and the petitioner remanded to custody.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 522

DOUILLARD v. SMITH et al.

Civ. 14754.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Aug. 17, 1944.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 5, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 15, 1945.

1. Fraud 🔑50, 58(1), 64(1)

Fraud presents a fact question, is never presumed, and must be clearly established.

2. Fraud 🔑58(1)

A mere suspicion of fraud is never sufficient to establish it, so that plaintiff merely establishing state of facts from which inference of defendant's fraud may or may not reasonably be drawn fails to establish fraud.

3. Fraudulent conveyances 🔑299(7)

In action to quiet title to lot as against claims arising from action against plaintiff's judgment debtor for attorney's fees on ground of alleged fraudulent conspiracy to encumber title to lot, so as to prevent collection of judgment, evidence supported judgment adverse to plaintiff.

4. Fraudulent conveyances 🔑299(7)

In action to quiet title to lot on ground of alleged fraudulent conspiracy to encumber title thereto, so as to prevent collection of plaintiff's judgment, by filing of action against judgment debtor for attorney's fees, burden was on plaintiff to establish fraud and collusion and to overcome presumption of honesty and fair dealing by evidence of convincing force.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Emile A. Douillard against Lloyd C. Smith, Melanie D. Woodd and others to quiet title to real property and set aside a judgment. From a judgment for defendants Woodd and others, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

J. M. Clements, Thomas Higgins, Jr., Robert E. Austin, and John N. Helnick, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred W. Heath and Daniel A. Knapp, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action to quiet title to real property, the second amended complaint praying that the judgment in the case of Hovey v. Woodd, hereinafter referred to, be declared "void and of no force or effect".

It is disclosed by the record herein that respondents Knapp and Heath are attorneys at law and have represented respondent Woodd in various matters since 1932. Mrs. Emily Donahue was the mother of appellant Emile A. Douillard, Frank Douillard, respondent Melanie D. Woodd, and another daughter, who predeceased Mrs. Donahue, but left two children surviving her. After Mrs. Donahue's death in 1937, her estate was probated and the assets partitioned and distributed. Immediately thereafter, the two Douillard brothers and the children of the deceased sister, demanded payment of $7,500 to them by respondent Woodd, in accordance with the latter's alleged oral agreement to do so in the event they refrained from contesting Mrs. Donahue's will when it was presented for probate by respondent Woodd. Said respondent failed to make the payment demanded, and on January 17, 1939, the Douillard brothers and the two children brought action against her to recover said sum of $7,500.

Thereupon, respondent Woodd employed respondents Heath and Knapp to defend her in said action, hereinafter referred to as the Douillard case, but no arrangements were made with respect to the payment by respondent Woodd of any attorneys' fees in connection with that case, or for services theretofore rendered by said attorneys to Mrs. Woodd.

The Douillard case was tried, and on April 2, 1940, the trial judge announced his decision for the plaintiffs therein, and on April 25, 1940, he signed a several judgment in favor of appellant Emile A. Douillard for the sum of $2,500. Meanwhile, on April 9, 1940, respondents Heath and Knapp had a conference with respondent Woodd, at which time fees for services rendered by said attorneys were discussed for the first time with respondent Woodd. Mr. Heath told Mrs. Woodd that he would like to have a settlement of his fees which he told her amounted to $4,000 or $4,500, and also that Mr. Knapp's fees totalled $3,000 or $3,500. Mrs. Woodd acknowledged that she owed attorneys' fees but thought these figures were too high, and as a result of the discussion it was decided that attorneys Knapp and Heath should assign their claims to respondent Dr. M. E. Hovey, who would bring a friendly suit against Mrs. Woodd and ask the court to fix the amount of such attorneys' fees. Such suit was filed April 11, 1940, the complaint therein alleging an indebtedness by Mrs. Woodd to attorneys Heath and Knapp in the amount of $7,000 for legal services rendered by them. Attachment issued therein against Lot 11, Tract 314, owned by respondent Woodd. Mrs. Woodd was represented by attorney Martindale. At the trial, in addition to the testimony of the respondent Heath, letters were introduced in evidence addressed by Mrs. Woodd to attorneys Heath and Knapp in which she acknowledged that their services were reasonably worth $2,500 and $1,500, respectively, whereupon judgment was rendered for the sum of $4,000 in favor of M. E. Hovey and against Mrs. Woodd. Execution on said judgment issued on July 17, 1941, but no levy was made on the real property covered by the attachment until September 8, 1942, when Lot 11, Tract 314, was sold by the sheriff of Los Angeles County to M. E. Hovey.

Meanwhile, on August 3, 1942, the judgment rendered against respondent Woodd in the Douillard case was affirmed on appeal, and on March 15, 1943, by virtue of an execution theretofore issued on said judgment on October 15, 1942, the sheriff sold said Lot 11, Tract 314, to appellant Emile A. Douillard for $1,500.

Subsequently, appellant Emile A. Douillard brought the instant action to quiet title to said Lot 11, Tract 314, against the claims arising out of the Hovey v. Woodd action, it being alleged in paragraph IV of the second amended complaint that "for the purpose of delaying plaintiff and defrauding him out of the collection of the moneys due to him from the defendant Woodd, and the collection of the judgment thereon hereinabove mentioned, the defendants Woodd, Knapp, Heath and Hovey conspired together to so cloud and encumber the title to said property that plaintiff would not be able to collect his judgment therefrom, and for the purpose of carrying into effect said conspiracy, the defendants Knapp, Heath and Hovey, filed a suit in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County on the 11th day of April, 1940, entitled: M. L. Hovey v. Melanie D. Woodd, No. 45082, wherein defendant Hovey was the plaintiff, and the defendants, Heath and Knapp, acted as his attorneys, in which it was falsely alleged that the defendant Melanie D. Woodd had been indebted to the defendants Heath and Knapp in the sum of Seven Thousand Dollars ($7,000.00) and that said Heath and Knapp had sold and assigned their claims against the defendant Woodd to the plaintiff Hovey and that nothing whatsoever had been paid thereon, and that there were no credits against said amount."

The trial court found that respondent Woodd owed respondents Heath and Knapp; that they did not conspire together "to cloud or encumber the title to said property in fraud of the rights" of appellant; that the Hovey action for attorneys' fees was not filed "for the purpose of carrying out any conspiracy, or for the purpose of defrauding" the appellant, and that the judgment therein was not procured by said respondents "for the purpose of delaying or defrauding" appellant out of the collection of his judgment.

Appellant "attacks the judgment (in the Hovey action) not because of any errors or irregularities in the case, but solely because the judgment was procured by the fraud and collusion of respondents in deceiving and misleading the court into rendering the judgment." In this connection, he urges that the whole course of conduct on the part of respondents Heath and Knapp "shows that their only purpose in filing the Hovey suit was to tie up the property of the defendant Melanie D. Woodd, before the plaintiff in the Douillard case could run an execution on it"; and that "Mrs. Woodd in entering the conspiracy and participating in the fraud and collusion confessed a judgment in favor of Hovey."

[1, 2] As has been many times declared, fraud presents a question of fact, is never presumed, and must be clearly established. "Courts have used a variety of expressions in characterizing the sufficiency of evidence to establish fraud. Thus it has been said that the evidence or the inferences to be drawn from the evidence must be clear, clear and satisfactory, clear and convincing, clear, convincing and unequivocal, full and complete, and strong and decisive. A mere suspicion of fraud is never sufficient. Consequently, when the plaintiff's case goes no further than to establish a state of facts from which the inference of fraud may or may not reasonably be drawn, he has failed to establish his charge." 12 Cal.Jur. 832, sec. 81, and authorities there cited.

[3, 4] An examination of the record discloses substantial evidence to support the findings and judgment of the trial court. Respondent Woodd admitted liability for legal services rendered in her behalf by respondents Heath and Knapp. The latter testified that they had represented Mrs. Woodd in various matters over a long period of time without receiving any compensation. Further, they made a lengthy recital of the various legal services performed by them which included an appeal from the judgment in the Douillard case. On the other hand, the evidence presented by appellant, if believed, raised merely a suspicion of fraud on the part of respondents. Having alleged fraud and collusion, the burden was upon appellant to establish his charge, and overcome the presumption of honesty and fair dealing by evidence of convincing force. Fares v. Morrison, 54 Cal.App.2d 773, 776, 129 P.2d 735, citing Hedden v. Waldeck, 9 Cal.2d 631, 72 P.2d 114. See, also, Mayock v. Splane, 56 Cal.App.2d 563, 572, 132 P.2d 827, 832, where this court asserted, quoting from American Box & Drum Co. v. Harron, 44 Cal.App.2d 370, 377, 112 P.2d 332: "'In the absence of proof of facts and circumstances which constitute fraud as a matter of law, we are not prepared to say that the trial court was incorrect in drawing an inference of fair dealing rather than of corrupt practice. In Re Estate of Ross, 199 Cal. 641, 651, 250 P. 676, 680, the court said: "It is true that the trial court is the exclusive judge of the weight to be given to the evidence, but it is also true that the presumption is in favor of honesty and fair dealing (see In re Estate of Sweetman, supra, 185 Cal. 27 [at page 28], 195 P. 918), and the burden is upon the party asserting the fraud to prove it by some substantial evidence (12 Cal.Jur. 817). The facts and circumstances shown in evidence must have given rise at least to a reasonable inference of fraud, and not a mere suspicion thereof. Roberts v. Burr, 135 Cal. 156, 67 P. 46. Indeed, it has been held that—'If there be two inferences equally reasonable and equally susceptible of being drawn from the proved facts, the one favoring fair dealing and the other favoring corrupt practice, it is the express duty of the court or jury to draw the inference favorable to fair dealing.' Ryder v. Bamberger, 172 Cal. 791, 158 P. 753."'"

For the reasons stated, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 462

PEOPLE v. BERNSTEIN.

Cr. 3902.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 8, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Aug. 17, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 7, 1945.

1. Larceny 🔑65

Evidence sustained conviction of grand theft.

2. Criminal law 🔑234

Statements by complaining witness, at preliminary hearing in grand theft prosecution, that she did not care to testify and desired to withdraw complaint, involved issue between such witness and state, and determination of issue by requiring complaining witness to testify was matter of which defendant could not complain on ground that testimony was given under compulsion, and therefore unworthy of belief.

3. Criminal law 🔑543(2)

Under Penal Code provision for admission of testimony taken at preliminary hearing, the only question for trial court's determination on issue whether such testimony was admissible at the trial was whether it was satisfactorily shown that witness who testified at preliminary hearing could not with due diligence be found in state. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3.

4. Criminal law 🔑1153(6)

Under Penal Code provision providing for admission of testimony taken at preliminary hearing, question whether it is satisfactorily shown that such witness cannot with due diligence be found within state is one of fact to be determined by trial court, and appellate court will not interfere unless trial court abused its discretion. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3.

5. Criminal law 🔑1153(6)

"Diligence" required to find absent witness, before his testimony on preliminary examination may be admitted, is a relative term, incapable of exact definition, but it depends so essentially on particular circumstances that appellate court should hesitate to disturb trial court's ruling thereon where it has any substance on which to rest. Pen. Code, § 686, subd. 3.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Diligence".

6. Criminal law 🔑662(6)

Procedure authorized by Penal Code for admission, in criminal case of testimony taken at preliminary hearing where it is shown that absent witness cannot with due diligence be found within state, is not repugnant to Constitution where accused is confronted by witness at preliminary hearing and given opportunity to cross-examine. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3.

7. States 🔑4

The state has full control over procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of Constitution.

8. Criminal law 🔑543(2), 544

In grand theft prosecution, admitting testimony of absent complaining witness taken at preliminary hearing was not abuse of discretion where defendant cross-examined such witness at preliminary hearing and at time of trial witness was outside state, and evidence showed that before witness left state she had been notified to appear at trial, in absence of showing that her testimony would have been different if she had been present at trial or that any impeaching evidence had materialized since preliminary examination. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3.

9. Witnesses ⚷337(5)

Defendant's admission of his prior conviction of a felony, other than felony alleged in information, could be used for purposes of impeachment of his testimony.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold B. Landreth, Judge.

Hyman Bernstein was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and L. G. Campbell, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

Defendant was accused by information of the offense of grand theft. A trial by the court without a jury resulted in a judgment of guilty, from which defendant appeals.

[1] According to the testimony of Elizabeth Hanson, the victim of the alleged theft, as related at the preliminary hearing, she met defendant in a cocktail bar some time before the date of the offense under circumstances described as follows: "I was sitting at a bar and he walked up and sat down beside me and started talking to me." Thereafter, they were together socially seven or eight times. On the night of the offense, they sat at "the bar and drank several drinks," thence to a "chop suey place" and finally to the witness's apartment. The witness testified, as to her object in "going home" and as to the ensuing events, as follows:

"A. I had high heels and a dress, and I had had several drinks, and I said that I felt that I should go home and put my slacks on and low heel shoes on, and I wanted to take a walk, to go for a walk and get some air, and when we got in my apartment he stated, 'We better have some coffee because we could not get coffee down at the chop suey place,' and I said 'It might be a good idea', so I put the coffee pot on the fire and made the coffee and poured the coffee, to have it cooling while I changed my clothes, and when I came back and sat down at the table to drink my cup of coffee I said, 'I forgot the cream,' and he said, 'Betty, you should not put cream in coffee. You should drink it black and it will sober you up,' and I said I didn't like black coffee, and I got the cream, and when I came to the table with it he still insisted that I drink it black, and I said all right, and I took one sip of it and I said, 'Drunk or sober, I still don't like black coffee,' and he still insisted, and I said, 'Oh, all right,' and I took the cup of coffee and I drank it down with one gulp, and I don't remember ever leaving that table. I woke up at six o'clock in the morning and I was in my bedroom, in my nightgown—in my bed in my nightgown, and my door was standing open, and my brassiere, with the money I had in it pinned on me was gone, and even the brassiere was gone, and I have never been able to figure out what he wanted the brassiere for.

"Q. How much money did you have pinned in the brassiere? A. I had $580.00 rolled in a handkerchief and pinned in my brassiere * * *."

"* * * By Mr. Danoff: Did you see the defendant again after this day that you have just told us about? A. No, sir, I have never seen him until they called me to come to the police station, I believe it was Thursday last week.

"Q. And what name did you know the defendant by? A. He told me once that his name was Frank Rudeni and another time I asked him and he said Brudeni, and I said, 'I thought you said Rudeni,' and he said, 'No, honey, it is Brudeni.'"

The witness Hanson did not appear at the trial.

The alleged offense was committed June 20, 1943; defendant was arrested July 26, 1944; the date of the preliminary hearing does not appear in the record; defendant was arraigned in the Superior Court August 23, 1944; the trial was set for October 30, 1944; on said last mentioned date the trial was continued to December 6, 1944, witnesses instructed to return and a bench warrant issued for Elizabeth Hanson; on December 6th the trial was continued to January 3, 1944, due to illness of defendant's counsel, witnesses instructed to return and another bench warrant issued for the witness Hanson; on January 3, 1945, the trial proceeded and in the absence of the witness Hanson, said witness's testimony given at the preliminary hearing was introduced.

It is contended on appeal, first, that the evidence is "insufficient to sustain the verdict"; second, that the court erred in receiving the evidence taken at the preliminary hearing, that due diligence was not shown; and third, that the "use of forced evidence taken at the preliminary hearing was highly prejudicial."

With regard to the first and third above mentioned contentions, it is argued that the testimony of the witness Elizabeth Hanson was given "under court order and against her will" and that "under the circumstances, the testimony given under compulsion was of such a character as to render it unworthy of credence or belief." The record of the witness's testimony referred to reveals the following:

"The Court: Speak up loudly so we all can hear you.

"The Witness: Your Honor, I don't care to testify.

"The Court: You don't care to testify?

"The Witness: No, sir. I wish to withdraw the complaint.

"The Court: Well, it is just a little too late now. Unless you feel that any testimony that you might give would incriminate you in any way.

"Mr. Cooper: The word 'degrade' is also there.

"The Court: I don't know what you are talking about, Mr. Cooper.

"Mr. Cooper: Well, we will get it. It is in the Code section. It is in the Code of Civil Procedure as well. The witness may refuse to answer the question upon the ground that the testimony may incriminate or degrade her.

"The Court: I have asked her that. I said her answer—that she does not—that it is not on that basis that she refuses to testify. Do you refuse to testify now on the ground that your testimony might incriminate you in any crime?

"The Witness: Yes, sir.

"The Court: Or degrade you?

"The Witness: No, sir.

"The Court: Well, let us go ahead and answer the questions.

"By Mr. Danoff: Where do you live, Mrs. Hanson?

"Mr. Cooper: At that point I further object to the testimony of the witness on the ground that the transcript shows that the witness plainly claimed the privilege and that that privilege was denied her.

"The Court: The objection may be overruled.

"Mr. Cooper: That objection is to the entire testimony.

"The Court: Very well."

The witness then proceeded to testify with apparent willingness. At the conclusion of which, the record is as follows:

"Mr. Cooper: I would ask that the witness remain, if your Honor please?

"The Court: You may remain in the courtroom.

"Mr. Cooper: Your Honor, may I recall the witness?

"The Court: Yes, Mrs. Hanson, come back to the stand, will you, please?

"The Witness: Yes, sir.

"The Court: Mr. Cooper, do you still want to ask this witness the reason why she answered that she felt she didn't want to testify?

"Mr. Cooper: Yes.

"A. Well, I will tell you. Did you ever hear of a person that didn't want to let the rest of the world know that she was a big fool? That happened to be my reason.

"The Court: Anything further?

"Mr. Cooper: No, that is all.

"Mr. Danoff: Now may this witness be excused?

"The Court: All right, you may be excused, Mrs. Hanson."

[2] The witness's attitude as indicated by the expressions, "Your Honor, I don't care to testify," and "I wish to withdraw the complaint," presented a matter with which the defendant was not concerned. Such a situation involves an issue between plaintiff's witness and the state. The determination of such issue is not a matter about which the defendant may be heard to complain. Such an incident may provide argument as to credibility but it in no manner affects the rights of the defendant. There is nothing about the witness's testimony that suggests any inherent improbability as a matter of law. The evidence is sufficient to sustain the judgment.

With regard to the second contention, namely, that the court erred in receiving in evidence the transcript of the testimony given at the preliminary examination, the record discloses that the witness Hanson was subpoenaed. Although the subpoena was not produced, Officer Flanigan testified:

"Q. About when did you first have a subpoena for her, do you recall? A. Sometime last fall, at the time I served her originally I don't remember the date I served her at Apartment 111, 1830 North Cahuenga Boulevard.

"Q. That was sometime last fall? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did she appear in court at any time that you know of after that, did you see her in court at any time? A. No, sir, she was not there that morning, she may have come later."

Deputy Sheriff Barron testified with regard to service of the bench warrant referred to that—

"I received a warrant for her on October the 30th and I went and found her at that time" * * * "when I served the warrant she told me she had been in court on the day she was supposed to be and after a little questioning I called the court to verify that fact and they informed me after checking that the Bailiff had seen her in court on that day.

"Q. Had she been ordered back in court on December 8th? A. December 6th, I think it was.

"Q. December 6th? A. Yes, sir. * * *

"Q. Then when you went out with the warrant did you serve the warrant? A. I found Mrs. Hanson had been sick.

"Q. Yes. A. Yes.

"Q. What happened then? A. I phoned the court and verified, she said she had been in court on the day that she was supposed to be and I called the court by phone and talked to the judge over there and finally he talked with the bailiff and the bailiff said she had been in court, she came late and he had told her to come back, to return on December 6th. I was informed of that by the court.

"Q. That was what you learned from the court? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. In other words, she was notified to return on December 6th? A. Yes, sir."

[3] The witness did not appear on December 6th nor at any time thereafter. It was established by competent evidence that she had left the state and had gone to Illinois. On the showing briefly outlined above, the transcript of the witness's testimony given at the preliminary examination was admitted in evidence. Under the provisions of paragraph 3 of section 686 of the Penal Code, only one question was presented for the trial court's determination, as revealed by the record herein, namely, was it "satisfactorily shown to the court" that such witness could not, "with due diligence be found within the state." With reference to the same question presented in People v. Lewandowski, 143 Cal. 574, 576, 77 P. 467, 468, Mr. Justice Angellotti observed: "That the right of a defendant to be confronted in person by the witnesses against him is a most important one, and that the trial court should be fully satisfied by the evidence that the absent witness cannot with due diligence be found in the state, before allowing the deposition of such witness, taken on the preliminary examination, to be read, may be freely conceded."

[4] "The question, however, as to whether it is satisfactorily shown that such witness cannot with due diligence be found within the state, is a question of fact that is addressed to the trial court, to be determined by it from evidence introduced before it (People v. Plyler, 126 Cal. 379, 58 P. 904); and with the determination of that question of fact by the trial court, this court will not interfere, unless the evidence thereon is such as to satisfy the court that the trial court abused the discretion confided to it in holding that due diligence had been used, and that the witness could not be found. People v. Witty, 138 Cal. 576, 72 P. 177; People v. Reilly, 106 Cal. 648, 40 P. 13." The foregoing rule has been uniformly upheld. See People v. Day, 219 Cal. 562, 27 P.2d 909; People v. Barker, 144 Cal. 705, 78 P. 266; People v. Padilla, 81 Cal. App. 528, 254 P. 585; People v. Ramos, 52 Cal.App. 491, 199 P. 544; People v. Boyd, 16 Cal.App. 130, 116 P. 323.

[5] In Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 668, 669, 38 P. 511, 512, in an appeal by plaintiff in a civil action from an order granting a new trial, the court, on the subject of "diligence" observed that: "'Diligence' is a relative term, incapable of exact definition. What would amount to due diligence under one state of facts would fall absolutely short of it under another and different state of facts. It depends, therefore, so essentially upon the particular circumstances of each case, with all their distinct and varying phases and bearings, as they have appeared to the lower court at the trial and throughout the conduct of the cause, in determining whether diligence has been used in any particular instance, that this court should hesitate to disturb a ruling upon this ground where it has any substance whatever upon which to rest. The presumption is that the discretion has been properly exercised, and that presumption must be overcome by a clear want of facts before the order will be disturbed." The above quotation is cited in People v. Boyd, and People v. Ramos, supra. And the Day case, supra, cites the Ramos case, supra, with regard to the same subject.

The rule is statutory and prevails in most of the states. See 79 A.L.R. 1411; 90 A.L.R. 379, 122 A.L.R. 440 and 23 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 999.

[6-8] Nor is the procedure allowing the introduction of such evidence repugnant to pertinent constitutional provisions, where, as here, the defendant was confronted by the witness and given an opportunity to and did, in fact, cross examine the witness. "The state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution." Brown v. New Jersey, 175 U.S. 174, 20 S.Ct. 77, 78, 44 L.Ed. 119. Under the authorities and, by virtue of the record herein, it cannot be held that the trial court abused its discretion by admitting in evidence the former testimony of the absent witness. It should be noted in this connection that there was no showing that the testimony in question would have been any different if the absent witness had been present at the trial, nor, that evidence of an impeaching character had materialized since the preliminary examination, nor, that in any other respect valid grounds for objection to the admission of such testimony were present.

[9] The defendant denied knowing, or, of ever having met Elizabeth Hanson. The information alleged the prior conviction of a felony which was not established at the trial but, on cross-examination the defendant admitted the conviction of a felony other than the one alleged. Such admission amounted to a well established form of impeachment.

There are no prejudicial errors in the record and the judgment is affirmed, as is the order denying the motion for a new trial.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 563

CORY v. CORY. *

Civ. 7150; Sac. 5704.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 18, 1945.

1. Divorce ⚷303(2)

The fact that adherents of particular religious group may be excluded from membership in organizations built on other dissenting religious groups' creeds gives court no right to determine that religious teachings of divorced adherent of such group will not be for her children's best interests so as to preclude award of their custody to her.

2. Divorce ⚷303(2)

The courts may not deprive divorced parents of their children's custody because of disagreement with parents as to their religious views, at least so long as their teachings do not conflict with laws of land.

3. Divorce ⚷303(3)

On divorced husband's motion to modify interlocutory divorce decree as to provision awarding wife custody of parties' minor children, trial court abused its discretion in concluding that wife was unfit to have children's custody because of her teachings, as member of Jehovah Witnesses, that it was wrong to salute the flag, to kill, and to participate in wars.

4. Divorce ⚷298(1)

Generally, best interests of divorced parents' minor children in respect to their temporal, mental, and moral welfare govern in awarding their custody.

5. Divorce ⚷298(6)

As between parents adversely claiming their minor children's custody in divorce suit, neither is entitled thereto as of right, but custody of child of tender years should be given to its mother, if other things are equal. Civ.Code, § 138.

6. Divorce ⚷296, 312

What is for best interests of divorced parents' minor children rests in trial court's sound discretion in awarding custody thereof, and such discretion will not be disturbed on appeal, in absence of showing that it was abused.

---

* Subsequent opinion 162 P.2d 497.

7. Divorce ⚷303(2)

The superior court's order, providing for custody of divorced parents' minor children, should not be disturbed unless change of circumstances is shown.

8. Divorce ⚷303(3)

A party moving to modify interlocutory divorce decree as to custody of parties' minor children has burden to show such change of circumstances as justifies change of custody.

9. Divorce ⚷312

On appeal from order modifying interlocutory divorce decree as to custody of parties' minor children, all presumptions are in favor of reasonableness of original decree.

10. Constitutional law ⚷84
Divorce ⚷303(3)

The superior court, in depriving mother of her minor children's custody because of her religious convictions by order modifying interlocutory decree granting her divorce, deprived her of constitutional right and abused its judicial discretion. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 1.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action for divorce by Kathleen B. Cory against Melvin H. Cory. From an order modifying an interlocutory divorce decree for plaintiff as to the custody of the parties' minor children on defendant's motion, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Subsequent opinion, 162 P.2d 497.

Clarence E. Rust, of Oakland, for appellant.

A. L. Wirin, of Los Angeles, and Wayne M. Collins, of San Francisco, amici curiae for appellant.

Lawrence J. Skirving, of Sacramento, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

On April 13, 1943, in an action for divorce brought by Kathleen B. Cory against Melvin H. Cory, an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to plaintiff on the grounds of defendant's extreme cruelty, defendant having been served with summons and failed to appear. The custody of two minor children of the parties, a boy aged about five years and a girl aged about two and onehalf years, was awarded to plaintiff.

On or about April 24, 1944, Melvin H. Cory filed a notice of motion to modify the aforementioned interlocutory decree, and in support thereof filed an affidavit in which he averred that the place where the children were living was an unfit and improper place; that plaintiff was a member of the Jehovah Witness sect and was teaching the children to disrespect the United States of America and the flag of the United States; that he once found plaintiff's home crowded with preachers of the aforesaid sect and there was not sufficient room for the children; that he (defendant) had a good place to keep said children where they would be taught to respect the United States and its flag; and that it would be to the best interest of said children that their custody be awarded to him.

Plaintiff countered with an affidavit alleging that the home where the children were living with her was a fit and proper place, and she a fit and proper person to have their custody, and that it was for their best interest that they remain with her. She admitted that she was a member of Jehovah's Witnesses, but otherwise denied the allegations of defendant's affidavit. A hearing was had on May 23 and 24, 1944, at the conclusion of which the court filed findings of fact and conclusions of law in which it was found as follows:

"3. That the plaintiff has been teaching the said minor children to refuse to give allegiance to the flag of the United States and to the United States, and to refuse to defend the flag and to refuse to defend the United States against its enemies when at war; said plaintiff believes, and has also taught and will continue to teach the said children of the parties hereto to defend in times of peril only persons who believe as she does, and to this end to sacrifice their lives, if need be, but not to raise a hand in defense of their country, or the flag it represents, even in times of war when the existence of our nation is threatened. On the other hand the father objects to such teaching being imbued in their immature minds, and desires that said children be reared as loyal Americans to respect and salute the flag of their country and to defend it when called upon to do so by the Government thereof;

"That while the mother of said children is a moral person, the teachings which she is trying to impress upon the said minors will not be for their best interest or for their welfare. That the teachings of the father will be for their best interests and for the welfare of said children;

"That the teachings of the said plaintiff so far as the minor son is concerned has already so imbued him with disrespect for the flag and unpatriotic thoughts that when the flag is displayed he becomes ill at ease and greatly agitated;

"That the said teaching of plaintiff will not only prevent the said minors from becoming loyal American citizens, but will prevent them, should they later in life desire to join, from joining any of our leading character building groups and organizations, as well as all the leading fraternal organizations and fraternities. That such character building organizations tend greatly to prevent delinquency in children who otherwise might be drawn into such class, and they also teach other matters which are invaluable throughout life to their members. That plaintiff, if given the exclusive custody of said children, will deprive said children of the benefits of the teachings of such groups as above mentioned, and will tend to prevent said minors from associating with loyal Americans;

"That the said minor girl is too young as yet to be impressed with the teachings of plaintiff, and she will suffer no harm or detriment until she has reached the school age of six years;

"That for the reasons stated the mother is not a fit and proper person to have the sole custody of the said children, but on the other hand the father is a fit and proper person to have their care and custody after they reach school age of six years. Under the facts found it is fit and proper that the father have the custody of said minor boy for the school term; and that as soon as the minor girl reaches the age of six years that he also have her custody and control during the school term, all for the purposes aforesaid; and it is further ordered that the mother have the custody of said minors during the vacation period." (Italics ours.)

The interlocutory decree of divorce was modified accordingly and plaintiff has appealed on the ground that the trial court abused its discretion, that the evidence does not support the findings and the findings do not support the order and judgment.

A review of the testimony in the case reveals that no evidence was produced by petitioner to support the allegations of his affidavit that the place where the children were living was an unfit or improper place, and as for the allegation that Mrs. Cory was teaching the children to disrespect the United States and its flag, she testified as follows:

"I respect the Flag, and as far as flags go my pledge goes and my salute goes to Jehovah. Whether it was the American Flag or any other flag my salute would be to Jehovah and not the flag." Under questioning by the court she testified as follows:

"The Court: * * * Q. Mrs. Cory, I presume you do know, and it is a matter of judicial notice, apparently, that the religion of the Jehovah Witnesses is not to salute the Flag. You know that, don't you? A. Yes. We would not salute the Flag.

"Q. You would not salute the Flag under any circumstances. You would stand up? A. I would stand at attention and respect the Flag.

"Q. But you would not salute it? A. No. I salute no flag.

"Q. You would not teach, you would not permit the children to salute the Flag? A. I would teach them the way I believe.

"Q. In other words you would teach them not to salute the Flag, to stand up, and not salute the Flag? A. I would teach them to respect it, but not salute it.

"Q. How about a war? Would you teach them that it was against your religion to go to war, that they should not support the war in case of emergency, war with another country? A. That is right.

"Q. In other words, you would bring the children up so they would be I presume what we call conscientious objectors against war? A. Yes. The Bible tells us, 'Thou Shalt Not Kill.'

"Q. I am not concerned with the Bible. I am trying to find what you think about it and how you are going to raise these children. So if the children were old enough now to be called for the Service what would be your attitude on that? A. If they were old enough it would be their decision, not mine.

"Q. You would not discourage them? A. That would be their decision.

"Q. I am talking about you raising them. A. I would raise them not to fight any wars.

"Q. Even to protect their own country? A. That is right. * * *

"Q. Well, anyhow Mrs. Cory your teachings would be I presume as you say, that you would teach them to respect the Flag, but not to do anything in a military way or otherwise to protect the Flag, or to have anything to do with the Flag. That would be your teachings, wouldn't it? A. Not to put the Flag first.

"Q. Well, put the Flag any place. According to your teachings the Flag is a piece of bunting, according to your teachings? A. It represents the powers of this world to us.

"Q. Represents the powers of this world? A. The American Flag would be representing the worldly element, and I believe that we should have nothing to do with the worldly element. * * *

"Q. Well, if there was a parade going by, and the Flag was going by, how would you teach the children to act about that time? A. I would have them stand at attention. * * *

"Q. I am not trying to find out what the teachings of the Witnesses of Jehovah are. I am just trying to find out what you would teach these children. Would you ever fly the Flag, according to your teachings to your children, at your home? A. We have the Flag in our home, yes.

"Q. You have it on display? A. We have two small flags in our home.

"Q. And why do you put those out? A. We respect it.

"Q. Well, in what way, Mrs. Cory, do you respect it? A. Well, we believe, we 'render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things that are God's', the way our study of the Bible has brought it out to us. * * *

"Q. Well, let me ask you this—I don't want to take too long—as a matter of fact I presume from your statements and other things, that you would raise these children to respect the flag but under no circumstances to salute it, is that it? A. That is it.

"Q. Because you think that, religiously, that it is wrong to salute anything, is that it? A. That is it.

"Q. And so it wouldn't make any difference, no matter what circumstances existed, the children would be taught never to salute the Flag? A. I am trying to live a Christian life the way it seems to me."

As for the finding of the trial court that the teachings of appellant have so imbued the minor son with disrespect for the flag and unpatriotic thoughts that when it is displayed he becomes ill at ease and greatly agitated, the only testimony upon which such a conclusion could be based is testimony of respondent and his woman friend who accompanied him when he took the children to a movie, that when the flag was shown on the screen the little boy at first clapped, but later said he wanted to go home, that "Mama says that flag is no good." However, during the hearing the court interrogated the children as follows:

"Jimmie, you see this flag? Do you know what it is? Don't you know what kind of flag it is? [James Dean Cory] A. American.

"Q. American Flag? A. Yes.

"Q. What do you think about it? Does your Mama tell you anything about the Flag? A. (Nods No.)

"Q. Do you think it is all right? A. (Nods Yes.)

"Q. The American Flag? A. Yes.

"Q. Well, who has been talking to you about that, your mama? A. She don't remember.

"Q. Oh, yes, Jimmie; now you know about this Flag, don't you? A. Yes, but I don't remember.

"Q. Don't remember what? A. What mama said.

"Q. Don't remember what mama said. Well, do you believe in saluting the Flag? A. I don't know.

"Q. You don't know. How old are you, Jimmie? A. Six.

"Q. Six years old. Well, when all the children at school salute the Flag, do you salute it?

"Mr. Dwyer: He doesn't go to school, your Honor. He has not started to school yet.

"The Court: Q. Have you started to school? A. No.

"Q. Does your mama tell you much about the Flag, Jimmie? A. I don't know.

"Q. Don't tell me you don't remember, Jimmie. A. I don't know.

"Q. Don't be scared. We are just talking it over. You know about this Flag, don't you? Don't you know anything about it? A. (Nods No.)

"Q. How about your sister? How old is Sister? A. Three.

"Q. Three.

"The Court: I suppose Sister is too young. Sister, do you know anything about the Flag?

"Barbara Kay Cory: (Nods No.)"

[1] As to the finding of the trial court that the teachings of the children's mother will prevent them from becoming "loyal American citizens," and will prevent them from joining any of our leading character building groups and organizations as well as the leading fraternal organizations, and will tend to prevent them from associating with "loyal Americans," these are but generalizations and conclusions, without definition as to what constitute "loyal American citizens," "loyal Americans," etc., it being assumed, apparently, that those who refuse to salute the flag and do not believe in war because of adherence to the commandment that "Thou shalt not kill," are for these reasons alone to be considered as "disloyal Americans," and not "good American citizens." But Jehovah's Witnesses are not the only religious group that, adhering with what we might believe to be too strict adherence to the teachings of Christ, refuse, to a greater or less extent, to participate in waging war. One need not go far back into the history of this country to find men conceded to be great Americans who were taught such principles as a part of the religious faith of their fathers and mothers and the religious organizations of which they were members. A striking example of this should occur to the mind of anyone familiar with the religious background of a living American whom history will doubtless record as one of the greatest military leaders of all time. As for the conclusion that appellant's teachings will prevent these children from joining "our leading character building organizations"—whatever they may be—adherence to the teachings of any one religious group may have the effect of excluding its adherents from membership in organizations built upon the creeds of other dissenting religious groups, but such fact should have no bearing upon the rights of parents to bring their children up in their own faith, nor justify courts in arrogating to themselves the right to determine that the religious teachings of such parents will not be for the best interests of their children. Aside from the fact that she is a Jehovah's Witness there is no contention that appellant is not a fit and proper person to have the custody of her infant children. The court stated, as above set forth, that she is a moral person, and her teachings of the scriptures to her children may, in themselves, be quite as "character building" as would membership in the groups and organizations of whose benefits the trial court fears these children may be deprived if left in their mother's custody.

The conclusion seems inescapable that appellant has been deprived of the custody of said children solely because she is a Jehovah's Witness, and, in the opinion of the trial court, the beliefs of the followers of that faith are inimical to the welfare of their children because they do not salute the flag and are unwilling to fight for their country. If it is right to take these children from their mother's custody for the reasons stated, then by the same course of reasoning we must conclude that it would be right and proper to deprive all Jehovah's Witnesses of custody of their offspring lest they become disloyal citizens. Also it would seem to follow that the teachings of this group should be prevented by the state as inimical to the public welfare.

[2] We have been cited to no case, and believe none will be found, wherein it has been held that the courts may deprive parents of the custody of their offspring because of a disagreement with such parents as to their religious views, at least, as long as their teachings do not conflict with the laws of the land. While respondent argues in his brief that there is no religious issue in this case, and asserts that the question is whether a father should have the right to have his children taught the "principles of good citizenship," it is patent that both respondent and the trial court are of the opinion that the religious teachings of appellant are incompatible with what they consider the "principles of good citizenship."

It is true that the trial court did say:

"Now, I don't have to decide a question of religion at all. It is a question of whether or not the mother or the father should have something to say about bringing up these children and their welfare, if it is right to teach them those things—well, that is one thing—if it is right to teach them, as I call it, non-patriotism, because after all if you are passive on these things you might as well be against them. * * * I am not going to interfere in any way with their religion, but I do say these children have a right to be brought up to choose what they want before they become a member of the faith that they have described here.

"And I am not going to ask the woman to change the religion, * * * But these children are at least going to be given a chance to understand while they are young these other matters. * * *

"I don't want her to change her religion. All I want her to do is to agree, to say whether she would agree to teach these children, like the other hundred million children are taught, to not only respect the Flag but to salute the Flag when the Flag goes by, or wherever they are so that, as I say, they could join a thousand institutions which they would not be able to join otherwise, so that they would be able to work actively for this Flag in case of danger. * * *

"Let her think it over. I am not anxious to have the children taken. I want her to agree, if the children are kept with her part of the time, or all of the time, I want her to agree to teach them like other children are taught, to respect the Flag and salute the Flag, and defend the country when it has to be defended, and not be a shirker in war, not passive but active."

[3] While the court in the foregoing disclaims any desire to interfere with plaintiff's religious views, and attempts to base his decision on "patriotism," it is apparent that he considers it unpatriotic to refuse to salute the flag, and believes that a mother who teaches her children that it is wrong to kill and right to refuse to participate in wars, is unfit to have the custody of her children; for only on these grounds has it found that she "is not a fit and proper person to have the sole custody of the said children." In so concluding we think the said court abused its discretion. Differ as we may, and, we might say, as most of us do, as to the wisdom and soundness of the reasoning of plaintiff and her fellow Witnesses, it is not for courts to say that her religious convictions and those of her associates are necessarily such as to jeopardize the interests of their children.

As to the refusal of Jehovah's Witnesses to salute the flag, the Supreme Court of the United States, in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette, 319 U.S. 624, 63 S.Ct. 1178, 87 L.Ed. 1628, 147 A.L.R. 674, in holding that the action of the Board of Education in requiring public school pupils to salute the flag while reciting a pledge of allegiance, under penalty of expulsion, transcended constitutional limitations and invaded the sphere of intellect of which it is the purpose of the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution to reserve from all official control, said, 319 U.S. at pages 640, 641, 63 S.Ct. at page 1186, 87 L.Ed. 1639, 147 A.L.R. 674:

"Struggles to coerce uniformity of sentiment in support of some end thought essential to their time and country have been waged by many good as well as by evil men. Nationalism is a relatively recent phenomenon but at other times and places the ends have been racial or territorial security, support of a dynasty or regime, and particular plans for saving souls. As first and moderate methods to attain unity have failed, those bent on its accomplishment must resort to an ever-increasing severity. As governmental pressure toward unity becomes greater, so strife becomes more bitter as to whose unity it shall be. Probably no deeper division of our people could proceed from any provocation than from finding it necessary to choose what doctrine and whose program public educational officials shall compel youth to unite in embracing. Ultimate futility of such attempts to compel coherence is the lesson of every such effort from the Roman drive to stamp out Christianity as a disturber of its pagan unity, the Inquisition, as a means to religious and dynastic unity, the Siberian exiles as a means to Russian unity, down to the fast failing efforts of our present totalitarian enemies. Those who begin coercive elimination of dissent soon find themselves exterminating dissenters. Compulsory unification of opinion achieves only the unanimity of the graveyard."

Also, 319 U.S. at pages 641, 642, 63 S.Ct. at page 1187, 87 L.Ed. 1639, 147 A.L.R. 674:

"To believe that patriotism will not flourish if patriotic ceremonies are voluntary and spontaneous instead of a compulsory routine is to make an unflattering estimate of the appeal of our institutions to free minds. We can have intellectual individualism and the rich cultural diversities that we owe to exceptional minds only at the price of occasional eccentricity and abnormal attitudes. When they are so harmless to others or to the State as those we deal with here, the price is not too great. But freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom.

The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order.

"If there is any fixed star in our constitutional constellation, it is that no official, high or petty, can prescribe what shall be orthodox in politics, nationalism, religion, or other matters of opinion or force citizens to confess by word or act their faith therein. If there are any circumstances which permit an exception, they do not now occur to us."

And Mr. Justice Murphy, in his concurring opinion, said, 319 U.S. at pages 645-646, 63 S.Ct. at page 1189, 87 L.Ed. 1641, 147 A.L.R. 674:

"Without wishing to disparage the purposes and intentions of those who hope to inculcate sentiments of loyalty and patriotism by requiring a declaration of allegiance as a feature of public education, or unduly belittle the benefits that may accrue therefrom, I am impelled to conclude that such a requirement is not essential to the maintenance of effective government and orderly society. To many it is deeply distasteful to join in a public chorus of affirmation of private belief. By some, including the members of this sect, it is apparently regarded as incompatible with a primary religious obligation and therefore a restriction on religious freedom. Official compulsion to affirm what is contrary to one's religious beliefs is the antithesis of freedom of worship which, it is well to recall, was achieved in this country only after what Jefferson characterized as the 'severest contests in which I have ever been engaged.'

"I am unable to agree that the benefits that may accrue to society from the compulsory flag salute are sufficiently definite and tangible to justify the invasion of freedom and privacy that is entailed or to compensate for a restraint on the freedom of the individual to be vocal or silent according to his conscience or personal inclination."

In Stone v. Stone, 16 Wash.2d 315, 133 P.2d 526, the court had before it a situation similar to that presented in the case before us, the question being whether the trial court, in a divorce proceeding in which a decree had been entered in favor of the husband, was justified in awarding the custody of the children of the contesting parties to the father because the mother was a member of Jehovah's Witnesses whose teachings, the court felt, were inimical to the rearing of children as American citizens. The Supreme Court, in reversing the judgment of the trial court, stated, 133 P.2d at page 527:

"Jehovah's Witnesses has existed since about 1878, and as we understand it, its members' refusal to salute the flag is not because they do not honor the flag, but because of an honest conviction, based upon their interpretation of the Bible, that saluting the flag is making it an image of the power to which one looks for salvation, and that to salute such an image ignores Almighty God, from whom alone salvation proceeds. Jehovah's Witnesses do not teach any violation of the laws of the state which are in harmony with God's laws, but if the law of the state is in direct violation of God's law, they will obey God's law first and all the time."

The court also cited and quoted from Reynolds v. Rayborn, Tex.Civ.App., 116 S.W.2d 836, 838, in which case a father had been deprived of the custody of a twelve year old daughter, because both father and child were Jehovah's Witnesses and refused to salute the flag of the United States. The court there said, in reversing the order of the trial court:

"History is replete with the bigotry, intolerance, and dogmatism of religious sects, and the pages thereof are strewn with martyrs who died for their faith. The divergence in creeds, the evils growing from a union of church and state, and the conflicts for supremacy waged between the two were studied and considered by the colonial pioneers who established the independence of these United States. They profited by peoples whose experiences in government had failed, as well as by the achievements of those whose governments had been more successful, and to avoid the griefs and disasters arising from the bigotry and religious intolerance of the preceding ages, they provided in our fundamental laws, Amendment 1 of the Constitution, of the United States, that the 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.'"

Reference was then made to a provision of the Texas Constitution, Vernon's Ann. St.Const. art. 1, § 6, which, in substance, like Art. I, section 4, of the California Constitution, guarantees the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference, and the court added:

"The flag is emblematic of the justice, greatness, and power of the United States —these, together, guarantee the political liberty of the citizen, but the flag is no less symbolic of the justice, greatness, and power of our country when they guarantee to the citizen freedom of conscience in religion—the right to worship his God according to the dictates of his conscience. Beyond my comprehension are the vagaries of people who claim and accept the protection of their government in order to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience, but refuse to salute their country's flag in recognition of such protection. Yet, however reprehensible to us such conduct may be, their constitutional right must be held sacred; when this ceases, religious freedom ceases."

While it is apparent in this case that the court considered the fitness of the mother to have the custody of her children, and found that the teachings of the father will be for the best interests and welfare of these children, the record is singularly barren of any evidence to show the fitness of the father to have such custody. It seems to have been assumed that if the children are given into his care it will naturally follow that they will be reared to be good and loyal American citizens, without any predilections which would disqualify them from joining any of the character building groups or fraternal organizations referred to by the trial court. But there is no evidence as to what the father purposes to teach these children or what he wants them to be taught. The court refused to admit proffered evidence to show the grounds upon which the divorce was granted to plaintiff, and that respondent left appellant on account of another woman with whom he was living. Cory admitted that he had written a letter to Mrs. Cory in which he had told her that he had been drunk for a week, though he denied that such statement was true. He said that he did not himself go to church when living with Mrs. Cory, but that when he did go to church he attended the Catholic church. He admitted that he had at the time no home of his own to which to take the children, but stated that he was trying to get an apartment and if successful his sister, whose husband was absent on military service, would live with him and take care of them; but there was no showing as to what said sister would teach them, what her religious beliefs were, if any, or that she was especially fitted to or would teach the children to be patriotic and good and loyal American citizens, or have them join the Boy or Girl Scouts, etc.

[4-6] It is generally recognized that in awarding the custody of children what appears to be for their best interests in respect to their temporal, mental and moral welfare shall govern; that as between parents adversely claiming custody, neither parent is entitled to it as of right, but, other things being equal, if a child is of tender years it should be given to its mother. This rule is set forth in section 138 of our Civil Code, and has been stated and applied by the courts in innumerable cases. It has often been stated, as well, that what is for the best interests of children is a matter resting in the sound judicial discretion of the trial court, and that such discretion will not be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a showing that it has been abused. As to what constitutes an abuse of discretion perhaps no general rule has yet been formulated which is applicable to all cases, but appellate courts, not infrequently, have held that trial courts have abused their discretion in awarding custody of children. See Washburn v. Washburn, 49 Cal.App.2d 581, 122 P.2d 96; Moon v. Moon, 62 Cal.App.2d 185, 144 P.2d 596; Stever v. Stever, 6 Cal.2d 166, 56 P.2d 1229.

[7-9] It also has been held in numerous decisions in this state, that where a court has, by its order, once provided for the custody of children, such order should not be disturbed unless a change of circumstances has been shown; that the burden is on the moving party to show such change of circumstances as justifies a change of custody; and that all presumptions are in favor of the reasonableness of the original decree. Prouty v. Prouty, 16 Cal.2d 190, 193, 105 P.2d 295; Foster v. Foster, 8 Cal.2d 719, 726, 727, 68 P.2d 719; Olson v. Olson, 95 Cal.App. 594, 597, 272 P. 1113; Gavel v. Gavel, 123 Cal.App. 589, 11 P.2d 654; Moon v. Moon, supra; Washburn v. Washburn, supra.

[10] We think that in this case the trial court—probably because of his own intense patriotism and loyalty to his country in time of war, and a not unnatural irritation at the attitude of mind of persons who, though they blandly accept the protection of a government which guarantees them the right to religious freedom, are unwilling to fight for its preservation, and who in the light of the present world conflict still insist that by inaction their rights and their lives will be preserved by a divine providence without the necessity of fighting for them—lost sight of the constitutional provisions which guarantee religious freedom to all, and, in depriving this mother of the custody of her children because of her religious convictions, has deprived her of a constitutional right which she may not be compelled to exercise only conditionally, and in so doing has exceeded the bounds of wise judicial discretion.

The order appealed from is reversed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 576

PY v. PLEITNER et al.

Civ. 12805.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Aug. 20, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 18, 1945.

1. Mortgages 🔑329

Where obligation in suit was secured by an ordinary deed of trust with right of sale on default, it was not subject to rules relating to mortgage foreclosures.

2. Mortgages 🔑591(2)

When, by terms of deed of trust, trustees are granted power to sell without judicial proceeding, a sale made in accordance with deed does not carry the right of redemption.

3. Mortgages 🔑137, 138, 345, 424, 591(3)

A "deed of trust" differs from a "mortgage" in that the title passes from trustor to trustee under a deed of trust, while, in case of mortgage, mortgagor retains title; the statute of limitations never runs against power of sale in a deed of trust, while it does run against a mortgage; and mortgagor has a statutory right of redemption after foreclosure, while no such right exists under a deed of trust. Code Civ.Proc. § 702.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Deed of Trust" and "Mortgage".

4. Mortgages 🔑369(1)

A trustee's sale under a deed of trust is open to attack in a court of equity, and court will view the proceeding with extreme care to see that rights of trustor are fully protected.

5. Mortgages 🔑364

Where property was bid in at $5,000 at trustee's sale under deed of trust, which bid trustee accepted as full settlement of obligation of trustor, thereby satisfying trustor's indebtedness, and, after interest, attorneys' fees, and expenses of sale were deducted, trustor was paid balance which she retained, trustor suffered no injury from failure of purchaser to pay but $800 in cash.

6. Appeal and error 🔑882(19)

Where trustor, in trial court, in attack on trustee's sale under deed of trust, offered no evidence of value or nature of property on issue of adequacy of price, trustor could not complain on appeal that price was inadequate.

7. Appeal and error 🔑169

An appellate court is merely a court of review and cannot determine issues which were not offered or heard in trial court.

8. Mortgages 🔑356

The separation by a public highway of a tract of land subject to a trust deed does not require the posting of a notice of trustee's sale on each section in the absence of any statutory requirement to that effect.

9. Mortgages 🔑356

Where, from all that appeared in record, property conveyed by trustor to trustee under trust deed consisted of a single holding owned and operated by trustor as a single ranch, no part of which was described in trust deed in a manner as to show or make it appear probable that it was not a part of one integral tract of land, the posting of but one notice of trustee's sale on the land was sufficient even though land was divided by a highway.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1073(1)

Where original judgment in action to set aside trustee's sale, which judgment adjudged that purchaser at sale was absolute owner of property, was allegedly lost, plaintiff was not prejudiced by judgment appearing in clerk's transcript, which judgment differed from original in that it contained a writ of possession, since, in any event, purchaser would have been entitled to such writ.

11. Jury ⚷26

Under code section declaring that a trial by jury is waived by failing to deposit with clerk ten days prior to date set for trial a sum equal to one day's jury fee, where plaintiff delayed in making deposit until day set for trial, court properly denied her demand for trial by jury. Code Civ.Proc. § 631.

12. Mortgages ⚷369(7)

In action to set aside trustee's sale under deed of trust, evidence failed to show that trustor made a sufficient tender of sum due after notice of default or made any tender within period of three months following date of recordation of notice of default so as to authorize relief. Civ.Code, § 2924c.

13. Mortgages ⚷369(7)

Trustor, in action to set aside trustee's sale under deed of trust, had burden to show that she complied with requirement of code for a tender of amount due within three months after date of recordation of notice of default. Civ.Code, § 2924c.

14. Mortgages ⚷369(4)

A tender of indebtedness is a prerequisite to a judgment canceling a sale under deed of trust. Civ.Code, § 2924c.

15. Equity ⚷66

Where trustor elected to default in her contractual obligations secured by a deed of trust on her property and, after trustee's sale of property, sought relief in a court of equity without offering to do equity on her own part by tendering payment of the debt secured, trustor was not entitled to relief. Civ.Code, § 2924c.

16. Appeal and error ⚷712

Negotiations made after trial, and which were not evidenced by documents duly made a part of reporter's transcript or certified by trial judge or clerk of court, cannot be considered on appeal.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Frank M. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Marie LePleux Py against Henry August Pleitner and others to set aside a sale of realty made under a deed of trust, for damages, and for other relief. From an adjudication that defendant L. E. Gibson, purchaser at trustee's sale, was absolute owner of property and denying all relief prayed, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Marie LePleux Py, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

Cyril Roche, of Hayward, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued in propria persona to set aside a sale of real property made under a deed of trust, and for damages sustained as a result of such sale. Defendant Gibson who was the purchaser at the trustee's sale, was adjudged absolute owner of the property, and plaintiff was denied all relief prayed.

The controversy arises out of a promissory note dated November 5, 1941, executed by plaintiff as evidence of a loan to her of $4200, secured by a deed of trust covering real property. The note called for payment of monthly instalments of $42 including interest at 6% and plaintiff agreed to pay taxes, insurance and, in event of default, attorney's fees and trustee's expenses of sale. Plaintiff paid instalments until June 6, 1942, when she defaulted on payments of insurance, taxes and subsequent payments on the note. Notice of default and of intention to sell under the deed of trust was recorded October 17, 1942, and a copy was mailed to plaintiff. Notice of time and place of sale was duly published and a copy was posted on the premises. Several continuances of the sale were granted upon request of an attorney then representing plaintiff and a sale was made on the court house steps on July 28, 1943, to an agent of defendant Gibson. At that time $800 was paid in cash, and Gibson's note and deed of trust was accepted for the balance of the $5000 bid. After the principal, interest, costs of sale, and attorney's fees were deducted, plaintiff was paid the sum of $113.23 which she retained while the litigation was pending. The trial court found that the sale was fairly conducted in accordance with law and the deed of trust.

[1-3] Appellant devotes a large part of her brief to the argument that the statutory proceedings governing the foreclosure of mortgages was not followed, and that she was denied the right of redemption. The obligation in suit was secured by an ordinary deed of trust with the right of sale on default. As such it was not subject to the rules relating to mortgage foreclosures. And when, by the terms of the deed, the trustees are granted the power to sell without judicial proceedings, a sale made in accordance with the deed does not carry the right of redemption. The distinction between the two kinds of security is recognized in Bank of Italy, etc., Ass'n v. Bentley, 217 Cal. 644, 655, 20 P.2d 940, 944, where the supreme court said: "Thus it has been held that a deed of trust differs from a mortgage in that title passes to the trustee in case of a deed of trust, while, in the case of a mortgage, the mortgagor retains title; that the statute of limitations never runs against the power of sale in a deed of trust, while it does run against a mortgage; and that a mortgagor has a statutory right of redemption after foreclosure (Code Civ.Proc. § 702), while no such right exists under a deed of trust. See, generally, Kidd Trust Deeds & Mortgages in California, 3 Cal.L.Rev. 381. See, also, 12 Cal.L.Rev. 307; 20 Cal.L.Rev. 31; 5 So.Cal.L.Rev. 227."

[4, 5] But a sale conducted under these conditions is open to attack in a court of equity and the court will view the proceedings with extreme care to see that the rights of the trustor are fully protected. Here the first attack made upon the sale is that the full purchase price was not paid in cash. The property was bid in at $5000. Eight hundred dollars was paid in cash and a note and mortgage taken for the balance. The original trustee accepted full settlement of the obligation, appellant's indebtedness was satisfied, and, after interest, attorney's fees, and expenses of sale were deducted, appellant was paid the balance which she retained. She has therefore suffered no injury from the failure of the purchaser to pay the full purchase price in cash.

[6, 7] Next she argues that the bidding was collusive since the value of the property was far above $5000, and she states in her brief that the property consists of a seven and one-half and two and one-half acre tract, divided by a roadway, that it is situated on a main arterial highway, that on the seven and one-half acre tract are a seven room house, a four room cottage, an apricot orchard of 120 trees, two wells, three pigeon houses, a tool shed, and other buildings. On the two and one-half acre tract is a $5000 filling station and the two story "Alameda County Landmark." No evidence either of the value or nature of the property was introduced in the trial court. Plaintiff did not take the stand and did not tender the issue to the trial court that the price paid at the sale was inadequate. It is axiomatic that an appellate court is merely a court of review and that it can not determine issues which were not offered or heard in the trial court.

[8, 9] Another attack upon the conduct of the sale relates to the posting of the notice of sale. Appellant states that the property consists of two non-contiguous parcels separated by a public highway, and that the notice of sale was posted on but one. This issue does not appear to have been tendered to the trial court and no finding was made in relation to it. It does appear that the deed of trust described the property as consisting of two parcels, but it does not appear that they were non-contiguous. If the separation of a tract of land by a public highway should require the posting of a notice of sale on each, the statute would so specify. Crandall v. Title Guarantee & Trust Co., 2 Cal.App.2d 96, 37 P.2d 519. From all that appears here the property conveyed consisted of a single holding owned and operated by appellant as a single ranch, no part of which is described in the trust deed "in such a manner as to show or to make it appear probable that it is not a part of one integral tract of land." Security-First Nat. Bank of Los Angeles v. De La Cuesta, 15 Cal.App.2d 302, 306, 59 P.2d 542, 544.

[10] Appellant attacks the form of the judgment which appears in the clerk's transcript. It is conceded that this differs from the original judgment in that it contains a writ of possession. Respondent states outside the record that the original judgment was "lost." Appellant views this explanation with just suspicion and argues that it is evidence of a preconceived conspiracy on the part of all the respondents to deprive her of her property and to defeat her legal remedies. But the record does not support the argument. The clerk's transcript discloses that the findings of fact and conclusions of law were signed and filed on March 8, 1944. On the same day the judgment was entered and filed by the clerk, though not docketed until eight days later. When or how the original judgment was "lost," or how it differed from the one appealed from does not appear. Respondents are content to rest on the statement that it is immaterial, since the purchaser was entitled to a writ of possession. This cannot be disputed and if the judgment were silent in that respect the purchaser could have applied for such a writ. On the record before us we cannot find that appellant has suffered any injury by the asserted irregularity in the manner of the entry of the judgment.

[11] Appellant contends that she was denied due process by the denial of her demand for a jury trial. The record discloses that on November 9, 1943, appellant filed her written demand for a trial by jury. On December 20, 1943, the cause was set for trial before a jury on January 3, 1944, and written notice was served on appellant on the same day. On the day set for trial the appellant deposited the jury fees and thereupon demanded a trial by jury which was denied. Section 631 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that a trial by jury is waived by failing to deposit with the clerk ten days prior to the date set for trial, a sum equal to one day's jury fees. Having failed to deposit the necessary sum at the prescribed time, appellant cannot now assert that she was denied a jury trial by any error of the trial court. Norland v. Gould, 200 Cal. 706, 708, 254 P. 560; Harmon v. Hopkins, 116 Cal.App. 184, 187, 2 P.2d 540. In holding that the trial court did not err in denying appellant's demand for a jury trial we do not imply that this cause of action is one in which she would be entitled as of right to a trial by jury if the jury fees had been deposited within the time prescribed in the Code.

[12, 13] Throughout her briefs appellant suggests that she was injured by respondents' refusal to accept her tender of the amount due made after notice of default. We have been unable to find any evidence that a sufficient tender was made, or that any tender was made within the period of three months following the date of recordation of notice of default, as required by section 2924c of the Civil Code. The issue was not properly raised in the complaint and hence the findings do not cover it. The burden of proof was on appellant to show that she complied with the terms of the Code section and this burden she has failed to sustain.

[14, 15] None of the foregoing procedural objections raised by appellant would justify a reversal of the judgment. They are generally supported by the citation of authorities from other jurisdictions which do not bear analysis under our prevailing statutes. We appreciate the unfortunate position in which appellant finds herself because she did not seek legal advice to protect her legal rights. Whether from lack of knowledge of her legal rights and duties, or from choice, the appellant elected to default in her contractual obligations and then sought relief in a court of equity without, however, offering to do equity on her own part. The rule in this state is settled that a tender of the indebtedness is a prerequisite to a judgment canceling a sale under a deed of trust. Leonard v. Bank of America, 16 Cal.App.2d 341, 60 P.2d 325; American Trust Co. v. DeAlbergaria, 123 Cal.App. 76, 10 P.2d 1016; Shimpones v. Stickney, 219 Cal. 637, 28 P.2d 673. In the latter case the supreme court said 219 Cal. at page 649, 28 P.2d at page 678: "It is settled in California that a mortgagor cannot quiet his title against the mortgagee without paying the debt secured. See a long list of cases sustaining the equitable rule as variously applied collated in 10 Cal.Jur. p. 512 et seq. It was clearly erroneous to quiet her title under the circumstances of her refusal to do equity."

[16] Though appellant frequently refers in her briefs (and in letters and other uncertified papers left with the clerk of this court) to her offer to pay the indebtedness, the record does not disclose more than an offer made after judgment to pay in part. Such negotiations as were made after the trial and which are not evidenced by documents duly made a part of the reporter's transcript or certified by the trial judge or the clerk of court cannot be considered on this appeal.

There is no prejudicial error apparent on the record before us.

The judgment is affirmed.

GOODELL, J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 534

PEOPLE v. TRIPLETT.

Cr. 1910.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 17, 1945.

1. Sodomy 🔑5

Indictment charging defendant with copulating his penis with the mouth of another person was not fatally defective on ground that it did not state sex of such other person, since offense would be committed irrespective of whether person was a male or a female. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 950–952.

2. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)

Indictment charging defendant with sex offenses with "Earl Barnett" and "Richard Hassell" was not fatally defective because it failed to allege that names represented persons, where objection was not urged upon a motion for new trial and it did not appear that defendant was misled. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 950–952, 1404; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

3. Criminal law 🔑1186(4)

Courts do not favor technical constructions which go to the form rather than to the substance, particularly where a defendant has been tried and convicted.

4. Criminal law 🔑1169(1)

In prosecution for sex offenses, admission of two photographs of defendant found in home of person with whom defendant allegedly committed offense charged, introduced merely to show that defendant made a voluntary confession after such pictures were shown to him, was not prejudicial to defendant notwithstanding in one of them defendant was nude. Pen.Code, § 288a.

5. Criminal law 🔑531(3)

Evidence supported finding that confession made by defendant while arrested was freely and voluntarily made.

6. Criminal law 🔑736(2)

Admissibility of a confession made by defendant while arrested is a preliminary question for the trial court.

7. Criminal law 🔑736(2)

To determine whether confession made by defendant while arrested was freely and voluntarily made, is for the trier of facts.

8. Criminal law 🔑520(1), 522(1)

Even where there have been threats and inducements, a confession is not necessarily inadmissible if, at time it is made, such threats and inducements have ceased to operate upon defendant to bring about his statement of guilt.

9. Criminal law 🔑518(1)

Failure to advise defendant that his statements might be used against him is not ground for holding that his confession was not free and voluntary.

10. Sodomy 🔑6

Evidence supported conviction of copulating penis with mouth of another person. Pen.Code, § 288a.

11. Criminal law 🔑1159(2, 4)

The sufficiency of evidence and the veracity of a witness are matters for the trial court, even though testimony of witness is contradicted.

12. Criminal law 🔑507(1)

In prosecution for sexual offenses, as to acts testified to by witness between defendant and another, the witness was not an "accomplice" whose testimony was required to be corroborated in order to sustain defendant's conviction. Pen.Code, § 288a.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Accomplice".

13. Criminal law 🔑511(7)

Confession of defendant is sufficient corroboration of accomplice's testimony.

14. Criminal law 🔑260(11)

In prosecution for sex offenses, finding that defendant did not establish an alibi was supported by evidence and hence could not be disturbed on appeal. Pen.Code, § 288a.

15. Criminal law 🔑554

In prosecution for sex offenses, trial court was not compelled to believe defendant's testimony establishing an alibi, especially in view of defendant's admission at the trial that a previous confession was true. Pen.Code, § 288a.

16. Indictment and information 🔑176

Where time is not of essence of crime charged, the people may prove that act was committed at any time before the indictment, and within period of limitation.

17. Indictment and Information ⚷176

Conviction of sex offense was not unauthorized on ground of fatal variance between allegations of indictment and proof, where proof, although establishing different time of commission of offense than alleged in indictment, established commission of offense before the indictment. Pen.Code, § 288a.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Harold Triplett was convicted in three counts of copulating his penis with the mouth of another person and his motion for a new trial was denied, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Busick & Busick, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Robt. W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Ward Sullivan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

In an indictment filed in the county of Sacramento, defendant was charged, in three counts, with violations of section 288a of the Penal Code. All of the offenses were alleged to have been committed "on or about the month of July, A. D. 1943," the first with Earl Barnett, and the other two with Richard Hassell.

Defendant demurred to the indictment on the grounds that the facts stated in each count did not constitute a public offense and that said indictment did not substantially conform to sections 950, 951 and 952 of the Penal Code. The demurrer was overruled, and defendant waived a jury trial. After trial by the court he was duly convicted and thereafter filed a motion for a new trial, the grounds therefor being that the court erred in admitting in evidence an alleged confession of the defendant and in admitting two photographs, that it erred in overruling defendant's demurrer to the indictment, and that the judgment of conviction was contrary to the evidence and contrary to law. The motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant has appealed from the order denying such new trial, and from that alone, the court having granted defendant's motion for probation.

[1, 2] Before this court appellant urges, first, that the trial court should have sustained his demurrer to the indictment for the reason that such indictment did not state the sex of Earl Barnett and Richard Hassell. Section 288a of the Penal Code provides that anyone participating in the act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another is punishable as therein provided. Defendant was charged with copulating his penis with the mouths of Earl Barnett and Richard Hassell. There is nothing in the statute that requires that in order to commit the offense therein stated, the person whose mouth is so copulated must be a male. The offense would be committed if the copulation were with the mouth of a female. There is, therefore, nothing in the point that the sex of Barnett and Hassell was not alleged. Appellant also contends that the indictment does not state an offense because it does not allege that Barnett and Hassell were persons—that their names might have been the names of dogs or horses, or of models in shop windows. We are not impressed with this argument. It was not urged upon the trial court upon the motion for a new trial, and it does not appear that defendant was misled to such an extreme, or that he could have believed that such was the case. He cites People v. Smink, 105 Cal.App. 784, 288 P. 873, and People v. Hopwood, 130 Cal.App. 168, 19 P.2d 824, but neither case is pertinent. In the Smink case it does not appear what the allegations of the information were except that they omitted to state the name and sex of the persons upon whom the crimes were committed. In any event the pleading was there held sufficient, in the absence of demurrer or motion in arrest of judgment. In the Hopwood case the charge was not a violation of section 288a, but of section 286 of the Penal Code, and the allegations of the information were entirely different from those in the indictment before us. Also in that case the record of the trial was not before the appellate court which was, therefore, unable to say that there had been no such miscarriage of justice as justified the application of Art. VI, section 4½, of the Constitution.

In the case before us the reporter's transcript was made a part of the record on appeal and presents a proper case for application of the rule laid down in the constitutional provision, that no new trial shall be granted for any error as to matter of pleading or for any error as to matter of procedure, "unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." Also see Penal Code, sec. 1404.

[3] Courts do not favor technical constructions which go to the form rather than to the substance, particularly where a defendant has been tried and convicted. 14 Cal.Jur. 48, 49. And it does not appear that in this case defendant was in any manner misled by the allegations of the indictment. His demurrer was not based upon uncertainty, but only upon the ground that no public offense was stated. The most that could be said in criticism of the indictment is that there was an imperfect allegation of a material fact rather than a total failure to set forth an essential element. People v. Fuski, 49 Cal.App. 4, 7, 192 P. 552.

[4] As for the second ground for reversal—that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence two photographs of defendant which were found in the home of Earl Barnett with whom one of defendant's offenses was committed—appellant fails to state in his brief that these two photographs were introduced solely for the limited purpose of showing that after his arrest he changed his story and admitted the commission of the offenses charged after he was shown these pictures, and in relation to the contention that his later statement was freely and voluntarily made. There is nothing obscene about them, though in one of them, taken by Barnett, defendant is nude. Their introduction for the limited purpose for which they were offered could have resulted in no prejudice justifying the granting of a new trial, and appellant submits no authorities in support of his argument that their admission was error.

[5] The third ground for reversal urged by appellant is that his confession was not freely and voluntarily made. The trial court went fully into this matter and, under the evidence, the question whether the confession was freely and voluntarily made became one of fact for the trial court whose conclusion finds ample support in the evidence. Its weight and the veracity of the respective witnesses were for the trial court. At the trial defendant said that he thought it would be easier for him if he made the statement admitting the offenses, and that the statement made after he was shown the photographs was true. There is no evidence that any threats or promises of reward were made to defendant, or that he was coerced. The fact that he was questioned in the night time after his arrest at Barnett's home does not justify a conclusion that his statement was not voluntary even though he did testify that he was excited and nervous. His treatment by the arresting officers and those who took his statements seems to have been fair and reasonable under the circumstances, and the fact that defendant at first denied any participation in or knowledge of the sex practices carried on in Barnett's home, and later made his admissions after he was shown the photographs found at Barnett's, justifies the inference that his decision to tell the truth was made after due deliberation and because he had decided that his best interests would be served by so doing.

Appellant relies upon People v. Day, 125 Cal.App. 106, 13 P.2d 855; People v. Dye, 119 Cal.App. 262, 6 P.2d 313; People v. Quan Gim Gow, 23 Cal.App. 507, 138 P. 918; 8 Cal.Jur. 111, sec. 202; and People v. Jones, 24 Cal.2d 601, 150 P.2d 801, but they are not persuasive here.

[6-8] In the Day case the uncontradicted evidence regarding the treatment to which the defendant was submitted for a period of some ten days prior to her alleged confession and while she was in custody without any charge filed against her, is in no sense comparable to the evidence in the case before us. It furnishes no precedent of value. In the Dye case, also, the facts are materially different. Also in that very case the court said that the admissibility of a confession is a preliminary question for the trial court, citing People v. Ferdinand, 194 Cal. 555, 567, 229 P. 341, and that it is for the trier of facts to determine whether it was freely and voluntarily made; also that, though threats and inducements and any illegal process whereby, through external means of pressure the free will of a defendant has been overcome, may render a confession inadmissible, even where there have been threats and inducements a confession is not necessarily inadmissible if, at the time it is made, such threats and inducements have ceased to operate upon defendant to bring about his statement of guilt.

[9] It is also urged by appellant that his confession should not have been admitted because he was not advised that his statements might be used against him. But that failure to so advise a defendant is not ground for holding that his confession was not free and voluntary was held in People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 314, 125 P.2d 29, where other cases to the same effect are cited. See People v. Booth, 72 Cal.App. 160, 168, 236 P. 987; People v. Ramirez, 113 Cal.App. 204, 207, 298 P. 60; People v. Clark, 28 Cal.App. 735, 736, 153 P. 980. In People v. McLachlan, 13 Cal.2d 45, 87 P.2d 825, defendant contended that his confession was not free and voluntary because the officers who had him in custody told him it would be better for him to confess and if he would they would assist him in procuring hospitalization for injuries from which he was suffering; but the court said, 13 Cal.2d at page 51, 87 P.2d at page 828:

"Whatever strength there may have been in the contention that the confession was not voluntary was nullified by the fact that the defendant took the stand at the trial and made admissions which cannot be regarded otherwise than as a confession of his commission of the crime. The question as to whether or not the confession was properly obtained in the presence of the four officers was a matter within the province of the court to decide, and there being no inherent improbability as to the truth of the testimony given in support of its admission, we would not be justified in reversing the cause on the ground that the confession was not obtained in the manner prescribed by the statute."

That case is similar to the one before us in that McLachlan made his confession after he was confronted with the facts of the case and told of the discovery, in his toilet, of the shoes of the child with whose murder he was charged. Here defendant made his confession after being shown the nude photograph of himself found in Barnett's house; and at the trial he admitted the truth of the confession.

[10-13] A further contention of appellant is that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction—that there is no evidence that the crime was committed during the last of August or the first of September, except the testimony of Richard Hassell, which, he argues, contains certain inconsistencies. But the sufficiency of the evidence and the veracity of the witness Hassell were matters for the trial court; and though Hassell was contradicted in some respects by others who denied being present at the time when Hassell stated they were, it was for the trial court to decide whose testimony it would accept. Also appellant asserts that Hassel was an accomplice and that his testimony lacks the necessary corroboration. As to acts testified to by Hassell between Barnett and defendant, Hassell was not an accomplice, and if he was an accomplice to the offenses charged in counts 2 and 3, defendant's confession was sufficient to constitute corroboration. In People v. White, 48 Cal. App.2d 90, 119 P.2d 383, the court said that the evidence of the corpus delicti, the forgery of checks, might be proven by an accomplice, and that defendant's confession, and his admission at the trial that it was true, was sufficient corroboration of his commission of the forgery. Also see People v. Andrew, 43 Cal.App.2d 126, 129, 130, 110 P.2d 459; People v. Pritchard, 58 Cal. App.2d 791, 792, 137 P.2d 697; People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 69, 70, 280 P. 354; People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 570, 46 P. 611; People v. Sullivan, 144 Cal. 471, 473, 77 P. 1000; People v. King, 33 Cal.App.2d 538, 542, 92 P.2d 510; People v. Todd, 9 Cal. App.2d 237, 242, 49 P.2d 611.

[14, 15] Appellant also contends that the evidence produced by him as to his whereabouts during the months of August and September, 1943, is sufficient to establish an alibi, and to show that he could not have committed the offenses charged at the times alleged and testified to by Hassell. But the veracity of defendant's witnesses and the sufficiency of this evidence were also for the trial court. Furthermore, while the evidence of the alibi witnesses was that defendant was employed during August and September of 1943, and worked at night, admittedly there were certain periods when he was absent from his work even at night, for he did not work Sundays, and he was absent a few times allegedly because of sickness; and though he endeavored to show that during absences for sickness he was at his home, the trial court was not compelled to believe this testimony, especially in view of defendant's own admission at the trial that the admissions made by him in his previous statement were true. We cannot say, as matter of law, that it was impossible under the evidence for defendant to have committed the offenses charged, nor can we say that the trial court should have accepted the testimony of the alibi witnesses rather than that of Hassell.

[16, 17] Finally it is urged by appellant that there is a fatal variance between the allegations of the indictment and the proof; that the indictment charged the commission of the offenses "during or about the month of July, A. D. 1943," that defendant's admissions did not cover that period and that Hassell's testimony was that they were committed the last of August or first of September. But what Hassell said was that it was "in about August 1943"; that he was positive that it was in August, and that it was in the evening, but that he could not state the day of the week. The statement given by defendant was that he had engaged in immoral activity at Barnett's with Hassell "over a year ago," under circumstances similar to those testified to by Hassell—a strip poker party, where the penalties imposed consisted in performing the acts charged in the indictment. He admitted that the pictures of him taken by Barnett might have been taken in July, 1943, but he could not fix the time. Also he could not fix the time when he committed the acts with Hassell, but said it was previous to the taking of the pictures; that it was some time during 1943. We think this evidence was sufficient to show the commission of the offense "on or about July" as charged. Unless an offense is such only if committed on a certain day, such, for instance, as the sale of liquor on an election day, it is immaterial that the proof does not show the exact day or month or even the year. It is said in 14 Cal.Jur. 97, sec. 73, that if time is not of the essence of the crime charged the people may prove that the act was committed at any time before the indictment or information, and within the period of limitation. Also see People v. Allen, 144 Cal. 298, 301, 77 P. 948; People v. Rice, 73 Cal. 220, 221, 14 P. 851; People v. Branch, 77 Cal.App. 384, 392, 246 P. 811; People v. Tracy, 50 Cal.App.2d 460, 465, 123 P.2d 138; People v. Black, 45 Cal.App.2d 87, 104, 113 P.2d 746. Appellant relies upon People v. Morris, 3 Cal.App. 1, 84 P. 463, and People v. Waits, 18 Cal.App.2d 20, 62 P.2d 1054, but, as pointed out in People v. Ralls, 21 Cal.App.2d 674, at page 678, 70 P.2d 265, they are both distinguishable, as in both of them the testimony fixed the time of the commission of the offense at a definite hour on a definite day. In the case before us neither Hassell nor defendant was able to fix the day of the commission of the offenses. Assuming that Hassell's testimony fixed the time as an evening in August or September, 1943, defendant's attempt to prove an alibi was not affected thereby as his alibi testimony purports to cover both of those months. The question of fact as to whether defendant established an alibi was for the trial court as the trier of facts, and its conclusion will not be disturbed on appeal.

Respondent contends that the sufficiency of the indictment is not reviewable on appeal from an order denying a new trial where, as here, no judgment was entered (citing People v. Duncan, 50 Cal.App.2d 184, 186, 187, 122 P.2d 587; People v. Turner, 39 Cal. 370, 371; People v. Sanchez, 23 Cal.App. 742, 743, 139 P. 820; People v. Darcy, 59 Cal.App.2d 342, 139 P.2d 118; People v. Weiskopf, 60 Cal.App.2d 214, 140 P.2d 201); but as we are satisfied that the appeal is without merit it is not necessary to pass upon that question.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

70 Cal.App.2d 553

PEOPLE v. BUTLER.

Cr. No. 2337.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 18, 1945.

1. Criminal law 🔑1001
Robbery 🔑30

Evidence that defendant deliberately and with premeditation enticed complaining witness to hotel room for purpose of robbing him and without provocation slugged, seriously injured, and robbed him, plus defendant's plea of guilty, justified trial court in fixing degree of crime as second-degree robbery and in denying probation to defendant in view of his prior criminal record. Pen.Code, § 213.

2. Criminal law 🔑274

Affidavit supporting motion for leave to withdraw plea of guilty after conviction of second-degree robbery, alleging that defendant pleaded guilty on advice of counsel and in belief that navy boys charged with felonies had been returned to navy after pleading guilty, did not authorize withdrawal of guilty plea after conviction, where it was not contended that prosecuting officials or trial judge contributed to defendant's belief and defendant knew that prosecuting officials considered case an aggravated one. Pen.Code, § 213.

3. Criminal law ⚷274

That other trial judges had on occasion, after considering facts, accepted pleas of guilty to lesser offenses or granted probation to service men, did not create a custom on which defendant, who was in navy, was entitled to rely when charged with second-degree robbery, and fact that trial judge refused to follow such supposed custom did not so far mislead defendant as to entitle him, as a matter of law, to withdraw plea of guilty after conviction and sentence to imprisonment. Pen.Code, § 213.

4. Criminal law ⚷274

A plea of guilty may be withdrawn for mistake, ignorance, or inadvertence, or any other factor overreaching defendant's free and clear judgment.

5. Criminal law ⚷274

Though permission to withdraw plea of guilty is within trial court's discretion, courts generally are liberal in allowing such plea to be withdrawn, especially where there is doubt of defendant's guilt.

6. Criminal law ⚷998

Defendant's motion to vacate judgment and for leave to withdraw plea of guilty is in nature of writ of error coram nobis, and judgment will be vacated only where some fact exists which, if before court, would have prevented rendition of judgment and which without defendant's fault or negligence was not presented in court.

7. Criminal law ⚷998

The fact of mistake, fraud, or duress as ground for vacating judgment of conviction on plea of guilty must be established by convincing evidence, and appellate court may properly conclude that motion therefor was properly denied where defendant acted with knowledge or on advice of his attorney.

8. Criminal law ⚷274

That defendant was allegedly induced to enter guilty plea solely on representation of his attorney does not entitle defendant to withdraw such plea.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Lile T. Jacks, Judge.

Edward Butler was convicted, on his plea of guilty, of second-degree robbery, and, from orders denying his motions to be permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty and to vacate the judgment, he appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph P. Lacey, Harmon D. Skillin, and George Olshausen, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Edmund G. Brown, Dist. Atty., and James F. Brennan, Chief Trial Deputy Dist. Atty., and Edmund Dunning, Asst. Dist. Atty., all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of second degree robbery and from orders denying his motions to be permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty and to vacate the judgment. There is no merit in these appeals.

Defendant and Patricia Hollis, on July 20, 1944, were charged by information with robbery in that on May 23, 1944, they forcibly took from one Ben Rodriguez $60 in money, an automobile, and a wrist watch of the value of $680. Several continuances to plea were granted. On August 7, 1944, the defendant pleaded not guilty. The trial was thereafter continued until October 6, 1944. On that date the co-defendant Hollis was a fugitive from justice. The defendant, through his counsel, requested that he be permitted to withdraw his plea of not guilty and substitute therefore the plea of guilty. This request was granted. A hearing was then held to determine the degree of the crime and, after such hearing, the court determined the crime to be second degree robbery. Such offense is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one year (§ 213, Penal Code), no discretion being granted, as in the case of second degree burglary (Penal Code, § 461), to imprison in the county jail. The court thereupon sentenced defendant to San Quentin for the term prescribed by law. Defendant then moved for probation. The sentence was set aside and argument on the motion for probation put over to October 10th. On that date the court took further evidence from the arresting officer, considered the past record of the defendant, which showed that defendant some fourteen years before had been fined $2,000 for taking an automobile without the owner's consent, and, on another occasion, had been convicted of an assault with a deadly weapon for which he served six months in the county jail, listened to the arguments of counsel, and denied probation. The defendant was then re-sentenced to the state prison, the only lawful sentence that could be imposed for such a crime where probation has been denied. Defendant then orally moved to vacate the judgment and requested permission to withdraw his plea of guilty. In support of these motions one of his attorneys took the stand. He testified that the defendant was in the Navy, and that he had advised him "that he could have reasonable assurance that he would be—could be returned to the Navy after the possibility of serving some time in the County Jail. * * * I interviewed the defendant on several occasions in the County Jail, and gave him all of the encouragement that I could, and I told him that in my opinion and from my experience and from what I believe had gone on in prior actions of the courts of this City and County, on prior occasions —

"The Court: How does that affect me?

"Mr. Lacey: There were other boys in the Navy and there [are] other members in this court who had sent the men to the Navy on similar or like charges.

"Based upon what I had heard in the matter, I so advised this boy that the best thing to do here was to plead guilty and ask for leniency of the court."

The lawyer went on to testify that defendant had told him that on the night of the robbery "he was so far under the influence of liquor that he did not know what had happened"; that the defendant had told him that he had no knowledge of the assault, and had no recollection of taking the watch from the complaining witness; that his companion must have taken the money. The motions were denied, and defendant filed a notice of appeal.

Thereafter defendant filed a written notice for a hearing de novo of his motions. These motions were supported by the affidavit of defendant. The deputy district attorney filed a counter-affidavit. On November 2, 1944, the court held a hearing and denied the motions. Defendant appeals from the order of denial.

[1] The factual background of this case as disclosed by the testimony of the complaining witness, the investigating officer and of defendant is as follows: On the evening of May 23, 1944, defendant and Patricia Hollis were drinking in various taverns. Defendant testified that he had met Patricia for the first time that night. The investigating officer testified that in fact the girl and defendant had been registered at a Pine Street hotel as husband and wife prior to May 23rd. Sometime during the evening the complaining witness Rodriguez met the defendant and Patricia and the two men and the girl made the rounds of several taverns. About closing time the defendant invited Rodriguez to his and Patricia's hotel room to continue their drinking activities. Rodriguez gave defendant $10 to buy some liquor and then the three proceeded to a hotel, driving in Rodriguez's automobile. At the hotel Patricia registered herself and defendant under a fictitious name as husband and wife, and the three proceeded to the hotel room. Rodriguez testified that they had a couple of drinks and the girl was getting another drink when defendant, without provocation, and without warning, hit him on the chin and knocked him unconscious. He was unconscious for several hours and when he came to, $60 or $65, his wrist watch, and his automobile were gone. His jaw was badly fractured and permanently injured. He was in the hospital for a month and a half, and off work another month. Two operations were necessary. He also testified that when hit by defendant the keys to his automobile were in his pocket. Several days after these occurrences defendant and Patricia admittedly pawned Rodriguez's watch.

The arresting officer testified that after arresting defendant and Patricia he questioned them and they told conflicting stories; that defendant admitted hitting Rodriguez, but claimed he did so because Rodriguez got familiar with the girl; that the girl told him, in the presence of defendant, that nothing like that had happened; that Rodriguez, neither by words or actions, had insulted her; that defendant remained mute; that defendant admitted taking the automobile and driving to another hotel, and admitted pawning the watch.

Defendant's version of the affair was that he had met Patricia for the first time that night; that then they met Rodriguez; that the three made the rounds of several taverns; that they then went to the hotel where Patricia registered them as man and wife; that Rodriguez was molesting the girl and he ordered Rodriguez to leave and he refused to do so; that after hitting Rodriguez he did not take the keys to the car because with the owner's consent he already had them; that he did not take the money or the watch; that he did not see the girl take them; that several days later the girl told him that she had taken the watch.

This testimony was all introduced on the hearing to determine the degree of the crime. It is obvious that on this evidence the trial court was justified in believing that this was a most aggravated case. It is a reasonable, if not an inevitable, inference from the evidence that this defendant and his co-defendant deliberately and with premeditation enticed Rodriguez to the hotel room for the purpose of robbing him; that defendant slugged Rodriguez without provocation and for the purpose of robbing him; that defendant and Patricia then robbed Rodriguez, stole his automobile, went to another hotel where they registered as man and wife, and then, several days thereafter, sought to capitalize on their venture by pawning the watch. The victim was seriously injured. That this testimony, plus the plea of guilty, justified the trial court in fixing the degree of the crime as second degree robbery and in denying probation is too obvious to require further comment.

[2] On October 6th, which was the day set for the trial of defendant and the day he pleaded guilty, the record shows that the following occurred: It developed that the co-defendant Patricia Hollis had jumped bail and was a fugitive. The court determined to try defendant on his plea of not guilty. Before the plea of not guilty had been withdrawn the court stated: "'Somebody said this is an outrageous case." Shortly thereafter the deputy district attorney stated: "If he pleads guilty to second degree robbery they can't take him in the Navy. I understand, Judge, that this is a very aggravated case." After these preliminaries the defendant withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty to robbery.

In his affidavit in support of his last motion to vacate the judgment and to be permitted to withdraw his plea of guilty the defendant avers that he is 30 years of age; that he is in the Navy and stationed at Treasure Island; that he pleaded guilty on the advice of counsel; that he is not guilty of robbery. He then sets forth his version of the facts, including a statement that he was intoxicated on the night in question. He also avers that the three persons consumed nearly a quart of whisky, and that Rodriguez began to pay "attentions" to Patricia; that an argument arose; that Rodriguez attempted to strike defendant and defendant hit him back. This is the first time, so far as the record shows, that defendant ever claimed he struck in self-defense. He avers that he did not take the money, the keys, or the watch, but admits taking the automobile and driving to another hotel with Patricia where the two spent the balance of the night. He again states that several days later Patricia told him that she had taken the watch, and the two pawned it. He avers that he told his counsel these facts and was informed by them that these facts would constitute a defense. In explaining why he pleaded guilty he avers that in the discussions with his counsel he was "informed that the Navy boys charged with felonies in this city and county were being turned over by the Superior Courts to the Navy and that they believed and so advised affiant that he had every justification for hoping that would be the ultimate disposition of the charge"; that on several occasions while affiant was in the county jail his counsel told him that "he should hope" to have this disposition made of his case; that his counsel told him that it was their belief and the belief of "many other persons" that service men accused of felonies were customarily permitted to return to the service; that he told his counsel that he had heard of many cases of persons in the armed forces accused of burglary or robbery who had been permitted by the courts to return to the service and that "he, himself, believed and hoped that he would receive similar lenient consideration"; that affiant is informed and believes that between 15 and 20 defendants accused of felony charges in San Francisco have been returned to the service, naming four such persons by name; that a week before he was sentenced he knew a defendant charged with burglary who, upon a plea of guilty, was permitted to re-enter the Navy; that he discussed his case with this accused person and was advised by him to plead guilty and that if he did so he probably would be permitted to re-enter the Navy at once; that cellmates told him of similar cases; that it was the general belief of inmates of the county jail that members of the armed forces charged with burglary or robbery, upon a plea of guilty, would be returned to the service; that during this period he "continuously hoped and believed" that he would be permitted to plead guilty to a lesser offense and be returned to the Navy; that on the day of his trial and after a short consultation with his attorneys, he entered the plea of guilty believing and anticipating that he would immediately be returned to the Navy; that before entering the plea his counsel told him "that he should have every reason to expect and hope that such disposition would be made of his matter as would result in his prompt return to the Navy for a continuance of his service therein. That thereupon and by reason of the matters and things set forth and not by reason of any consciousness of guilt of the charge, affiant, honestly and sincerely believing that he would be permitted to return to the Navy for combat service in defense of his country agreed to withdraw his plea of not guilty heretofore entered and enter a plea of guilty to the instant charge."

This affidavit and the testimony of attorney Lacey on the oral motion constitute the basis of defendant's contention that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to permit him to withdraw his plea of guilty after he had ascertained that probation would not be granted. The counteraffidavit of the deputy district attorney avers that prior to the date defendant pleaded guilty he informed defendant's attorney that his office would not accept a plea to guilty to any lesser offense than the one charged; that neither he, nor anyone on the district attorney's staff, has ever suggested to the attorney for defendant, or to the defendant, that defendant would be permitted to return to the Navy if he pleaded guilty; that neither the court nor the district attorney made any representation concerning, or made any reference to, the degree of punishment that would be imposed if defendant pleaded guilty.

[3] It will be noted that it is not contended that the prosecuting officials or the trial judge in any way contributed to defendant's belief that he would not be sent to state prison if he pleaded guilty—in fact, the record shows, that defendant knew before he withdrew his not guilty plea that the prosecuting officials considered the case a most aggravated one and would accept no plea less than second degree robbery, —an offense punishable only in the state prison. Although it is alleged that some other servicemen charged with robbery or burglary had been permitted to plead guilty to a lesser offense and were then returned to the Navy, it is not alleged that the facts of these cases were the same or similar to those in this most aggravated case, or that other servicemen charged with these offenses had not been sent to San Quentin. It seems to be the thought of appellant that because some judges other than this trial judge had on occasion, after considering the facts of particular cases, accepted pleas of guilty to lesser offenses or granted probation to servicemen, that a custom had been created upon which he was entitled to rely, and that when this trial judge, on the facts of this particular case, refused to follow this supposed custom, he was so far misled that he is entitled, as a matter of law, to withdraw his plea of guilty. Defendant cannot thus be permitted to make a mockery of the legal processes. This defendant pleaded guilty knowing or chargeable with knowledge that the only sentence that could lawfully be imposed for second degree robbery was imprisonment in the state prison. He and his counsel undoubtedly hoped that probation would be granted. If probation were denied, however, they could then move to withdraw the plea of guilty. In this fashion they could find out on the hearing fixing the degree of the crime what evidence the prosecution had. They knew that Patricia was a fugitive from justice and all blame could be placed on her shoulders because Rodriguez was unconscious after the blow and Patricia was not there to defend herself. After the court very properly had denied probation they then sought to withdraw their plea of guilty. Under the circumstances here existing the trial judge very properly denied the motion.

[4-8] The law applicable to this problem is well-settled. A plea of guilty may be withdrawn for mistake, ignorance or inadvertence or any other factor overreaching defendant's free and clear judgment. Although the permission to withdraw the plea is within the trial court's discretion, courts are, in general, liberal in allowing the plea to be withdrawn, especially where there is doubt of defendant's guilt. A motion to vacate judgment and withdraw a plea of guilty is in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis. The judgment will be vacated only where some fact exists which, if before the court, would have prevented rendition of judgment, and which, without fault or negligence of the party, was not presented in court. The fact of mistake, fraud, or duress must be established by convincing evidence in order to entitle the defendant to relief from a guilty plea, and the appellate court may conclude that it is properly denied where defendant acted with knowledge or on the advice of his attorney. People v. Sandoval, 200 Cal. 730, 254 P. 893; People v. Deutsch, 16 Cal.App.2d 121, 60 P.2d 155; People v. McCrory, 41 Cal. 458. Defendant cites a few cases from outside the state holding that a defendant induced to enter a guilty plea solely on the representations of his attorney should be permitted to withdraw it. That is not the law in this state. People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 45 P. 986; Ex parte Hough, 24 Cal.2d 522, 150 P.2d 448; People v. Gottlieb, 25 Cal.App.2d 411, 77 P.2d 489.

The law applicable to this entire problem has been recently restated by the Supreme Court in People v. Gilbert, 25 Cal.2d 422, 154 P.2d 657. In that case the defendants pleaded guilty to murder and were sentenced to the death penalty. After the judgment became final they sought to withdraw their pleas of guilty. On the motions the trial court reduced the punishment to life imprisonment. Conflicting affidavits were filed before the trial court. Those of defendants unequivocally charged that their lawyer had informed them that he had reached a definite agreement with the trial judge for a life sentence if they would plead guilty. The affidavits of the judge and deputy district attorney admitted discussing the matter with defendants' counsel and making statements that at least could be interpreted as indicating they believed a life sentence was all that was called for. The Supreme Court properly indicated that under such circumstances the free will and judgment of the defendants were overreached. In so holding, the court stated the proper rule as follows (25 Cal.2d at page 442, 154 P.2d at page 667):

"The record discloses evidence tending to show that the free will and judgment of one or both defendants were overreached by unjustified representations of their counsel seemingly corroborated by acts and statements of the court and deputy district attorney. While it is true that mere advice or assurances by a private attorney will not vitiate a plea entered in reliance thereon (see People v. Miller, 114 Cal. 10, 16, 45 P. 986; Ex parte Hough, 24 Cal.2d 522, 531, 150 P.2d 448; People v. Gottlieb, 25 Cal.App.2d 411, 415, 77 P.2d 489, we are of the view that a contrary rule should prevail if the statements of the attorney amount to an unqualified factual representation (which is untrue) that the state or a responsible officer thereof, such as a judge of competent authority or a district attorney, has entered into a bargain purporting to commit the state to give the defendant a reward, in the form of immunity or a lesser punishment than he might otherwise receive, in exchange for a plea of guilty, where such representation is apparently substantially corroborated by acts or statements of a responsible state officer, is in good faith relied upon by the defendant, and actually operates to preclude the exercise of free will and judgment on the part of the defendant.

"The most critical point is substantial deprivation of the exercise of the free will and judgment of the party through an act participated in by the state. Mere advice and persuasion or the expression of matters of opinion by his own attorney will not suffice to vitiate the plea. Neither will unwarranted or even wilfully false statements of factual matters by his attorney suffice. The private attorney is selected by the party and is his agent. But if the representation of the private attorney presents a purported commitment by a responsible state officer which if actually made would vitiate the plea and if the acts or statements of such state officer, although innocently done or made, apparently corroborate the representation, are in good faith and without negligence relied upon by the defendant, and in truth operate to prevent the exercise of his free will and judgment, then the state in its solicitude for fairness will not accept the benefit of a plea so given."

Defendant in this present case fails to bring himself within this rule. Here there were no representations by the trial court or the prosecuting officials corroborating the representations of the private attorney. Here the defendant and his counsel, made the mistake of relying, if they did, on the fact that, because other judges in cases involving different facts had seen fit to grant leniency, this judge would follow such supposed custom.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

KNIGHT and WARD, JJ., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 585

McINTOSH v. McINTOSH et al.
KELL et al. v. McINTOSH.

Civ. 7140; Sac. 5696.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 25, 1945.

Appeal and error 🔑780(2)

Where interveners, after their appeal from an order vacating a previous order permitting them to intervene in a divorce action to have determined their title or interest in some of the property involved in divorce litigation was submitted, disposed of their interest in the property and were no longer interested in the appeal, appeal was dismissed.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; C. W. Miller, Judge.

Action by Alice A. McIntosh against James C. McIntosh and others for divorce, wherein Hattie B. Kell and Marjorie A. McIntosh intervened, alleging title or an interest in some of the property described and involved in the complaint for divorce. From an order vacating a previous order by which interveners were permitted to file their complaint in intervention, interveners appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Smallpage & Macomber, of Stockton, for plaintiffs in intervention, appellants.

Jones & Quinn, of Stockton, for defendant in intervention, respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by the intervenors from an order vacating a previous order permitting them to file in the above entitled divorce suit, their complaint in intervention alleging title or an interest in some of the property which is described and involved in the complaint for divorce.

After the appeal was submitted the intervenors' attorneys advised this court their clients had disposed of all their interest in the property and that they "have no further interest in this proceeding." In a written communication to this court, plaintiff's attorney concedes that the intervenors have disposed of their interest in the property. Since the appellants have disposed of their interest in the property and they are no longer interested in the appeal, no useful purpose will be subserved by determining the issues on appeal.

It is therefore ordered that the appeal be and it is hereby dismissed.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 497

EASTERN-COLUMBIA, Inc., v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Civ. 14256.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 13, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 11, 1945.

1. Taxation 🔑543(1, 7)

In action against county and city for refund of personal property taxes paid under protest after rejection of plaintiff's claims for refund by county board of equalization, superior court erred in trying de novo question of alleged overvaluation of property, as sole issue before court was whether board's decision was constructively fraudulent and, in determining such issue, court was limited to consideration of record of proceedings before board.

2. Taxation 🔑493(4)

A county tax assessor's alleged fraudulent overvaluation of property will not be set aside by court after county board of equalization has determined true value of property in exercise of its honest judgment, as such determination is conclusive on question of fairness of valuation and injury to taxpayer.

3. Taxation 🔑485(3)

Evidence before county board of equalization on application for reduction of personal property tax assessment on ground of alleged fraudulent overvaluation and discrimination by county tax assessor was sufficient to sustain finding that property was assessed at 40 per cent. of its value, pursuant to usual practice, not at 50 per cent. thereof, as claimed by owner suing for refund of taxes paid under protest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Walter S. Gates, Judge.

Action by Eastern-Columbia, Inc., against the County of Los Angeles, the City of Los Angeles, and another for refund of personal property taxes paid under protest. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendants appeal.

Reversed.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, Gordon Boller, Deputy Co. Counsel, Ray L. Chesebro, City Atty., and Louis A. Babior, Deputy City Atty., all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Holbrook & Tarr, Leslie R. Tarr, and Freda B. Walbrecht, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendants, County of Los Angeles and City of Los Angeles, from a judgment in favor of plaintiff corporation which grants a refund of taxes paid by it under protest on personal property for the fiscal year 1940-41.

The corporate respondent is engaged in the merchandising of furniture, household goods and wearing apparel, maintaining stocks of such merchandise distributed between its principal place of business in the City of Los Angeles and eleven branch stores situate in the cities of Los Angeles, Huntington Park, Pasadena and Long Beach, as well as in unincorporated county territory. Respondent took exception to the County Assessor's method of valuation and to the assessed value he placed on its stock of merchandise for tax purposes for the fiscal year 1940–41, claiming that the Assessor in valuing said personal property on the basis of respondent's inventory did not assess at the usual forty per cent thereof, but instead used the factor of fifty per cent. Accordingly, respondent filed an application for reduction of such assessment from $416,865 to $333,480 with the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County sitting as a County Board of Equalization. After a hearing, the Board denied the application; taxes were extended against the assessed property and were paid by respondent under protest. Thereafter claims for a refund of that portion of the taxes computed on the asserted overvaluation having been rejected, the respondent instituted the instant action "For refund of taxes paid under protest and for refund of taxes illegally collected", on the ground that said taxes were void, excessive, fraudulent and unconstitutional.

The complaint alleged that it was the uniform practice of the Assessor to determine the full cash value of stocks of merchandise owned by merchants operating in the County "by taking the book inventory thereof, if maintained in accordance with the landed cost or market * * * and by applying to such inventory for assessment purposes the factor of 40 per cent thereof, arriving, for assessment purposes, at a full cash value of the equivalent of 40 per cent of such book inventory value"; that this method was used by the Assessor in computing assessments of competing merchants, but that in the case of respondent, the Assessor arbitrarily applied the factor of 50 per cent of the book inventory in order to determine the full cash value of respondent's merchandise for assessment purposes, and in so using such special method of assessment and in arriving at an assessed valuation of respondent's merchandise, the Assessor did so intentionally in order "to discriminate against and to defraud plaintiff, and to cause plaintiff to pay an undue and disproportionate amount of the tax burden properly imposed upon plaintiff for governmental purposes for said tax year of 1940-41; that said assessments * * * actually placed on plaintiff's merchandise were excessive, discriminatory and void * * * in violation of plaintiff's rights to due process of law." It was also alleged that upon hearing of respondent's application for reduction of such assessed valuations, the Board of Equalization, disregarding the evidence presented to it, denied the application thereby adopting the "illegal, erroneous, fraudulent and special method employed by said Assessor * * * and in intentionally adopting, ratifying and approving the illegal, erroneous, fraudulent and special method of assessing plaintiff's merchandise different from that employed * * * in assessing other merchants' merchandise in the County of Los Angeles for said tax year 1940–41, said Board did intentionally discriminate against plaintiff."

At the trial, which consumed fifty-two days, respondent introduced the transcript of all the evidence presented to the Board of Equalization at the hearing on its application for reduction of the assessment. In addition thereto, respondent was permitted to introduce the testimony of twenty-two witnesses, none of whom had testified at the hearing before the Board, as well as fifty exhibits which had not been offered at said hearing. Appellants objected that receipt of such testimony and such evidence would constitute a trial de novo of the question of the equalized assessment of the assessed property and a collateral attack upon the quasi-judicial determination of the Board that the assessment of such property was equalized and not disproportionate to the assessment of other property, and that such testimony and evidence would not prove or tend to prove fraud or fraudulent conduct, either actual or constructive, on the part of said Board in making its determination and denying said application.

The judgment is for a sum which represents the difference between the amount of taxes paid based on the assessment calculated at 50 per cent, and the amount based on an assessment calculated at 40 per cent of the inventory figure.

The cause is presented to this court upon a Transcript on Appeal which contains the usual Clerk's Transcript, and an Engrossed Bill of Exceptions containing all of the evidence produced at the hearing before the Board of Equalization, appellants' specifications of error, together with the following stipulation:

"It is stipulated by and between the plaintiff and the defendants County of Los Angeles and City of Los Angeles, through their attorneys, as follows:

"That Appellants have not included in their Bill of Exceptions any of the evidence of value or methods of assessment presented for the first time to the Superior Court and not presented to the Board of Equalization for the reason that Appellants are basing their appeal upon the proposition that granting a trial de novo was error.

"It is stipulated and agreed that if granting a trial de novo was not error then the findings and judgment of the above entitled Court relative to the fair, equalized assessed value of the property are supported by substantial although conflicting evidence. Dated: November 4th, 1942 * * * Filed Dec. 18, 1942."

The position of appellants, as declared in their opening brief, is that "under established rule of law the assessor's valuation of property for tax purposes which, upon the property owner's application to the County Board of Equalization for reduction, has been confirmed and approved, is conclusive on the question of value and is not thereafter subject to question or attack upon claim or suit for tax refund, and that the Board's determination of equalization of assessment is not subject to collateral attack. The conduct of the trial court herein, we respectfully submit, was clear violation of such established rule." Appellants urge that the duty of the trial court "is to review the proceedings before the County Board of Equalization and to ascertain and determine whether that body, upon the evidence which was before it, so grossly abused its judicial discretion that its conclusion regarding the matter was tantamount to no conclusion at all but constituted a constructive fraud upon the litigant." (Italics included.)

In the case of Universal Consolidated Oil Co. v. Byram, 25 Cal.2d 353, 153 P.2d 746, 752, the Supreme Court in a decision filed December 5, 1944, held that a taxpayer has no right to a trial de novo in the superior court to resolve conflicting issues of fact as to the taxable value of his property; reversed a judgment of the trial court in favor of plaintiffs and remanded the cause to the board of equalization "for further consideration and action in accordance with due process of law."

In the cited case, plaintiffs charged that the particular method of assessment used in relation to their oil leases "produced valuations which were unfair, unjust and excessive as compared with other property holdings of substantially the same character and value and similarly situated in the county, and so imposed an unequal burden upon the complainants," resulting in an invasion of their constitutional rights to due process and equal protection of the laws. At the trial before the superior court, plaintiffs introduced in evidence their applications to the board of equalization for reduced valuations, the reporter's transcript of the testimony at the hearing before such board and certain exhibits there presented. In addition, further evidence was introduced, over the objection of the defendant, as to the assessor's method of assessment of the leases in question and as to the relative value of the plaintiffs' and adjacent leasehold interests. After a full hearing, the trial court found in favor of plaintiffs on all material issues in dispute and made considerable reductions in the challenged valuations.

In announcing its decision upon appeal from the trial court's judgment, the supreme court stated at page 356 of 25 Cal. 2d, at page 748 of 153 P.2d, that: "The principal point in controversy between the parties concerns the propriety of the plaintiffs' recourse to the court for relief from the adverse determination of the county board of equalization. It must be conceded, of course, that it is well settled in this state that to the authorized county board of equalization has been confided the duty of determining 'the value of the property under consideration for assessment purposes upon such basis as is used in regard to other property, so as to make all the assessments as equal and fair as is practicable'; that in discharging this duty, 'the board is exercising judicial functions, and its decision as to the value of the property and the fairness of the assessment, so far as amount is concerned, constitutes an independent and conclusive judgment of the tribunal created by law for the determination of that question,' adjudicating necessarily that 'the property is assessed at the same value proportionately as all the other property in the county'; that such adjudication 'cannot be avoided, unless the board has proceeded "arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers" * * * or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board'; and that 'Mere errors in honest judgment as to the value of the property will not obviate the binding effect of the conclusion of the board.' Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 169, 170, 121 P. 384, 386, 9 A.L.R. 1277; see, also, Southern Pac. Land Co. v. San Diego County, 183 Cal. 543, 546, 191 P. 931; Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 741, 200 P. 647; Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal.App. 339, 342, 212 P. 711; Merchants Trust Co. v. Hopkins, 103 Cal. App. 473, 477, 478, 284 P. 1072; Montgomery Ward & Co. v. Welch, 17 Cal. App.2d 127, 132, 61 P.2d 790; Southern Cal. Tel. Co. v. Los Angeles County, 45 Cal.App.2d 111, 116, 117, 113 P.2d 773. While not classifiable with any aspect of fraud or bad faith, the lack of due process distinguishing the procedural phase of these equalization matters as submitted to the board furnishes an equally appropriate basis for the court's intervention in protection of the plaintiff's constitutional rights." In reviewing the record before the board, it was revealed that certain members of the board expressed their understanding that they were passing upon applications which presented a point of law rather than matters of equalization, the court concluding that such conduct of the board resulted in a denial of procedural due process, i.e. (25 Cal.2d at page 362, 153 P.2d at page 751): "The decision of the board was simply that it had nothing to decide, and it accordingly failed to function as an equalization tribunal. * * * But the mistake of the board in the respect noted does not sanction the court's undertaking to resolve the conflicting issues of fact bearing upon the taxable value of the plaintiffs' leasehold interests. As appears from the numerous authorities cited in the forepart of this opinion, the respective county board of equalization is the fact-finding body designated by law to remedy excessive assessments (Cal.Const. art. XIII, § 9), and when that tribunal, after due hearing and within the limits of reasonable discretion, makes its findings on the facts, such decision is final and conclusive. * * * While considerations of procedural due process here nullify the force of the authorized tribunal's ruling and sustain its avoidance by the court in response to the plaintiffs' applications for relief therefrom, the intent of the law governing equalization proceedings would require that these cases be remanded to the board for completion upon the basis of the evidence submitted at the hearing before it."

In support of the contentions advanced by them in the instant appeal, appellants cite the decision of this court in Eastern-Columbia, Inc., v. County of Los Angeles, 61 Cal.App.2d 734, 143 P.2d 992, 995. That action was very similar to the one now under consideration: a refund being sought on 1940-41 taxes levied on parcels of improved real property, based on the claim that "notwithstanding good and substantial evidence presented * * * to the Board of Equalization, that board, in disregard of the evidence adduced, did arbitrarily and wilfully deny the application for redress and did accordingly intentionally impose upon plaintiff such an unfair and unequal burden of taxation as to amount to constructive fraud."

It was there held, 61 Cal.App.2d at page 743, 143 P.2d at page 997: "Where, as in the instant case, the taxpayer feels he has just cause for complaint, the law has set up a tribunal composed of the Board of Supervisors, sitting as a Board of Equalization, to determine the facts. When such board, after due hearing, and within the limits of reasonable discretion, has made its findings on the facts such decision is final and conclusive. Before the decision of the Board, constituting as it does an independent and conclusive judgment abrogating and taking the place of the judgment of the assessor, will be set aside by the courts on review, even though there be error or mistake, there must be proof of actual fraud, or such arbitrary, unreasonable or grossly oppressive action, which wilfully transgresses or disregards the law, and amounts to constructive fraud. Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 104 Cal.App. [235], at page 241, 285 P. 896. Where, as here, the assessment is not wholly void, an action such as the present one, though partaking of an action to recover a tax paid under protest is in fact, and properly so, a proceeding to review the decision of the Board of Equalization. In such a proceeding the function of the trial court therefore was to determine whether a correct method of valuing the land and improvements was followed, and then, to ascertain whether there was substantial evidence before the Equalization Board to justify the assessment as made. Hammond Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 104 Cal.App. at pages 241 and 242, 285 P. 896. * * * As we have pointed out, a proceeding such as the instant one, savors of certiorari or review. The sole issue before the court was, therefore, whether the decision of the Board of Equalization was based on fraud or the equivalent of fraud. And that determination must be based upon the evidence at the trial of the proceedings had before the board." (Emphasis added.)

[1] Following the reasoning and the rules of law enunciated by the cases hereinbefore discussed, it was error for the court below to try de novo the question of the alleged overvaluation of respondent's personal property. The sole issue before the trial court was whether the decision of the board of equalization was constructively fraudulent, and in its determination of that issue, the court was limited to a consideration of the record of the proceedings had before such board.

[2] "A fraudulent overvaluation of property by an assessor will not be set aside where it appears that the board of equalization has brought its honest judgment to bear on the matter, and determined the true value of the property. Such action by the board is conclusive on the question of fairness of valuation and hence on the question of injury to the taxpayer by the attempted fraud of the assessor." 9 A.L.R. 1284. See, also Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 121 P. 384, 9 A.L.R. 1277.

On this question of conclusiveness of determination of the board of equalization in the face of an allegation of fraud, it is stated in 21 Cal.Law Rev. 285: "The general rule, to which California adheres, precludes the review of assessments by the courts if the method pursued is that prescribed by law. An exception to the rule is recognized where the action of the board is fraudulent or constitutes 'something equivalent to fraud'. While an arbitrary and excessive assessment is not, of itself, invalid, the California cases seemingly establish the proposition that the 'equivalent of fraud' will be found where the taxpayer affirmatively proves to the board of equalization, but without obtaining proper relief, that there is a substantial discrimination and inequality between the assessment assailed and assessments on like property similarly situated. When a substantial discrimination is proven, relief is given regardless af the motives actuating the members of the board. It is immaterial whether the unequal burden results from a gross abuse of discretion, gross error or negligence. An assessment twice in amount of that placed on like property similarly situated has been held to be a substantial discrimination." (Citing numerous authorities.) See, also, 24 Cal.Jur. 243, 246, secs. 228 and 230.

In an annotated article entitled "Judicial Review of Determinations by County Boards of Equalization," under the authorship of W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Esq., appearing in 14 So. Cal.Law Rev. 276 at 286, it is asserted: "Proper methods of assessment are matters of law, not of fact. San Diego & Arizona Ry. v. Board of Equalization, 165 Cal. 560, 564, 132 P. 1044. Correctness of the Assessor's methods is always reviewable in a court of law, provided, of course, that the taxpayer has demonstrated that, by reason of the method employed, discrimination in assessment as to his property has occurred. Blinn Lumber Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 216

Cal. 474, 483, 14 P.2d 512, 84 A.L.R. 1304, 1309. On the other hand, there is nothing for the court to review, even if the Assessor's method be shown to be wrong, if no discrimination resulting therefrom was shown to the Board. Wild Goose Country Club v. County of Butte, 60 Cal.App. 339, 343, 212 P. 711."

[3] An examination of the record of the proceedings before the Board of Equalization in the instant case, discloses that the Board exercised its fair and impartial judgment upon the evidence presented to it and that such evidence failed to show that any discrimination resulted to respondent.

Respondent's application before the Board alleged an over-assessment of its property. Upon the hearing respondent alleged that the assessment was calculated at 50% instead of at 40% of the property value as shown by the company's inventory. The testimony of respondent's tax agent, Mr. Minteer, and its Comptroller, Mr. Harper, as to its position in this regard is as follows:

"Mr. Minteer: On this particular merchandise, we are asking that it be reduced from a 50 per cent assessment to I think a 40 per cent assessment and Mr. Harper an official of the company is here representing them. Is that 40 per cent of the actual cost?

"Mr. Harper: Book value. It is taken from our books and records. They have assessed our merchandise at 50 per cent and we find many instances where they have made assessments of merchandise at 40 per cent, and we have the figures here to substantiate it.

"Mr. West (Deputy Assessor): We have gone through their books and we have a complete record of them. It is not the Assessor's contention that this is a 50 per cent assessment. Here is a large inventory prepared partly at cost and partly under the retail method and we find that there is a net valuation of inventory of $5,234,572.00 which was increased 22 per cent average mark-down, and allowing 22 per cent for *a*bsolescence, we made a 50 per cent assessment after allowing for the *a*bsolescence. * * *

"Mr. West: When we assess the ordinary corporation we find they carry their merchandise on the books at cost and they only inventory at the end of the fiscal or current year. We go in there and make an allowance of 20 per cent for obsolescence in such current stock and assess the balance at half, that is equal to 40 per cent, but if we find a firm has already taken obsolescence out of the inventory and has got it down to market value as of the first Monday in March, we take and assess that inventory at half. That is the contention the assessor is making here. This firm not only had obsolescence written out but has underpriced it.

"Mr. Ford (Member of the Board): Do I understand that these people in making their inventory deducted this obsolescence first before they gave you the figures whereas all of the other firms do not?

"Mr. West: That is the contention. * * *

"Mr. Krutel (Deputy Assessor): I asked Mr. Harper if he hadn't allocated all items of obsolescence before taking the inventory and he said he had.

"Mr. Minteer: I don't remember that statement.

"Chairman McDonough: Was that question asked you, Mr. Harper?

"Mr. Harper: That question was asked me and I said certain depreciation had been taken care of. That is true of everybody.

* * * * *

"Mr. Ford: Let me ask Mr. West, as I understand Mr. Harper his contention is that the practice of many concerns comparable to this concern is actually to take allowance for this obsolescence before the figures reach you, and then the inference is that you do take the figures in which obsolescence has been allowed from the total actual value and deduct 20 per cent for further obsolescence?

"Mr. West: Not where an allowance has already been taken.

"Mr. Ford: What figure do you start with?

"Mr. West: We start with the inventory figure as computed on their books carried under the accepted principles of accounting.

"Mr. Ford: Showing no obsolescence.

"Mr. West: They will show obsolescence in the last final inventory but not such unusual obsolescence as is shown in these books.

"Mr. Ford: They do it more extremely.

"Mr. West: That seems to be the whole thing. The great percentage they deduct in computing their inventory is exorbitant as compared with other stores.

"Mr. Smith (Member of the Board): When you take a firm doing business on a cost basis you take the cost and deduct 20 per cent for obsolescence?

"Mr. West: That is right.

"Mr. Smith: And then you take half of that figure?

"Mr. West: Take half of that figure. * * *

"Mr. West: For this particular firm this year, as I understand it, instead of taking a write-down of 40 per cent or whatever the normal percentage was, they reduced some of the articles 63 per cent and they attained what we would give them in the matter, that additional 20 per cent obsolescence and now they want another 20 per cent on top of that. Have I stated that fairly?

"Mr. Buehner (Deputy Assessor): Yes. * * *

"Mr. Smith: They have taken the 20 per cent as they went along item by item. That is what you mean? They marked it down so as to take the normal reduction of 20 per cent that you would give them on the cost inventory?

"Mr. West: They mark it down greater than the average mark down so that the average write off would show that additional 20 per cent.

"Mr. Smith: Yes, but instead of taking an inventory with normal mark down and then 20 per cent off to arrive at an assessment figure, they have taken it item by item and have reached the same answer by taking it off on each item as they went along? * * *

"Mr. Boller (Deputy County Counsel): And now they come to the Assessor and ask him to give them 20 per cent."

While it is true, as stated in Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 121 P. 384, 9 A.L.R. 1277: "A taxpayer may assail in the courts an assessment which was fraudulently and corruptly made with the intention of discriminating against him for the purpose of causing him to pay more than his share of the public taxes"—no evidence of discrimination or disproportionate assessment was produced before the Board in the instant cause. Respondent's witnesses testified that the assessment of other firms was upon a 40 per cent valuation and that respondent's assessment was upon a 50 per cent valuation, but they offered no evidence to support that stand. Appellants' witnesses testified that respondent had received its 20 per cent obsolescence depreciation before assessment by taking such deduction itself in the valuation on its own books; other merchants received their 20 per cent obsolescence depreciation in the process of assessment by the Assessor's deduction thereof from their book figure, which had not theretofore been so reduced. In other words, the evidence before the Board was amply sufficient to sustain a finding that respondent's property was assessed at 40 per cent of its value, instead of at 50 per cent, as claimed.

In the light of the conclusion reached after a consideration of the evidence produced at the hearing before the board of equalization, it would appear that the denial by such Board of respondent's application was justified, and that no corrupt or fraudulent motive could be attributed to the Board for such action.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed.

DORAN and WHITE, JJ., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 589

BURNSED v. MURRAY et al.

Civ. 14776.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 27, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1002

Where there is a conflict in the evidence, the verdict of jury is controlling and cannot be set aside by reviewing court.

2. Automobiles ⇨244(6)

In action for injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by automobile at street intersection, conflicting evidence sustained verdict in favor of driver and owner of automobile. Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93.

3. Appeal and error ⚿933(1)
New trial ⚿71

On motion for new trial, trial court was not bound by verdict of jury on conflicting evidence, and appellate court must assume that when such motion was made and denied trial court weighed and considered the evidence in the light of the only contention there made that it was insufficient to sustain the verdict.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William B. McKesson, Judge.

Action by Ora Burnsed against Warren James Murray and another for personal injuries sustained by pedestrian when struck by automobile in an intersection. Verdict and judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Samuel A. Rosenthal and Albert A. Horn, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Nourse & Jones, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

Action for personal injuries caused by an automobile running down a pedestrian in an intersection.

There are two defendants, but one is the owner of the automobile and is sued to recover on her liability under the Vehicle Code, St.1935, p. 93, for permitting the other defendant, driver of the car, to operate it. Therefore, we will speak of the defendant driver as the defendant.

The plaintiff, a "newsboy" 58 years of age, testified that on the night of the accident shortly after midnight he was selling papers at the intersection of Santa Monica Boulevard and Highland Avenue in the city of Los Angeles; that a lady stopped her car across the street from where he was standing, and blew her horn to signal to him that she wanted to buy a paper; that at this particular intersection there was in operation a signal system of red and green lights controlling traffic; that he waited until the traffic light opposite him was green, then he crossed the street, being at all times in the cross-walk; that while in the cross-walk he was struck by defendant's automobile.

Two policemen who apprehended and questioned the defendant at the intersection testified that he was intoxicated, under the influence of alcohol. A physician who examined the defendant shortly after the accident likewise testified that he was intoxicated.

Damages to the plaintiff were very severe. He sustained a broken leg, which was in traction for a long time, serious injuries to his shoulder and head, and was still in the hospital when the case was tried. At the date of the trial he was suffering from tuberculosis, which might account for the length of time he remained in the hospital.

The defendant's case consisted mainly of his own testimony. He testified that he left his office in Hollywood about 11 p. m. on the night of the accident, having worked all day; that he went to a cafe and stayed there twenty-five or thirty minutes and while there consumed five glasses of beer; that he left the cafe driving the automobile in question and approached the intersection where the accident happened; that at that point he stopped on the red signal and proceeded only when the signal turned to green; that in traversing the intersection he changed gears from low to second, and was just going into high when he felt his car strike something, whereupon he stopped and pulled over to the curb and got out of the car and went back. There is a minor conflict in the testimony here, the police officers stating that the defendant told them he proceeded down the street and turned around and came back.

The defendant then testified that he felt that he had absolute control of his car, that he knew he had had something to drink, but was not drunk; that he was traveling 15 to 18 miles an hour and his brakes were in excellent condition.

Argument was had, instructions given, and the matter submitted to an all-woman jury, which rendered its verdict in favor of the defendant. Motion was made for a new trial and denied.

On this appeal no complaint is made as to instructions, or anything else in the conduct of the trial, except that appellant feels the jury must have gone "haywire." A careful reading of the transcript on appeal demonstrates that unless the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict there is no error in the record.

[1] Respondent stands upon the well known rule that when there is a conflict in the evidence, the verdict of the jury is controlling and may not be set aside by a reviewing court. Kling v. Crown Finance Corporation, 63 Cal.App.2d 33, 146 P.2d 54; Darling v. Pacific Electric Railway, 197 Cal. 702, 242 P. 703; and also, Kapitan v. Smith, 70 Cal.App.2d 454, 161 P.2d 270.

[2] Under the testimony in this case, the rule is binding upon this court.

[3] Moreover, on the motion for a new trial the trial court was not bound, as in this court, by the rule of conflicting evidence. It is to be assumed that when the motion was made and denied, the trial court weighed and considered the evidence in the light of the only contention here made, that it was insufficient to sustain the verdict. Morgan v. Los Angeles Pac. Co., 13 Cal. App. 12, 108 P. 735; Witter v. Redwine, 14 Cal.App. 393, 112 P. 311; In re Estate of Bainbridge, 169 Cal. 166, 146 P. 427; Malloway v. Hughes, 125 Cal.App. 573, 13 P. 2d 1062; see 20 Cal.L.Rev. 558.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

* * *

70 Cal.App.2d 583

PEOPLE v. ASH.

Cr. 3926.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 22, 1945.

1. Infants 🔑13

To constitute a violation of statute, making it a felony to commit a lewd or lascivious act upon or with the body of a child, accused need not touch the naked body of prosecuting witness, but it is sufficient that a lewd or lascivious act is committed upon or with the body, or some part or member thereof, of a child under 14 years of age. Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Infants 🔑20

Evidence, though it did not show that accused touched with his tongue the sexual organs of prosecuting witness, was sufficient to sustain conviction of violating statute making it a felony to commit a lewd or lascivious act upon or with the body of a child under 14 years of age. Pen.Code, § 288.

3. Criminal law 🔑1153(2)
Witnesses 🔑40(2)

Whether a child under ten years of age is capable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which he is to be examined, and relating them truthfully, rests in the sound discretion of trial judge, whose decision in such respect will not be disturbed on appeal in absence of a showing of abuse of such discretion.

4. Witnesses 🔑40(1)

Trial court properly received testimony of five-year-old prosecuting witness in prosecution for committing a lewd or lascivious act upon or with the body of a child, where prosecuting witness on voir dire examination demonstrated that she knew the difference between the truth and a lie and that she would be punished if she told a lie. Pen.Code, § 288.

5. Criminal law 🔑304(2)

That in every large community there are certain abnormal individuals who participate in lewd and lascivious acts upon or with the body of a child is a matter of common knowledge. Pen.Code, § 288.

6. Infants 🔑20

Testimony of five-year-old prosecuting witness as to lewd and lascivious acts committed upon her by accused was not inherently improbable, though it disclosed that accused followed an abnormal and depraved course of conduct. Pen.Code, § 288.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Milo E. Ash was convicted of violating Pen.Code, § 288, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Robert W. Kenny, of San Francisco, and Frank Richards, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff.

Milo E. Ash, in pro. per., for appellant.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment of guilty of violating section 286 of the Penal Code after trial before the court without a jury, defendant appeals.

In his opening brief defendant says:

"Briefly summarized the evidence discloses that Carol Morton of the age of five years was invited to defendant's room, which was on the premises of his employment and where she was visiting. That while there he had her lay down on the bed where he removed her panties and used his tongue on her, indicating between her legs. That he then placed his tongue in her mouth and asked her to do the same."

Defendant relies for reversal of the judgment on three propositions, which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim:

First: In view of the holding in People v. Angier, 44 Cal.App.2d 417, 420, 112 P.2d 659, 660, defendant was not guilty of violating section 288 of the Penal Code, since the evidence as set forth above does not show that defendant touched with his tongue the sexual organ of the complaining witness.

[1] This proposition is untenable. People v. Angier, supra, had reference to a violation of section 288a of the Penal Code, which makes it a penal offense for any person to participate in the "act of copulating the mouth of one person with the sexual organ of another." The cited case had no reference to section 288 of the Penal Code, which makes it a felony for any person to commit a lewd or lascivious act upon or with the body, or any part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years with intent of arousing, appealing to or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or child. (People v. Bronson, 69 Cal.App. 83, 86, 230 P. 213; People v. Lanham, 137 Cal.App. 737, 740, 31 P.2d 410). It is now established that it is not necessary in order to constitute a violation of section 288 of the Penal Code that the defendant touch the naked body of the prosecuting witness, it being sufficient that a lewd or lascivious act is committed upon or with the body, or some part or member thereof, of a child under the age of fourteen years. (People v. Dabner, 25 Cal.App. 630, 632 et seq., 144 P. 975.)

[2] In view of the foregoing rule and the facts which defendant in his brief concedes the evidence discloses as to the acts which took place, there can be no doubt that there is substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that defendant was guilty of violating section 288 of the Penal Code.

Second: The prosecuting witness, a female five years of age, was not qualified to testify as a witness.

[3, 4] This proposition is likewise untenable and is governed by the settled law in California that whether or not a child under the age of ten years is capable of (a) receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which the child is to be examined and (b) relating them truthfully is a question the determination of which rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge; and in the absence of a showing of an abuse of this discretion by the trial judge his decision will not be disturbed on appeal. (People v. Morcumb, 28 Cal.App.2d 465, 467, 82 P.2d 714.) An examination of the record in the instant case discloses that the prosecuting witness on her voir dire examination demonstrated that she knew the difference between telling the truth and telling a lie and that she would be punished should she tell a lie. Therefore her testimony was properly received by the trial court.

Third: The prosecuting witness' testimony was inherently improbable.

[5, 6] This proposition is likewise without merit. It is to be conceded that such acts as those described by the prosecuting witness are not ordinarily indulged in by the average normal human being. However, it is a matter of common knowledge that in every large community there are certain abnormal individuals who participate in such acts as those described by the complaining witness, and therefore there is no inherent improbability in the evidence which discloses that defendant followed such an abnormal and depraved course of conduct.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., and W. J. WOOD, J., concur.

SERNS v. SERNS.
Civ. 14855.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.
Aug. 17, 1944.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 6, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 15, 1945.

1. Divorce ⚷184(10)

In action for divorce, finding of trial court is binding if supported by sufficient evidence.

2. Divorce ⚷27(5)

In passing upon a finding of the infliction of grievous mental suffering by one party upon the other, trial court must consider all the circumstances of the case, including intelligence and refinement of the party charging cruelty.

3. Divorce ⚷184(6)

In action for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, trial court's conclusion as to whether grievous mental suffering has been inflicted on one party by the other, will not be reversed on appeal unless the evidence is so slight as to indicate an abuse of discretion.

4. Divorce ⚷130

Conflicting evidence sustained trial court's findings in favor of husband on his cross-complaint for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty.

5. Divorce ⚷127(4)

In wife's contested action for divorce wherein husband filed cross-complaint for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty, the record disclosed ample evidence to corroborate testimony of husband.

6. Divorce ⚷127(4)

The extent of the corroboration necessary for granting a divorce is not defined by statute, but corroboration of all the acts of cruelty charged by party to whom divorce is granted is not necessary, and, where a number of charges of cruelty have been made, corroboration of a single act of cruelty may be sufficient.

7. Divorce ⚷127(4)

The principal object of corroboration rule in divorce actions is to prevent collusion, and, where the evidence in a contested action clearly shows absence of collusion, the court is justified in granting decree upon evidence which is only slightly corroborated if otherwise satisfied that prevailing party is entitled to a decree.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; W. L. Bradshaw, Judge.

Action for divorce by Adelaide T. Serns against Arthur E. Serns, wherein defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. From a judgment granting a decree of divorce to defendant on his cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Raymond D. Williamson and Arthur J. Healy, both of San Francisco, and Leland Crawford and Henry T. Bailey, both of Santa Barbara, for appellant.

W. P. Butcher, of Santa Barbara, for respondent.

W. J. WOOD, Acting Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment granting a decree of divorce to the cross-complainant on the ground of extreme cruelty. Appellant now asserts that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings and that the corroboration is insufficient to comply with the requirements of the law. At the time of their marriage, October 5, 1940, respondent was fifty-three years of age and appellant was forty-nine years old, both parties having been previously married. From the testimony of respondent it appears that appellant was extravagant in her living expenditures to such an extent that his practice as a physician was insufficient and he had to draw upon reserve funds. During all the period following the marriage he was in poor health; he did not care to argue with his wife and because he remained silent she called him a mouse. Appellant urged him to change the type of his practice and leave Santa Barbara. On at least one occasion she slapped him; she complained of his clothing and his table manners; she was jealous of his secretary, a young woman who with her brother had been left orphaned when they were fifteen years of age and respondent had since been helping them, giving the girl a job with him doing secretarial work. Notwithstanding this appellant wanted him to discharge his secretary. On various occasions when patients called at his home appellant surreptitiously listened in on conversations between him and his patients, and finally she told him to leave. Appellant in her testimony admitted that she had slapped respondent because she "thought he needed a good lesson". She also admitted listening in on his telephone conversations; admitted that she nagged him and stated that she had "persistently" argued with him on one subject for five days.

[1-4] The evidence in the case is conflicting and in an action for divorce, like other actions, a finding of the trial court is binding if supported by sufficient evidence. This includes the finding of the infliction of grievous mental suffering by one party upon the other. In passing upon this particular finding the trial court must consider all the circumstances of the case, including the intelligence and refinement of the party charging cruelty. The conclusion reached by the trial court will not be reversed on appeal unless the evidence is so slight as to indicate an abuse of discretion. Keener v. Keener, 18 Cal.2d 445, 116 P.2d 1. The evidence outlined above is ample to give support to the findings of the trial court.

[5] The record dicloses ample evidence to corroborate the testimony of respondent. The witness Ruth Steinert corroborated respondent's testimony that he was told to leave when she stated that appellant had called the office and given directions to "tell the doctor to get a truck to get his things". The household maid, Nellie Arrellanes, furnished corroboration for the testimony that appellant had listened in on the telephone conversations. T. H. Canfield, a business associate of respondent, testified concerning appellant's financial extravagances.

[6, 7] The extent of the corroboration necessary for the granting of a decree of divorce is not defined in any of our statutes. It is not necessary to corroborate all the acts of cruelty charged by the party to whom the decree is granted. Where a number of charges of cruelty have been made, corroboration of a single act of cruelty may be sufficient. Ungemach v. Ungemach, 61 Cal.App.2d 29, 142 P.2d 99; Keener v. Keener, supra. Moreover, the rule requiring corroboration is not so strictly applied in hotly contested divorce actions as it is in actions where a decree is demanded upon the default of the opposing party. The principal object of the corroboration rule is to prevent collusion between the parties, and where it is clear from the evidence in a contested action that there is no collusion the court is justified in granting the decree upon evidence which is only slightly corroborated if otherwise the court is satisfied that the prevailing party is entitled to a decree. Minnich v. Minnich, 127 Cal.App. 1, 15 P.2d 804; Ungemach v. Ungemach, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

WESTERN COAL & MINING CO. v. JONES.

Civ. 3386.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Aug. 28, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 17, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Limitation of actions ⟹149(1)

An ackowledgment of a debt barred by limitations which was conditioned upon the exchange of corporate stock held as security for the debt, but which did not contain an expression of willingness to pay nor any words from which a promise to pay could be implied, was insufficient to remove bar of limitations.

2. Limitation of actions ⟹151(4)

Where the statute of limitations has already run upon a note and where reliance is placed on a new promise to pay which is thereafter made, the action must be based upon a new obligation rather than upon original note.

3. Limitation of actions ⟹151(1)

Where holder of notes, which were secured by corporate stock, prepared agreement or consent by which, on reorganization of corporation, new stock was substituted for old stock as security for notes, which agreement or consent was relied on by holder to remove maker's obligation on notes from bar of limitations, any ambiguity therein was chargeable to holder.

4. Limitation of actions ⟹148(1)

An acknowledgment which is sufficient to renew an obligation after it has been barred by limitations must be one which is a direct, distinct, unqualified, and unconditional admission of the existence and justness of the debt and of the party's willingness to pay the same.

5. Limitation of actions ⚷148(3)

The willingness of maker of note that holder should retain such security as was already given him was not the equivalent of a willingness, after statute of limitations had run, to acknowledge and agree to pay full amount of original debt regardless of how much might be obtained from security which had been given, so as to remove obligation from bar of limitations.

6. Bills and notes ⚷137(1)

The clause "this note may be extended from time to time without notice", and without releasing any of the parties appearing in note, does not provide for an automatic extension, but calls for some affirmative act by holder in order to exercise right to extend, which extension must be for a definite time.

7. Bills and notes ⚷137(1)

The phrase "from time to time", appearing in clause of note giving the holder a right to extend note from time to time, means from one specific time to another.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "From Time to Time".

8. Limitation of actions ⚷48(1)

The provision in note which was due on January 3, 1934, that note might be extended from time to time without notice, did not authorize holder, after taking no action for nearly seven years and after discovering that security was inadequate, to eventually decide to consider the application of a credit on the note on July 19, 1940, as constituting a definite extension from due date to date of application of credit so as to remove obligation from bar of limitations.

9. Limitation of actions ⚷48(1)

Where there was no evidence of any affirmative act by holder of note to extend it, and approximately seven years passed after due date before any action was taken, note was barred by limitations notwithstanding provision therein that it could be extended from time to time without notice.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; V. N. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Western Coal & Mining Company against George H. Jones to recover on three notes. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. On the appeal, defendant moved to abate the proceeding.

Judgment affirmed and motion to abate denied.

Whitelaw & Whitelaw, of El Centro, for appellant.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for respondent.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This is an action to collect on three promissory notes, each of which had been assigned to the plaintiff by the original payee. The principal amount of these notes was $15,000, $10,000 and $213,000, respectively. The first two matured on January 2, 1934, and the third matured on January 3, 1934.

These notes, all payable at St. Louis, Missouri, were signed by the defendant and three other men and were secured by certain stock in the S. A. Gerrard Company, a corporation, which stock had been pledged for this purpose through a trust arrangement with a trust company.

In 1938, the S. A. Gerrard Company was reorganized and with the consent of this defendant certain new stock in that company was exchanged for the old stock and was deposited with the trust company and substituted for the old stock as security for these notes.

The new stock thus substituted was duly sold in 1940 and the proceeds were credited on these notes on July 19, 1940, $10.48 being credited on the first note, $6.97 on the second note, and $148.58 on the third note. No other payment was ever made on any of these notes and no demand for payment was ever made prior to the bringing of this action on October 20, 1941.

The defendant set up a number of defenses, including one that any action was barred by the statute of limitations. After a trial, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant based upon findings and conclusions to the effect that the statute of limitations had run against each of the notes, and that there had been no new or continuing contract sufficient to take this case out of the operation of the statute. From this judgment the plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant contends that the findings and conclusions of law referred to are erroneous and not supported by the evidence. This contention is based on the respondent's consent to the substitution of the new stock in the S. A. Gerrard Company for the old stock in connection with the reorganization of that company.

On December 13, 1938, the appellant wrote to the respondent stating that it was enclosing a form of agreement for his signature "covering the exchange of stock in the S. A. Gerrard Company pursuant to the Plan or Reorganization" and asking the defendant and his wife to sign the agreement "so that there may be no question about the authority for the exchange, the endorsement of the new stock by you and Mrs. Jones, and its return to us in place of the stock we now hold as collateral" on the notes. The agreement which was enclosed, and which had been prepared by the appellant or its attorney, was signed and returned by the respondent. It reads as follows:

"——— 1938

"Western Coal and Mining Company
"Missouri Pacific Building
"St. Louis, Missouri

"Gentlemen:

"The undersigned, in consideration of your consenting and agreeing to the Plan of Reorganization proposed by The S. A. Gerrard Company submitted by that Company on or about July 25, 1938 to the Income Debenture holders and the Stockholders of said Company, does hereby agree that, upon Western Coal and Mining Company delivering to The S. A. Gerrard Company the certificates for the Common Stock of the S. A. Gerrard Company which Western Coal and Mining Company holds as security for the obligations of the undersigned, and others, to the Western Coal and Mining Company, for exchange for the new Common Stock of The S. A. Gerrard Company pursuant to the said Plan of Reorganization, to endorse, in blank, ready for transfer, the certificates for said new Common Stock issued in exchange for said deposited stock; such endorsement to be in, substantially, the same manner and for the same purpose that said deposited Common Stock has been endorsed by the undersigned.

"Said new Common Stock, when so endorsed and when received by Western Coal and Mining Company, will be deemed substituted by Western Coal and Mining Company, as holder of the certain notes signed by the undersigned and other parties and without releasing or in anywise impairing the liability of the undersigned under said notes; and said new Common Stock so deposited under said notes shall be as fully subject to the lien of said notes as if specifically referred to and described in said notes.

"(Sgd) George H. Jones."

The letter from the appellant transmitting this agreement does not ask for or mention any acknowledgment of the debt for which the stock had been pledged, any admission of the justice of that debt, or any expression of willingness to pay the same. The request contained therein is merely for the respondent's consent to a substitution of stock in the reorganized company, as proposed, for the old stock held as security, with an agreement to endorse the new stock to enable such an exchange to be made. The agreement is to the same effect and provides for the respondent's consent to this substitution in the form of the same security, with a provision that such a substitution should not change the appellant's position, and should not impair the liability of the respondent as it then existed. The agreement provides only for the respondent's consent to this substitution in the form of the same security and for nothing else. While the respondent consented to such a substitution, thereby agreeing that the appellant's security should remain the same regardless of any technical change in form, he in no way expressed a willingness to change his own position in any other respect. While he was willing that the appellant should retain whatever security it then had, he neither was asked for nor gave any admission or acknowledgment of the justness of the debt or of his willingness or intention to pay that debt or any part of it, other than and except as he had already paid it by giving the security, which was the sole matter considered in these documents.

[1] This view was upheld by the Supreme Court of Arizona in another action on these same notes, involving a consideration of these same documents, which was brought against another of the makers of these notes. Western Coal & Mining Co. v. Hilvert, 60 Ariz. 537, 142 P.2d 411. We are in accord with the views therein expressed.

[2] It is well settled in this state that where the statute of limitations has already run upon a note and where reliance is placed on a new promise to pay which is thereafter made the action must be based upon the new obligation rather than upon the original note. McCormick v. Brown, 36 Cal. 180, 95 Am.Dec. 170; Curtis v. City of Sacramento, 70 Cal. 412, 11 P. 748; Lambert v. Schmalz, 118 Cal. 33, 50 P. 13; Sanford v. Bergin, 156 Cal. 43, 103 P. 333.

[3] Since the appellant prepared the agreement or consent here relied upon, any ambiguity or insufficiency therein is chargeable to it. Golden West Credit & Adjustment Co. v. Peardon, 138 Cal.App. 481, 32 P.2d 1105; Cockrill v. Boas, 213 Cal. 490, 2 P.2d 774; Weil v. California Bank, 219 Cal. 538, 27 P.2d 904; Hunt v. United Bank & Trust Co., 210 Cal. 108, 291 P. 184.

[4] An acknowledgment which is sufficient to renew an obligation after it has been barred by the statute of limitations must be one which is a direct, distinct, unqualified and unconditional admission of the existence and justice of the debt and of the party's willingness to pay the same. Many cases support this proposition, of which only a few need be cited in addition to those heretofore referred to. Pierce v. Merrill, 128 Cal. 473, 61 P. 67, 79 Am.St. Rep. 63; Textile Nat. Bank v. Lawrence, 49 Cal.App. 84, 192 P. 880; Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co., 189 Cal. 248, 207 P. 1009; Fontana Land Co. v. Laughlin, 199 Cal. 625, 250 P. 669, 48 A.L.R. 1308; In re Estate of Azevedo, 17 Cal.App.2d 710, 62 P.2d 1058; Heiser v. McAlpine, 20 Cal. App.2d 467, 67 P.2d 141.

[5] There is a wide difference between a willingness that a creditor should retain such security as has already been given him and a willingness, after the statute of limitations has run, to acknowledge and agree to pay the full amount of an original debt regardless of how much may be obtained from the security which has been given. The appellant cites certain cases in which it has been held that the giving of new and additional security is a sufficient acknowledgment and expression of a willingness to pay to constitute a renewal of the obligation. Those cases are not applicable here. No new or additional security was given and the only thing that appears is a consent to a change in the form of the security already given which, in practical effect, left the parties and the security in exactly the same position they were in before the exchange was made. No admission or acknowledgment here appears which is sufficient to establish a new obligation after the bar of the statute had come into effect.

The appellant further contends that the court's findings with respect to the third note are without support for the reason that this note, by its own terms, provides for extensions from time to time which prevented the statute from running. The body of this note reads as follows:

"213,000.00 St. Louis, Mo. January 3, 1933 on demand after date, and if no demand is made, then on the 3rd day of January, 1934, we promise to pay to the order of Festus J. Wade, Jr., at the office of First National Bank in St. Louis, the sum of Two Hundred and Thirteen Thousand Dollars for value, with interest from date at the rate of six per cent (6%) per annum, payable semi-annually until maturity, and at the rate of eight per cent per annum after maturity until paid. Demand for payment, protest and notice of dishonor are hereby waived by all parties, whether as signers, endorsers, guarantors, or in any other capacity, and this note may be extended from time to time without notice and without releasing any of said parties. If this note be not paid at maturity, the parties hereto agree to pay, in addition, all costs of collection and ten per cent attorney's fees."

While the complaint contains an allegation that "said note was extended from the time of the maturity thereof to July 19, 1940," no effort was made to prove such an extension and there is an entire absence of evidence in that regard aside from the terms of the note itself. It was, and is, the appellant's position that no action on its part was necessary and that the provision "this note may be extended from time to time without notice and without releasing any of said parties" was self-executing and constituted an automatic extension of the time for paying the note with a consequent waiver of the statute of limitations. While it is contended that the appellant had the right to consider the due date as extended to July 19, 1940, the date when the proceeds from the sale of the security were credited on the note, it is conceded that no affirmative action of any kind was taken by the appellant and that no resolution or other affirmative act was made or taken by its board of directors, or by any of its agents, to thus extend the time for payment of this note.

In support of its contention that the terms of this note provide for an automatic extension thereof the appellant relies on Hasman v. Canman, 136 Cal.App. 91, 28 P.2d 372, 373. That case involved a note which provided that if it was not paid at maturity "it is hereby renewed from year to year, at the option of the holder, until paid, and during such year the makers thereof shall not have the right to pay the same." The court held that the contract itself definitely provided for its own extension and that the forbearance of the owner to sue, together with the fact that she had collected the interest after the due date, was sufficient evidence of her exercise of the option to renew the note from year to year. The note here in question, instead of definitely providing for any extension for a specific time, provides that "this note may be extended from time to time without notice." This provision is contained in a clause relating to the waiver of protest and notice of dishonor in case of nonpayment. This clause seems to have been intended as a full and complete waiver of the technical formalities that might otherwise be necessary to bind any parties who might be merely endorsers or guarantors, regardless of whether or not the date of payment should be extended. While this clause provides that no demand or notice is necessary, the main provision with respect to payment is that the note is payable on demand and if no demand is made then it is payable on January 3, 1934. The language used is rather ambiguous, and the expression "may be extended from time to time without notice and without releasing any of said parties" may have been intended to obviate the necessity of any notice of extension being given to those who were endorsers or guarantors.

[6-8] In any event, the note does not provide for an automatic extension but at best provides that it "may be extended from time to time." Although a right to extend may have been thus given, the exercise of that right called for some affirmative act. Any such extension may not be for an indefinite time. It is from "time to time," which means from one specific time to another. Such a fixing of time cannot be automatic and clearly calls for a definite and concrete act in extending the time to a specific date. If we assume that the holder of the note could perform this act at any reasonable time after the note otherwise became due, the act would still have to be performed before the right to do so had become barred by the statute. Nothing in the terms of this note supports the appellant's contention that it had a right, after taking no action of any kind for nearly seven years, and after discovering that the security was inadequate, to eventually decide to consider the application of a credit on the notes on July 19, 1940, as constituting, respectively, a definite extension from January 3, 1934, to July 19, 1940.

[9] The respondent relies on such cases as Woollomes v. Gomes, 26 Cal.App.2d 461, 79 A.2d 728; California State Bank v. Webber, 110 Cal. 538, 42 P. 1066; Trinity County Bank v. Haas, 151 Cal. 553, 91 P. 385; and Stalder v. Riverside Groves, etc., Water Co., 167 Cal. 560, 140 P. 252, in which, generally speaking, it was held that from the form of the document in question, in each case, it could not be said that it was within the contemplation of the parties that the time of payment should be indefinitely postponed. While these cases are distinguishable in certain particulars from the one now before us, the principles behind those cases are more nearly applicable here than are those found applicable in Hasman v. Canman. We think the language used in the note here in question, taken in its entirety, does not indicate an intention to provide for an automatic and indefinite extension of the time of payment or for one indefinitely existing only in the mind of the holder. It clearly provides that any such extension may be from time to time, which indicates a definite extension for a particular time and not one arising from the fact that the holder may later simply assume that an extension has previously been granted. Whether or not any notice was necessary some act on the part of the holder was required and one that would make a definite extension to a specific date. There is an entire lack of evidence as to any such affirmative act and the allegation of the complaint to which we have referred was not sustained by proof.

The judgment is affirmed. The respondent's motion to abate the proceedings is denied.

MARKS and GRIFFIN, JJ., concur.

26 Cal.2d 809

MacISAAC et al. v. POZZO et al.

L. A. 18991.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 10, 1945.

1. Pleading 🔑345(1), 350(1)

A motion by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings is in nature of a general demurrer, and the motion must be denied if defendant's pleadings raise a material issue or set up affirmative matter constituting a defense.

2. Pleading 🔑350(3)

For purpose of ruling on plaintiffs' motion for judgment on the pleadings, trial court was required to treat all of defendants' allegations as true, and, since plaintiffs admitted untruth of their own allegations in so far as they had been controverted, all such averments would be disregarded whether there was a direct and specific denial or an indirect denial by virtue of affirmative allegations of a contrary state of facts.

3. Joint adventures 🔑4(1)

If contract was obtained by agents of original joint venture dividing profits on a 50-50 basis who were acting in its behalf and for its benefit, defendants were entitled to an equal share in benefits of the contract, and, if they were induced by plaintiffs' alleged fraud and concealment to execute a subsequent joint venture agreement for a lesser share, they were entitled to relief upon discovering the fraud.

4. Pleading 🔑345(1)

Where plaintiffs sought declaratory relief as to construction and validity of a second joint venture agreement reducing defendants' share from that provided in first agreement, and defendants pleaded that second agreement was invalid because it was obtained by fraud, defendants raised an issue of fact which required determination, and hence it was error to grant plaintiffs' motion for judgment on pleadings, regardless of how defective defendants' pleadings might have been in connection with their right to other relief.

5. Action 🔑6

Where plaintiffs sought declaratory relief as to construction and validity of second joint venture agreement reducing defendants' share from that provided in first agreement, plaintiffs opened the door, and, unless the right to rescind was lost or waived, defendants were entitled to seek rescission as a defense to the action and as basis for recovery pursuant to original agreement.

6. Joint adventures 🔑5(1)

Where defendants were entitled in any event to retain what they had received under a second joint venture agreement reducing defendants' share from that provided in first agreement, defendants were not required to offer to restore such amount as a condition to rescission of second agreement.

7. Joint adventures 🔑5(2)

Where defendants alleged in their cross-complaint a misapplication of funds of original joint venture in connection with services performed under a contract and prayed for an accounting, cross-complaint stated cause of action for an accounting regardless of whether defendant had proper grounds for damages or rescission of a second joint venture agreement reducing defendants' share from that provided in first agreement.

8. Pleading 🔑345(1), 350(3)

Although defendants failed to expressly seek rescission of second joint venture agreement reducing defendant's share from that provided in first joint venture agreement or specifically ask for damages in cross-complaint, defendants were entitled to any relief warranted by facts pleaded, and their failure to ask for proper relief was not fatal to their cause, and hence trial court erred in granting plaintiffs' motion for judgment on pleadings without affording defendants an opportunity to amend.

9. Pleading 🔑344

Where facts indicate that party probably has a good cause of action or defense, but that it has been pleaded defectively, and defects have not been called to his attention by demurrer or by notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings, trial court should not grant motion for judgment on pleadings without first giving the party an opportunity to elect whether he will stand on his pleadings or amend them.

10. Appeal and error 🔑236(2)

The question whether trial court abused its discretion in denying permission to defendants to amend their answer and cross-complaint was open on appeal even though there was no tender of proposed pleadings. Code Civ.Proc. § 472c.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Donald MacIsaac and another against Emile A. Pozzo and another for declaratory relief, wherein the defendants filed a cross-complaint. From a judgment for plaintiffs on the pleadings, the defendants appeal.

Reversed with directions.

Prior opinion, Cal.App., 156 P.2d 43.

H. G. Redwine and Gwyn S. Redwine, both of Hollywood, for appellants.

A. L. Abrahams and Henry B. Ely, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Defendants have appealed from a judgment on the pleadings in an action brought by plaintiffs for declaratory relief.

The complaint alleged that the parties entered into a joint venture agreement for the construction of a civilian housing project, the profits to be divided equally between the parties; that a month or so later they entered into a second joint venture agreement which provided that certain facilities of the original joint venture should be used in the performance of a job for the Utah Fuel Company, profits to be divided 85 per cent to plaintiffs and 15 per cent to defendants; that partial payments made on account of the Utah Fuel job were divided on the 85%-15% basis; that defendants have prevented the Utah Fuel Company from settling the amount of the balance owing to plaintiffs and defendants until the respective rights of plaintiffs and defendants therein have been determined; that an actual controversy exists relating to the legal rights and duties of plaintiffs and defendants and to their respective rights in and to the moneys heretofore paid and still unpaid under their contract with the Utah Fuel Company; that it is the contention of defendants that the second joint venture agreement is invalid and not enforceable and that they are entitled to receive one-half of all moneys heretofore paid and which may hereafter be paid pursuant to the terms of the contract of the parties with the Utah Fuel Company; that it is the contention of plaintiffs that the second joint venture agreement is an enforceable contract and that plaintiffs are entitled to receive 85 per cent and defendants 15 per cent of the moneys heretofore collected and still due from Utah Fuel Company. Plaintiffs prayed that the court make a declaration of the respective rights and duties of plaintiffs and defendants and determine the validity of the second joint venture agreement.

Defendants filed an answer which alleged that the Utah Fuel job was negotiated by agents who were acting on behalf of the original joint venture, and whose compensation, traveling and other expenses were paid by that venture, that plaintiffs fraudulently represented that they had obtained the Utah Fuel job by reason of a recommendation from the Kaiser Company, but would allow defendants 15 per cent of the profits if they would permit the original joint venture facilities to be used, otherwise plaintiffs would take the job and defendants would have no interest therein; that defendants were induced to execute the second joint venture agreement by plaintiffs' fraud and by their concealment of the fact that the Utah Fuel job had been negotiated for and obtained by agents of the original joint venture; that before any money was collected defendants informed plaintiffs that they were entitled to and expected to receive 50 per cent of the profits, and that when the job was completed they expected that such an adjustment would be made; that the second joint venture agreement is invalid because of the circumstances surrounding its execution; and that defendants are entitled to receive one-half of all moneys heretofore paid or which may be paid hereafter by the Utah Fuel Company.

The defendants also filed a cross-complaint which, after restating the facts pleaded in the answer, alleged that the original joint venture agreement was executed under an oral understanding that the parties would contract for other work; that, if the second joint venture agreement is not set aside plaintiffs will by their fraud and concealment become unjustly enriched at the defendants' expense; that certain costs and expenses of the Utah Fuel job had been paid from funds of the original venture and not repaid; and that plaintiffs had received $4,300 from the original venture as purported compensation for performing the Utah Fuel job. The prayer of the cross-complaint was for the difference between what defendants had received and 50 per cent of the moneys already paid under the Utah Fuel contract, for a declaration that defendants were entitled to 50 per cent of all further payments to be made thereunder, for an order requiring plaintiffs to repay $4,300 to the original joint venture, for a full and complete accounting, and for such other and further relief as defendants might be entitled to in the premises.

When the case came on for trial, plaintiffs moved for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the cross-complaint did not state any cause of action against plaintiffs, and that the answer to the complaint raised no issue of law whatever. The motion was granted. The defendants requested leave to amend their answer to conform with the trial court's expressed opinion regarding the pleadings, but the request was denied. No demurrer was filed to defendants' pleadings, and no notice had been given of the intention to move for judgment on the pleadings.

[1, 2] A motion by plaintiff for judgment on the pleadings is in the nature of a general demurrer, and the motion must be denied if the defendant's pleadings raise a material issue or set up affirmative matter constituting a defense. Cohn v. Klein, 209 Cal. 421, 424, 287 P. 459; Cass v. Rochester, 174 Cal. 358, 360, 163 P. 212; Neale v. Morrow, 174 Cal. 49, 54, 161 P. 1165. For the purpose of ruling on the motion, the trial court must treat all of defendant's allegations as being true, and since the moving party admits the untruth of his own allegations insofar as they have been controverted, all such averments must be disregarded whether there is a direct and specific denial or an indirect denial by virtue of affirmative allegations of a contrary state of facts.

[3] It clearly appears from the pleadings that the parties were joint venturers under the original agreement and this relationship existed when the Utah Fuel contract and the second joint venture agreement were executed. They therefore occupied a fiduciary relationship similar in many respects to that of partners, and each owed to the other the duty of highest loyalty and utmost good faith, being charged not to take any unfair advantage or secret profit. Universal Sales Corporation v. California Press Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 772, 128 P.2d 665; Richards v. Fraser, 122 Cal. 456, 55 P. 246; Ford & McNamara, Inc. v. Wilson, 119 Cal.App. 475, 6 P.2d 996; Menefee v. Oxnam, 42 Cal.App. 81, 183 P. 379; see, also, Zeibak v. Nasser, 12 Cal.2d 1, 12, 82 P.2d 375. Hence if, as alleged, the Utah Fuel contract was obtained by agents of the original joint venture who were acting in its behalf and for its benefit, defendants were entitled to an equal share in the benefits of that contract, and if they were induced by plaintiffs' fraud and concealment to execute an agreement for a lesser share, they were entitled to relief upon discovering the fraud.

[4] Plaintiffs argue, however, that a contract induced by fraud is enforceable unless rescinded; that defendants did not seek rescission or establish a right thereto; that they have neither alleged nor asked for damages; and, therefore, that the court properly declared the second joint venture agreement to be a valid and subsisting contract.

This argument ignores the nature of plaintiffs' action and assumes that defendants were required to seek some specific affirmative relief as a defense. Plaintiffs sought declaratory relief as to the construction and validity of an agreement, which defendants allege was induced by fraud. When the defendants pleaded that the second agreement was invalid and unenforceable because it was obtained by fraud, they raised an issue of fact which required determination. If those pleaded facts were true, plaintiffs clearly were not entitled to a declaration that the contract was valid in all respects, and hence it was error to grant their motion for judgment on the pleadings, regardless of how defective defendants' pleadings may have been in connection with their rights to other relief. Since it appears, however, that defendants are seeking affirmative relief of some kind and the questions with reference thereto are earnestly argued by the parties and must ultimately be solved, we will consider the sufficiency of the pleadings in that regard.

Defendants allege facts appropriate to an action for rescission or for damages for fraud, and they ask the court to declare that they are entitled to one-half of the profits of the joint venture. Their pleadings, however, do not clearly indicate the legal theory upon which their claim is based.

On the theory of damages for fraud, the defendants have alleged, in effect, the existence of the original joint venture, the obtaining of the Utah Fuel job by agents acting for and on behalf of that venture, the violation of plaintiffs' fiduciary duty by their fraud and concealment, defendants' reliance on the representation, and its falsity. While the pleadings do not employ the word "damages" it may be that defendants intend to claim as damages the amount they would have received under the original joint venture but for the fraud of plaintiffs.

[5, 6] As to the remedy of rescission, the pleadings are likewise indefinite, but they are not entirely inadequate. There is no positive and express assertion that rescission has been or is being sought, or that any notice described or intended as a notice of rescission was given. Defendants allege, however, in substance, that as soon as they discovered the fraud they notified plaintiffs that they would not be bound by the provisions of the second agreement relating to the division of profits and that they were entitled to an equal share of the profits and expected an adjustment when the Utah Fuel job was completed. Moreover, when plaintiffs brought the action seeking to establish the validity of the second joint venture agreement they opened the door, and unless the right to rescind was lost or waived defendants were entitled to seek rescission as a defense to the action and as the basis for recovery. See Rosemead Co., v. Shipley Co., 207 Cal. 414, 420, 278 P. 1038; McNeese v. McNeese, 190 Cal. 402, 405, 213 P. 36; Hayt v. Bentel, 164 Cal. 680, 687, 130 P. 432; Boulevard Land Co. v. King, 125 Cal.App. 224, 228, 13 P.2d 864; see also, Elrod-Oas Home Bldg. Co. v. Mensor, 120 Cal.App. 485, 489, 8 P.2d 171; Rest., Contracts, § 480. It is apparent that no offer to restore was necessary as a condition to rescission, since defendants are entitled, in any event, to retain what they have already received. Matteson v. Wagoner, 147 Cal. 739, 744, 82 P. 436; Richards v. Fraser, 122 Cal. 456, 461, 55 P. 246.

[7] Defendants by their cross-complaint allege, among other things, a misapplication of the funds of the original joint venture in connection with services performed under the Utah Fuel contract and prayed for accounting. If these allegations are true, defendants would appear to be entitled to such accounting regardless of whether they have proper grounds for damages or rescission.

[8] Although defendants do not expressly seek rescission or specifically ask for damages, they are nevertheless entitled to any relief warranted by the facts pleaded, and their failure to ask for the proper relief is not fatal to their cause. See Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 542, 145 P.2d 305; Pascoe v. Morrisson, 219 Cal. 54, 58, 25 P.2d 9; Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 88, 193 P. 84; Nathan v. Dierssen, 164 Cal. 607, 611, 130 P. 12. They may seek to rescind and ask for damages in the alternative if they fail to establish a right to rescission. See Wulfjen v. Dolton, 24 Cal.2d 891, 896, 151 P.2d 846; Bancroft v. Woodward, 183 Cal. 99, 102, 190 P. 445; Hjorth v. Bernstein, 44 Cal.App.2d 561, 565, 112 P.2d 643. Under the circumstances, it was clearly error for the court to grant the motion for judgment on the pleadings without affording defendants an opportunity to amend, since the defects could be cured by amendment.

[9] As stated in Kelley v. Kriess, 68 Cal. 210, 212, 9 P. 129: "If plaintiff has a good cause of action, which by accident or mistake he has failed to set out in his complaint, the court, on motion for judgment on the pleadings, should, on his application so to do, permit him to amend." The same rule applies to the defendants' pleadings; and when the facts stated indicate that the party probably has a good cause of action or defense, but that it has been pleaded imperfectly or defectively, and the defects have not been called to his attention by demurrer or by a notice of motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court should not grant the motion without first giving the party an opportunity to elect whether he will stand on his pleadings or amend them. The granting of the motion without leave to amend would in many cases be an absolute denial of justice, and is directly opposed to the policy of the law that cases should be tried and decided on the merits.

[10] The plaintiffs have cited cases, such as Neher v. Kauffman, 197 Cal. 674, 242 P. 713, to the effect that a ruling denying permission to amend will not be disturbed on appeal where there is no tender of the proposed pleadings, and they claim that there was no abuse of discretion in this case because defendants failed to specify in the superior court the nature of the proposed amendment. While no proposed pleadings were tendered, defendants requested leave to amend "to conform with" the trial court's ruling that the pleadings were defective. Moreover, since there had been no demurrer and no intimation that any such attack would be made on the pleadings, it cannot be claimed that defendants were bound to appear at the time of trial armed with the proposed amendments to their pleadings. In addition, all the cases cited by plaintiffs were decided prior to the enactment, in 1939, of section 472c of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the question whether the trial court abused its discretion in sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend "is open on appeal even though no request to amend such pleading was made." See Wennerholm v. Stanford University School of Medicine, 20 Cal.2d 713, 718-720, 128 P.2d 522, 525, 141 A.L.R. 1358. Since the reason for the rule is the same on a motion for judgment on the pleadings, the same result should obtain.

The judgment is reversed with directions to grant leave to defendants to amend their pleadings.

SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

26 Cal.2d 829

DE HART et al. v. ALLEN.
S. F. 17155.

Supreme Court of California.
Aug. 21, 1945.
Rehearing Denied Sept. 17, 1945.

1. Judgment 🔑713(2)

Judgments for lessors, in actions during term of lease for unpaid rent, were res judicata as to issues on defenses, either expressly presented or which could have been raised therein, that lessors had terminated liability of lessee by consenting to assignment of lease and satisfying mortgage given by lessee to secure rent, and that lease was invalid because made for an illegal purpose and could not be raised in subsequent action for difference between rent called for in lease and rent received from a new tenant after lessees' assignee had abandoned premises.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1099(3)

Decision on former appeal of case rejecting certain defenses became the law of the case precluding further reliance upon such defenses.

3. Evidence 🔑351

Where writing was in form of affidavit of service reciting that affiant had served lessee with a notice by lessors that lessee's assignee had abandoned leased premises and that lessors would relet for lessee's benefit, which writing was signed by process server in presence of lessors' attorney, who placed it in his files, but which writing was never notarized, and, after process server's death, his signature was proved by witnesses, writing was admissible in rent action by lessors against lessee under the Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1953e-1953h; § 1953f.

4. Evidence 🔑351

Document prepared by process server in the usual course of his occupation or calling, and which otherwise meets the requirements of the Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act, even though not notarized, is admissible. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1953e-1953h; § 1953f.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑79(3)

Ordinarily, an assignment of a lease does not relieve lessee from his obligation even though lessor consents to assignment or assignee expressly assumes obligations under the lease.

6. Landlord and tenant 🔑208(1)

In a limited sense, an assignment of a lease makes lessee a surety for assignee as between assignee and lessee, but, as between lessor and lessee, lessee remains a primary obligor under his express contract to pay rent, since it is not necessary for lessor, upon abandonment of premises by assignee, to give notice of re-letting to assignee in order to hold lessee for difference between rents called for in lease and those received from new tenants.

7. Landlord and tenant 🔑195(1, 2)

Where premises have been abandoned, lessor may consider lease as still in existence and sue for unpaid installments of rent as they become due for the unexpired portion of the term, or he may retake possession for lessee's account and relet premises, holding lessee for the difference between rentals under lease and what lessor is able in good faith to procure by reletting.

8. Limitation of actions ⚷46(1)

Where lessors, after leased premises were abandoned, elected to repossess premises and relet for lessee's benefit, holding lessee for difference in rentals accruing under lease and those procured by reletting, as respects limitations, lessors' right of action for damages did not accrue until end of term of lease.

9. Landlord and tenant ⚷195(2)

Where lessors, after leased premises were abandoned, elected to repossess and relet for lessee's benefit, holding lessee for difference between rentals accruing under lease and those received from new tenants, the fact that lessors were for a time unsuccessful in reletting premises did not preclude the allowance of damages for loss of rentals during such period.

10. Appeal and error ⚷1195(3)

Where, on defendant's appeal, there was an unqualified reversal of judgment, all issues involved in case were set at large for readjudication, and, under the circumstances, fact that plaintiffs were denied recovery on one item on first trial and did not appeal did not preclude recovery on such item on second trial.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Rosemond T. De Hart and others against Joseph Allen for damages for breach of a lease. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion 154 P.2d 18.

Walter F. Lynch and Ernest Spagnoli, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Carl E. Day and Abraham Setzer, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

On August 1, 1931, plaintiffs leased a rooming house to defendant for a period of five years at a monthly rental of $250. In December, 1933, the lease was assigned with the consent of the lessor to one Gammons, who accepted the lease and all of its obligations. As a part of the transaction plaintiffs gave defendant a satisfaction of a chattel mortgage which had been executed as security for the rentals. Gammons paid rent for two months, abandoned the premises and disappeared.

In three separate actions in the municipal court against defendant plaintiffs recovered rentals for the period from February to May, 1934. During the period from June to September, 1934, they endeavored unsuccessfully to relet the premises but on October 1, 1934, they obtained a new tenant at a monthly rental of $125.

In January, 1940, and within four years after the lease expired, plaintiffs brought this action for damages against defendant, seeking recovery for the difference between the rentals called for in defendant's lease and those received from the new tenant. Judgment for plaintiffs was reversed on appeal. De Hart v. Allen, 49 Cal.App.2d 639, 122 P.2d 273. On the second trial, judgment was again entered for plaintiffs, and this appeal was taken by defendant.

[1, 2] Defendant contends that the satisfaction of mortgage and plaintiffs' consent to the assignment of the lease to Gammons terminated his liability. He further claims that the lease is invalid because it was made for an illegal purpose. These issues were either expressly presented or could have been raised in the municipal court actions, and the judgments therein are therefore res judicata. Sutphin v. Speik, 15 Cal.2d 195, 202, 99 P.2d 652, 101 P.2d 497; Todhunter v. Smith, 219 Cal. 690, 28 P.2d 916. Moreover, these contentions were rejected on the former appeal and that decision has become the law of the case. De Hart v. Allen, 49 Cal.App.2d 639, 122 P.2d 273.

Defendant claims that he was not given notice of reletting and that hearsay evidence thereof was erroneously admitted at the trial. Plaintiffs assert that under the terms of the lease notice was not required, but that it was nevertheless given and proved by competent evidence. We need not determine whether notice of reletting was necessary as we are satisfied that the giving thereof was properly proved at the trial.

[3, 4] The court received in evidence, over defendant's objection, a writing in the form of an affidavit of service, signed by a process server, which recited that affiant had served on defendant a notice by plaintiffs that Gammons had abandoned the premises and that plaintiffs would relet them for defendant's benefit. On or about the day the notice was served, the document reciting such service was signed by the process server in the presence of plaintiff's attorney who placed it in his files. The signature on the document was identified as that of the process server by witnesses. The process server died before the trial and the document was never notarized.

The writing was admissible under the "Uniform Business Records as Evidence Act" (Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1953e–1953h). Subdivision f of the section provides: "A record af an act, condition or event, shall, in so far as relevant, be competent evidence if the custodian or other qualified witness testifies to its identity and the mode of its preparation, and if it was made in the regular course of business, at or near the time of the act, condition or event, and if, in the opinion of the court, the sources of information, method and time of preparation were such as to justify its admission." The act provides that the term "business" shall include every kind of business, profession, occupation or calling. Since the document was prepared by the process server in the usual course of his occupation or calling and otherwise met the requirements of the act it was properly admitted in evidence. See Loper v. Morrison, 23 Cal.2d 600, 608, 145 P.2d 1.

[5, 6] No notice of reletting was given to Gammons, and defendant contends that when the assignment was made he became a surety and that the failure of plaintiffs to notify Gammons that the premises would be relet for his benefit operated to release defendant from liability. Ordinarily an assignment of a lease does not release the lessee from his obligations even though the lessor consents to the assignment. Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 211, 146 P. 638, Ann.Cas.1916E, 830. Nor does the express assumption by the assignee of obligations under the lease affect the liability of the lessee to the lessor. Lopizich v. Salter, 45 Cal.App. 446, 449, 187 P. 1075; 32 Am.Jur. 315. It has sometimes been said that the effect of an assignment is to make the lessee a surety for the assignee. Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 212, 146 P. 638, Ann.Cas.1916E, 830; Brosnan v. Kramer, 135 Cal. 36, 39, 66 P. 979; Schehr v. Berkey, 166 Cal. 157, 160, 135 P. 41. This may be true in a limited sense as between the assignee and his assignor, the lessee, but as between the lessor and the lessee the latter remains a primary obligor under his express contract to pay rent. T.A.D. Jones Co. v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co., D.C., 55 F.2d 944; Id., 2 Cir., 61 F.2d 774, certiorari denied, 288 U.S. 609, 53 S.Ct. 401, 77 L.Ed. 983; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, vol. 1, p. 994; 32 Am.Jur. 310, 311, 321. It was therefore not necessary to give notice of reletting to Gammons in order to hold defendant.

[7] It is next urged that it was error for the court to award as damages rent due for the period the premises were vacant (June to September, 1934) because this was, in effect, a recovery for rent, the collection of which was barred by the statute of limitations. Where, as here, the premises have been abandoned the lessor may consider the lease as still in existence and sue for the unpaid installments of rent as they become due for the unexpired portion of the term, or he may retake possession for the lessee's account and relet the premises, holding the lessee for the difference between the rentals under the lease and what the lessor was able in good faith to procure by reletting. See Treff v. Gulko, 214 Cal. 591, 598, 7 P.2d 697; Phillips-Hollman, Inc. v. Peerless Stages, 210 Cal. 253, 258, 291 P. 178; Oliver v. Loydon, 163 Cal. 124, 124 P. 731.

[8, 9] Plaintiffs elected to pursue the latter remedy and since the lease contained no provision to the contrary, the right of action for damages did not accrue until the end of the term. Treff v. Gulko, 214 Cal. 591, 599, 7 P.2d 697; Phillips-Hollman, Inc. v. Peerless Stages, 210 Cal. 253, 258, 291 P. 178; Oliver v. Loydon, 163 Cal. 124, 124 P. 731. The fact that plaintiffs were unsuccessful in reletting the premises for the months of June to September, 1934, did not preclude the allowance of damages for the loss of rentals during this period. The suit was commenced within the statutory period after the cause of action accrued and therefore was not barred.

[10] It is contended that no award should have been made for rentals for the months of June and July, 1934, because recovery therefor was denied on the first trial and plaintiffs did not appeal. The judgment was reversed, however, on the appeal taken by defendant, and the unqualified reversal set at large for readjudication all issues involved in the case. In re Estate of Wear, 20 Cal.2d 124, 128, 124 P.2d 12; Atchison, etc., Ry. Co. v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.2d 549, 555, 86 P.2d 85; In re Estate of Pusey, 177 Cal. 367, 371, 170 P. 846.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., and GOODELL, Justice pro tem., concurred.

Rehearing denied; SPENCE, J., not participating.

---

26 Cal.2d 817

BUSCH v. TURNER, County Auditor.

Sac. 5728.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 14, 1945.

1. Officers 🔑100(2)

The statute increasing salary of district attorney of Lake county and specifically stating that such compensation should be paid to incumbents afforded some indication of a general legislative intent to make salary increase under a previous statute applicable to incumbents, though it did not directly govern incumbent district attorney's right to increased compensation under previous statute for period preceding effective date of later statute. Pol. Code, § 4280, as amended by St.1943, p. 1126, and by St.1945, c. 417.

2. Officers 🔑100(1)

Before the constitutional amendment of 1944 authorizing Legislature by two-thirds vote to suspend during war and for one year after termination of hostilities constitutional provision prohibiting increase of compensation of county, township, or municipal officer after his election or during term of office, a statute increasing compensation but containing no specific indication of legislative intent with respect to incumbents was held in abeyance until next term of office, leaving former law in effect as to incumbent. Const. art. 11, § 5.

3. Constitutional law 🔑48

Statutes will be construed, if their language permits, so as to avoid unconstitutionality.

4. Constitutional law 🔑66

A statute which is expressly made contingent upon adoption of a constitutional amendment is valid even where Legislature would have had no power to so act in absence of the amendment.

5. Statutes 🔑259

The effective date of a statute may be made contingent upon a future event.

6. Officers 🔑100(2)

The 1945 statute suspending until six months after termination of hostilities constitutional provision prohibiting salary increases during term of office together with 1944 constitutional amendment authorizing such suspension by statute, advanced effective date of 1943 statute increasing salary of Lake county district attorney, which was silent with respect to its applicability to incumbents, so that such attorney, though elected for term from January 1943 to January 1947, was entitled to increased salary from effective date of 1945 statute. Pol.Code, § 4280, as amended by St.1943, p. 1126, and by St.1945, c. 417; Const. art. 11, § 5, as amended.

7. Officers 🔑100(2)

Statute suspending until six months after termination of hostilities constitutional provision prohibiting salary increases during term of office did not directly change salary of Lake county district attorney, but was merely the final event making such salary increase by previous legislation applicable to incumbent, and hence its urgency clause does not violate constitutional provision prohibiting construction of any act changing salary of any officer as an urgency measure. Pol. Code, § 4280, as amended by St.1943, p. 1126, and by St.1945, c. 417; Const. art. 4, § 1; art. 11, § 5, as amended.

8. Statutes 🔑253

The purpose of constitutional provision that legislation with certain exceptions shall not go into effect until 90 days after final adjournment of session at which it was adopted was to give the people an opportunity to express their judgment as to the merits of a statute by filing referendum petition. Const. art. 4, § 1.

9. Statutes 🔑255

The people having already passed upon merits of statute suspending until six months after termination of hostilities constitutional provision prohibiting increase of salaries during term of office by adoption of constitutional amendment authorizing such suspension by Legislature, such statute containing urgency clause became effective immediately upon approval by Governor, though it indirectly changed salary of incumbent Lake county district attorney by permitting application to incumbents of previous statute providing for salary increase for such office. Pol.Code, § 4280, as amended by St.1943, p. 1126, and by St.1945, c. 417; Const. art. 4, § 1; art. 11, § 5, as amended.

◆

In Bank.

Proceeding by Burt W. Busch against B. J. Turner, as County Auditor of Lake County, for a writ of mandamus to compel respondent to pay petitioner's salary as county attorney at the rate of $2,400 a year from and after January 25, 1945, instead of at the rate of $1,800 per year. Submitted on respondent's demurrer to the petition.

Peremptory writ granted.

Burt W. Busch, of Lakeport, in pro. per., for petitioner.

Chester E. Watson, District Atty., of Stockton, amicus curiae on behalf of petitioner.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Robert E. Reed, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Petitioner, the District Attorney of Lake County, asks a writ of mandate to compel respondent, the auditor of that county, to pay petitioner's salary at the rate of $2,400 a year from and after January 25, 1945, rather than at the rate of $1,800 a year, the amount which petitioner received prior to January 25. There is no dispute as to the facts, and the matter was submitted upon respondent's demurrer to the petition.

Petitioner was elected on August 25, 1942, for the term beginning in January, 1943, and ending in January, 1947. Prior to August, 1943, his salary was fixed at $1,800 a year by section 4280 of the Political Code. In 1943, St.1943, p. 1126, the Legislature amended this section to increase the salary of the District Attorney of Lake County to $2,400 a year. The statute was silent with respect to its applicability to incumbents. At this time, however, section 5 of article XI of the California Constitution provided, in part: "The compensation of any county, township or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office. * * *" Accordingly, petitioner did not then receive an increase.

In 1944 section 5 of article XI was amended to read, in part: "The Legislature by a two-thirds vote of the members of each House may suspend the provision hereof prohibiting the increase of compensation of any county, township or municipal officer after his election or during his term of office for any period during which the United States is engaged in war and for one year after the termination of hostilities therein as proclaimed by the President of the United States."

Pursuant to the constitutional amendment the Legislature passed chapter 5, Statutes of 1945, suspending the prohibition against salary increases in section 5 of article XI "for the period commencing upon the effective date of this act and continuing until six months after hostilities terminate in each of the wars in which the United States is now engaged." The act was declared to be an urgency measure and to go into effect immediately. It was approved by the Governor on January 24, 1945.

Thereafter petitioner demanded payment of his salary at the increased rate provided by the 1943 legislation. Respondent, however, refused to issue warrants including the increase and petitioner received his salary for the months of January and February, 1945, at the rate fixed prior to 1943. He thereupon instituted this proceeding for a writ of mandate ordering respondent to deliver a warrant for the balance assertedly due, representing the amount of the increase, for the period beginning January 25, 1945, and ending January 31, 1945, and for the month of February, 1945.

[1] Subsequent to the institution of this proceeding the Legislature, by chapter 417 of the Statutes of 1945, again amended section 4280 of the Political Code fixing the salary of the District Attorney of Lake County at $2,400 per year and specifically stating that this compensation shall be paid to incumbents. Although this amendment, not effective until September 15, 1945, does not directly govern the problems raised herein, it does afford some indication of a general legislative intent to make the salary increase applicable to incumbents. Cf. Standard Oil Co. v. Johnson, 24 Cal.2d 40, 48, 49, 147 P.2d 577; Union League Club v. Johnson, 18 Cal.2d 275, 278, 279, 115 P.2d 425.

The 1943 legislation was sufficiently broad in its terms to include incumbents and it is clear that the prohibition in section 5 of article XI constituted the sole reason precluding petitioner from receiving an increase of salary in that year. Petitioner contends that this prohibition was removed by the constitutional amendment in 1944 together with the subsequent enactment of chapter 5 of the Statutes of 1945, thus permitting section 4280 of the Political Code, as amended in 1943, to become immediately effective on January 24, 1945.

[2, 3] Although no decision considering the precise point has been found, section 5 of article XI as it read before the 1944 amendment has frequently been applied to statutes increasing compensation but containing no specific indication of the Legislature's intention with respect to incumbents. It was determined that such a statute is to be held in abeyance until the next term of office, leaving the former law in effect as to the incumbent. Smith v. Mathews, 155 Cal. 752, 103 P. 199; Regan v. County of San Mateo, 14 Cal.2d 713, 97 P.2d 231; Galeener v. Honeycutt, 173 Cal. 100, 159 P. 595; Rice v. National City, 132 Cal. 354, 64 P. 580; see Cline v. Lewis, 175 Cal. 315, 318–319, 165 P. 915; Harrison v. Colgan, 148 Cal. 69, 82 P. 674; Kilroy v. Whitmore, 115 Cal.App. 43, 48, 300 P. 851; Shay v. Roth, 64 Cal.App. 314, 323, 221 P. 967; Williams v. Garey, 19 Cal.App. 769, 771, 127 P. 824. It was reasoned that until the next term of office commenced, there was no subject upon which the statute could constitutionally operate, and that in order to harmonize the statute with the Constitution insofar as possible, it should be held that the Legislature intended to postpone the operation of the statute until the expiration of the incumbent's term of office. See Smith v. Mathews, supra, 155 Cal. at page 757, 103 P. 199; Harrison v. Colgan, supra, 148 Cal. at page 73, 82 P. 674. These decisions, therefore, represent a specific application of the general principal that statutes will be construed, if their language permits, so as to avoid unconstitutionality. The court thus held, in substance, that the Legislature intended the statutes to be operative at the earliest time the Constitution would permit, but not before. As said in the concurring opinion in the Smith case, 155 Cal. at page 762, 103 P. at page 204, such laws "are construed to be intended only for prospective operation, and hence not void, but only in abeyance until the conditions occur to which they can apply with effect. * * * The old law stands and controls the right to compensation until the time arrives at which, by the Constitution, the new law is permitted to supersede it * * *." (Italics added.) Similarly, as expressed in Shay v. Roth, 64 Cal.App. 314, 323, 221 P. 967, 971, the law "is held in abeyance until the incumbency of an officer upon whom the increase may constitutionally operate."

Although it is true that most of the decisions referred to the expiration of the incumbent's term of office as the effective date intended by the Legislature, it must be recognized that at the time those opinions were written this was the earliest date or "condition" upon which a statute increasing salaries could constitutionally operate, and, therefore, it was perfectly natural for the courts to designate it as representing the legislative intent. There was then no occasion for the courts to consider what construction should be given such a statute in the event that the constitutional prohibition as to incumbents was removed by a constitutional amendment; the question was not passed upon in any of the decisions; and, therefore, they are not authority here insofar as they may suggest that the Legislature could not have intended to give increases to incumbents in the event of such a contingency. Cf. Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., Cal.Sup., 159 P.2d 958; Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 730, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062.

As asserted by petitioner, the statements in the Shay case and the concurring opinion in the Smith case more accurately express the principle applied in the decisions. A statute purporting, in general terms, to increase salaries would ordinarily be construed to include incumbents, and but for the constitutional bar it would do so. When the prohibition of the Constitution ceases to operate, there is no longer any reason to limit the statute, and its literal meaning may be carried out in full. The reason why the prohibition ceases to operate is entirely immaterial, whether it is because of expiration of the period designated in the Constitution or because of an amendment changing the Constitution. We hold, therefore, that the 1943 act increasing the salary of the District Attorney of Lake County was intended to take effect as soon as it lawfully could, including the contingency of a constitutional amendment permitting an operative date earlier than would have been permissible under the Constitution as it existed in 1943.

[4, 5] There appears to be no constitutional objection to such an interpretation. Although the taking effect of the act as to incumbents would thus depend upon the happening of a contingency, namely, passage of a constitutional amendment, it has been held in many states that a statute which is expressly made contingent upon the adoption of a constitutional amendment is valid even where, as here, the Legislature would have had no power to so act in absence of the amendment. Alabam's Freight Co. v. Hunt, 29 Ariz. 419, 242 P. 658; State v. Hecker, 109 Or. 520, 221 P. 808; State v. Rathie, 101 Or. 339, 199 P. 169, 200 P. 790; In re Opinions of the Justices, 227 Ala. 291, 149 So. 776; Fry v. Rosen, 207 Ind. 409, 189 N.E. 375; Pratt v. Allen, 1839, 13 Conn. 119; see Druggan v. Anderson, 269 U.S. 36, 46 S. Ct. 14, 70 L.Ed. 151; 16 C.J.S., Constitutional Law, § 47, pp. 97–98; cf. State v. Smith, 335 Mo. 840, 74 S.W.2d 27. Cases to the contrary have been found in only one jurisdiction. In re Opinion of the Justices, 132 Me. 519, 174 A. 845; In re Opinion of the Justices, 137 Me. 350, 19 A.2d 53. Although this problem apparently has not been decided heretofore in California, it has been held that the effective date of a statute may be made contingent upon a future event. Ex parte Beck, 162 Cal. 701, 706–708, 124 P. 543; see Ogle v. Eckel, 49 Cal.App.2d 599, 606, 122 P.2d 67; People v. San Bernardino High School District, 62 Cal.App. 67, 71, 216 P. 959. It may also be noted that the former State Liquor Control Act, passed and approved by the Governor in June, 1933, was expressly declared to take effect "If and when it shall become lawful under the Constitution and laws of the United States" to manufacture and sell intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, whereas the 21st Amendment was not proclaimed ratified until December 5, 1933. Cal.Stats., 1933, ch. 658, p. 1697, § 39.

The case of County of Fresno v. Brix Estate Co., 194 Cal. 85, 226 P. 77, is not controlling. There a state act authorized cities and counties to eradicate animal pests. A county board of supervisors adopted a resolution relating thereto after passage of the state act but prior to its effective date. The court held that the board of supervisors had no power to pass the resolution in anticipation of the effective date of the act, since, said the court, the referendum provisions of the Constitution made it uncertain that the act would become effective. Whatever may be the law with respect to the power of a county board of supervisors to adopt resolutions to be effective upon the occurring of uncertain events, it is clear from the foregoing authorities that the Legislature does have such power.

The case of Banaz v. Smith, 133 Cal. 102, 104, 65 P. 309, cited by respondent, is not contrary to petitioner's position. It was there stated that if a statute is void from the beginning, a subsequent amendment to the Constitution does not give life to the statute unless the amendment expressly so provides. Such a situation is not presented here. The 1943 legislation was at no time in violation of the Constitution if interpreted as not intended to apply to incumbents until removal of the constitutional prohibition—such an interpretation is in recognition of, not in contravention of, the Constitution.

[6] It follows, therefore, that chapter 5 of the 1945 statutes, together with the constitutional amendment adopted in 1944, operated to advance the effective date of the 1943 act, thereby granting petitioner an increase of salary as of the effective date of the 1945 act.

[7] Respondent contends, next, that the urgency clause of the 1945 statute is invalid as to petitioner under section 1 of article IV of the California Constitution which provides, in part, that "no measure creating or abolishing any office or changing the salary, term or duties of any officer * * * shall be construed to be an urgency measure." Respondent argues that if the 1945 act is given the effect for which petitioner contends, it would constitute a measure changing his salary. The statute, however, does not by its terms change salaries—it purports merely to exercise the authority granted the Legislature by the 1944 amendment to suspend temporarily the prohibition contained in section 5 of article XI. The increase in salary of the District Attorney of Lake County was made by the legislation of 1943, and although passage of the 1945 act constituted the final event making the increase applicable to petitioner, this only resulted indirectly from removal of the constitutional prohibition.

[8] Since the act does not directly purport to change salaries, we may properly consider it in light of the purposes underlying the rules governing urgency measures as set forth in section 1 of article IV of the Constitution. These are included as a part of the referendum provisions adopted by the people in 1911. It is there stated that referendum petitions may be presented to the Secretary of State within ninety days after the final adjournment of the Legislature, and that no act passed shall go into effect until ninety days after the final adjournment of the session at which it was passed, with exceptions being made to certain types of legislation including urgency measures. Prior to the adoption of the referendum system, the Constitution contained no provision precluding immediate operation of statutes, and the effective dates of the statutes were determined by the Legislature. 23 Cal.Jur. 621; see Pol.Code, § 323, as it read before its amendment in 1929. The obvious purpose of placing the ninety-day limitation in the Constitution was to give the people "an opportunity * * * to express their judgment as to the merits" of a statute by filing a referendum petition. McClure v. Nye, 22 Cal.App. 248, 251, 133 P. 1145, 1147; see 59 C.J. 1149; cf. Solomon v. Alexander, 161 Cal. 23, 27, 118 P. 217 (referendum provision in a city charter). Thus, in declaring that measures changing salaries are not to be construed as urgency measures, the people in substance reserved the right to an opportunity to pass upon such laws before the taking effect thereof.

[9] In the present case, however, this purpose has been completely fulfilled, and there remains no reason to delay the effective date of the 1945 act. The people have already passed upon it, since they specifically authorized it by adopting the 1944 amendment to section 5 of article XI of the Constitution. The 1945 act, with one unimportant exception relating to the date of termination of the period of suspension, strictly follows the authority granted by the 1944 amendment. It is clear that this amendment was adopted in view of the present war and contemplated action by the Legislature with respect thereto. It would be unreasonable to hold that the people, having directly authorized the statute, would wish to pass upon it again under the referendum provisions.

We conclude, therefore, that the 1945 act took effect immediately upon its approval by the Governor.

The peremptory writ is granted.

SHENK, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 639

SACRAMENTO COUNTY v. LAUSZUS et al.

Civ. 7134; Sac. 5698.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

1. Dedication 🔑31

Generally, a mere offer to dedicate land to public purposes does not become effective until the offer has been accepted.

2. Dedication 🔑42

A complete dedication is distinguished from a mere offer to dedicate, in that in the case of a complete dedication no acceptance is required, it being presumed from the benefits arising from the dedication.

3. Dedication 🔑31

An acceptance of an offer to dedicate land for street purposes need not be express, but may be implied.

4. Dedication 🔑44

Evidence authorized finding that the city of Sacramento had either expressly or impliedly accepted offer of dedication contained in deed purporting to make a completed conveyance of land in controversy to city without reservation, even if deed constituted a mere offer rather than a complete dedication.

5. Dedication 🔑35(2)

Where Sutter deed purported to dedicate land in controversy for street purposes, subsequent adoption by city of Sacramento of a city map showing the streets as they appeared on earlier map and including land in controversy as a street was an acceptance of the dedication of street made by such deed. St.1850, p. 70.

6. Dedication ⚷65

Where, under terms of Sutter deed dedicating land in controversy for street purposes, land was conveyed to city of Sacramento in fee and city, in accepting dedication, took it as a trustee for the "present and future owners" of lots and property in city, act of Legislature excluding street in controversy from city and placing it in county did not cause trust to fail for lack of a trustee, but merely changed trustee by substitution of county for city, and there was no reversion of street to abutting owners. St.1850, p. 70; St.1873–74, p. 191.

7. Dedication ⚷55

Sutter deed conveying certain lands to the city of Sacramento for street purposes under certain conditions was construed to mean that, until city should be incorporated and city authorities established specified street, land conveyed should be subject to exclusive use of owners of lots fronting on proposed streets and not to mean that streets and alleys conveyed were to be kept for public use only until city should be incorporated and city authorities established.

8. Dedication ⚷37

Where there has been a dedication of a street by deed, it is not necessary that there also be a dedication by use.

9. Dedication ⚷37

Where there has been a dedication of a street by deed, delay in use does not affect the dedication.

10. Dedication ⚷44

Evidence sustained finding of public use of street dedicated by deed.

11. Adverse possession ⚷8(2)

Land dedicated by deed for street purposes was not subject to the operation of the statute of limitations, so as to permit adjoining landowner to acquire such land by adverse possession. Code Civ.Proc. § 315, subds. 1, 2; §§ 318, 319, 343.

12. Adverse possession ⚷8(2)

The rule that the people are bound by the same rules as an individual in the application of statutes of limitations is subject to an exception in the case of land dedicated for street purposes. Code Civ. Proc. § 315, subds. 1, 2; §§ 318, 319, 343.

13. Municipal corporations ⚷652

Generally, laches of municipal officers cannot defeat the rights of the public in a street.

14. Dedication ⚷39

Where land in controversy was dedicated for street purposes by deed recorded in 1850 purporting to convey property to city of Sacramento, which accepted the dedication, and thereafter land was excluded from city limits in 1874 by statute redetermining city limits, and placing property in county, and a portion of street was thereafter continuously used by public, delay of county for over 60 years in asserting right to unused portion of property included within dedication did not estop county from seeking to obtain possession of property. St.1873–74, p. 191.

15. Estoppel ⚷54

An estoppel cannot exist where the knowledge of both parties is equal and nothing is done by one to mislead the other.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by the County of Sacramento against Herman Lauszus and others to recover possession of certain property allegedly belonging to plaintiff for highway purposes, and for a decree quieting title and enjoining defendants from asserting any adverse claim to the property, wherein defendants Herman Lauszus and Marie Lauszus, his wife, Elbert L. Kempley and Myrtle Kempley, his wife, W. T. Crow and Yvonne Crow, his wife, asserted demands for affirmative relief. Judgment for plaintiff, and named defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Fontaine Johnson, of Sacramento, for appellants.

John Quincy Brown, Dist. Atty., William A. Green, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Albert L. Wagner, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff's complaint in this action, in the first count thereof, alleges that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the exclusive possession and use for a public highway of certain property described as a portion of 12th Street on a map filed for record in the office of the county recorder on April 24, 1850; that defendants without the consent of plaintiff have entered into possession of said land and wrongfully withheld possession from plaintiff. The second count incorporates the foregoing allegations and recites that defendants claim some interest in the property adverse to plaintiff, which claims are without right and constitute a cloud on plaintiff's title. A third count alleges that defendants maintain structures upon the property thereby ousting and obstructing plaintiff and the public from use of it as a public highway. The prayer is for the recovery of possession, for a decree quieting title and enjoining defendants from asserting any adverse claims to the property.

Defendants Herman Lauszus et al. filed an answer asserting ownership of the east half of the street described in the complaint, invoking subdivisions 1 and 2 of section 315, and sections 318, 319 and 343, of the Code of Civil Procedure, as a bar to the action, alleging that plaintiff is estopped by a judgment in a prior action adverse to its contentions. They also asserted rights by adverse possession and estoppel of plaintiff by reason of laches.

After trial by the court sitting without a jury, findings of fact and conclusions of law were filed. The court found that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the land in controversy for a public highway, that defendants' claims were without right, that plaintiff was not estopped by laches or otherwise, and that its cause of action was not barred by the statutes of limitations or any of them. In so far as the appealing defendants are concerned, judgment was for the plaintiff, quieting its title and enjoining said defendants from maintaining any obstructions to the use of the property as a public highway.

This appeal has been taken by defendants Lauszus, Kempley and Crow and their respective wives, by whom it is contended that the findings of the court are without support in the evidence, and that the court erred in its application of the law in the respects hereinafter stated.

Plaintiff claims title to the property in controversy by virtue of a deed executed by John A. Sutter, Jr., on January 2, 1849. The pertinent portions of that instrument are as follows:

"I John A. Sutter Jr. * * * have this day conveyed and quite claimed and by these presents do convey and quite clame unto the present & futerer owners of Town lots and town property in Sacramento City * * * all my right title & Intrest in an to cirtain portions of said City discribed as follow and under the conditions follwing, That is to say all the streets & alleys in said City except so much of L and Twenty seventh Streets and of all alleys runs into or threw any part of Sutters Fort, said portions of said streets & alleys being reserved to myself said streets and alleys herby conveyed, to be kept for Public use under such conditions & regulations as the future authoritys of said Citty may deturmine & initel said City shall be incorperated & City authorityes established Frount Sreet shall be subject to the exclusive use of the owners of lots frunting on said frunt Street in such maner that the owners of each lot or part of a lot fronting on said street shall have the exclusive use of all the grunds lyinge immediatele opposite his lot or a part of a lot, and betwene such lot or part of lot & the river but all the cross streets such for instence as L, M, and others shall remain at all times open for public use and also the entire following squares in said City to wit. * * * The said several squares are herby conveyed unto the present & future propriators of town property in said City for the public use of the inhabitance of said City to be applyed to such public purposes as the future incorporated authoritys of said City from time to time declare and deturmin To have & to hold the aforesaid primesis umto the present and future owners of town property in said City their heirs an assigns forever upon this exspress condition that I reserve to myself my heirs & assigns all ferry priveledges that I now have or may herafter acquire on & upon aney or all of the aforesaid primises. * * *"

This deed, it is to be noted, makes no reference to any map. However, plaintiff introduced in evidence several very old maps all of which show the street in controversy to be a public street; one of those maps was adopted by the Common Council of the City of Sacramento at a meeting held on December 5, 1854, the minutes of that meeting reading:

"The special committee on the report of the City Surveyor with the official map of the City reported that a copy of the same be placed on file in the City Surveyor's Office, and that the Council order for the use of the City Offices ten copies providing that the cost of each shall not exceed the sum of $15.00, the payment of which to be made when completely finished, accepted and account audited for same. Report adopted."

On said map appears the following legend:

"Official Map of the City of Sacramento California compiled from actual surveys, by W. S. Watson Civil Engineer approved and declared to be the official map of the City by a resolution passed Dec. 4 by the Common Council 1854.

"[Signed] R. P. Johnson, Mayor Wm. H. Watson Percival Gofs. Samuel S. Cardish I. R. Vureyard Special Committee"

On the map is a scale, "400′ to one inch," and "All streets are 80 feet in width except M and Front Sts which are 100 feet Alleys, 20 feet in width."

Another of said maps was filed for record in 1850 in Book 1 of Maps, at page 8. From another, filed for record in 1896, it appears that the original survey was made in December, 1848, by Captain W. H. Warner, U. S. A., and a resurvey by Clement W. Coote, Civil Engineer, in December, 1849. On it appears: "Map of Sacramento City 1849." The maps are identical with respect to the area embraced, and the street in controversy appears in identical fashion on all of them.

Appellants contend that the Sutter deed did not effect a dedication of the property therein described; that it was, at most, merely an offer to dedicate which offer was never accepted; and that even if there was a dedication and an acceptance there was a subsequent abandonment when the Legislature of the State in 1874 (Stats. 1873–74, p. 191) fixed the boundaries of the city of Sacramento so as to exclude the property in controversy therefrom and providing that the area of which it is a part should thereafter constitute and be a portion of American Township in Sacramento County.

[1, 2] It may be conceded, as contended by appellants, that as a general principle of law a mere offer to dedicate land to public purposes does not become effective until same has been accepted. 9 Cal.Jur. 52, sec. 41; Demartini v. City & County of San Francisco, 107 Cal. 402, 409, 40 P. 496; County of Inyo v. Given, 183 Cal. 415, 419, 191 P. 688; Diamond Match Co. v. Savercool, 218 Cal. 665, 24 P.2d 783; People v. Rio Nido Co., Inc., 29 Cal.App.2d 486, 85 P.2d 461; City of Santa Clara v. Ivancovich, 47 Cal.App.2d 502, 118 P.2d 303. However, it is said in 9 Cal.Jur., p. 53, sec. 41, that "An important distinction is to be observed between a complete dedication and a mere offer to dedicate. In the case of a complete dedication no acceptance is required, it being presumed from the benefits arising from the dedication." Citing Archer v. Salinas City, 93 Cal. 43, 28 P. 839, 841, 16 L.R.A. 145. Also see, 26 C.J.S., Dedication, § 45; 18 C.J. § 106, p. 95, and cases there cited; 1 Elliott on Roads and Streets, 4th Ed., secs. 134, 135, pp. 160, 161. In the Archer case it was said that dedication "'results from the acts of the owner of the land, coupled with the intent with which he does those acts. It may be express and completed by a single act, as when the land is dedicated by deed; or it may be implied from a series of acts, as when the owner subdivides a tract of land into blocks and streets, and causes a map of such subdivision to be recorded, and sells the several subdivisions which front upon those streets."

The Sutter deed purports to make a completed conveyance of the streets and alleys, without reservations at least as to the street here in controversy, "to be kept for Public use under such conditions & regulations as the future athoritys of said Citty may deturmine." (Italics ours.)

[3, 4] But even if the deed constituted a mere offer, and acceptance of the dedication was required, an acceptance of an offer to dedicate need not be express, but may be implied; and if we were to assume that the Sutter deed was a mere offer to dedicate, there is no evidence that the offer was ever withdrawn; and the evidence before the trial court is sufficient to sustain its implied finding that as a fact the dedication was accepted by the city, if not actually then impliedly. "A technical formal offer and acceptance is not requisite to dedication of a public street." Hall v. Fairchild-Gilmore-Wilton Co., 66 Cal.App. 615, 626, 227 P. 649, 653. Such acceptance may be implied. 1 Elliott on Roads and Streets, 4th Ed. secs. 166, 167, pp. 192–194.

The Statutes of 1850, Ch. 20, p. 70 (enacted Feb. 27, 1850), fixed the original boundaries of the city as—

"All that tract of land lying within the limits and boundaries hereinafter mentioned, that is to say: Beginning at the junction of the American Fork with the Sacramento River; thence down said Sacramento River to Y Street, as designated on the map or plan of Sacramento City on file in the Recorder's office in said City; thence along said Y Street east to the point where said Y Street intersects Thirty-first Street, as designated on said map; thence along the said Thirty-first Street until the same intersects the American Fork; thence along the American Fork to the place of beginning, the said boundaries extending to the middle of said Sacramento River and American Fork, shall henceforth be known by the name of Sacramento City."

It is apparent from the foregoing that there was on file when this act was passed, a map of the city which the legislature recognized as such, that it included the area in controversy, and that the streets were named by letters up to Y and by numbers up to 31, which included the portion of 12th Street in controversy.

In the early case of Mayo v. Wood, 50 Cal. 171, 175, it was said:

"The instrument executed by John A. Sutter, Jr., on the 2d day of January, 1849, dedicated the land in controversy to public use, to be applied 'to such public purposes as the future incorporated authorities of said city (may) from time to time declare and determine.' It purported in terms to convey whatever title he had, to the present and future owners of town lots and town property in Sacramento city.' It recognized the fact that there were such 'present' owners, and that Sacramento was then known as a city, though not at that time formally incorporated as such. Aside from the question of dedication, the instrument was operative as a conveyance to vest the title in the then 'present' owners of the town lots and property. This was a sufficient designation of the grantees to uphold it as a conveyance, and thereafter Sutter, Jr., had no title to this property which could pass by his deed to Mesick."

In Gramer v. City of Sacramento, 2 Cal. 2d 432, at pages 435, 436, 41 P.2d 543, at page 544 it is said: "At the time the [Sutter] deed was executed the city of Sacramento was not incorporated, that legal formality not occurring until February 27, 1850. After its incorporation, however, the deed was accepted and the streets therein designated have been used as public thoroughfares down to the present time, except those which the evidence discloses have been abandoned." It was also held in that case that the deed intended no condition subsequent for the reason that Sutter, Jr., was engaged in a real estate undertaking—that of subdividing and selling the lots upon which he hoped that the future city would thrive and expand; that the deed contained no words of forfeiture or reverter, and that it would have been a simple thing to include language making provision therefor had it been intended. It also said, 2 Cal.2d at page 440, 41 P.2d at page 546:

"In the fifth place, the construction placed upon the instrument by the city authorities and by the property owners of Sacramento, and acquiesced in by the Sutters and their heirs from 1862 down to the time of the filing of the present action, is conclusive, at least when considered with the factors already mentioned, of the question of what interpretation must be placed upon the deed. For a period of sixty years all parties concerned had proceeded upon the theory that the grantor had completely divested himself of title. It is a familiar rule, unbroken in this state, that if the meaning of the language of an instrument is doubtful the court will look to the practical construction placed upon it by the parties. Mulford v. Le Franc, 26 Cal. 88–110; Kales v. Houghton, 190 Cal. 294–300, 212 P. 21, and cases cited."

[5] Also, as hereinbefore stated, the city council in December, 1854, adopted a city map which shows the streets as they appear on the earlier ones, and this may properly be construed as an acceptance of the dedication of streets made by the Sutter deed. Gross v. City of San Diego, 125 Cal.App. 238, 246, 247, 13 P.2d 820. No other conveyance by which the city could have acquired title to the land designated on said map as streets has been shown or indicated. Also it is obvious that when Sutter made his deed he was aware of the existence of a map and of the designation of streets by letters and numbers since said deed makes reference to many of them; and prior to his deed his father had executed deeds referring to streets and blocks. One, found in the record before us, was executed by Sutter to one Gillespie on November 3, 1849, which conveyed "everything between east side of 10th Street and West side of 25th Street, extending from North side of A street and the American Fork River."

We think there is ample in the record to sustain the decision of the trial court that the Sutter deed effected a dedication of the streets including the one in controversy, and that the dedication was accepted by the city.

As for appellants' contention that there was an abandonment of the dedication in so far as the property in controversy is concerned, this is premised primarily upon the act of the legislature of 1874, above mentioned, which eliminated from the corporate limits of the city of Sacramento the area in controversy and provided:

"All that territory lying between the east line of Thirty-first street, on the east, and the east line of Twenty-second street, on the west, and the American River on the north, and the north line of said 'A' street, on the south; and also all of that territory bounded on the north and west by the American River (as it existed on the twenty-sixth day of May, A. D. eighteen hundred and fifty-one), and on the south by the north line of 'B' street north, and on the east by the east line of Twenty-second street, heretofore embraced within the corporate limits of the City of Sacramento, shall hereafter constitute and be a portion of American Township, in Sacramento County."

Appellants state in their brief that when this act was passed no attempt was made by the city to reserve any right to public roads or other easements, nor was any attempt made to accept any dedication theretofore made by Sutter and incorporated in that portion of the city which was abandoned, and, therefore, any streets which may have been indicated on any early maps and were not in use reverted to the abutting owner, citing Elliott v. McIntosh, 41 Cal.App. 763, 183 P. 692.

[6] But in making the foregoing statement we think that appellants lost sight of the fact that what Sutter purported to convey and dedicate was not a mere right to use the land laid out as streets and alleys, to wit, an easement, but that he conveyed the title in fee; and that the city in accepting the dedication took it, not in its proprietary capacity as a private owner, but as a trustee for the "present and future owners of town lots and town property in Sacramento City" to whom and for whose benefit the conveyance was made; and that these property owners included not only those whose property continued to be within the limits of the city, but those whose property was excluded; that the dedication had already been accepted by the city, not piecemeal, but as a whole, and that there was no occasion for the county to accept dedication; and that when the street under consideration ceased to be in the city and became a part of the county, the trust did not fail for lack of a trustee, but there was merely a change of trustee for the public and not a surrender of the rights of the public.

See Board of Education of City and County of San Francisco v. Martin, 92 Cal. 209, 216, 28 P. 799. In 1 Elliott on Roads and Streets, 4th Ed., sec. 127, p. 147, the author says:

"A dedication, either statutory or common law, to a public corporation is not lost by changes in the form of the corporate government, nor by changes in its territorial boundaries. A dedication for the purposes of a public township road will not be lost to the public if a town or city is built up, and the road falls within its limit, nor will it be lost in cases where there is an extension of corporate limits so as to embrace county roads, nor where a village grows into a town or a town into a city. Towns, townships and cities are but trustees of the public, and, as in cases of ordinary trusts, the public trust is not defeated by a change of trustees."

See, also, San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways v. County of Alameda, 66 Cal.App. 77, 225 P. 304.

But even if title to the area covered by the streets had reverted to Sutter, there is no evidence that conveyances of lots or blocks were ever made by him conveying title to any portion of the streets, either in or out of the city, and there is uncontradicted testimony in the record that prior to 1921 the entire chain of title to the property subsequently acquired by appellants shows transfers made solely by lot and block, or by block, by block number, or by block with reference to the streets that bounded it. This indicates rather clearly that at least up until 1921 no one, during the forty-seven years between 1874 and 1921, ever claimed to have any title to the lands comprising the streets and alleys. Certainly there is no evidence that Sutter ever resumed, or claimed the right to resume, title to the streets, or attempted in subsequent conveyances to convey title to the middle of a street; and it was not until 1921 that any conveyance purported to give such title.

[7] At this point notice may be taken of the contention of appellants that by the language of the Sutter deed "the dedication was dependent upon the acts of the city authorities and neither the city authorities, nor the county authorities, ever did anything at all about the strip of land under litigation." In support of this argument appellants construe the language of the deed reading "said streets and alleys herby conveyed, to be kept for Public use under such conditions & regulations as the future authoritys of said Citty may deturmine & initel [until] said City shall be incorporated & City authorityes established Frount Sreet shall be subject to the exclusive use of the owners of lots frunting on said frunt Street," etc., as though a period had been placed after the word "established." But the deed is not so punctuated, and the language is equally subject to be construed as though a period were inserted after the word "deturmine." And we construe it to mean that until the city should be incorporated and city authorities established Front Street should be subject to the exclusive use of the owners of lots fronting on that street, and not to mean that the streets and alleys conveyed were to be kept for public use only until said city should be incorporated and city authorities established. Any other construction would be inconsistent with the prior language of the conveyance; and under the rule that the language of a grant is to be construed most strongly against the grantor who made and executed the instrument, it is not to be presumed that Sutter intended the dedication and conveyance to be so limited as to time. As was said in Wattson v. Eldridge, 207 Cal. 314, 320, 278 P. 236, 238, "a dedication must be understood and construed with reference to its primary object and purpose"; and since Sutter was engaged in a real estate enterprise it is not reasonable to assume that he intended that the streets and alleys conveyed should be kept for public use only until the city should be incorporated and city authorities established.

[8, 9] Appellants devote a portion of their brief to an argument that there has been no dedication of the street in controversy by use; but if we are correct in our conclusion that there was a dedication by deed, then it is immaterial whether or not the street in controversy was or was not used as such, so as to effect a dedication by user. And if appellants mean by their argument that failure to use the street as such is evidence of an abandonment, then the principle that delay in the use does not affect the dedication, must be applied. Archer v. Salinas City, supra, 93 P. at page 51, 28 P. 839, 16 L.R.A. 145; Davidow v. Griswold, 23 Cal.App. 188, 193, 137 P. 619.

[10] However, the trial court has found that there was use of the street as such, and we cannot say that there is an entire lack of evidence to sustain such a finding. Its finding is that "the west one-half of the street was used by the public as a public highway almost continuously for more than sixty years last past." Miss Amy Greenlaw, the common grantor, a witness for plaintiff, testified that she was born on the Greenlaw ranch the west boundary of which was 12th Street; that her memory went back sixty or sixty-five years and that she and her parents traveled over 12th Street and her father took her to school over it; that it was also used by others whom she named, who owned property in that vicinity; that she had used the road off and on all her life; that she owned the Greenlaw property until about two years ago. Silas Orr, who had lived thirty-five years in the vicinity of 12th Street, stated that he used said street for many years—twenty years at least—and that it had always been open while he lived there; that it was used by different families, and was in fact the only outlet they had at certain times of the year—during the stormy season; that it is the same now as it always was, and a fence that runs through there is supposed to be the center of 12th Street. Gilroy E. Cottle also testified to use of the street beginning about 1919 or 1920, by himself and others.

Appellants argue that though there may have been some use of a portion of 12th Street, there is no testimony that the half of it occupied by appellants' structures was so used, and they rely upon Tate v. City of Sacramento, 50 Cal. 242, wherein it was held that if a party is and has been for many years in the occupancy of a piece of land, and the authorities claim that it has been dedicated as a public street and that his buildings thereon are a public nuisance, it devolves upon them to show affirmatively that it has been thus dedicated. But there the Supreme Court merely affirmed the decision of the trial court on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to show that the street claimed by Tate had ever been dedicated as a public street. And reference to the record in the case shows that the area there in controversy was not embraced within the original boundaries of the city and was not included in the map made by Warner in 1848–1849; that it was covered with water and known as Sutter Lake, and was granted to the city as swamp and overflowed land in 1857 and was not embraced within the Sutter grant. The case is, therefore, not pertinent here.

[11] Regarding the application of the various statutes of limitation relied upon by appellants, and their defense of laches, as early as 1875 the Supreme Court held, in Hoadley v. City and County of San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265, 276, where certain land had been dedicated to the public, that "Land held for that purpose, whether held by the State or a municipality, in our opinion, is not subject to the operation of the Statute of Limitations." In People ex rel. Alvord v. Pope, 53 Cal. 437, 451, decided in 1879, the court said:

> "Assuming that the evidence proved such actual adverse occupation for ten years or more, it must be considered as the settled doctrine of this Court, since the decision in Hoadley v. San Francisco, 50 Cal. 265, that no one can acquire by adverse occupation, as against the public, the right to obstruct a street dedicated to public use, and thus prevent the use of it as a public highway."

The holding in Board of Education v. Martin, supra, is to the same effect; the court there stating, 92 Cal. at page 218, 28 P. at page 802:

> "There can be no adverse holding of such land which will deprive the public of the right thereto, or give title to the adverse claimant, or create a title by virtue of the statute of limitations. This rule is universal in its application to all property set apart or reserved for public use, and the public use for which it is appropriated is immaterial. * * * The public is not to lose its rights through the negligence of its agents, nor because it has not chosen to resist an encroachment by one of its own number, whose duty it was, as much as that of every other citizen, to protect the state in its rights. This question has been determined, and these principles have already been established in this state in the case of County of Yolo v. Barney, 79 Cal. 375, 21 P. 833 [12 Am.St.Rep. 152]."

In City and County of San Francisco v. Bradbury, 92 Cal. 414, 418, 28 P. 803, also decided in 1891, the court repeated the language used in Board of Education v. Martin, quoted above.

In People ex rel. State Board of Harbor Com'rs v. Kerber, 1908, 152 Cal. 731, 733, 734, 93 P. 878, 879, 125 Am.St.Rep. 93, it was said: "Property thus held by the state in trust for public use cannot be gained by adverse possession, and the statute of limitations does not apply to an action by the state or its agents to recover such property from one using it for private purposes and not consistent with the public use." Numerous cases are there cited.

In a more recent case, Patton v. City of Los Angeles, 1915, 169 Cal. 521, 147 P. 141, at page 143, at page 527, it was said that "adverse possession of land devoted to public use does not divest the right of the state, or other public body corporate in which the title is vested, to maintain such public use, nor in any manner affect the public right or the public use." The foregoing cases and numerous others were cited in support of the conclusion of the court.

In Humboldt County v. Van Duzer, 1920, 48 Cal.App. 640, 644, 645, 192 P. 192, 194, the court said that mere nonuser of an easement acquired by grant does not amount to an abandonment; and it added:

> "If mere nonuser shall be held to be an abandonment of a public highway or street, every encroachment or nuisance on the public highway would effect an abandonment to the extent of the encroachment. The negligence of the public authorities in not removing the encroachment or obstruction would then be a legal substitute for the formal action or proceeding of abandonment provided by law. In that case the possessor, by thus separating the public use from the fee, could, by a system of 'divide and destroy,' acquire title by adverse possession in face of the long line of well-established authority to the contrary."

Also see City of Visalia v. Jacob, 1884, 65 Cal. 434, 435, 436, 4 P. 433, 52 Am.Rep. 303; County of Yolo v. Barney, 1889, 79 Cal. 375, 378, 21 P. 833, 12 Am.St.Rep. 152; Daly City v. Holbrook, 1918, 39 Cal.App. 326, 329, 178 P. 725; Richert v. City of San Diego, 1930, 109 Cal.App. 548, 554, 293 P. 673; Henry Cowell Lime & Cement Co. v. State, 1941, 18 Cal.2d 169, 172, 114 P.2d 331.

[12] Appellant relies upon People v. Osgood, 104 Cal.App. 133, 285 P. 753, and County of Tehama v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 33 Cal.App.2d 465, 91 P.2d 936, as holding that the people are bound by the same rules as an individual in the application of statutes of limitation. But neither case is applicable here, since the rule of the cases hereinbefore cited must he held to be exceptions to that applied therein.

[13, 14] In support of its contention that respondent is barred by laches, appellants cite City of Los Angeles v. Cohn, 101 Cal. 373, 35 P. 1002; McGee v. City of Los Angeles, 6 Cal.2d 390, 57 P.2d 925; and Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court, 3 Cal.2d 309, 44 P.2d 547. While in the first of said cases the Supreme Court did affirm a judgment based upon an estoppel in pais, it is to be noted that in so doing it recognized the general rule that the laches of municipal officers cannot defeat the rights of the public in streets, and strictly limited its decision to the facts there appearing, which included evidence that the city, before the erection of structures upon the strip of land in controversy, had expressly agreed that it did not own the land, and that upon the faith of that agreement the buildings had been erected some twenty years prior to the commencement of the action. Similar exceptional circumstances appear in the other two cases relied upon. In none of them was mere delay or inactivity held to estop the governmental agency; and that is the sole ground for appellants' invocation of estoppel in this case. In fact, in one of the cases cited and relied upon by appellants, City of Sacramento v. Clunie, 120 Cal. 29, 52 P. 44, the court said that a delay of forty years in bringing an action of ejectment to recover lands claimed to have been dedicated as public streets, during which delay large sums of money were expended in permanent improvements by defendant and his grantors, did not estop the city from maintaining an action in ejectment, if the streets were, in fact, dedicated to public use; and Los Angeles v. Cohn, supra, was said not to be comparable in its facts.

[15] It is said in 2 Elliott on Roads and Streets, 4th Ed., p. 1697, sec. 1189, that "an estoppel cannot exist where the knowledge of both parties is equal and nothing is done by the one to mislead the other."

Also see Gross v. City of San Diego, supra, 125 Cal. at page 246, 13 P.2d 820, citing and quoting from Davidow v. Griswold, supra; Archer v. Salinas City, supra, 93 Cal. at page 51, 28 P. 839, 16 L.R.A. 145.

We find no error in the record, therefore the judgment is affirmed.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 592

KING et al. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY FAIR ASS'N et al.

Civ. 14731.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 28, 1945.

1. Evidence 🔑29

Court could take judicial notice that substantial sums of public moneys had been appropriated for the development of Los Angeles county fair. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875, subd. 3; St.1935, p. 1587, § 13.

2. Agriculture 🔑5

Right to vacate the dissolution of a county fair corporation and any rights dependent upon revivor of such corporation were barred by six-month statute of limitations, where more than a year had elapsed since association was dissolved before action to vacate dissolution was filed. Code Civ.Proc. § 341, subd. 3.

3. Agriculture 🔑5

Relief sought by minority stockholders of dissolved county fair corporation in action to set aside transfer of assets of such corporation to successor corporation and for an accounting was purely equitable and subject to defense of laches.

4. Pleading 🔑193(4)

The defense of laches may be raised by demurrer.

5. Equity 🔑84

The lapse of time or circumstances which will justify application of doctrine of laches is not fixed by any artificial rule, and each case must be determined by its own circumstances.

6. Corporations ⚷312(7)

Shareholders, unless they act promptly, will be barred by laches from questioning the validity of transfer of corporate assets.

7. Pleading ⚷37

Where circumstances that might excuse unreasonable delay in commencing action are not alleged, it will be presumed that they do not exist.

8. Contracts ⚷270(2)

Notice of desire to rescind a contract because of misrepresentation and fraud must be given promptly.

9. Agriculture ⚷5

Action by minority stockholders of dissolved county fair corporation to set aside transfer of assets to successor corporation was barred by laches, where action was commenced more than two years after the transfer without offering any excuse for delay and more than one year after dissolution of corporation so that it could not be revived and assets reconveyed to it, and where public had an interest in continued, unimpaired operation of either corporation. St.1935, p. 1587, § 13; Code Civ.Proc. § 341, subd. 3.

10. Pleading ⚷225(1)

Where complaint showed plaintiffs were not entitled to relief in any event, further opportunity to amend complaint was properly denied.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Tom C. King and others against Los Angeles County Fair Association, a corporation, and others, to vacate the dissolution of named defendant's predecessor corporation, to set aside as fraudulent the acts of individual defendants as officers of named defendant and predecessor corporation, and to require defendants to reconvey to predecessor corporation, or persons therein interested, all the assets of such corporation conveyed to named defendant. From a judgment dismissing the action following an order sustaining without leave to amend defendants' demurrer to the first-amended complaint, plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Oliver O. Clark and Robert A. Smith, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Allard, Whyte & Brownsberger and Joseph A. Allard, Jr., all of Pomona, and Pacht, Pelton, Warne, Ross & Bernhard, Isaac Pacht, and Clore Warne, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOX, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the plaintiffs from a judgment dismissing the action following an order sustaining, without leave to amend, defendants' demurrer to the first amended complaint.

It is alleged in the amended complaint that the Los Angeles County Fair (hereinafter referred to as the "predecessor corporation") and the defendant, Los Angeles County Fair Association (hereinafter referred to as the "successor corporation"), were domestic corporations; that the individual defendants were directors of both corporations and dominated and controlled the same; that each of the plaintiffs is the owner of shares of the predecessor corporation; that at the time plaintiffs acquired their shares in 1922, it was represented to them that the predecessor corporation was profit sharing and that plaintiffs bought their stock in reliance upon said representation; that in September, 1940, the individual defendants conceived a plan and subsequently consummated same, whereby the successor non-profit corporation was organized, the assets of the predecessor corporation transferred to it without consideration, the predecessor corporation dissolved, with the stockholders of the latter who consented to such plan receiving $10 per share out of the assets of the predecessor corporation; that the assets of the predecessor corporation prior to the transfer had a net value in excess of $500,000; that plaintiffs are now the sole owners of the shares of the predecessor corporation, and that such shares would be of a value substantially in excess of $100,000, if the transfer should be set aside, and otherwise would be without value.

A copy of the Articles of the predecessor corporation is attached to and made a part of the amended complaint. It is there stated that the purposes for which the Los Angeles County Fair "is formed are to advance the agricultural and mechanical and all other interest of every kind and nature of the County of Los Angeles, and vicinity, and for the competitive exhibition of farm products, live stock and trials of speed, mechanical products, and all other products of every kind and nature, and to promote the general interests of the community and for all other purposes for which such organizations are intended * * *" and "to carry on, promote, and conduct all business of said corporation without profit to the stockholders thereof." (Italics added.)

Plaintiffs ask the following relief: That the acts of the individual defendants be declared fraudulent and set aside; that the dissolution of the predecessor corporation be vacated; and that the defendants be required to convey to the predecessor corporation, or to the persons interested therein, all the assets it conveyed to the successor corporation.

It is not alleged in the amended complaint that the plan to have the assets of the predecessor corporation conveyed to the successor corporation was to bring about a profit to the individual defendants or to freeze out the plaintiffs. The price of $10 per share which the individual defendants and all other consenting stockholders of the predecessor corporation received for their stock was the par value thereof as fixed by the Articles of Incorporation. It is not alleged that these three plaintiffs did not have the same opportunity as the individual defendants and other stockholders to cash in their stock at the same price. Also, it is not alleged that the plaintiff did not have proper notice and full knowledge of all the steps in the transfer of the assets in question from one corporation to the other or that any of them made any protest or objection thereto.

It is not alleged that the successor corporation is not carrying out the non-profit public purposes for which it and the predecessor corporation, Los Angeles County Fair, were organized.

The number of shares in the predecessor corporation owned by the three plaintiffs is not stated in the amended complaint, but it is clear from their brief that theirs is a minority interest. (On oral argument it was stated the plaintiffs owned 20¾ shares out of a total of 1712 issued and outstanding.)

[1] Although it is not alleged in the amended complaint, it is a fact of which the trial court, as well as this court, can take judicial notice that substantial sums of public moneys have been appropriated for the development of the Los Angeles County Fair. Sec. 1875, subd. 3, Code Civ.Proc.; Loranger v. Nadeau, 1932, 215 Cal. 362, 365, 10 P.2d 63, 84 A.L.R. 1264; Livermore v. Beal, 1937, 18 Cal.App.2d 535, 539–542, 64 P.2d 987; Sec. 13 of the Horse Racing Act, St.1933, p. 2052, as amended in 1935, St. 1935, p. 1587.

Reduced to its simplest terms, the situation, as disclosed by the amended complaint, is that these three plaintiffs are seeking to set aside a transfer of assets from one non-profit, public use corporation, to another non-profit, public use corporation, where no profit has been realized by anyone and where no concealment or misrepresentation has been practiced by those responsible for the transfer and no unequal advantage taken of the plaintiffs who, however, seek a profit for themselves.

The assets of the predecessor corporation were transferred to the successor corporation on February 21, 1941. The former corporation was dissolved on January 15, 1942. The plaintiffs filed this action on March 22, 1943—more than two years after the transfer of the assets and more than one year after the dissolution of the predecessor corporation.

[2] By their demurrer the defendants, among other things, raise the statute of limitations and laches. They particularly rely on section 341, subdivision 3, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that an action must be brought within six months "To set aside or invalidate any action taken or performed by a majority of the trustees of any corporation heretofore or hereafter dissolved by operation of law, including the revivor of any such corporation." (Italics added.) Since more than a year elapsed between the dissolution of the predecessor corporation and the filing of this action, it is clear that the right to vacate the dissolution of said corporation, which is part of the relief plaintiffs request, is barred by the italicized portion of the above code section. This, of course, includes any rights and relief dependent upon the revivor of said corporation.

[3-5] The plaintiffs also seek to have the transfer of assets to the successor corporation declared void and the same vacated and set aside. In addition they seek an accounting. Such relief is purely equitable and consequently subject to the defense of laches which can be raised by demurrer. Livermore v. Beal, supra, 18 Cal.App. at page 548, 64 P.2d 987; Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 1904, 147 Cal. 245, 250, 81 P. 516; Superior California Fruit Land Co. v. Grossman, 1916, 32 Cal.App. 357, 361,

162 P. 1046; Arnold v. Universal Oil Land Co., 1941, 45 Cal.App.2d 522, 530, 114 P.2d 408; Clanton v. Clanton, 1942, 52 Cal.App. 2d 550, 555, 126 P.2d 639. "There is no artificial rule as to the lapse of time or the circumstances which will justify the application of the doctrine of laches, and each case as it arises must necessarily be determined by its own circumstances." Marsh v. Lott, 1909, 156 Cal. 643, 647, 105 P. 968, 969.

[6] In Ballentine on California Corporation Laws (1938 Ed.), 186, sec. 201, it is said that: "Shareholders must act promptly or they will be barred by laches from questioning the validity of a sale and transfer of assets."

[7] These plaintiffs, however, did not file their complaint until two years and one month after the transfer of the assets to the successor corporation and not until one year and two months after the dissolution of the predecessor corporation. Also, nearly a year elapsed between the transfer of the assets and the dissolution. No facts or circumstances are alleged to excuse this delay and "if circumstances that might excuse the delay are not alleged, it will be presumed that they do not exist." Kleinclaus v. Dutard, supra, 147 Cal. at page 250, 81 P. at page 518.

[8, 9] The obligation on the part of these plaintiffs to act promptly if they desired equitable relief against the transfer of the assets is analogous to the duty of one who desires to rescind a contract because of misrepresentation and fraud to give notice thereof promptly. There are many cases in which delays for a shorter period than a year have been held fatal to the right to rescind. See: Maginess v. Western Securities Corporation, 1918, 38 Cal.App. 56, 175 P. 277—6 months; Bailey v. Fox, 1889, 78 Cal. 389, 20 P. 868—4 months; Gamble v. Tripp, 1893, 99 Cal. 223, 33 P. 851—4½ months; Marten v. Paul O. Burns Wine Co., 1893, 99 Cal. 355, 33 P. 1107—3 months; J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Copren Bros., 1919, 45 Cal. App. 159, 187 P. 772—4 months; Stowe v. Kaetzel, 1940, 38 Cal.App.2d 356, 101 P.2d 719—11 months; Sanders v. Magill, 1937, 9 Cal.2d 145, 70 P.2d 159—4 months; Campbell v. Title Guarantee, etc., Co., 1932, 121 Cal.App. 374, 9 P.2d 264—9 months. Under the circumstances of this case it clearly appears that the plaintiffs waited an unreasonable length of time before seeking equitable relief.

It cannot be said that this unreasonable delay has not operated to the disadvantage of interested parties. In this connection it must be borne in mind that there were stockholders in the predecessor corporation other than the three plaintiffs and the individual defendants. Also, the general public has an interest in the continued and unimpaired operation of either the successor or predecessor corporations. They have an investment in the Los Angeles County Fair. It has become an institution of great educational value to those interested in agriculture, horticulture, citrus and stock raising, as well as to those interested in the mechanical arts and sciences. Because of the lapse of more than six months after the dissolution of the predecessor corporation before the bringing of this action the court could not properly give judgment for the revival of that corporation. Hence, if the plaintiffs should succeed in setting aside the transfer of assets to the successor corporation they cannot be returned to its predecessor because it is legally dissolved. Thus the public purposes of both the successor and predecessor corporations would be thwarted and the public would be injured. The plaintiffs, however, have an alternative to that portion of their prayer which requests reconveyance of the assets to the predecessor corporation. That alternative is that the reconveyance be "to the persons interested therein," i. e. in the predecessor corporation. They, however, claim to be the only remaining stockholders of that corporation. That means, then, that if the predecessor corporation cannot be revived the assets conveyed to the successor corporation should be transferred to these three plaintiffs, who would apparently claim them as their own. The unfair advantage which they would thus obtain over all the other stockholders is obvious. In this connection it is to be noted that this is not a representative suit brought on behalf of the plaintiffs and all other stockholders. For the foregoing reasons the demurrer was properly sustained.

The views herein make it unnecessary to consider other grounds urged by the respondents for affirmance of the judgment.

[10] No abuse of discretion is shown in denying the plaintiffs further opportunity to amend their complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 586

LUSHER v. SILVER et ux.

Civ. 14703.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 27, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 19, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Partnership ⚷17, 47

The fact of partnership depends upon the intention of the parties and, to determine that intent, not only the words of the agreement itself, but the actions and conduct of the parties, may be considered.

2. Partnership ⚷53

Evidence establishing that plaintiff was to share in profits of real estate transactions conducted by plaintiff with defendant's money was prima facie evidence that plaintiff was a partner. Civ. Code, § 2401, subd. 4.

3. Partnership ⚷53

Evidence supported finding that partnership existed between plaintiff broker and defendant whereby plaintiff was to receive half the profits of real estate transactions conducted by plaintiff with defendant's money and that it was not contemplated that plaintiff should split commissions so as to invalidate agreement.

4. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)

District Court of Appeal is bound by finding of trial court on conflicting evidence.

5. New trial ⚷82

Whether new trial should be granted on grounds of accident and surprise is a matter within sound discretion of trial court.

6. New trial ⚷82

In suit to establish existence of partnership and for an accounting of profits, trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying defendant's motion for a new trial on ground of accident and surprise.

7. Partnership ⚷336(3)

Evidence supported finding of profit in the purchase and sale of properties, so as to entitle plaintiff partner to an accounting thereof.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by Herman J. Lusher against Jack T. Silver and wife to establish existence of a partnership and for an accounting. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Phillip W. Silver, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry S. Cohen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DRAPEAU, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff and defendant Jack T. Silver became acquainted in 1942 (defendant Lube Silver is the wife of defendant, Jack T. Silver, and appears in the case because title to certain properties and assets of the partnership hereafter discussed were carried in her name. Reference to defendant hereafter will be to defendant Jack T. Silver.) Plaintiff was a real estate broker, defendant was not, but the defendant had money which he desired to invest in real estate. Plaintiff testified that in 1943 defendant suggested that plaintiff and defendant buy real estate, plaintiff to furnish his knowledge of realty values, and defendant to furnish the money; that defendant said he had $50,000 and could lay his hands on another $100,000; that defendant proposed they should go together and split the profits fifty-fifty; that plaintiff agreed, and suggested a written memorandum should be drawn up, but defendant replied that it was not necessary, his word was as good as his bond.

Then plaintiff testified to the purchase of certain properties, to the manner of inspection of them by plaintiff and defendant; that advertisements for the sale of this real estate were placed in newspapers, and that the expense of advertising was paid equally by the parties.

In behalf of plaintiff, another witness testified to hearing conversations between the plaintiff and defendant relative to purchase and sale of property; another witness testified that defendant told her he was in the real estate business with plaintiff; another testified that the defendant introduced the plaintiff as his partner; another that the defendant told him that the plaintiff was his partner; others that the parties were together inspecting properties with a view to purchasing the same.

The trial court found that there was an oral agreement constituting a partnership between the parties for the purchase and sale of real estate, profits to be divided equally, took an accounting and found a balance due from defendant to plaintiff.

On appeal defendant contends that the language testified to by plaintiff "why not go together and buy ourselves properties and split the profits on them" is insufficient to establish a partnership as to the properties which the court found they bought and sold as partners.

[1] In the last analysis the fact of partnership depends upon the intention of the parties. To determine this intent not only the words of the agreement itself, but the actions and conduct of the parties may be considered. All the evidence should be taken into account to support the finding. Associated Piping & Engineering Co. v. Jones, 17 Cal.App.2d 107, 61 P.2d 536.

Section 2401 of our Civil Code sets forth tests to determine the existence of a partnership. One important test is to be found in Subdivision 4 of the section, which provides that the receipt by a person of a share of the profits of a business is prima facie evidence that he is a partner. Also see Swanson v. Siem, 124 Cal.App. 519, 12 P.2d 1053; Krenz, etc., Co. v. England, 109 Cal.App. 747, 293 P. 689; Coward v. Clanton, 122 Cal. 451, 55 P. 147; Black v. Brundige, 125 Cal.App. 641, 13 P.2d 999; Spier v. Lang, 4 Cal. 2d 711, 53 P.2d 138; 1 Cal.L.Rev. 482.

[2, 3] In this case plaintiff received no part of the profit but he testified that it was agreed that he should. The defendant testified to the contrary. For the purposes of this appeal we must deem plaintiff's testimony in this respect, together with the other testimony referred to, sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that there was a partnership. Kling v. Crown Finance Corporation, 63 Cal.App. 2d 33, 146 P.2d 54.

[4] Next defendant contends that the partnership agreement, if any, contemplated splitting commissions of plaintiff as a realty broker, which would be illegal and void. Defendant testified that this was the agreement; plaintiff testified it was not. Again, in conformity with the familiar rule binding on courts of appeal in such a situation, this court is bound by the finding of the trial court.

[5, 6] Also the defendant contends that his motion for a new trial should have been granted on the grounds of accident and surprise. This is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the trial court, and a review of the record discloses no abuse thereof.

[7] Finally defendant contends that the trial court's finding of profit in the purchase and sale of one of the properties purchased is not supported by the evidence. However, again this matter was testified to by the plaintiff, and his testimony is sufficient to support the finding.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 654

CAFE APOLLO CO. v. ANSELM.

Civ. 14872.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 31, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 29, 1945.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1097(1)

Once a question of law has been determined and is sought to be relitigated upon a second appeal to same appellate court, the first and original determination thereof is the "law of the case" and no re-examination is authorized.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Law of the Case".

2. Appeal and error ⇨1097(1)

Where sublease had been interpreted on prior appeal, in unlawful detainer action, and evidence adduced at the respective trials was not substantially different and issues remained the same, consideration of questions raised on subsequent appeal was concluded by decision on former appeal under doctrine of the "law of the case".

3. Landlord and tenant ⇨291(13)

Evidence justified finding for defendant in unlawful detainer action on ground that defendant upon expiration of her sublease, which terminated contemporaneously with plaintiff's main lease, was given right to renewal of sublease for a term concurrent with that of new lease to be obtained by plaintiff and that defendant exercised her right properly and that main lease, which had been renewed, had not expired and that it was not shown that sublease was at any time a month to month tenancy.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold B. Jeffery, Judge.

Action by Cafe Apollo Company, a corporation, against Agnes Marie Anselm for unlawful detainer. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Earl Malmrose and O. H. Myrick, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Guy B. Graham, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

This cause is before us for the second time. On a prior appeal, Cafe Apollo Co. v. Anselm, 47 Cal.App.2d 151, 117 P.2d 691, 693, this court reversed a judgment in favor of plaintiff. Reference is made to the case just cited for a statement of the factual background which gave rise to this litigation. The second trial resulted in judgment for the defendant, from which plaintiff now prosecutes this appeal. Both trials were had upon the same pleadings and the facts and circumstances shown in evidence in connection with the relationship of the parties and their written as well as oral agreements with each other are substantially the same, save and except that a portion of the evidence was received at the first trial by stipulation as to what testimony would be given by the defendant were she present in court, whereas at the second trial the witness was personally present and testified substantially to the same facts covered by the aforesaid stipulation at the former trial.

The sole issue involved in this case we think may be fairly stated as whether, upon the expiration of the sublease held by defendant and which terminated contemporaneously with the main lease held by plaintiff, the defendant was given the right to a renewal of her sublease for a term concurrent with that of a "new" lease being negotiated and which was finally obtained by plaintiff, provided the option for such renewal was accepted by plaintiff when the original sublease by its terms expired.

On the first trial, the court sustained plaintiff's objections to the admission of any evidence of the conversations referred to in the stipulation, and which are substantially the same as the conversations testified to by defendant at the second trial as having taken place between herself and Joseph Tadini, secretary of plaintiff corporation, with respect to their mutual understanding of certain provisions of the sublease, and rendered judgment for plaintiff. On the first appeal, this court decided that certain provisions therein quoted from the sublease were ambiguous and that it was therefore "proper to resort to extrinsic evidence for the purpose of explaining what was actually intended by the parties at the time when the sublease was executed." Pursuant to the holding of this court on the former appeal, the trial court upon the second trial admitted such conversations into evidence and we have no hesitancy in saying that, if the defendant's testimony as to what transpired at said conversations was believed by the court, as evidently it was, then the court was justified in finding, as it did, "that it is true that the defendant did not occupy the premises on a month to month tenancy at any time * * *"; and "that it is true that defendant took possession of said premises under a written lease executed by plaintiff and defendant and remained in possession of said premises under and by virtue of the terms of said lease until defendant was unlawfully ejected by the plaintiff."

[1-3] All of the issues raised upon this appeal were presented on the former appeal and consequently determination by the appellate tribunal thereon became the law of the case on the second trial and remains the law of the case upon the second appeal. Steelduct Co. v. Henger-Seltzer Co., 26 Cal.2d 634, 160 P.2d 804. It is thoroughly established as the law of this state that once a question of law has been determined and is sought to be relitigated upon a second appeal to the same appellate court, the first and original determination thereof is the law of the case and no re-examination is authorized. The contract in the instant case having been once interpreted by decision on appeal, that interpretation is the law of the case, and, since the evidence adduced at the respective trials was not substantially different and the issues remained the same, consideration of the questions raised was concluded by our decision on the former appeal. Gore v. Bingaman, 20 Cal.

2d 118, 121, 124 P.2d 17; McCarty v. Wilson, 57 Cal.App. 703, 704, 207 P. 924; Carpenter v. Pacific States Savings & Loan Co., 19 Cal.App.2d 263, 64 P.2d 1102, 66 P. 2d 656.

We have carefully examined the record in this case and the issues presented in the light of the decision on the former appeal and are convinced that not only because of the law of the case but because of the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and the findings to support the judgment, the latter cannot be disturbed.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 628

PEOPLE v. SHIELDS.

Cr. 3886.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

Hearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Kidnapping 🔑5

Evidence that child whom defendant was charged with kidnapping was only a few days over three years old, and that child called for mother as she was being carried away by defendant, sufficiently established element of force, so as to authorize conviction of kidnapping.

2. Criminal law 🔑878(4)

A charge of burglary based on ground that defendant entered building with intent to commit rape and to commit offense of lewd conduct with child would not fail because jury found defendant not guilty of rape. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 460.

3. Infants 🔑20

Proof that defendant's acts were with intent to arouse his own passion would be sufficient to support conviction of offense of lewd conduct with child without showing that lust, passions, or sexual desires of alleged victim were affected. Pen.Code, § 288.

4. Burglary 🔑41(1)

Evidence supported conviction of burglary based on defendant's entering apartment building with intent to commit offense of lewd conduct with child, notwithstanding that it was shown that the offense with child was committed on roof of the building, where jury could have found that defendant had intent to commit the offense when he entered the building. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 460.

5. Infants 🔑20

Evidence supported conviction of lewd conduct with three-year-old child. Pen. Code, § 288.

6. Criminal law 🔑346

In prosecution for kidnapping, burglary, and lewd conduct with three-year-old child, testimony of mother of alleged victim and chemist which tended to show that child had been on roof of apartment building where attack allegedly occurred had probative value and was properly admitted. Pen.Code, §§ 288, 460.

7. Criminal law 🔑1170½(5½)

Refusal to strike trial court's own question as to whether defendant had received an honorable discharge from navy and answer given did not constitute prejudicial error, where defendant brought question upon himself by volunteering statement on cross-examination that he had been shell shocked and discharged out of the navy.

8. Criminal law 🔑339, 741(2)

Testimony concerning defendant's visit to hospital in which alleged victim was confined and occurrences when defendant was brought in her room was admissible for purpose of identification, and weight of such testimony was for jury.

Appeal from Superior Court of Los Angeles County; Edward R. Brand, Judge.

Kenneth J. Shields was convicted of kidnapping, burglary, and violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Gladys Towles Root, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Everett W. Mattoon, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DESMOND, Presiding Justice.

The defendant was charged with the commission of four felonies: Kidnapping, burglary, violation of section 288 of the Penal Code, and rape. A jury found him not guilty of rape but guilty of the three other felonies. He appeals from all the judgments of conviction on the ground that they are contrary to the evidence and also upon claimed errors of law.

The People presented evidence tending to prove that on February 25, 1944, between the hours of twelve noon and one p. m., the defendant called at the Bellevue Apartments in Los Angeles, picked up and carried a child named Susan, a few days over three years of age, to the roof of the building and committed upon her the lewd act denounced by section 288. Several women residing in the Bellevue testified that they saw the defendant there at the time mentioned. According to a Mrs. Johnson, living on the first floor, she saw him between 12 and 12:30 p. m. as he came up Boylston Street, entered the house by himself and went upstairs. As he passed the corner of a nearby store where Susan was playing in the dirt she had seen him pat the little girl on the head. He came downstairs about eight or ten minutes later and she saw him leave the house. About ten or fifteen minutes after that she noticed defendant again as he came around the corner of the house, and this time he had Susie with him. She stated that she saw him going upstairs carrying the little girl on his hip with her legs around his waist and her left arm around his neck; that at the time Susan was calling "Mama" in a whining or whimpering way; that defendant was saying something to the child about a tricycle or "trike"; that she heard his footsteps go up the stairs to the second floor; that about fifteen minutes later he came running down the stairs, "ran out on the porch, stopped for a moment, brushed his clothes off, ran his hand through his hair, jumped off the bottom stairs and ran north on Boylston." Mrs. Johnson further testified that about two minutes after she saw defendant running down the stairs, following his trip upward with Susie, she heard the little girl screaming, and, going out, found her on the second floor holding up her panties. A Mrs. Bass, landlady of the Bellevue, was in the room with her daughter, Mrs. Johnson, and testified that she saw the defendant "galloping" north on Boylston and noticed too that he was running his hands through his hair; that a few minutes later she saw Susie crying and holding her clothes up and that they were all soiled.

A Mrs. Mattingly testified that the defendant had occupied the apartment next to her's in the Bellevue; that she knew him by sight, and that as she was leaving the apartment house at about 12:15 p. m. on February 25th she met him coming toward her with Susan in his arms and spoke to him, saying, "How do you do," in answer to his greeting in the same words. Her testimony was corroborated by her seven-year-old daughter, who stated that she saw the defendant going upstairs with Susie lying in his arms. A Mrs. Baker, living on the second floor of the Bellevue, testified that between twelve and one o'clock of February 25th she saw defendant as he came down the third-floor stairs around the landing, and noticed that he patted her little boy on the head. She then entered her apartment and listened to a radio program. She heard no screams.

Susan's mother testified that on February 25th the little girl and her six-year-old brother had their lunch at about twelve o'clock and then went out to play; that she next saw Susan when she came into the house crying at about 12:45 p. m.; that she picked her up and noticed she had blood in her panties; that she washed the child and examined her private parts and saw that she had been torn in the lower part of her vagina, and that the wound was still bleeding; that police officers were called and she and Susan went with them at about 2 p. m. to the Georgia Street receiving hospital and then immediately afterward to the College Hospital at Glendale. A doctor at each institution examined the child and found the hymen freshly ruptured and also a fresh laceration about one and one-half inches long in the posterior part of the vagina.

Ray Pinker, a chemist attached to the Los Angeles police department, testified that on the afternoon of February 25th he went to the roof of the Bellevue Apartments and determined that defendant had walked there recently, by comparing with defendant's shoes rubber-heel imprints which he found on the tar-like surface. He examined the clothing of Susan but found no seminal stains, nor did he find any upon the clothing which defendant said he wore on February 25th and which police officers took from him when they arrested him in mid-afternoon of that day. On that same day Mr. Pinker failed to find any blood upon the private parts of defendant or upon his clothing except a spot on the belt band of his shorts at the back. However, he did find scratch wounds on his neck which were still bleeding, and found blood in scrapings which he took from underneath his fingernails; also a spot of blood upon his left thumbnail and right ring finger. A smear had been taken at the receiving hospital from the area where Susan was injured and placed upon a glass slide, which when examined by Mr. Pinker showed no spermatozoa. Defendant told the police chemist that he had had a fight earlier in the day at the place of his employment, claiming the scratches on his neck resulted from it.

Defendant testified that in the fall of 1943 he had lived for a month and a half in an apartment at the Bellevue; that several times in February of 1944 he had called there, the last occasion on February 25th; that two or three days before that he inquired of Mrs. Bass for an apartment, having in mind a penthouse on the roof; that on that day he went on the roof, "looked in the penthouse window; I had heard the people in the penthouse apartment had moved out, and I knew the people, they were friends of mine; and I started to look in the window—I thought I had better not, I didn't have any business looking in anybody's apartment; and so I walked away from the penthouse, and I stood there for several minutes thinking whether it would be advisable for me to knock on the door and get Mrs. Mack to the door. Then I thought I had better not do that, she was married and her husband was gone, and it might cause talk; and so I walked around like the heelprints indicate. * * *" According to defendant, he finished his work at a restaurant where he was employed at about 6:30 a. m. of February 25th and spent the rest of the morning until 11:45 drinking with several people there; that he had a fight with a dishwasher shortly after he stopped working. "He tried to choke me. He got me down on the floor of the barroom where he was standing; he was standing at the bar as I came through the cafe. He got me down on the floor and choked me, and as I tried to get his hands off my neck I scratched my own neck doing it."

Defendant further testified that at Mr. Pinker's office, "I showed him the handkerchief with the blood on it and asked him if he wanted that for evidence. He turned it down. The blood was mixed with mucous. He could see I had a bloody nose that morning from a fight." He stated that he left the restaurant where he had helped his companions consume three pints of whiskey about 11:40 a. m., taking with him a bottle containing what was left of the liquor, and went first to his home, six blocks from the Bellevue Apartments, and then to the Bellevue, where he knocked on the door of an acquaintance living on the third floor and receiving no answer left and did not go back at any time. He testified that he did not take the child in his arms going into the apartment nor did he pick up Susie at that time; that the last time he was in the Bellevue was when he passed Mrs. Baker in the hall. He then described his arrest at his home by two police officers at about 3:30 p. m. of February 25th, saying that he had been asleep and was in bed wearing a T shirt; that he had not taken a bath when he returned that morning or noon and that his landlady, a Mrs. Packard, told the officers so. In this he contradicted the officer who had testified on cross-examination that defendant's landlady had said "he came home and took a bath." Defendant specifically denied having taken Susie on the roof February 25th or that he touched her with any instrument or portion of his body, or that he carried her from one portion of the County of Los Angeles to another portion against her will. Under cross-examination he stated that the dishwasher with whom he had a fight was named "Tex," and that present at the time were the bartender, Mr. Starr, "a fellow called Broadway" and a barmaid. He denied having seen Mrs. Mattingly or her daughter on February 25th. He denied that he told Officer Tetrick at the time of his arrest that he had been in bed all the morning of the 25th. The testimony of the officer on that subject had been given as follows:

"A. He had no clothes on but the bedclothes over him; he was naked.

"Q. What did you do after you saw the defendant in bed naked? A. We made him get up and asked him where he had been that day.

"Q. What did he tell you? A. He said he had been out to get work in the morning and came home and went to bed and was in bed all day.

"Q. He said he had been in bed all morning? A. Yes, the first he told us.

"Q. Then after he told you he had been in bed all morning what did he do? A. We asked if he had not used to live on Boylston and he said that he had. We asked him if he had not been up there that morning and he said yes, he had."

This same officer testified that he and another policeman went with Susan's mother and the defendant to the College Hospital; that the mother entered the room where the child was in bed and shortly thereafter the defendant went into that room, being assisted in doing so by the officers; that the little girl looked at the defendant and started crying and seemed very upset; that defendant had told him that he had not harmed the child in any way and that he was not guilty of any offense toward her. Susan's mother testified that the trip to the hospital was made probably on February 27th; that when she entered Susie's room the child was happy to see her and was singing, but that when defendant entered the room with the officer "she seemed to cower down. She was very much afraid. She looked at him and then she hid her head and started to cry"; that the defendant said nothing and did not answer when the officer asked him if he knew the little girl.

Defendant's version of what transpired at the hospital was as follows: "The doctor went in and pretty soon the other officer came out and said, 'You can bring the prisoner in now.' And so they brought me to the edge of the door, and I heard, while he was taking the handcuffs off—Mr. Tetrick was taking the handcuffs off of me—I heard Mrs. Miller inside say, 'They are going to bring in the man who hurt you and we want you to tell us if it is him'; and so he asked me right then and there, just about that time, Mr. Tetrick asked me, 'You are sure you have got nerve enough to go through with this, you dirty rat, son-of-a-bitch?' I said, 'Let's go.' He made me mad, and I said, 'Let's go'; and I started walking to the room. He let me walk in the room—he did not shove me into the room, I walked into it; and as I started to face the girl, in the middle of the room, he shoved me up against the wall. He said, 'Is this the man that hurt you?' and the little girl looked at me just blank, she didn't know what to think.

"Q. Don't tell what she thought. Then what happened? A. And, so, he let me stand there for about a half a minute. The child was looking at me all the time and she didn't know me; and, then, he grabbed me, and he says, 'All right, come on; get out of here.' As I was walking out I heard the mother say, 'Susie'—I looked around at that time; and she said, 'Susie, Susie, is not this the man who hurt you?' She was hysterical, and the child started to cry then; after I was already out of the room I heard her start to cry.

"Q. Now at that time did anybody say anything to you at all in the room? A. I don't know; I don't remember. To me?

"Q. Yes. A. No."

While defendant was being cross-examined by the District Attorney the following testimony was given:

"Q. Mr. Shields, directing your attention again to the time when you talked to Dr. Crahan on the 31st of July, 1944, in the county jail, you and he being present, did you not make a statement to the effect that you tried to think of whether the alleged act could have been done by you in such a state of intoxication that you did not remember doing it, but you did not believe it could have been? A. No, I did not say exactly that. He asked me here, how was it? He asked me if I had ever thought it could be me.

"Q. What was that? A. He asked me if I ever thought it could be me. I told him no. However, it had been suggested to me that being shell-shocked and discharged out of the Navy—that it had been suggested by Mr. Pinker, over in the Crime Laboratory, that I could have had a lapse of memory.

"Q. You told him it might have been done by you while you had a lapse of memory? A. No, I did not. * * *

"The Court: You were not discharged from the Navy because of shellshock, were you? A. Well, that was the main reason in back of it.

"Q. But that was not the reason you were discharged? A. No, not exactly.

"Q. Did you receive an honorable discharge from the Navy? A. No, I did not."

The county jail physician, Dr. Crahan, testified in rebuttal that on July 31, 1944, he had had a conversation with the accused substantially as quoted in the District Attorney's question. Susan's mother, also in rebuttal, denied that she had told her little girl at the College Hospital that "they are going to bring in the man that hurt you," and stated that she did not hear either one of the officers say to Susan, while indicating the defendant, "This is the man that hurt you." She further stated that Susie began to cry before the defendant left the room. Other witnesses, produced in rebuttal, contradicted various items of testimony given by defendant; e. g., whereas he testified that he went upon the roof two or three days before February 25th, Mr. Pinker stated that when he examined him on this subject on Saturday, February 26th, the day after Susan was hurt, defendant told him that prior to the 25th he was last on the roof on the prior week-end; "He thought it had been either the previous Friday or Saturday."

[1] The foregoing recital has been deemed necessary for a determination of appellant's contention that the verdict or verdicts of guilty rendered by the jury were contrary to the evidence. He argues that the record fails to indicate that he was guilty of kidnapping, since it was not shown that the element of force commented upon by the court in People v. Guerrero, 1943, 22 Cal.2d 183, 137 P.2d 21, was present in the taking of the little girl upstairs in the Bellevue Apartments. He cites Mrs. Mattingly's testimony that when she saw Susie in his arms the little girl was not crying. But Mrs. Mattingly saw them together as defendant was about to enter the building and a few seconds later Mrs. Johnson saw him ascending the stairs carrying Susie with him, at which time she was crying "Mama" in a whining or whimpering way. The jury was justified, considering the fact that the child was only a few days over three years old, in concluding that she was being taken by force and against her will. She could not by physical means resist effectively the defendant's taking her; her only recourse was to call to her mother, her natural protector.

[2, 3] Appellant's contention that the jury went contrary to the evidence when they found him guilty of first degree burglary rests upon various grounds. In considering them we must refer to the Penal Code. Section 459 provides that: "Every person who enters any house, room, apartment, tenement, shop, warehouse, store, mill, barn, stable, outhouse or other building, tent, vessel, railroad car, mine, or any underground portion thereof, with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary." Count II of the information, in charging this defendant, alleged that he entered the building occupied by Mrs. Bass with the intent then and there and therein unlawfully and feloniously to commit rape and violate section 288 of the Penal Code, felonies. Apparently the argument in appellant's behalf is that since the statute characterizes as criminal an intent, on the part of the person entering, to commit in the place entered "any felony," the charge of burglary against him must fail for the reason, first, that it was alleged in the information that he intended to commit not a single felony but two, and, second, the jury found him not guilty of rape. We do not know of any process of reasoning that gives validity to such an argument. The same is true of the idea advanced that the facts of the case did not support the finding of the jury because there was no "evidence to show the requisite intent in appellant * * *; the alleged victim not having testified there is no showing that her lusts, passions or sexual desires were affected one way or another." The intent requisite to sustain a conviction under section 288 is the performance of the proscribed act "with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying the lust or passions or sexual desires of such person or of such child." The only comment we have to make on this argument is that "such child" in this case could have been and was identified by the jury on the evidence before them as Susie (and she was barely three years old), and "such person" as appellant. It was sufficient if he had the intent to arouse his own passions. People v. McCurdy, 1923, 60 Cal.App. 499, 213 P. 59, is not in point.

[4] Section 460 of the Penal Code provides that: "* * * every burglary, whether in the daytime or nighttime, committed by a person * * * who while in the commission of such burglary assaults any person, is burglary of the first degree." Counsel argues that: "The assault, if any was committed, occurred on the roof of the apartment house. * * * The house or building within the meaning of the burglary statute must be a structure with walls on all sides and covered by a roof. People v. Stickman, 1867, 34 Cal. 242. Therefore, an assault committed upon a roof would not be an assault while in the commission of a burglary, a roof not being covered by a roof and bounded by four walls." A sufficient answer to this argument lies in the statute itself. The Bellevue Apartments is a building. Moreover, it has walls on all sides and is covered by a roof. Appellant entered it. Did he at that time have the intent to commit a felony? From the fact that the jury found him guilty of violating section 288 of the Penal Code it is apparent that they also found that he had the intent to commit that crime when he entered the building. They had before them the testimony of Mrs. Johnson that when she first saw appellant on February 25th he was patting Susie's head at a nearby corner; that he then entered the Bellevue, went upstairs and after several minutes descended and left the building, only to return very shortly thereafter with Susie in his arms. Considering this and all the other testimony in the case, we cannot say that there was not sufficient basis for the jury's verdict on the burglary charge.

[5, 6] Our summary of the evidence in this case furnishes an adequate negative answer to appellant's complaint that his conviction of violating section 288 of the Penal Code is contrary to the evidence. The jury may have concluded from it that the child was taken by the defendant to the roof and there attacked, for there was testimony from appellant that when he went on the roof he saw nothing to indicate that there was anybody in the penthouse at that time. In view of Mrs. Johnson's testimony that defendant made two trips upstairs within a few minutes of each other the jury may have concluded that the first was in the nature of a survey to determine the feasibility of taking the child to the roof as a secluded spot for perpetration of the crime against her. Objection was made to certain testimony of the mother and the chemist which tended to show that the child had been on the roof. The circumstances testified to had some probative value and the court did not err in receiving the evidence.

Appellant claims that the court erred (1) in refusing to strike the court's own question as to "whether appellant was honorably discharged from the service" and the answer given; (2) in overruling the objections made to testimony concerning the visit to the College Hospital and the occurrences there, and (3) in not permitting cross-examination as to whether force was used in taking Susie.

[7] In regard to the claim that the trial judge should have granted the request to strike out his own question as to whether appellant was dishonorably discharged from the service, it may be said that appellant brought this upon himself by the answer which he made when being cross-examined by the District Attorney and which we have quoted. The judge did not ask the defendant if he had or had not been dishonorably discharged from the service. The question was: "Did you receive an honorable discharge from the Navy?" and it was a perfectly natural question, for shellshock would be a likely cause for an honorable discharge and appellant had previously volunteered the statement that "it had been suggested to me that being shell-shocked and discharged out of the Navy * * * that I could have had a lapse of memory." We do not feel that an error can justly be charged to the court in connection with this incident; rather, it was an error on the part of the appellant to use language which so easily might have misled the jury.

[8] The next assignment of error is not well founded. Appellant argues that the conclusions which the prosecution expected to derive from the testimony of what occurred at the hospital "was apparently that the alleged victim was registering a complaint by her actions in the hospital room, although nothing was said at that time." In answer respondent asserts: "The purpose is clearly misconceived. The only purpose at all could have been one of identification. The weight or the credibility of that, if any, were for the jury to determine." We think the latter view is the correct one, since there was no evidence that the child said a word at the meeting that could be construed as a complaint against the defendant; but, according to appellant's own testimony, Officer Tetrick asked the child, "Is this the man that hurt you?" and as appellant was walking from the room he heard her mother say, "Susie, is not this the man who hurt you?"

We have been unable to find anything in the record to substantiate appellant's final claim of error that the trial court erred "in not admitting in evidence upon cross-examination testimony as to whether there was force in the alleged kidnapping."

Since in our opinion the evidence sustains the verdict of guilty in all three counts upon which appellant was convicted, and since no prejudicial error appears, the judgments are each and all affirmed; so also is the order denying his motion for a new trial.

SHINN and PARKER WOOD, JJ., concur.

HUEBOTTER v. FOLLETT. *

Civ. 14671.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Automobiles 🔑181(2)

Other benefits or considerations to driver of automobile from one riding therein than cash or its equivalent may be "compensation" for ride, so as to render such rider a "passenger" rather than "guest" within automobile guest statute. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Compensation", "Guest" and "Passenger".

2. Automobiles 🔑181(2)

Mere exchange of social amenities and reciprocal hospitalities between driver of and one riding in automobile does not constitute "compensation" rendering rider a "passenger" rather than "guest" within automobile guest statute. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

3. Automobiles 🔑181(2)

Whether certain benefits or considerations to driver of automobile from one riding therein constitute "compensation" for ride, so as to render such rider a passenger rather than guest within automobile guest statute, depends on motive prompting driver to furnish transportation. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

4. Automobiles 🔑245(24)

Whether driver of automobile received compensation for transportation of another therein or such transportation was intended and received as mere gratuity, so as to render rider a guest of driver within automobile guest statute, rather than passenger, is question for trier of facts on proper evidence. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

5. Automobiles 🔑246(2)
Trial 🔑260(8)

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile owned and driven by defendant, failure to instruct jury that defendant owed plaintiff duty to drive with ordinary care was error, but did not require reversal of judgment on verdict for defendant, in view of correct instructions as to law concerning passengers, guests and compensation for rides. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

6. Automobiles 🔑244(20)

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile, owned and driven by defendant, when it collided with parked truck, contradictory testimony of plaintiff, defendant, and another rider warranted finding by jury that defendant was not negligent, even if jury found that plaintiff was a passenger rather than guest of defendant. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

7. Appeal and error 🔑930(4)

The rule that all intendments are in favor of correctness of jury's verdict precludes assumption, on appeal from judgment on verdict for defendant in action for injuries to one riding in automobile owned and driven by defendant, that verdict was based on finding that plaintiff was defendant's guest rather than finding warranted by evidence that defendant was not negligent and hence not liable even if plaintiff was a passenger. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

8. Appeal and error 🔑930(4)

On appeal from judgment on jury's general verdict, appellate court must assume that jury passed on every material fact issue submitted to them and that findings thereon were such as to support verdict.

9. Appeal and error 🔑930(4)

Where there is sufficient jury finding, sustained by evidence, to warrant judgment appealed from, such finding will be regarded by appellate court as finding on which judgment rested.

10. Appeal and error 🔑930(4)

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile owned and operated by defendant, where evidence warranted finding by jury that defendant was not negligent in running automobile into parked truck, appellate court must conclude, on appeal from judgment on verdict for defendant, that verdict was based on findings that plaintiff was a passenger and that defendant was not negligent rather than finding that plaintiff was defendant's guest. Vehicle Code, § 403, St.1935, p. 154.

---

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 193.

11. Trial ⚷260(1)

Refusal of plaintiff's requested instructions on matters adequately covered by instructions given was not error.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ingall W. Bull, Judge.

Action by Edwin D. Huebotter against P. T. Follett for personal injuries sustained in a collision between defendant's automobile, in which plaintiff was riding, and a parked truck. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Marion P. Betty, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Nourse & Jones and Everett W. Thompson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him when the automobile in which he was riding, and which was owned and operated by defendant, collided with a parked truck. The driver of the truck was joined as a defendant under a fictitious name but was not served with summons and complaint, and did not appear in the action. Trial was by jury, and the verdict was in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment on the verdict, and contends that the instructions were inadequate, confusing and prejudicially erroneous.

The evidence shows that plaintiff and defendant were cousins and had been friends for many years. Plaintiff, defendant and one Wilson were employed at Los Angeles Harbor. Plaintiff was a foreman supervising steel processing, and defendant and Wilson worked under his supervision. The three men went to and from their work in the same automobile. They worked 6 days per week, and each man drove his automobile 2 consecutive days each week, calling for the other two men in the morning at their homes, and returning them to their homes at night. On the day of the accident, Friday, March 27, 1942, it was defendant's turn to drive his automobile. He called for plaintiff and Wilson, at the regular time, in his 1939 Oldsmobile coupe. They proceeded toward the harbor along the same route which they had followed each morning. The accident occurred on a Los Angeles River bridge, on Atlantic Boulevard, a state highway in Los Angeles County. (That site is not in a business or residential district.) There is a curve in said highway about 240 feet north of the bridge, and from the curve to the approach to the bridge the highway is straight except for a slight bend in the highway at the approach to the bridge. The highway is 60 feet wide at the curve, 40 feet wide between the curve and the bridge, and 60 feet wide on the bridge. The bridge is about 500 feet long, extends approximately north and south, and has an incline upward of 12 to 15 feet from the north end to the middle of the bridge. The highway over the bridge has a double white line in the center, and on one side of the double line there are two traffic lanes for southbound vehicles and on the other side there are two traffic lanes for northbound vehicles. The two inside traffic lanes, adjoining the double line, are each 10 feet wide, and the two outside traffic lanes are each 20 feet wide. Defendant was proceeding in the outside lane for southbound vehicles, which will be referred to herein as lane 1, and another automobile was proceeding in the inside lane for southbound vehicles,which will be referred to herein as lane 2. The truck, a Ford with a stake body, was parked on the bridge, about 189 feet from the north end of the bridge, at an angle in lane 1, with the right front wheel about 2 feet from the west curb and the left rear corner of the truck about 15 feet from the west curb. The left rear wheel was not on the truck (the truck driver had taken the wheel off to have the tire repaired). The accident occurred about 6 a. m., before daylight, and the headlights of defendant's automobile were lighted. As defendant approached the truck, he swerved to the left about 5 feet but was unable to pass the truck without colliding with the automobile in lane 2, and the right side of his automobile collided with the left rear portion of the parked truck, causing the injuries to plaintiff. It is undisputed that the truck was parked in violation of the Vehicle Code; and that defendant could not have swerved to the right without striking the right curb or bridge structure.

Plaintiff testified that as they came out of the curve they were in a straight line of vision with the bridge, and he noticed an object on the bridge outlined against the skyline; that he could not determine the shape of it—he could not "see from the light that was there"; that "there was a sort of an overcast that morning"; that he did not recall seeing any lights on either side of the highway; that he never "did actually identify the object on the bridge"—he "never tried to identify" it "because he realized it was stopped," and he "was more interested in the car that was alongside" of them, as they "would be forcibly put into it" unless they "got a chance to get out of there"; that when he first noticed the object they were about 200 feet away from the north end of the bridge; that he first saw the object when they were about 400 feet from the north end of the bridge—that it was then approximately 600 feet away; that after he saw the object they traveled about 300 feet and then he (plaintiff) said, "Look out, Bud"; that he turned to defendant but defendant did not seem to be paying any particular attention to the object, and he seemed to be looking at the car to their left; that when he (plaintiff) said, "Look out, Bud," they were approximately 100 feet from the north end of the bridge; that defendant seemed to freeze at the wheel and his automobile seemed to gain momentum; that defendant did not put his brakes on at any time before the impact; that when they were about 200 feet from the bridge he looked at defendant's speedometer and they were traveling 55 miles an hour; that he did not form any estimate of the speed at which defendant was traveling at the time of the collision except he did not "recall any slackening of speed at any time" after he looked at the speedometer. On cross-examination plaintiff testified that he did not say (on direct examination) that defendant accelerated his speed—that defendant "didn't seem" to change his speed or "to do anything"; that he (plaintiff) "realized they were in a jackpot" unless defendant could "bring the thing to a stop." He further testified that he drove his automobile to work on Mondays and Tuesdays and took Wilson and defendant with him; that Wilson drove his automobile on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and defendant drove his automobile on Fridays and Saturdays; and that it was their general practice to drive their automobiles on those days but sometimes they changed to other days. A map of the bridge and vicinity was received in evidence and plaintiff marked thereon the position of defendant's automobile when he (plaintiff) first saw the truck, which was at a point approximately 600 feet from the truck.

Wilson testified that he was riding in defendant's automobile on a share-the-ride basis; that at the time plaintiff said, "Look out, Bud," he (the witness) noticed a "dark object on the bridge" when they "got into the turn going onto the bridge"; that they were between 300 and 425 feet from the truck when he first saw it; that he did not pay "any particular attention" as to what defendant's speed was, but he "should judge around 45, between 45 and 50"; that defendant's automobile was 175 to 250 feet from the bridge when plaintiff gave the warning, and it seemed that defendant then increased his speed; that he got the impression defendant increased his speed after said warning because they "got up to that truck awful fast"; that he did not observe defendant put on his brakes; that afterward he "noticed that as he [defendant] applied his brakes," they "stayed right with that car there [in lane 2] for awhile"; that it seemed defendant "was going to pass it," and he (the witness) knew if they "got by ourselves it would be all right," but it seemed to him defendant was "going kind of fast"; that defendant tried to swing around the truck; that at the time they collided they were traveling "closer to 50 miles an hour"; that he was certain it was dark when the accident occurred; that the truck and defendant's automobile were touching after the accident; that after the impact defendant's automobile went forward about 3 feet; that "the truck was moved some"; that defendant had good lights on his automobile; that plaintiff did not seem excited when he said, "Look out, Bud"; and that the automobile reached the truck "just like that (snap of the fingers)." Later in the day the witness was recalled by counsel for plaintiff who stated that the witness wished to correct a mistake in his previous testimony. The witness then testified to the effect that he had been misled in his testimony by counsel for defendant who had snapped his fingers—that from the time he saw the truck to the time of the collision it was longer than a snap of the fingers; that several seconds elapsed—he "would say about ten or eleven seconds." On cross-examination, at the request of counsel for defendant, the reporter read the question and answer in connection with the snapping of fingers, after which said counsel stated, "Now, you see from that that the snap of the fingers was started by you, Mr. Wilson, and it didn't come from me," to which the witness replied: "I didn't recall that; I had it in mind all of the time it was you that was snapping your fingers." Counsel for defendant asked the witness to watch the second hand on the clock in the court room for eleven seconds. After complying with that request, the witness said, "It seems to me that it was that length of time." He further testified that he realized after testifying that morning that, if they were 400 feet away from the truck when he first saw it, it would take longer than a snap of the fingers to reach the truck and he "wanted to bring" that out (in his subsequent testimony); that he based his testimony as to 10 or 11 seconds on a "check" which he had made with his own automobile that morning before he testified the first time; that in making that check he traveled "30 miles an hour" and it took him "from that point" (where he first saw the truck) to the "point of the accident," 11 seconds, and that was the basis for "this eleven seconds instead of the snap of the fingers."

A police officer testified that he investigated the accident; that he arrived at the scene of the accident at 6:15 or 6:20 a. m.; that it was dark when he arrived; that defendant's automobile collided with the left portion of the rear of the truck; that the front and right side of defendant's automobile were damaged "back to the wheel," including the windshield and the right post supporting the windshield, and the lights on the right side were broken; that at the time he arrived "there was no tail light lit" on the truck; that he was unable to determine whether defendant's automobile made skid marks at the scene of the accident because there was rubbish on the pavement, apparently from the truck (the truck was loaded with leaf mold); that the truck had been moved forward by the impact but not a great distance; that he talked with defendant at the scene of the accident and defendant told him he was driving between 40 and 45 miles per hour, and that "he was approximately 140 to 150 feet" from the north end of the bridge before he saw the truck; that defendant told him he "attempted to stop after he got up to about 150 feet before he got onto the bridge"; that defendant also told him the truck was parked with no flares, and that his (defendant's) headlights did not pick up the truck until he was about 50 feet from it; that he applied his brakes and started to turn out around the truck, but the car on his left (in lane 2) came up and prevented him from going any farther to the left.

Defendant testified that it was very dark at the time of the accident; that there was "a fog, a slight overcast"; that his headlights were on the low beam; that he "must have been going around 45 miles an hour when" he "went into that curve"; that he slackened his speed going around the curve; that when he got to the bridge he "was picking up speed again," but he didn't know what speed that was; that when plaintiff said, "Look out, Bud," they were about 50 feet from the truck, and he (defendant) was looking straight ahead; that he knew there was an automobile in lane 2, but he was not watching it; that there were no lights on the truck; that as he looked up he saw "what must have been the tail light" about the same time plaintiff called his warning; that at that time the automobile in lane 2 had "pulled up a little bit further" and it was "approximately right around half a car length past" him; that he did not "recall whether" his brakes "had taken hold sufficient to slacken the speed"; that he did not recall that he was able to apply his brakes; that he was sure he tried to put his brakes on; that his highest speed prior to the accident was "around 45 miles an hour"; and that the collision nearly tore the body off his automobile. Portions of defendant's deposition, read into evidence, included the statements that defendant was traveling between 40 and 45 miles an hour when the collision took place, and that the impact moved the truck about 4 or 5 feet.

Another police officer testified that he was an accident investigator; that he went to the scene of the accident on the day of the accident or the following day; that when he saw the truck it had one tail light, and it was about 2 feet under the left rear portion of the body of the truck; that he did not recall seeing any skid marks on the highway; that the truck was loaded with leaf mold and sacks; that the load weighed about "300 pounds," and was about 3 feet high; and that he thought the truck weighed about 6200 pounds.

[1-10] Plaintiff contends that, as a matter of law, he was a passenger, and the court should have instructed the jury that he was a passenger. Section 403 of the Vehicle Code, St. 1935, p. 154, provides that, "No person who as a guest accepts a ride in any vehicle upon a highway without giving compensation for such ride * * * has any right of action for civil damages against the driver of such vehicle * * * on account of personal injury to * * * such guest during such ride, unless the plaintiff in any such action establishes that such injury * * * proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of said driver." (Italics added.) Whether plaintiff's status was that of passenger or guest, under section 403, depends upon whether plaintiff gave "compensation" for the ride. Benefits or considerations to the driver other than cash or its equivalent may be "compensation." Kruzie v. Sanders, 23 Cal.2d 237, 241, 143 P.2d 704. The nature of the compensation as contemplated by the statute is as variable as the particular facts involved. Whitechat v. Guyette, 19 Cal.2d 428, 431, 122 P.2d 47. There is no compensation where nothing more than the exchange of social amenities and reciprocal hospitalities are involved. Kruzie v. Sanders, supra, 23 Cal.2d at page 243, 143 P.2d at page 706. Whether certain benefits or considerations constitute "compensation" depends upon the motive which prompted defendant to furnish the transportation. It was stated in Swink v. Gardena Club, 65 Cal.App.2d 674, at page 677, 151 P.2d 313, at page 314, that the question as to compensation "depends on whether 'a special tangible benefit to the defendant was the motivating influence for furnishing the transportation.'" It was said in Fiske v. Wilkie, 67 Cal.App.2d 440, at page 448, 154 P.2d 725, at page 729, "The law of this state is well settled that the payment for gas and oil used on an automobile trip taken for the mutual pleasure of the driver and an injured occupant does not constitute compensation for the ride." Whether there is compensation or whether the transportation is intended and received as a mere gratuity is a question for the trier of fact upon proper evidence. Humphreys v. San Francisco Area Council, 22 Cal.2d 436, 442, 139 P.2d 941. Whether there is compensation within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code must, therefore, be determined from the circumstances of each particular case. Plaintiff argues that the allegations of paragraph VII of his complaint, except the first four lines thereof, were admitted by defendant, and by such admission it was established that plaintiff was a passenger. That paragraph is as follows—the portion thereof denied by defendant being in italics: "That prior to and at the time of the said accident the plaintiff Edwin D. Huebotter was riding as a passenger in the said automobile of said defendant P. T. Follett which was being operated by said defendant on a 'share the ride' basis, or pooling of transportation, with the said defendant Follett and one other passenger, one William Wilson. That said 'share the ride' or pooling transportation basis upon which the said plaintiff and said Wilson were operating was done for the purpose of preserving tires pursuant to the direction of the Federal Government of the United States. That at the time of the said accident, the said parties were on their way from their homes to their work at the Roosevelt Fleet Operating Base of the United States Navy, located on Terminal Island. That pursuant to their said co-operative plan of pooling transportation, each of the three persons had agreed to and were using their respective cars two days out of each week to transport themselves to and from their work to their homes. That the said defendant Follett at the time of the said accident was using his car on the first day of his regular allotted two days and the same would have ended on Saturday night; that the plaintiff, Edwin D. Huebotter would thereafter have operated his automobile in carrying as passengers the said defendant Follett and the said Wilson. Thereafter, Tuesday and Wednesday, said Wilson would have used his automobile to carry the plaintiff Edwin D. Huebotter and defendant Follett." The denial of a portion of that paragraph was not made until after the close of the testimony, and then upon motion by defendant the court granted him permission to make that denial. The denial, as shown above by italics, was to the effect that plaintiff was not a passenger on a "share the ride" basis. The portion of the paragraph which was not denied was in substance a statement of purported facts allegedly constituting the basis for sharing the rides. It is to be noted that the first sentence of the undenied portion of the paragraph states the purpose of the plaintiff and Wilson in operating on a "share the ride" basis, namely, to preserve tires pursuant to the direction of the government. It is to be noted also that the purpose of defendant was not stated in that sentence. The remainder of said undenied portion, however, related to the manner in which the three persons, including the defendant, went to and from work. The pleadings and unconflicting evidence established that the three persons traveled together six days a week from their homes to their work, each using his own automobile two days a week. By using one automobile each day to transport all of them, instead of using a separate automobile for each one, the cost of transportation for each person was reduced. It was held in Peccolo v. City of Los Angeles, 8 Cal.2d 532, 537, 66 P.2d 651, that transportation under a similar arrangement was for compensation. The jury should have been instructed that defendant owed plaintiff a duty to drive with ordinary care, but the failure to so instruct it does not require a reversal of the judgment. The court instructed the jury clearly and correctly as to the law concerning a passenger, a guest, and compensation. It instructed the jury that: "A guest is one who is invited, either expressly or impliedly, to enjoy the hospitality of the driver of a vehicle; who accepts such hospitality; and who takes a ride either for his own pleasure or on his own business. Where, however, the driver received some compensation, which is the chief inducement for the rider's transportation, and which is given and received as compensation and as a business transaction, such a rider is a passenger, not a guest." It further instructed the jury that: "The compensation required to make a person a passenger, rather than a guest, need not be in money and need not be paid directly by the one who thereafter becomes a plaintiff. If, as the chief inducement for the transportation, any benefit is conferred on the driver, which has a then present pecuniary value, the person transported is a passenger, not a guest." Of course it cannot be determined whether the jury found that plaintiff was a passenger or a guest. In either event the verdict was for the defendant, and it is to be assumed the jury followed the instructions and found that plaintiff was a passenger. If it found that the plaintiff was a passenger, it does not follow necessarily that the verdict should have been for the plaintiff. The testimony of each of the three riders, as shown above, was contradictory and inconsistent within itself and was contradictory and inconsistent with the testimony of the others, and therefore, even if the jury found that plaintiff was a passenger, the evidence was such that the jury might have found that defendant was not negligent. There is in the verdict an implied finding that defendant was not guilty of any negligence which was a proximate cause of the accident. Appellant insists that the verdict should be regarded as one based upon a finding that plaintiff was a guest and not upon a finding that defendant was not negligent. The rule that all intendments are in favor of the correctness of the verdict precludes this assumption. Upon appeal from a judgment based upon a general verdict it must be assumed that the jury passed upon every material issue of fact submitted to them, and that the findings thereon were such as to give support to the verdict. Shahabian v. Najarian, 14 Cal.App.2d 435, 443, 58 P.2d 396. If there is a sufficient finding sustained by the evidence upon which the judgment may rest, it will be regarded on appeal as the one upon which the judgment did rest. American National Bank v. Donnellan, 170 Cal. 9, 15, 148 P. 188; Thayer v. Tyler, 169 Cal. 671, 147 P. 979; Bowers v. Union Trust Co., 117 Cal.App. 259, 265, 3 P.2d 614. It must therefore be concluded that the verdict was based upon findings that plaintiff was a passenger and that defendant was not guilty of negligence rather than upon a finding that plaintiff was a guest.

[11] Plaintiff further contends that the court's refusal to give plaintiff's requested instructions 10, 11, 13 and 20 is reversible error. The first portion of proposed instruction 13 was, in substance, that if defendant looked but did not see that which he could have seen in the exercise of reasonable care, he was negligent. The court gave an instruction, from the California Jury Instruction Book, which fully covered that portion of proposed instruction 13. The remainder of said instruction 13, and proposed instructions 10, 11 and 20 were to the effect that if the jury found that defendant had failed to use ordinary care in the operation of his automobile and such failure in the slightest degree contributed to the cause of the collision, then defendant's negligence was "a" proximate cause of the accident, and defendant would be liable for the full amount of plaintiff's damages even though it should appear that the concurrent negligence of the truck driver was greater than the negligence of defendant. Plaintiff asserts that the whole theory of his case "rested on the question of whether defendant's conduct constituted negligence which concurred with the conceded negligence of the truck driver, and proximately caused the collision," and that no instruction was given which told the jury that any lack of care by defendant which contributed as "a" proximate cause of the collision would make defendant liable in damages. The trial court gave an instruction defining "proximate cause." Immediately following that instruction, the jury was instructed as follows: "This does not mean that the law seeks and recognizes only one proximate cause of an injury, consisting of only one person. To the contrary, the acts and omissions of two or more persons may work concurrently as the efficient cause of an injury, and in such a case, each of the participating acts or omissions is regarded in law as a proximate cause." (Italics added.) The court also instructed the jury that if plaintiff was a passenger at the time of the accident, defendant owed him the "duty to exercise ordinary care, and if any negligent conduct on defendant's part was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury, defendant is liable." (Italics added.) The court gave the further instruction: "You are instructed that before plaintiff can recover damages for any injuries sustained by him as a result of the accident in question, you must first find that defendant was negligent and that such negligence on his part, if any, was a proximate cause of injury to the plaintiff." (Italics added.) Another instruction, given at the request of plaintiff, was, in substance, that if the jury found in favor of plaintiff it should, in arriving at the amount of the award, determine each item of "claimed detriment," provided it found such detriment was suffered by plaintiff "as a proximate result of defendant's negligence." (Italics added.) It appears that the jury was adequately instructed as to the matters set forth in plaintiff's requested instructions 10, 11, 13 and 20.

Appellant further contends that the court's refusal to give his requested instructions 6 and 9 constituted reversible error. Proposed instruction 6 was to the effect that if the jury found that the defendant's speed before he reached the bridge was greater than that which an ordinarily prudent driver "in the exercise of reasonable care would have been traveling under such conditions or circumstances," then it must find defendant guilty of negligence. Proposed instruction 9 was in substance that if the jury found that plaintiff warned defendant about an obstruction on the bridge in sufficient time in which the said defendant "in the exercise of ordinary care could have slowed his car and stopped it before he struck the obstruction or truck," and he failed to do so, then it must find defendant guilty of negligence. It will be noted that both instructions are to the effect that if the jury found the defendant failed to exercise ordinary care under certain circumstances, it must find that defendant was negligent. The court instructed the jury that if plaintiff was a passenger, defendant owed him the duty of exercising ordinary care, and it gave full and proper instructions from the California Book of Jury Instructions as to negligence and ordinary care. The requested instructions 6 and 9 were covered by instructions which were given.

The judgment is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and SHINN, J., concur.

HUNT et al. v. AUTHIER. *

Civ. 14845.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Aug. 28, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Action 🔑16

The nature of cause, not form of action, determines its character.

2. Death 🔑30

An action for wrongful death of murdered man does not survive tort-feasor's death under statute authorizing maintenance, by and against executors and administrators, of actions which might have been maintained by or against their testators or intestates for recovery or possession of property or action by any person or decedent's personal representative against executor or administrator of estate of decedent who, in his lifetime, wasted, destroyed, took, converted, or trespassed on plaintiff's property. Probate Code, §§ 573, 574.

---

* Subsequent opinion 169 P.2d 913.

3. Death ⟹30

Injury to decedent's widow and surviving minor children as result of decedent's murder by tort-feasor who immediately committed suicide was of a personal nature, based on their relationship to decedent and his obligation to support them, and was not an injury to their "property" within statute authorizing action against personal representative of decedent who, in his lifetime, wasted, destroyed, took, converted, or trespassed on plaintiff's "property", since pecuniary loss to widow and children was an incident or element of damage growing out of decedent's wrongful death. Probate Code, § 574.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Property".

4. Constitutional law ⟹70(1)

The District Court of Appeal cannot, by liberal definition of term "property" in statute authorizing action against personal representative of decedent who, in his lifetime, wasted, destroyed, took, converted, or trespassed on plaintiff's property, permit a murdered man's widow and surviving minor children to recover damages from deceased murderer's personal representative for deprivation of deceased husband's support and society, but direct legislative action in form of unambiguous statute is required to render such a rule of law effective. Probate Code, § 574.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Lois M. Hunt and others, minors, suing by and through their guardian ad litem, Mona S. Hunt, and Mona S. Hunt, individually and as guardian ad litem of minor plaintiffs, against Louise Authier, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of Ephrem Mounsey, deceased, for the wrongful death of Verne C. Hunt. From an order and judgment dismissing the action, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

Mitchell, Silberberg & Knupp, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Henry Brouillette, of Los Angeles, for appellee.

DESMOND, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs appeal from an order and judgment entered thereon dismissing their action upon their failure to amend their complaint within the time allowed after defendant's demurrer to the complaint had been sustained.

On December 13, 1943, Dr. Verne C. Hunt, a physician and surgeon, was murdered in his office by Ephrem Mounsey, who, immediately after shooting the doctor, shot and killed himself. Plaintiffs, the surviving wife and three minor children of Dr. Hunt, filed an action in the Superior Court of Los Angeles, entitled "Damages for Wrongful Death," against Louise Authier, as Administratrix-with-Will Annexed of the Estate of Ephrem Mounsey, deceased, which alleged that "as a direct and proximate result of the * * * said wrongful acts of the said Ephrem Mounsey, deceased, and the death of the said Dr. Verne C. Hunt, these plaintiffs, each and all, did suffer and sustain great pecuniary loss and damage and the property, property rights and estate of said plaintiffs, and each of them, were thereby wasted and destroyed, all to their damage in the sum of $150,000.00," and that a claim in that sum, filed against the estate, had been rejected. The prayer asked that the court "adjudge and declare that the estate of said Ephrem Mounsey, deceased, is indebted to these plaintiffs in the sum of $150,000.00" and that the sum constitutes a valid claim against the estate.

Appellants state in their brief that: "A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained upon the ground that the cause of action on behalf of the plaintiffs abated upon the death of the tort feasor." They concede that this action could not be maintained at common law, and unless express statutory authority sanctioning its survival can be found the ruling upon the demurrer was correct. They admit, also, that unless the case of Clark v. Goodwin, 1915, 170 Cal. 527, 150 P. 357, L.R.A.1916A, 1142, "can be distinguished upon the ground that statutory authority for the survival of the cause of action now exists, which did not exist—or was not called to the attention of the court—when the Clark case was decided," it is express authority for the ruling on the question of abatement and necessitates an affirmance of the judgment. In the Clark case a widow sought to recover judgment from the estate of Goodwin on the ground that he murdered her husband on the same day that he, himself, died, but the court held that under our statutes, then in effect, the cause of action for damages for wrongful death abated with the death of Goodwin and could not be maintained against his personal representative. See, also, to the same effect, Norton v. City of Pomona, 1935, 5 Cal.2d 54, 62, 53 P.2d 952; Gosling v. Nichols, 1943, 59 Cal.App.2d 442, 444, 139 P.2d 86. Appellants take the position that certain changes in our statutory law which became effective when the Probate Code was adopted in 1931, sixteen years after the decision was rendered in Clark v. Goodwin, supra, furnish the necessary statutory authority for their present action. They rely upon the latter part of section 574 of the Probate Code. That section reads as follows:

"Sec. 574. Actions for trespass [Injury to property or destruction or conversion thereof.] Executors and administrators may maintain an action against any person who has wasted, destroyed, taken, or carried away, or converted to his own use, the property of their testator or intestate, in his lifetime, or committed any trespass on the real property of the decedent in his lifetime, and any person, or the personal representative of any person, may maintain an action against the executor or administrator of any testator or intestate who in his lifetime has wasted, destroyed, taken, or carried away, or converted to his own use, the property of any such person or committed any trespass on the real property of such person." (Our emphasis.)

The first portion of this statute substituted the word "property," which we have italicized, for "goods" as it was printed in former section 1583, Code of Civil Procedure, which was repealed when the Probate Code was adopted. The present action, however, is in no way concerned with the first part of section 574, but there is a change in the latter portion which is all important from appellants' point of view. It consists of the substitution of the word "property," which we have placed in italics, for the words "goods and chattels," which had appeared in the former section 1584, Code of Civil Procedure. Appellants contend that the right to support and maintenance and to the comfort, society and protection of their deceased husband and father "constitute property within the meaning of the section and that such property was destroyed by the tortious act which resulted in the death of Dr. Hunt."

[1-3] While the present action, exclusive of its title, purports to be one arising under, and is couched in the language used in, section 574 of the Probate Code, nevertheless it is the nature of the cause and not the form of the action which determines its character. Vragnizan v. Savings Union, etc., Co., 1916, 31 Cal.App. 709, 711, 712, 161 P. 507. The gravamen of plaintiffs' action here is the tort-feasor's wrongful act and, in our opinion, it is not included among the tortious actions which survive under section 574 or section 573 of the Probate Code, or under any other statute of California. Section 573, in its opening passage, is an exact copy of former section 1582 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Both sections provide that: "Actions for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or for the possession thereof * * * may be maintained by and against executors and administrators in all cases in which the same might have been maintained by or against their respective testators or intestates * * *." In the case of Singley v. Bigelow, 1930, 108 Cal.App. 436, 291 P. 899, damages were sought from the estate of a druggist whose employee had, by mistake, delivered to one of the plaintiffs a package containing mercury powder instead of quinine, which was requested by written order. Because of the death of the druggist before the action was brought, the plaintiffs sought to avoid abatement of the action by resort to the language of section 1582, Code of Civil Procedure. In that case, as in the present instance, a demurrer was sustained for the reason that the action was one in tort and abated upon the death of the tortfeasor. In that case, as in this, the plaintiffs were allowed time within which to amend, and failing to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the representative of the decedent. In commenting upon the situation the court said, 108 Cal.App. at page 440, 291 P. at page 900: "Our attention is specially called to the words 'any property,' found in section 1582, Code of Civil Procedure. However, a reading of the section and a reference to the facts set forth in the complaint which we have detailed shows that this is not an action for the recovery of any property, either real or personal, or for the possession thereof. It is strictly an action to recover damages. No property belonging to the plaintiffs was taken possession of by the deceased. So far as the complaint is concerned it does not show that there is any real or personal property in the possession of the executrix of the estate of the deceased to which the plaintiffs have any right, title, or claim to the possession thereof; nor are there any adverse claims involved in this action. The mere fact that, in an action for damages, judgment is entered for a certain sum of money, and that the money or judgment, when paid to the plaintiff in such an action, is property, does not characterize the action or bring it within the terms of section 1582, Code of Civil Procedure, as one for the recovery of any property, real or personal, or the possession thereof." See, Gerberich v. Southern California Edison Co., 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 471, 482, 79 P.2d 783. This language, while used in construing section 1582, is equally persuasive in considering the meaning of the word "property" as used in section 574 of the Probate Code. The death of Dr. Hunt and the resultant pecuniary loss sustained by the widow and the minor children arise from and flow out of the wrongful act of the deceased tort-feasor. The injury to plaintiffs is one of a personal nature based upon their relationship to the deceased and his obligation to support and maintain them and is not an injury to their property or estate within the meaning of the word "property" as used in section 574, for the pecuniary loss to the wife and minor children is an incident—an element of damage—growing out of the wrongful death. Singley v. Bigelow, supra; Russell v. Sunbury, 1881, 37 Ohio St. 372, 376, 377, 41 Am. Rep. 523; Hegerich v. Keddie, 1885, 99 N. Y. 258, 1 N.E. 787, 792–793, 52 Am.Rep. 25.

[4] The appellants argue earnestly that "by the enactment of Section 574, it was the intention of the Legislature to obviate the hardship and obvious injustice of the common law rule as established in the case of Clark v. Goodwin, 170 Cal. 527, 150 P. 357, L.R.A.1916A, 1142," and point out that "A liberal definition of the term 'property' * * * will enable the courts to avoid the glaring inconsistency and obvious injustice of holding that a wife may recover against a deceased tort feasor for injuries done to her automobile, but she cannot recover for the infinitely greater loss which she has suffered in being deprived of the support and society of her husband." While, naturally, we must sympathize with the bereaved widow and children in this case, we cannot, nor could the trial court, by a liberal definition furnish the relief which they seek. The new rule of law, for which their counsel so eloquently argues, if ever it is to become effective will require direct legislative action in the form of a statute free from ambiguity.

Judgment and order affirmed.

PARKER WOOD, J., and FOX, Justice pro tem., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 657

HARLAN v. HARLAN.

Civ. 14885.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Aug. 31, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 29, 1945.

1. Divorce 🔑327

In husband's action to annul marriage on ground of wife's bigamy, evidence that neither of parties to wife's Mexican action for divorce from former husband resided in Mexico established invalidity of Mexican decree granting wife divorce, since Mexican court had no jurisdiction of parties to or subject matter of action.

2. Divorce 🔑327

A husband's consent to granting of divorce to his wife in Mexico, wherein neither spouse resided, conferred no jurisdiction of her divorce suit on Mexican court.

3. Divorce 🔑327

A Mexican court's decree, granting wife divorce without residence or presence of either spouse in Mexico, is not entitled to recognition by California courts under statute providing that final judgment of foreign country's tribunal, having jurisdiction over cause of action, parties thereto and thing involved under such country's laws, shall have same effect in California as in such country. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1915, 1917.

4. Divorce ⟹330

Under principle of "quasi estoppel", a man taking active part in arranging to obtain Mexican court decree, granting a woman a divorce, and paying her attorney's fee and expenses, so that he might marry her after living with her illegally, could not question validity of such decree in action to annul his subsequent marriage to her on ground of her bigamy.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Quasi Estoppel".

5. Estoppel ⟹63

The principle of "quasi estoppel" is based on principle that one having full knowledge of facts shall not be permitted to act in manner inconsistent with his former position or conduct to another's injury.

6. Estoppel ⟹68(2)

Under principle of quasi estoppel, one invoking exercise of jurisdiction within court's general powers cannot seek to reverse its orders for lack of jurisdiction.

7. Estoppel ⟹99

Estoppel does not validate thing complained of, but merely closes mouth of party complaining thereof.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Richard R. Harlan against Mericia G. Harlan to annul the parties' marriage, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint for divorce. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed, with directions.

August J. O'Connor and George J. Hider, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Button, Herzog & Butts, of Hollywood, for respondent.

FOX, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff brought this action to have his ceremonial marriage to defendant annulled on the ground that at the time of said ceremony defendant had a former husband living, and that her marriage to said former husband had not been dissolved by divorce or otherwise.

Defendant is a native of Cuba. In December, 1921, she married, in Havana, Karl Hugo Karlsson, a national of Sweden. In 1927, plaintiff was in Havana making some motion pictures. He met defendant, a housewife, and employed her for a brief period in making two pictures. When plaintiff and his party returned to California later on that year, defendant came with them on the same boat. Defendant testified that plaintiff promised her work in certain pictures he had under contract to make if she would come along. Sometime after arriving in California plaintiff and defendant began living together as man and wife. In 1929 defendant went back to Havana and, at the request of the plaintiff, discussed with her husband the matter of her getting a divorce. He consented. Soon after her return to California plaintiff, with whom she continued to live, took her to a Mexican attorney in Los Angeles and made arrangements with him to secure a Mexican divorce for defendant. She did not then speak or understand English, and testified at the trial herein through an interpreter. The part that plaintiff had in arranging for this divorce is best shown by the deposition of the attorney who was employed to procure this divorce. The following interrogatories and answers are pertinent on this point:

"Q. Did Richard Harlan and Mericia G. Harlan engage your services to secure a Mexican divorce for Mericia G. Harlan from her then husband, Karl Hugo Karlsson? A. Yes, that's right.

"Q. Did Mr. Richard Harlan ask you about securing this divorce for Paulina Mericia Gonzales Karlsson? A. Yes, that's right.

"Q. Please state what you recall Richard Harlan said regarding that matter at that time. A. Mr. Richard Harlan expressed to this deponent that he desired to obtain a divorce for Paulina Mericia Gonzales Karlsson, with whom he wanted to get married after the divorce. * * *

"Q. After you secured the decree of divorce, did you inform Mr. Richard Harlan and Paulina Mericia Gonzales Karlsson of that fact? A. Yes, I informed them.

"Q. Thereafter, did you receive any monies from Richard Harlan for your fee? And if so, how much, if you recall? A. Yes, I received the money from Mr. Harlan, and I assume it was in the neighborhood of $300.

"Q. Did Richard Harlan pay you anything for your services in connection with this divorce? A. Mr. Harlan from its beginning undertook to pay the costs of this divorce, and he paid them.

"Q. Did Richard Harlan tell you at any time that he wanted you to secure this foreign divorce so that he could marry Paulina Mericia Gonzales Karlsson? A. Yes, that is true, as I have expressed hereinabove. * * *

"Q. Please relate the conversation which you claim took place between you and Mrs. Karlsson and Mr. Harlan at your first interview, stating in substance what each person said. A. The conversation that took place in the first interview consisted in the fact that the persons who came expressed to deponent that they desired a Mexican divorce. They asked for details regarding price, time of duration, validity of the same; and Mr. Harlan expressed the desire that he wanted this divorce rapidly because he desired to marry Mrs. Karlsson.

"Q. Isn't it true that Mr. Harlan was simply introduced as a friend of Mrs. Karlsson and that he took no active part in engaging you? A. Mr. Harlan took active part in the matter, because it was he who undertook to pay for the matter I have expressed in my answer hereinabove. * * *

"Q. On how many occasions, if any, did you contend Mr. Harlan accompanied Mrs. Karlsson at such conferences? A. I cannot fix the occasions when Mr. Harlan accompanied Mrs. Karlsson to the office of the deponent, but I do remember that besides the first time on the conference when he was in my office, Mr. Harlan telephoned me inquiring regarding the decree, the final decree.

"Q. Did you ever confer with Mr. Harlan alone? A. I don't remember if Mr. Harlan was alone in my office or in the office of the dependent, but I do remember that he called me over the telephone a number of times. * * *

"Q. Do you know of your own knowledge who owned the funds with which you were paid? A. Deponent does not know who was the owner of the funds, but I repeat that Mr. Harlan was the one who undertook to pay them."

This lawyer also testified that he advised the parties that they would be free to marry when the Mexican decree was granted. Pursuant to the foregoing arrangements an action for divorce from Karl Hugo Karlsson was filed on behalf of the defendant herein in the State of Sinaloa, Republic of Mexico, in the summer of 1930. Neither of the parties established any domicile or residence in the State of Sinaloa or were physically present therein during the pendency of said action. The entire matter was handled by the respective attorneys of the parties through authority given by powers of attorney. Mr. Karlsson filed, through his attorney, his consent that the divorce be granted to his wife, and such decree was granted to her in December, 1930. Plaintiff and defendant went through a marriage ceremony in Los Angeles, California, on March 11, 1931, and lived together as husband and wife until December, 1943, when they separated. Mr. Karlsson died in 1942.

[1-3] The Mexican divorce granted to the defendant herein from Mr. Karlsson was of the "mail order" class. The decree, however, did not affirmatively show upon its face that neither of the parties had resided there. Upon this fact being shown the invalidity of the decree in this state was thereby established, since the court in Mexico did not have jurisdiction of either of the parties or of the subject-matter of the action. Ryder v. Ryder, 1934, 2 Cal.App.2d 426, 37 P.2d 1069; People v. Harlow, 1935, 9 Cal.App.2d 643, 50 P.2d 1052; Kegley v. Kegley, 1936, 16 Cal. App.2d 216, 60 P.2d 482; In re Estate of McNutt, 1940, 36 Cal.App.2d 542, 98 P.2d 253. The consent of Mr. Karlsson could not confer jurisdiction to grant his wife, the defendant herein, a decree of divorce. Ryder v. Ryder, supra; Kegley v. Kegley, supra; Andrews v. Andrews, 1903, 188 U. S. 14, 23 S.Ct. 237, 47 L.Ed. 366. Nor is this decree entitled to recognition by the courts of California under the provisions of section 1915, Code of Civil Procedure, for "this section expressly limits its application to final judgments of courts having jurisdiction. And by section 1917 of the Code of Civil Procedure such jurisdiction must be 'over the cause, over the parties, and over the thing, when a specific thing is the subject of the judgment.'" People v. Harlow, supra, 9 Cal.App.2d at page 646, 50 P.2d at page 1053. And, as pointed out in Ryder v. Ryder, supra, 2 Cal.App.2d at page 431, 37 P.2d at page 1070, no assistance is afforded by section 1915, Code of Civil Procedure, "because of the lack of the very elements specified" by that section. In the instant case, as in the Ryder case, "There is nothing in the record to indicate what the law of Mexico is concerning divorce. We have been directed to no statute or code or other law of that country governing the subject of divorce. If, however, it be assumed that the laws of that country require no residence nor the presence of the parties within its territory as a basis of jurisdiction, and that the formal requirements established by Mexican law were met, then the divorce cannot be recognized under the laws of this state." 2 Cal.App.2d at page 432, 37 P.2d at page 1071.

[4-7] Plaintiff, however, is not in a position to take advantage of the invalidity of the Mexican divorce decree which the defendant obtained from Mr. Karlsson. The record is clear that plaintiff paid the attorney's fee and expenses for obtaining said divorce and that he had an active and dominant part in arranging for same and in seeing that it was carried through expeditiously. Plaintiff herein was not technically a party to the Mexican suit. But he certainly was interested in its outcome. He was anxious that defendant be in a position so that he could marry her. He would thereby extricate himself from the immoral and illegal relationship in which he had been living. He as much as any other, not excepting the defendant, was responsible for institution of the suit and obtaining the decree. His interest then was to procure the result which he now seeks to nullify, after having lived with defendant as husband and wife for over twelve years. That the sweet may have turned sour does not make it conscionable that the plaintiff should be allowed now to undo what his own hand and mind had so much to do in creating. Plaintiff is therefore not in a position to question the validity of defendant's divorce. This is on the principle of quasi estoppel "which is based upon the principle that one cannot blow both hot and cold, or that one 'with full knowledge of the facts shall not be permitted to act in a manner inconsistent with his former position or conduct to the injury of another.' 10 Cal.Jur., p. 645. McDanels v. General Ins. Co., 1 Cal.App.2d 454, 459 [35 P.2d 394], 36 P.2d 829. Another way of stating the same general principle (applicable directly to the instant case) is that one who has invoked the exercise of a jurisdiction within the general powers of the court cannot seek to reverse its orders upon the ground of lack of jurisdiction. 'The principle opposing such action is one of estoppel in the interest of a sound administration of the laws whereby the regularity or even validity of an act procured by one himself cannot be raised—not that the act is valid, for it may not be, and estoppel does not make valid the thing complained of but merely closes the mouth of the complainant. Spence v. State Nat. Bank, Tex.Com.App., 5 S.W.2d 754. The principle is known as the doctrine of acquiescence, often referred to as quasi estoppel.'" In re Estate of Davis, 1940, 38 Cal.App.2d 579, 584, 585, 101 P.2d 761, 763, 102 P.2d 545. In the Davis case the deceased urged respondent to go to Nevada, establish a residence for the sole purpose of securing a divorce, and then to marry him. He paid the costs and expenses of the divorce, and went to Reno and took an active part in the preparation of the case, and married respondent on the day the divorce was granted. Upon the death of Mr. Davis his heir attacked the validity of respondent's divorce and subsequent marriage to Mr. Davis. The court held that because of Mr. Davis' part in procuring the Nevada decree for respondent he would have been foreclosed from denying the validity thereof or the subsequent marriage under the doctrine of quasi estoppel and that his heir was in no better position.

In Goodloe v. Hawk, 1940, 72 App.D.C. 287, 113 F.2d 753, 756, the plaintiff husband sought an annulment of his marriage with defendant on the ground that her Virginia divorce was not valid. He claimed that she was never either domiciled in or a bona fide resident of Virginia. It appeared, however, that the plaintiff had asked her to get a divorce so that he could marry her and that he had paid for the divorce. After they had lived together more than a decade plaintiff brought an action for annulment in the District of Columbia. The United States Court of Appeals, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Fred M. Vinson, held that the husband "should be barred by the salutary principles of laches or estoppel from challenging the Virginia court's finding" that the defendant wife was domiciled there.

In Saul v. Saul, 1941, 74 App.D.C. 287, 122 F.2d 64, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Rutledge (now of the United States Supreme Court) the principle of estoppel was applied to prevent the plaintiff husband in an annulment action from questioning the sufficiency of the notice that was given in the defendant's prior divorce action to her then husband, Mr. Gardner. This was upon the basis that he had financed the divorce and actively aided her in procuring it.

In Margulies v. Margulies, 1931, 109 N.J.Eq. 391, 157 A. 676, it is said in the syllabus by the court that "One who induces a defendant to obtain a foreign divorce and pays the expenses thereof, and afterwards marries her, is precluded from attacking the validity of the divorce."

In Van Slyke v. Van Slyke, 1915, 186 Mich. 324, 152 N.W. 921, 923, the plaintiff wife sued defendant for a divorce. He sought to show that she had procured her divorce from a former husband through misrepresentation of her residence and that therefore said decree was not valid and consequently their marriage was invalid. The court pointed out that he was "quite as much interested in procuring the decree of divorce as was the complainant, proposed to pay her counsel and advised her and her counsel of his interest. He intended to profit by the decree of divorce, not in a financial way, but in removing an obstacle to his marriage with complainant." The court held that by reason of these circumstances he had no standing to present such a defense. See, also, Bowen v. Finke, D.C., 1940, 34 F.Supp. 235.

That the defendant was imposed upon by the plaintiff is clear. After discussing the evidence at great length at the close of the trial, the learned trial judge at the very conclusion of his summation of the case said: "I think here the defendant is the innocent party. No question about it in my mind. The plaintiff is not innocent." Under such circumstances and in view of the evidence and authorities, the defense of quasi estoppel should have been sustained. To hold otherwise protects neither the welfare nor morals of society but, on the contrary, such holding is a flagrant invitation to others to attempt to circumvent the law, cohabit in unlawful state, and when tired of such situation, apply to the courts for a release from the indicia of the marriage status.

Respondent relies on Sullivan v. Sullivan, 1934, 219 Cal. 734, 28 P.2d 914. That case has no application here because the plaintiff there only had an "interlocutory" decree when she remarried. She was not divorced.

The judgment is reversed with directions to retry only the issues made by the amended cross-complaint for divorce and the answer thereto.

SHINN, Acting P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 619

MAJORS v. MAJORS.

Civ. 14925.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Divorce 🔑160

In wife's divorce suit, where amended complaint prayed only for divorce and approval of parties' community property settlement agreement, default judgment refusing such approval and awarding plaintiff one dollar per month for support was erroneous as establishing plaintiff's right to support in disregard of such agreement and prayer. Code Civ.Proc. § 580.

2. Divorce 🔑254

Where complaint in wife's action for divorce on ground of extreme cruelty prays assignment or division of parties' community property, superior court owes duty to decide how such property shall be divided and render judgment accordingly. Civ.Code, § 146.

3. Divorce 🔑203

Where complaint of wife suing for divorce does not pray for support or none is awarded her by judgment, she cannot obtain judgment for support later.

4. Divorce 🔑160

Provisions of wife's default divorce judgment, refusing approval of parties' property settlement agreement in lieu of support and awarding wife one dollar per month for support, without determining whether agreement was valid or invalid and ineffective to influence or control judgment, were erroneous. Civ.Code, § 146.

5. Divorce ⚿203

The superior court's discretion to approve community property settlement agreement between parties to wife's divorce suit or refuse to approve it and give wife general judgment for support must be exercised with due consideration for pleadings and undisputed facts in evidence. Civ. Code, § 146.

6. Judgment ⚿193

A court has no discretion to refuse to give judgment declaring a right properly pleaded and well established by evidence.

7. Judgment ⚿193

Where good grounds exist for granting legal or equitable relief, judgment is given to party entitled thereto as matter of right, not of grace.

8. Equity ⚿39(1)

In equity action, court, in order to avoid unnecessary litigation, will decide all controversies arising out of matter in dispute, if possible.

9. Divorce ⚿287

A wife's default divorce judgment, erroneously refusing to approve parties' community property settlement agreement, as prayed in wife's complaint, and awarding her one dollar per month for support, not prayed for therein, should be modified on appeal by striking out support provision and substituting for provision disapproving agreement one giving it court's approval.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Clarence M. Hanson, Judge.

Action by Hazel J. Majors against William L. Majors for divorce. From provisions of a default decree refusing approval of the parties' community property settlement agreement and awarding plaintiff one dollar per month for support, defendant appeals.

Reversed for modification of judgment.

Irwin M. Fulop and Mark M. Cohen, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O. B. DeCamp, of Santa Monica, for respondent.

SHINN, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a decree of divorce in a default action. It is taken only from the provisions which refused approval of a property settlement agreement and awarded plaintiff one dollar per month for support. The marriage was without issue. Defendant's contention is that these provisions were in excess of the relief sought by the amended complaint and that they were based upon implied findings which were without support in the evidence. The action was commenced September 23, 1944; on October 6, 1944, the parties entered into a written property settlement agreement; on October 10, 1944, plaintiff filed an amended complaint; defendant accepted service but made no appearance in the action and his default was duly entered. The original complaint alleged that there was community property of unstated value, consisting of a residence, furniture and furnishings therein, an automobile and a "community interest in the Group Diagnostic Offices." The cause of action was for cruelty and the prayer was for a divorce, for an award of all the community property to plaintiff except the interest in the Group Diagnostic Offices, and for temporary and permanent alimony, attorney's fees and costs. In the amended complaint the foregoing allegations were omitted and it was alleged that the parties had entered into an agreement disposing of their property interests and that the agreement was satisfactory to plaintiff, and the prayer was for a divorce and "that the community property settlement agreement entered into between the parties be approved and that the court make its order in accordance therewith, and for such other and further relief as the court may deem just." Upon the trial it was proved that the parties had been married for a little over eight years; that defendant had been guilty of cruelty; that a property settlement agreement had been entered into under which plaintiff had conveyed her interest in the home, the furnishings and the automobile to defendant, in consideration of $500 in cash and $3,000, payable at the rate of $30 per month, evidenced by defendant's promissory note and a trust deed on the property, subject to existing encumbrances. She relinquished all other claims to property and to support. Plaintiff testified that she was working at the time of trial as a graduate nurse; that she had been so employed during all of her married life, and that she was satisfied with the terms of the property settlement agreement. She also testified that she had some small bank accounts of her own. There was no evidence as to the value of the residence, the furniture or the automobile, and no evidence as to the amount of defendant's earnings nor as to the age or condition of health of either of the parties. No suggestion was made to the court that the agreement was in any respect unreasonable or unjust to either party nor that plaintiff's consent thereto had not been given voluntarily and advisedly. At the conclusion of the trial the cause was taken under submission. The decree contained no reference to the agreement other than the provision "The property settlement agreement is not approved."

[1] The relief awarded plaintiff was in excess of that which she sought by the amended complaint; her demand for a money judgment was based upon the contract, while the judgment for support was predicated upon a statutory right which she did not assert. She did not pray for support, as such, nor allege facts which would have entitled her to it. Defendant having defaulted, the court could not properly award plaintiff a judgment for support. The late cases of Eddy v. Eddy, 1944, 64 Cal.App.2d 672, 149 P.2d 187; Peck v. Peck, 1942, 52 Cal.App.2d 792, 127 P.2d 94; and Darsie v. Darsie, 1942, 49 Cal.App.2d 491, 122 P.2d 64, hold that section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which limits the relief which may be granted in default cases to that sought by the complaint, has application to default divorce cases. Plaintiff insists that these cases should be overruled, contending that we should follow the example of the trial judge in the case at bar, who, as justice pro tempore of another division of this court, wrote the first opinion in the Darsie case, reported in 118 P.2d 898, which was reversed on rehearing, supra, 49 Cal.App.2d 491, 122 P.2d 64, and who also wrote the dissenting opinion on rehearing. Although we are impressed by the fact that the learned and sincere trial judge has the courage of his convictions, we are unable to agree with his conclusions.

The agreement contained the following provision: "It is hereby agreed that this agreement may be submitted to the court for approval in the aforesaid divorce action and shall be incorporated in any interlocutory decree of divorce rendered by such court in such proceedings, and such decree shall provide for the division of the property of the parties and payments to wife as herein provided." Defendant was justified in believing that plaintiff would not be granted relief which was altogether different from or in excess of that which she sought by her amended complaint. Even if there had been no property settlement agreement and the complaint had made a demand for a specific division of the community property, without a separate prayer for support, a decree in accordance with the demands, defendant having defaulted, would have had the force of a binding contract. Franklin v. Franklin, 1945, Cal.App.2d, 155 P.2d 637; Maxwell v. Maxwell, 1944, 66 Cal.App.2d 549, 552, 152 P.2d 530; Brown v. Brown, 1915, 170 Cal. 1, 5, 147 P. 1168. It is to be presumed that he defaulted in anticipation of the granting of a decree to plaintiff and approval of the agreement by the court and that if he and his wife had not reached an agreement he would have resisted her plea for a divorce and perhaps filed a cross-complaint for divorce. The judgment establishes plaintiff's right to receive support from defendant independently of the contract and leaves her in a position to apply at any time for an increase of the amount awarded for her support. Although by her amended complaint she limited her demands to those which were recognized by the agreement, it is her position now that she could not by an agreement with defendant waive her right to a judgment for support and that she is entitled to support in whatever amount the court may see fit to award her, and this in addition to what she is entitled to receive under the contract. While the amount of the present award is insignificant, the right which the judgment establishes in disregard of the agreement and the prayer of the amended complaint is in excess of that which plaintiff demanded, and in this respect the judgment is erroneous.

[2-4] This, however, is not the only reason why the provisions of the judgment appealed from cannot be sustained. There were issues in the case which is was necessary for the court to decide and which have not been decided. The agreement purported to adjust not only the community property rights of the parties, but it also fixed and settled plaintiff's right to receive support. By section 146 of the Civil Code it is made the duty of the court upon dissolution of the marriage to assign the community property to the respective parties in such proportions as the court, from all of the facts of the case and the condition of the parties may deem just, if the decree is rendered upon the ground of adultery, incurable insanity, or extreme cruelty, and equally between the parties if the decree is rendered upon any other ground. If there is no prayer for an assignment of the community property in the divorce action the court is not required to do anything about it. But if there is a prayer for the assignment or division of it, it is the duty of the court to decide how it should be divided and to render judgment accordingly. The action is not fully tried until this has been done. Furthermore, when plaintiff filed her action for divorce, her right to receive a judgment for support was necessarily involved. If the complaint of a wife does not pray for support or if none is awarded her by the judgment, she cannot obtain a judgment for support later. The question of her right to support by virtue of the statute must be determined in the divorce action. If the agreement which plaintiff placed in evidence was valid, she was entitled to the unpaid balance of $3500 which she was to receive for her interest in the property and in lieu of support. She could not be given a judgment for support unless the validity of the agreement had been placed in issue and it had been held invalid. The fact that the validity of the agreement was not questioned did not require the court to approve it. If the evidence had disclosed facts which caused the court to question either its validity or fairness, the parties should have been given an opportunity to raise the issue by proper pleadings and it should have been tried and determined. Plaintiff had sought approval of the agreement and had testified that she was satisfied with it. It stood in the way of any division of the community property and of any judgment for plaintiff's support contrary to or inconsistent with its provisions, and the court could not properly ignore its existence. If there was no good reason for questioning the validity or fairness of the agreement and for placing that matter in issue, then there was no good reason for refusing to approve it. In order to dispose of the matters of community property and support, the agreement had to be regarded as valid, in which case the judgment should have followed it, or it had to be found invalid and therefore ineffective to influence or control the judgment.

[5-9] Plaintiff insists that it was within the discretion of the court to approve the agreement or to refuse to approve it and to give a general judgment for support, and that no abuse of discretion has been shown. There are several answers to this contention. As already stated, the mere refusal to approve the agreement left the court in a position where the issues as to the community property and plaintiff's right to support could not be determined. The discretion of the court had to be exercised with due consideration for the pleadings and the undisputed facts in evidence; otherwise it would not have been the exercise of judicial discretion. Gossman v. Gossman, 1942, 52 Cal.App.2d 184, 126 P.2d 178. The facts before the court were those admitted by the pleadings and established by the evidence and, in addition, material facts, if any such existed, of which the court had judicial knowledge. As already stated, there was no evidence as to the value of the community property nor as to the amount of defendant's earnings or his ability to earn and to support plaintiff. The best evidence that the agreement was not unfair to plaintiff and that she had not been overreached in the settlement was her own testimony that she was satisfied. Defendant must have been satisfied, since he defaulted to the amended complaint, which prayed for approval of the agreement. The parties were competent, they had no children, and they had the benefit of counsel when they made the agreement. They had a right to separate upon their own terms and to divide their property as they wished. If they failed to make a good agreement, that was something for them to worry about and make an issue of. They wished the agreement to be approved by the court so as to foreclose future argument and litigation. While the court was not bound by their request that the agreement be approved, it was bound to render judgment in accordance with the pleadings and the evidence. It is not within the discretion of the court to refuse to give judgment declaring a right which is properly pleaded and well established by the evidence. Where good grounds exist for the granting of legal or equitable relief, judgment is given to the party entitled thereto as a matter of right and not of grace. And in equity, in order to avoid unnecessary litigation, the court will, if possible, decide all controversies arising out of the matter in dispute, which is the foundation of the equitable action. Here the parties have been left in somewhat of a predicament. Their purpose to insure to themselves an enduring peace appears to have been frustrated. Plaintiff does not complain of this. Now that she has obtained her divorce without a contest, she is willing to keep what she gets under the agreement and to obtain more if she can.

But she is entertaining false hopes. The agreement and the judgment as it stands are inconsistent and she cannot claim under both. There is, however, no need for further litigation or controversy. The judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the provision awarding plaintiff one dollar per month for her support and by substituting for the provision disapproving the agreement one which gives it the court's approval.

The provisions of the judgment appealed from are reversed for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

DESMOND, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d Supp. 862

PEOPLE v. WALTON.

Cr. A. 2102.

Appellate Department, Superior Court, Los Angeles County, California.

Aug. 23, 1945.

1. Indictment and Information ⇨119

In view of Los Angeles county ordinance, modifying curfew ordinances by eliminating inhibitions against permitting minor to stroll on, use, or be on street between certain hours, words "to be", in complaint charging violation of ordinance by permitting minor to be and remain on public highway between such hours, must be treated as mere surplusage insufficient of itself to vitiate complaint.

2. Counties ⇨21½

Omission of words "or loiters" from complaint charging violation of Los Angeles county ordinance prohibiting minor child's parent, guardian, or custodian from permitting minor to remain, stroll on, use, loiter, or be on street between certain hours without adult companion or sheriff's permit, does not affect sufficiency of complaint to state cause of action, as pleader may describe offense either in words of ordinance or words sufficient to give accused notice of offense charged. Pen.Code, § 1426.

3. Counties ⇨21½

One charged with violation of Los Angeles county ordinance by permitting minor to remain on public highway between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. without sheriff's permit or adult companion may not attack unconstitutional features of curfew legislation generally, as they do not deprive him of any right under federal Constitution.

4. Counties ⇨21½

The provisions of Los Angeles county ordinances, declaring minor's parent, guardian, or custodian, permitting minor to remain on street between certain hours without adult companion or sheriff's permit, guilty of crime, are regulatory, not prohibitory, and are intended to prevent minors from tarrying and staying unnecessarily on streets, not to restrict minors using or being on streets while going to or from places of business or amusement, as "remain" means to stay behind while others withdraw, to tarry or stay. Pen.Code, § 7, subd. 16.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Remain".

5. Counties ⇨21½

County ordinances will be presumed to have been inspired by general intention to add needed protection of public health, morals, or safety and correct some specific, if not specified, evil.

6. Counties ⇨55

County ordinances must be deemed to have been enacted in accordance with legislative body's implied powers, unless they bear unmistakable imprint of arbitrary or oppressive action or some characteristic inducement closely akin thereto.

7. Counties ⇨55

County ordinances will not be presumed to be invalid, but every intendment will be indulged in favor of their validity.

8. Constitutional law ⇨253
Counties ⇨21½

The Los Angeles county ordinances, declaring parent, guardian, or custodian of minor under 18 years old guilty of crime in permitting such minor to remain on street between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. without adult companion or sheriff's permit, are not unconstitutional as containing arbitrary and unreasonable classification discriminating in favor of adults and minors over 18 years old, and exceeding in its scope and effect county legislative body's powers under state and federal Constitutions or police power. Const.Cal. art. 1, § 1; art. 3, § 1; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

9. Constitutional law ⚷208(3)

Minors constitute a class founded on natural and extrinsic distinctions from adults, and legislation peculiarly applicable to minors, when induced by rational considerations looking to their proper protection, is not invalid as class legislation.

10. Constitutional law ⚷83(1)

A police regulation is not invalid as interfering with citizen's liberty because it prevents a person from doing something that he wants to do or might do if it were not for such regulation.

11. Constitutional law ⚷253
States ⚷4

The 14th Amendment and other parts of federal Constitution do not interfere with state's power to prescribe regulations to promote the people's health and general welfare. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14.

12. Constitutional law ⚷208(1)

Legislation limited in application in carrying out public purpose is not within constitutional prohibition of class legislation discriminating against some and favoring others, if it affects all persons similarly situated within sphere of its operation.

13. Counties ⚷21½

The provisions of Los Angeles county ordinances, authorizing sheriff to grant written permit for such use of streets by minor between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. as is reasonably necessary in sheriff's opinion after filing of written application, explaining necessity for minor remaining on street during such hours, by his parent or guardian, are not unconstitutional as unlawfully delegating to sheriff power to exempt certain persons regulated by ordinances from penalties thereof on grounds deemed sufficient by sheriff, whose discretion is not arbitrary, but based on grounds of reasonable necessity as shown by facts stated in such application.

14. Constitutional law ⚷318

The essential requirement of "due process of law" is merely that administrative officer or body be required to determine existence or nonexistence of necessary facts before making decision, and statute requiring such determination does not vest uncontrolled discretion in such officer or body.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

15. Municipal corporations ⚷122(2)

In determining constitutionality of municipal ordinances, presumption is that municipal officers will not use small powers granted them thereby villainously and for purposes of oppression and mischief.

◆

Appeal from Justice's Court of San Antonio Township; Stanley Moffatt, Judge.

Proceeding by the People against Raymond A. Walton for violation of a curfew ordinance of the County of Los Angeles by permitting a child under 18 years of age in defendant's legal care, custody, and control to be and remain on a public highway between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. without a sheriff's permit or an adult companion. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed and remanded.

Fred N. Howser, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, and Thomas A. Law, of Huntington Park, for respondent.

KINCAID, Judge.

This appeal is by the plaintiff from the judgment of dismissal by the court as to one of the defendants, Raymond A. Walton. The motion to dismiss and the order thereon were made prior to any trial and on the sole ground that the Ordinance No. 4256, New Series, of the County of Los Angeles, commonly known as the Curfew Ordinance, is wholly unconstitutional and void. The constitutional provisions claimed as violated by the ordinance are Article I, Section 1, and Article III, Section 1, of the Constitution of California, and Amendment XIV to the United States Constitution.

The complaint in question, in effect, charged the defendant Raymond A. Walton with a violation of said Ordinance No. 4256, in that, on April 7, 1945, within the County of Los Angeles, California, he did wilfully and unlawfully, while having the legal care, custody and control of Richard Walton, a minor child under the age of eighteen years, being sixteen years of age, allow and permit said child to be and remain on a named public highway between the hours of 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. the next day, said child not having then and there in his possession a permit so to do and not being then and there accompanied by a parent, guardian or other adult having the care and custody of said minor child.

[1, 2] The complaint here before us is not attacked by any motion in arrest of judgment or otherwise than upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the ordinance as previously indicated. It seems necessary, however, as Ordinance No. 4256 is an amendment only to the basic ordinance, No. 3611, dealing with the subject of "Curfew for Minors," which basic ordinance had been further substantially amended by Ordinance No. 4464, prior to the time of the commission of the alleged offense, to examine the three ordinances for the purpose of ascertaining if a criminal offense has been here properly charged.

Ordinance No. 3611, under Section 2 thereof, made it a crime for any parent, guardian, or other person having the legal care, custody, or control of any minor under the age of sixteen years to allow or permit such minor to remain, stroll upon, use, loiter on or be upon any street or public place between the hours of 9 p.m. and 4 a.m. of the following day, unless accompanied by an adult having the care and custody of such minor, or unless the minor had in his possession a permit issued by the sheriff showing the necessity of such minor to so use such street or public place. Ordinance No. 4256 had the effect of raising the applicable age of the minor from sixteen to eighteen years. Ordinance No. 4464 went into effect on or about March 30, 1945 and by this amendment the "Curfew" prohibitions were so modified as to eliminate the inhibitions against any of the included minors who "strolls upon," "uses," "or is upon" any street or public place. Acts remaining as offenses are "who remains, or loiters" upon any street, etc., or public place. This latter amendment seems to have been completely overlooked by all concerned with the trial but greatly simplifies the constitutional problem now presented to us for determination and the elimination of the prohibition against the included minors from using, strolling or being upon any street or public place within the designated hours removes much of the basis for objections raised by the defendant as to the ordinances.

The complaint herein charges the defendant with wilfully and unlawfully allowing and permitting said minor "to be and remain on" a named public highway in violation of Ordinance No. 4256. It is thus seen that that portion "to be" is no longer chargeable as a criminal offense but must be treated for the purposes here under consideration as mere surplusage which of itself does not vitiate the complaint. People v. Steelik, 1921, 187 Cal. 361, 371, 203 P. 78; People v. Meyer, 1928, 94 Cal.App. 696, 698, 271 P. 751; People v. Beesly, 1931, 119 Cal.App. 82, 86, 6 P.2d 114, 970; People v. Rose, 1938, 26 Cal.App.2d 513, 515, 79 P.2d 737. At the same time the pleader omitted from the charging clause of the complaint the words "or loiters" which would be permissible under the amendment Ordinance No. 4464. Such an omission has no legal effect on the pleading, however, in so far as stating a cause of action is concerned, as the pleader may describe the offense either in the words of the statute or in any words sufficient to give the accused notice of the offense of which he is accused. Penal Code, sec. 1426; People v. Mitchell, 1940, 40 Cal.App.2d 204, 208, 104 P.2d 545; People v. Pierce, 1939, 14 Cal.2d 639, 96 P.2d 784. The offense thus charged then is that the defendant parent did wilfully and unlawfully allow and permit his minor child to remain on a public highway in violation of the provisions of such ordinance.

[3] The motion to dismiss the complaint and the order granting such motion were based upon the unconstitutionality of the ordinances as a whole and including that portion specifically charged in the complaint as having been violated. Such motion and order are further made upon the theory that any legal attempt by way of the exercise of the police power to restrain or regulate the movements of minors upon, or use to be made by them of the public streets or public places between certain hours is an unlawful usurpation and breach of their constitutional rights and liberties as citizens. However, the defendant is not legally privileged to here attack the unconstitutional features of curfew legislation generally, they being questions which do not concern or injure him, nor have they operated to deprive him of any right under the federal Constitution. Gorieb v. Fox, 1926, 274 U.S. 603, 47 S.Ct. 675, 71 L.Ed. 1228, 53 A.L.R. 1210; Queensboro Farms Products v. Wickard, 2 Cir., 1943, 137 F.2d 969, 979; A. F. Estabrook Co. v. Industrial Accident Comm., 1918, 177 Cal. 767, 769, 177 P. 848.

[4] So far as the provisions of such ordinances do affect the defendant, we find them to be regulatory and not prohibitory. The words "remains upon" must be construed according to the context and the approved use of the language. Sec. 7, subd. 16, Penal Code. Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed., defines the word "remain" as, "To stay behind while others withdraw"; "to tarry"; "to stay." Volume 54 Corpus Juris 104 gives substantially the same definition. Such a provision is aimed then at preventing such minors from tarrying and staying unnecessarily upon the streets and public places, and does not restrict those minors who are using or are on such streets or places while actually in the process of going to or from places of business or amusement or otherwise.

[5-8] The question thus presented is whether, in so restricting and limiting the movements and personal privileges of such minors and in making the parent or person having legal control over the minor criminally responsible where he allows or permits such minor to violate the provisions of the ordinance, the Board of Supervisors of the County of Los Angeles has exceeded its legislative powers.

It is the contention of the defendant that the ordinances here in question contain an arbitrary and unreasonable classification and are discriminatory in that minors over eighteen years of age and adults are excepted from their provisions. It is further argued that there is no reasonable relationship between the evil sought to be controlled and the regulatory measures enacted for such purpose and that such legislation exceeds in its scope and effect the right of such legislative body to enact the same under either the state or federal Constitution or the police power.

In construing the validity of the ordinances in question, we are guided by the well established rule as recorded in the case of Hart v. City of Beverly Hills, 1938, 11 Cal.2d 343, 348, 79 P.2d 1080, 1083, where the court said: "In that regard, the formulated rule seems well established, in substance, that a statute having been enacted, the presumption will be indulged not only that it was inspired by a general intention to add needed protection to the health, morals, or safety of the public, but that the statute would be corrective of some specific, if not specified evil;—from which significant, if not controlling influence, has been evolved the additional principle that unless the questioned legislation bears the unmistakable imprint of arbitrary or oppressive action on the part of the legislators, or some characteristic inducement closely akin thereto, the statute must be deemed to have been enacted in accordance with the implied powers of the legislative body. In other words, no presumption of invalidity of the statute will obtain; but to the contrary, every intendment will be indulged in favor of its validity. (Citing cases.)" To the same effect see In re Spencer, 1906, 149 Cal. 396, 400, 86 P. 896, 117 Am.St.Rep. 137, 9 Ann.Cas. 110; Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 620, 636, 91 P.2d 577. Examined in this light, we find the objections of the defendant as to the validity of the ordinances to be without merit and unfounded.

[9] While no legal precedent arising in this state or in the federal courts construing so-called "Curfew" legislation relating to minors has come to our attention, it is well settled that minors constitute a class founded upon a natural and intrinsic distinction from adults; that legislation peculiarly applicable to them is necessary for their proper protection and when induced by rational considerations looking to that end its validity may not be challenged. 5 Cal.Jur. 840, sec. 199; 15 Cal.Jur. 574; In re Spencer, supra.

To that end the courts have repeatedly upheld the right of legislative bodies to enact such laws. Former sections 272 and 273 of the Penal Code (now sections 1308, 1309, Labor Code St. 1937, pp. 222, 223) were upheld in the case of In re Weber, 1906, 149 Cal. 392, 86 P. 809. Under these laws parents and persons having control over minors under sixteen years of age are prohibited from causing or encouraging such minors to engage in certain businesses or to be employed at certain places. In response to the contention that such statutes were arbitrary, unreasonable in their classification, and not of uniform operation, and discriminated against those minors under sixteen in favor of those over that age, the court said: "There is no sound reason for any such criticism. The same reasoning might be applied to a large number of laws which are universally conceded to be valid and constitutional. The law providing that a male person under 21 years of age is a minor, subject to the legal disabilities of minority, might be rendered unconstitutional by the same process of reasoning. It is competent for the Legislature to provide regulations for the protection of children of immature years. The growth of a child is gradual and the age of maturity varies with different children. It is impossible for any person to fix the exact time when a child is capable of protecting itself. The legislative judgment in regard to the proper age at which such regulations shall become applicable to the child cannot be interfered with by the courts." See also In re Spencer, supra.

[10-12] The right of the legislature to enact a law requiring the uniform vaccination of school children has been upheld as being within the police power of the state. French v. Davidson, 1904, 143 Cal. 658, 77 P. 663. As was there said, 143 Cal. at page 662, 77 P. at page 664: "Police regulations generally interfere with the liberty of the citizen in one sense. To arrest a man for a breach of the peace is an interference with his liberty. It is no valid objection to a police regulation that it prevents a person from doing something that he wants to do, or that he might do if it were not for the regulation. When we have determined that the act is within the police power of the state, nothing further need be said. The rest is to be left to the discretion of the lawmaking power. * * * Nor does the fourteenth amendment or any other part of the federal Constitution interfere with the power of the state to prescribe regulations to promote the health and general welfare of the people. 'Special burdens are often necessary for general benefits.' 'Class legislation, discriminating against some, and favoring others, is prohibited, but legislation, which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation, it affects all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment.' "

The right of the state to make and enforce provisions for the compulsory education of all children is clearly recognized as is the right to enact laws classifying persons by their age for the purpose of dealing with them as dependent or delinquent persons, such as the juvenile court law and laws to prevent school children from joining fraternities. 5 Cal.Jur. 842, Par. 199.

The only case specifically dealing with a curfew law which has come to our attention is the Texas case of Ex parte McCarver, 1898, 39 Tex.Cr. 448, 46 S.W. 936, 42 L.R.A. 587, 73 Am.St.Rep. 946, noted in 43 C.J. 363. That dealt with an ordinance making it unlawful for any minor under twenty-one years of age to go upon the streets after 9 p.m., with certain exceptions. The court there held that such a rigid restriction of the right to go upon the streets was an undue invasion of the personal liberty of the citizen. The ordinances before us, however, do not restrict the right of the included minor from going upon the streets between the specified hours but only from remaining or loitering upon such streets or places. The distinction between such terms has been previously alluded to herein. If the McCarver case can be intrepreted to prevent the enactment of any regulatory curfew legislation whatsoever, which we seriously doubt, it is out of step with the great weight of authority dealing with the right of legislative bodies to pass laws properly necessary to the protection of minors.

[13-15] The defendant further argues that the instant ordinances are unconstitutional and void because they unlawfully delegate to the sheriff the power to exempt persons so regulated from their inhibitions and penalties upon any grounds which he deems sufficient. Ordinance No. 3611 as now amended provides for an exception thereto as to a minor who has in his possession a permit granted by the sheriff, obtainable subject to the following conditions:

"Section 3. If it is necessary for any minor under the age of eighteen years to remain or loiter upon any street, highway, avenue, alley, public park, or public place between the hour of nine o'clock P.M. of any day, and four o'clock A.M. of the following day, the parent or guardian of such minor may file with the Sheriff an application for a permit to allow such use of such streets, highways, alleys, or public places, at such times by such minor as is necessary.

"Section 4. The application for a permit shall: (a) Be in writing. (b) State the name and age of such minor. (c) Describe the height, weight, sex, color of eyes and hair, and other physical characteristics of such person. (d) Explain the necessity which requires such minor to remain or loiter upon the streets, highways, alleys, avenues, public parks, and public places after the hour of nine o'clock P.M.

"Section 5. After the filing of an application therefor, the sheriff may grant a permit in writing for such use of the streets, highways, alleys, avenues, parks, and public places, at such hours, by the minor described in the application, as in his opinion is reasonably necessary."

It is readily apparent that the discretion so reposed in the sheriff to grant or deny such permit is not an arbitrary, unbridled or unlimited one, but is based upon grounds of reasonable necessity as shown by the facts and reasons therefor set forth in the written application. "The essential requirement of due process is merely that the administrative officer or body be required to determine the existence on nonexistence of the necessary facts before any decision is made. If the statute requires this, it does not vest an uncontrolled discretion, and the officer or body may not act arbitrarily." People v. Globe Grain & Milling Co., 1930, 211 Cal. 121, 126, 294 P. 3, 5. In that case the Fish and Game Commission of California was given authority to grant a permit to take fish upon a showing that to do so would not deplete the species or result in waste, and it was held that such a discretion was not arbitrary or unguided so as to invalidate the statute. To the same effect, see In re Porterfield, 1944, 63 Cal.App.2d 518, 528, 147 P.2d 15, wherein the city council was given authority, after hearings, to determine the fitness of applicants for licenses to solicit for memberships in organizations, and to grant or deny such application. An ordinance prohibiting the beating of a drum within the city unless a special permit was obtained from the president of the board of trustees of the city, which permit he might grant whenever, in his judgment, the issuance of the same shall not conflict with the purposes of the ordinance, was upheld in the case of In re Flaherty, 1895, 105 Cal. 558, 38 P. 981, 27 L.R.A. 529. As was there said, 105 Cal. at page 562, 38 P. at page 982, 27 L.R.A. 529: "In dealing with this and similar questions,—such as repairs of wooden buildings within fire limits, carrying concealed weapons, using public buildings and grounds, ringing bells on buildings where many operatives are employed, haranguing on the streets by lecturers, preachers, etc., singing or playing on musical instruments on the streets, and the like,—our federal, state, and municipal governments have always recognized the practical impossibility of providing in advance for proper exceptional cases, and the necessity of giving to a public officer some discretion in the premises; and laws and ordinances based on that principle have nearly always been upheld when subjected to judicial test. Laws are not made upon the theory of the total depravity of those who are elected to administer them; and the presumption is that municipal officers will not use these small powers villainously and for purposes of oppression and mischief." In the case of In re Hartmann, 1938, 25 Cal.App.2d 55, 60, 76 P.2d 709, the ordinance was sustained which provided for a written application to canvass the community to be filed with the chief of police which was to issue on a satisfactory showing that the applicant was entitled thereto. An authorization to refuse a license by the Real Estate Commissioner of California, if he is not satisfied as to the honesty, truthfulness and good reputation of the applicant, was approved in Riley v. Chambers, 1919, 181 Cal. 589, 592, 185 P. 855. The phrase "such as he may deem necessary" was held not to confer arbitrary power in the state engineer in Tarpey v. McClure, 1923, 190 Cal. 593, 601, 213 P. 983, 987. A like holding in McDonough v. Goodcell, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 741, 746, 91 P.2d 1035, 123 A.L.R. 1205, approved the discretion left in the Insurance Commissioner to reject an application for a permit to engage in the bail bond business unless proof is submitted to him that applicant is a fit and proper person to engage in such business. To the same general effect, see Jersey Maid Milk Products Co. v. Brock, 1939, 13 Cal.2d 620, 642, 91 P.2d 599; 18 Cal.Jur. 840, sec. 142; 16 Cal.Jur. 230, sec. 29.

The judgment and order dismissing the complaint herein as against the defendant Raymond A. Walton and discharging him are hereby reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

SHAW, P. J., and BISHOP, J., concur.

26 Cal.2d 842

STEVENSON v. SAN DIEGO COUNTY.
L. A. 19351.

Supreme Court of California.
Aug. 31, 1945.

1. Appeal and error ⚿1008(3)

If interpretation of written document depends solely on language of instrument itself, trial court's construction is not binding and reviewing court will determine its meaning as a matter of law.

2. Appeal and error ⚿1008(3)

If parol evidence is necessary to explain the meaning of instrument, appellate court will follow trial court's construction if such construction is supported by the evidence.

3. Appeal and error ⚿1008(3)

Resolution by county board of supervisors requiring plaintiff and others to furnish necessary data for application for federal funds to finance construction and remodeling of county buildings without charge to county and contracts previously entered into by county with plaintiff for architectural services in connection with same project, when read together, did not establish as matter of law the work required of plaintiff by resolution was identical with that performed under contracts.

4. Counties ⚿129

Evidence that services, rendered by plaintiff under resolution by county board of supervisors requiring him and others to furnish necessary data for application for federal funds to finance construction and remodeling of county buildings, were different from those theretofore performed by him under contracts with county for architectural services and that he did not intend to waive right to compensation under contracts, supported trial court's finding that the only work to be done free of charge by plaintiff under resolution was work in addition to that provided for in contracts.

5. Counties ⚿129

Where contract with county for architectural services provided for progress payments to architect as work progressed and reserved to county right to abandon work at any time upon payment of compensation earned up to time of abandonment, architect's action against county, upon its abandonment of the contracts, was on the contracts and not for damages for breach of contracts.

6. Counties ⚿127

Where contract with county for architectural services provided for progress payments to architect as work progressed and reserved to county right to abandon work at any time upon payment of compensation earned to time of abandonment, approval by county of preliminary plans and estimates fixed architect's right to recover initial percentage payments provided therefor under contracts, notwithstanding subsequent abandonment by county.

7. Counties ⚿127

Architect, by contracting with federal agency which took over construction of county buildings to serve as architect on the project at a fixed fee, did not thereby lose right to compensation under previous contract with county for preparation of preliminary plans and estimates for such buildings previously approved by county.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Robert B. Burch, Judge.

Action by F. W. Stevenson against County of San Diego to recover for services rendered as an architect. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Prior opinion, App., 155 P.2d 688.

Thomas Whelan, Dist. Atty., Frank T. Dunn, Asst. Dist. Atty., and Carroll H. Smith, Chief Trial Deputy Dist. Atty., all of San Diego, for appellant.

George H. Stone, Monroe & McInnis, and C. M. Monroe, all of San Diego, for respondent.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

Plaintiff, an architect, was employed by defendant county to prepare preliminary plans and estimates, working plans and specifications and to supervise the construction of a group of buildings for a tuberculosis sanitarium. Upon approval of the preliminary plans and estimates plaintiff was to be paid 1½ per cent of the estimated cost of construction. A second contract with the county employed plaintiff to do similar work in connection with alterations and additions to county hospital buildings.

Under this employment plaintiff was to receive an initial payment of 2½ per cent of the cost. Subsequent progress payments provided for in the contracts are not involved here. In the event of abandonment of the projects, plaintiff was to be paid the amount earned up to that time.

Plaintiff prepared preliminary plans and estimates for the work and the county decided to seek federal aid to finance construction. Accordingly, on July 14, 1941, the board of supervisors passed a resolution directing that an application be made to the Federal Works Agency for financial assistance. The resolution, among other things, authorized and directed certain county officers and plaintiff, as architect, to furnish "the necessary data and information" required in the application for federal financial aid, plaintiff's services "in this matter to be without charge to the county." Plaintiff and the others named in the resolution assembled the required data and information from the plans theretofore prepared by him, subject to such changes as were necessary to comply with government requirements. This data and information were placed on a form of application furnished by the government and copies of the modified preliminary plans were attached. The application and attached exhibits, including plaintiff's preliminary plans and estimates, were approved by the board of supervisors in August, 1941.

The federal government did not approve the entire proposed project but agreed to finance the construction of two new buildings and the remodeling of two buildings, for which it appropriated $620,000 and $60,500, respectively. The new construction was to be done under federal contract and the remodeling work was to be done under contracts let by the county. In February, 1942, the federal government employed plaintiff by contract to act as architect on the new construction work for a fee of $29,760. Later, because of differences between them, the county terminated plaintiff's contracts and he brought this action to recover for services rendered to the county thereunder. The trial court found for plaintiff on all material issues and entered judgment in his favor for $21,539.10, representing the aggregate of four items or amounts which plaintiff alleged he was entitled to recover under his contracts.

In his attack upon the judgment the county contends that its resolution of July 14, 1941, which directed plaintiff to furnish the necessary data and information for the application for federal funds and provided that his services in connection therewith were to be without charge, modified the contracts and relieved the county of any obligation to pay for the preliminary plans and estimates theretofore prepared by plaintiff. The county argues that the resolution is clear on its face and as a matter of law forecloses recovery by plaintiff for services performed under the contracts. It is plaintiff's position that the work done pursuant to the resolution was different from and in addition to the services rendered in the preparation of the preliminary plans and estimates, and that the finding of the court to this effect is supported by the evidence.

[1] It is settled that if the interpretation of a written document depends solely upon the language of the instrument itself the trial court's construction is not binding and a reviewing court will determine its meaning as a matter of law. Moore v. Wood, Cal.Sup., 160 P.2d 772.

[2] On the other hand, if parol evidence is necessary to explain the meaning of an instrument, an appellate court will follow the trial court's construction if it is supported by the evidence. Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v. Horton & Converse, 21 Cal. 2d 411, 430, 132 P.2d 457; Eastman Oil, etc., Corporation v. Lane-Wells Co., 21 Cal. 2d 872, 875, 136 P.2d 564.

[3, 4] When the resolution and contracts are read together it cannot be said as a matter of law that the work directed by the resolution was identical with that performed under the contracts. Plaintiff testified that the services rendered under the resolution were not the same as those theretofore performed by him under the contracts and that although he was willing, without charge, to aid the county in preparing the application for federal funds, it was not his intention to thereby waive his right to compensation under the contracts. The evidence supports the conclusion of the trial court "that it was intended and understood by said resolution that the only work expected to be done free of charge by plaintiff was work in addition to that provided for in his said contracts."

[5, 6] Nor do we find merit in the county's contention that the action is for damages for breach of contract and that, if entitled to recover at all, plaintiff is only entitled to his prospective profits and not to the full amount of the earned percentages. As stated above, plaintiff was entitled to progress payments under the contracts. The county was given the right to abandon, conditioned, however, upon payment of the compensation then earned. The approval by the county of the preliminary plans and estimates in August, 1941, therefore fixed plaintiff's right to recover the initial percentage payments under the contracts.

The county makes a further contention with respect to an item of $15,500, included in the judgment, which represents the initial progress payment of 2½ per cent of $620,000 which the federal government allotted as the cost of construction of the two new buildings. It is argued that this item was improperly allowed because it assertedly covers compensation for services for which plaintiff received payment under his contract with the federal government. It is claimed that plaintiff's contract with the federal government contemplated the preparation of preliminary plans and that a portion of the fee therein fixed consequently served as compensation therefor. Upon this premise the county concludes that by entering into the federal contract plaintiff evidenced his intention to abandon any claim he might have under his prior contract with the county for the preparation of the preliminary plans.

The trial court found that the preliminary plans were prepared pursuant to the second contract between plaintiff and the county; that he was entitled to the specified 2½ per cent fee upon approval by the board of supervisors in August, 1941; and that plaintiff's later contract with the federal government did not include any compensation for such plans.

[7] It is argued by the county that the provision in plaintiff's contract with the government requiring him to furnish certain "preliminary documents" in connection with the working drawings is evidence that he consented to look to the government for payment of services rendered the county in the preparation of "preliminary plans and estimates." It appears, however, that the "preliminary documents" referred to are not the same as the preliminary plans and estimates, which had theretofore been furnished the government in connection with the county's application for funds. There is no evidence that the federal government by undertaking to finance the construction of the project also obligated itself to pay for the preparation of the preliminary plans that accompanied the application for financial aid. The project engineer employed by the Federal Works Agency, who was in charge of the transaction in question, testified that preliminary plans and sketches accompanying an application for federal aid must be furnished by the applicant without cost to the federal government. As stated above, the plans had been previously prepared under plaintiff's contract with the county, which had agreed to pay for them. Later, and upon approval of the county's application for funds, the federal government took over the construction work and in accordance with its established procedure made its own contract for architectural services incident thereto. Although the contract for such services was executed with plaintiff, it need not have been, since the federal government was free to employ any architect it desired. If an architect other than plaintiff had been employed by the federal government, it could not be successfully urged that as a consequence plaintiff lost his right to compensation for the services he had rendered the county, and the fact that the federal government contracted for plaintiff's services in connection with the construction work did not deprive plaintiff of the right to be compensated by the county for the preparation of the preliminary plans and estimates.

Plaintiff's claim that he is not receiving double compensation is further supported by an analysis of his contracts with the county and the federal government. Following the approval by the federal agency of the county's application for financial aid plaintiff proceeded under his subsequently executed contract with the federal government to prepare working plans and specifications. Under his contract with the county, plaintiff was entitled to receive (1) upon approval of the preliminary plans, the sum of $15,500, being 2½ per cent of $620,000, the estimated cost of construction, (2) upon the completion of the working drawings, an additional 5 per cent, or $31,000. Therefore, if plaintiff had proceeded solely under the county contract he would have received a total of $46,500 from the county for the preparation of preliminary plans and working drawings. Under the federal contract, however, he received for the working drawings a total of $29,760. This figure is a little short of, but approximately offsets, the $31,000 he would have received under his county contract for the preparation of the working drawings.

The judgment is affirmed.

SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

26 Cal.2d 847

WOOD v. SAMARITAN INSTITUTION, Inc.

L. A. 19364.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 31, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑989, 927(7)

On plaintiff's appeal from a judgment for defendant upon a directed verdict, Supreme Court could consider only the evidence most favorable to plaintiff together with every inference which could reasonably be drawn and every presumption which could fairly be deemed to arise therefrom in support of plaintiff

2. Hospitals 🔑7

The extent and character of care that a hospital owes its patients depends on circumstances of each particular case.

3. Hospitals 🔑7

A private hospital owes its patients the duty of protection and must exercise such reasonable care toward a patient as his known condition may require.

4. Hospitals 🔑7

The measure of duty that a hospital owes its patients is to exercise that degree of care, skill, and diligence used by hospitals generally in that community and required by express or implied contract of the undertaking.

5. Hospitals 🔑7

A hospital is liable for want of ordinary care, whether from incompetency of a nurse or failure in duty by a fully qualified nurse.

6. Hospitals 🔑7

The duty of care imposed on a hospital extends to safeguarding the patient from dangers due to mental incapacity.

7. Hospitals 🔑7

A private hospital is not an insurer of patient's safety, and the rules as to care required are limited by rule that no one is required to guard against or take measures to avert that which a reasonable person under the circumstances would not anticipate as likely to happen.

8. Hospitals 🔑8

Evidence presented question for jury as to whether plaintiff, during hours between her arrival at defendant's sanitarium for treatment as a chronic alcoholic and time she received her injuries when she jumped or fell through window, was in a condition from which a reasonable person could conclude that she might do harm to herself unless restrained, so as to establish negligence on part of defendant in failing to restrain plaintiff.

9. Hospitals 🔑7

Generally, where evidence establishes that means of harm were at hand and that operator of hospital had notice or knowledge of facts from which it might reasonably be concluded that the patient would be likely to harm herself or others unless preclusive measures were taken, operator of hospital must use reasonable care in the circumstances to prevent such harm.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Ruben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Florence Margaret Wood against the Samaritan Institution, Incorporated, for injuries sustained by plaintiff when she fell or jumped through a window in defendant's sanitarium. From a judgment for defendant upon a directed verdict, the plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion 156 P.2d 470.

F. Murray Keslar, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Chas. E. R. Fulcher, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for defendant entered upon a verdict directed by the court after plaintiff had rested following presentation of her evidence in this action to recover for injuries suffered by her when she fell or jumped through a second-floor window of the sanitarium conducted by defendant for the cure of chronic alcoholics. In her complaint plaintiff charges that defendant was negligent in failing to guard and restrain her and in failing to properly guard or bar the window of her second-story room to prevent her plunging through the window to the ground below. Plaintiff contends, among other things, that her evidence constituted a prima facie showing of negligence by defendant, entitling plaintiff to have the case go to the jury. Such contention must be sustained.

[1] According to established principles it is our duty, in determining an appeal from a judgment entered on a directed verdict, to consider only the evidence most favorable to plaintiff, together with every inference which can reasonably be drawn and every presumption which can fairly be deemed to arise therefrom in support of plaintiff. See Anthony v. Hobbie, 1945, 25 Cal.2d 814, 817, 155 P.2d 826; Lashley v. Koerber, 1945, 26 Cal.2d 83, 156 P. 2d 441.

From the evidence it appears that for several years prior to January 5, 1943, plaintiff had been addicted to the excessive use of intoxicating liquor, and that on such date, between the hours of 9 and 9:30 o'clock in the evening, she voluntarily entered defendant's sanitarium to submit herself to treatment. Nursing attendance is maintained in the sanitarium for twenty-four hours each day. Mrs. Nellie Henke, a practical nurse who was on duty as an employee of defendant sanitarium between the hours of 4 p.m. and 12 midnight, testified that at the time of plaintiff's entry plaintiff "sort of seemed drowsy * * * I thought myself she carried on. * * * She was highly nervous and she told me she was afraid she was in the insane asylum." When Mrs. Henke came back on duty the following afternoon plaintiff "said she believed she felt a little better and she seemed brighter at the time, but later on she had delusions and carried on all evening. * * * She would talk about them. She thought she was in the insane asylum. She wanted to get out because she thought she was in the insane asylum." The witness reported these facts to the nurses from whom she received her instructions but they did not "tell me to do anything at that time." Later the same evening the witness found plaintiff "on the floor. She thought she was home scrubbing her floor and I had an awful time convincing her she was not, and I finally got her up in bed." The witness then explained to the nurses how plaintiff "was acting" and the subject of placing restraints on plaintiff was discussed. However, "they said the next shift [which came on at midnight] would take care of it." Before the witness went off duty she discussed with the nurse who came on duty at midnight "about her [plaintiff] being on the floor scrubbing and they came on and I went home." However, no restraints were placed upon plaintiff, and at 12:45 a.m. on January 7, 1943, she was found lying on the cement courtyard beneath the window of her second-story room, suffering from the injuries for which she now seeks recovery.

From other evidence it appears that during the approximately twenty-seven hours that plaintiff had been in the sanitarium she had, pursuant to orders of a physician employed by defendant, received treatment consisting of the administration hypodermically of certain drugs and chemicals and the drinking of various intoxicating liquors, and that on January 6, 1943, and prior to the time plaintiff received her injuries, such physician had ordered for plaintiff "Nourish—Sedatives—Restraint PRN" which abbreviation he stated, means "as the occasion requires." He further testified, "I think the nurse would be justified in putting on restraints if the patients were injuring themselves or attempting to. * * * I recall I wanted her placed in restraint for her own protection." The physician testified also that he had never seen "A confirmed alcoholic mind" that followed "a normal pattern. * * * You cannot determine what an alcoholic will do from one time to another," that you cannot "determine in advance what action" an alcoholic "person is going to take," that in defendant's sanitarium persons with delusions were not always put under restraint, and that restraint was used only when a patient's delusions "indicate a desire to injure someone else" or for the patient's "own protection." On the chart upon which the sanitarium recorded plaintiff's condition appears the following notation under date of January 5: "4:30 a.m. Patient delusional—persecution complex."

Mrs. Henke testified further that there were three large windows in plaintiff's room with double screens that "pull together" and could be pushed "back and forth." The screens were "closed * * * on the outside" but "together in the center." They overlapped and were locked on each side of the window. When so locked they could not be moved "unless you pushed them out." The windows were open and "hanging loose."

Plaintiff's sister testified that she visited plaintiff at defendant's sanitarium for about forty-five minutes during the afternoon of January 6, 1943, but plaintiff failed to recognize her and "just laid there with the covers up to her neck and she was staring at the ceiling, and I spoke and she didn't look one way or the other; just stared all the time." This witness testified also that there were no nurses in sight on either the first or the second floor when she entered the sanitarium and it was necessary for her to find her way alone to plaintiff's room; that during her forty-five-minute visit to plaintiff only one nurse entered plaintiff's room and such nurse remained for "about two minutes" and then left and did not reappear.

Dr. Homer O. Zumwalt, an osteopathic physician and surgeon, licensed and practicing in this state since 1930, experienced in the methods of treating alcoholics at the various hospitals in Los Angeles and acquainted with the kinds and types of restraints that are used on various alcoholic patients and of the nursing conditions required in the various institutions in which alcoholics are treated, testified as follows:

"Any patient who is in a mental condition to make him or herself dangerous to themselves or to others, should be in some way restrained. * * *

"Q. As I understand it, if they are dangerous because of their mental aberrations and apt to do injury to themselves or any other person, then they should be put in restraint? A. They should be protected, yes * * *

"Q. It is only those persons who have a tendency to injure themselves or somebody else that should be placed under restraint ordinarily; isn't that the test? A. I would add to that the qualification that they would be a patient that might be afraid to injure themselves or some one else."

[2-7] As stated in 41 C.J.S., Hospitals, § 8(3), p. 349, "The extent and character of the care that a hospital owes its patients depends on the circumstances of each particular case. A private hospital owes its patients the duty of protection, and must exercise such reasonable care toward a patient as his known condition may require. The measure of duty of a hospital is to exercise that degree of care, skill, and diligence used by hospitals generally in that community, and required by the express or implied contract of the undertaking. A hospital is liable for want of ordinary care, whether from incompetency of a nurse or failure in duty by a fully qualified nurse. * * * The duty of care imposed on a hospital extends to safeguarding the patient from dangers due to mental incapacity. * * * On the other hand, a private hospital is not an insurer of a patient's safety, and the rules as to care required are limited by the rule that no one is required to guard against or take measures to avert that which a reasonable person under the circumstances would not anticipate as likely to happen."

[8] Despite the above epitomized evidence defendant argues that no showing was made by plaintiff from which a jury could justifiably conclude that plaintiff was in a condition in which she might reasonably be expected by defendant to do harm to herself or to another, and that therefore the court correctly instructed the jury that defendant was not liable to plaintiff for the injuries she has sustained. However, it appears to us that plaintiff's evidence if believed by a jury is not as a matter of law insufficient to establish that plaintiff during the hours between her arrival at defendant's sanitarium and the time she received her injuries, was in a condition from which a reasonable person could conclude that she might do harm to herself unless restrained and that such condition was known to and recognized by defendant's attendants who were charged with the care of plaintiff. The whole of such evidence points to the fact that the behavior of one in plaintiff's condition could not be foretold with any degree of certainty and that, as reported by Mrs. Henke, the practical nurse, to her superiors in the sanitarium, plaintiff "thought she was in the insane asylum. She wanted to get out because she thought she was in the insane asylum." Thereafter, even though the matter of restraints was discussed among the nurses and even though the physician in charge had ordered "restraint" as the occasion required, and testified that he wanted plaintiff "placed in restraint for her own protection," no measures were taken to prevent plaintiff from attempting to escape from the sanitarium either by leaping through a window, or otherwise. The windows in plaintiff's room were open, apparently the screens could be opened by "pushing them out," plaintiff was not physically restrained in any way from leaving her bed, and no nurse was in sufficiently close attendance upon her to prevent her from attempting to leave the sanitarium. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that as a matter of law plaintiff's evidence failed to establish the negligence with which she charges defendant. The issue presented should have been resolved as one of fact rather than as one of law.

[9] Defendant cites the cases of Papini v. Alexander Sanitarium, Inc., 1936, 12 Cal.App.2d 249, 55 P.2d 270, and Wilbur v. Emergency Hospital Ass'n., 1915, 27 Cal. App. 751, 151 P. 155, in support of its contention that plaintiff's evidence would fail to sustain a verdict in her favor. It is sufficient to observe that those two cases and the evidence there considered differ factually from the case here before us to such an extent as to have no persuasive force in defendant's favor. We have also reviewed at some length cases from other jurisdictions cited by both plaintiff and defendant, in which likewise the factual situations differ. From them can be drawn, however, the general proposition that where, as here, plaintiff's evidence establishes that the means of harm were at hand (existent in the physical surroundings) and that defendant had notice or knowledge of facts from which it might reasonably be concluded that a patient would be likely to harm himself or others unless preclusive measures were taken, then defendant must use reasonable care in the circumstances to prevent such harm. As stated above, we are satisfied that plaintiff's evidence, if believed by a jury, is sufficient for such purpose.

Because of our conclusion that for the reasons stated hereinabove the judgment must be reversed it becomes unnecessary to consider other points raised by plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 728

BUTLER v. BELL OIL & REFINING CO.

Civ. 14908.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 7, 1945.

1. Automobiles ⚷121

The Highway Carriers' Act authorizes licensed highway contract carrier or its assignee to sue shipper for difference between minimum transportation rate prescribed by State Railroad Commission and lower rate agreed to and accepted by carrier when transportation service was rendered. St. 1935, p. 878, as amended.

2. Automobiles ⚷121

The provision of Highway Carriers' Act, authorizing licensed highway contract carrier to recover from shipper difference between minimum transportation rate prescribed by State Railroad Commission and rate paid by shipper under contract with carrier, is not regulation of shipper, but merely incident in aid of effective enforcement of commission's order fixing rates, so that notice to shipper of hearings before commission for such purpose is unnecessary. St.1935, p. 878, as amended.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Jess E. Stephens, Judge.

Action by J. P. Butler, as assignee for collection of the Bradley Truck Company, against the Bell Oil & Refining Company for the difference between the minimum rate, prescribed by the State Railroad Commission for transportation of crude oil from certain wells to defendant's refinery, and a lower rate paid by defendant under a contract with assignor. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

John W. Preston, Oliver O. Clark, and Robert A. Smith, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Henry W. Wyatt and Elmo L. Morris, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FOX, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, who brought this action as the assignee for collection of the Bradley Truck Company. Plaintiff's assignor was at all times herein engaged in business as a licensed highway contract carrier under the Highway Carriers' Act (Stats. 1935, Chap. 223, p. 878, as amended by Stats. of 1937, p. 2006 and 1939, p. 1814, respectively; Deering's Gen.Laws, Act 5129a, as amended), transporting property for compensation by motor vehicle over the public highways of the state. As such highway contract carrier, plaintiff's assignor transported crude oil for defendant (and its predecessor) from certain wells to defendant's refinery. It charged and collected freight charges less than the minimum rates prescribed by the California Railroad Commission for such services. Plaintiff, therefore, seeks to recover the difference between the legally prescribed rate and the rate paid by the defendant pursuant to a purported contract with said carrier.

[1] In the language of the appellant, "the sole question here presented is: Does the Highway Carriers' Act permit a suit by the carrier to collect from the shipper a higher rate of transportation than that solemnly agreed to and accepted by it at the time the service was rendered?" This question has been answered in the affirmative by the recent decision of this court in the case of Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., 1945, 68 Cal.App.2d 725, 158 P.2d 23. It was there stated (68 Cal.App.2d at page 730, 158 P.2d at page 25): "The schedule of minimum rates * * * [established by the Railroad Commission] became a part of every contract between a highway contract carrier and the shipper. [Citing cases.] The tariff applicable, on the facts, to any particular shipment cannot be changed by an agreement between the parties * * * and the carrier or it assignee is entitled to collect the proper rate. [Citing authorities.] Otherwise the statute would be ineffectual for the purpose for which it was enacted."

[2] The only argument here advanced that was not presented in the Gardner case is that the Act does not and was not intended to regulate the conduct of the shipper; that to enforce the tariff established by the Railroad Commission against the appellant is, in effect, to regulate the shipper, and that said tariff is not binding on appellant because the Act does not require notice to be given to the shipper. It is true, as stated in Entremont v. Whitsell, 1939, 13 Cal. 2d 290, 300, 89 P.2d 392, 397, that "The statute does not cover shippers, but carriers * * *." The collection of undercharges, however, is simply a step toward making the authorized regulation of highway carriers more effective. It is in furtherance of the purposes of the Act, among which are the establishment of just and reasonable rates and the prevention of discrimination. Gardner v. Rich Mfg. Co., supra, 68 Cal. App.2d at page 725, 158 P.2d 23. As pointed out in Johnson v. L. B. Hartz Stores, 1938, 202 Minn. 132, 277 N.W. 414, 416, "the permitting of such a recovery is a much more effective way of enforcing the law than any other could possibly be." Fines and penalties may be imposed on the carrier for violating the minimum schedule of rates fixed by the commission but, as is also pointed out in the Johnson case, "the pressure of the shippers upon the carriers for reduced rates in violation of the statute will almost entirely be relieved if the shippers know that notwithstanding any illegal bargain that is made, recovery may still be had on the basis of the minimum rate fixed by the commission. Collusion between the carrier and the shipper to circumvent the law, which would otherwise be easy of accomplishment, will be practically eliminated." 277 N.W. at page 416. The fact that the shipper has to pay the difference between a legally established rate (appellant does not dispute the legality of the tariff here involved), and a lesser rate for which he was able to bargain privately, does not mean that the shipper is being regulated. It is merely an incident in aid of the effective enforcement of the Railroad Commission's order. Hence, notice to the shipper of the hearings before the commission for the purpose of fixing a schedule of minimum rates for highway contract carriers is not necessary. If appellant's theory were sound and carried to its logical conclusion, it would follow that acts of the legislature would not be binding on those who did not have notice of such contemplated legislation. This, of course, is not the law.

Appellant relies on Entremont v. Whitsell, supra, 13 Cal.2d 290, 89 P.2d 392. We find nothing in that case which supports a conclusion different from that herein reached. It might, however, be noted that the court there upheld the order of the Railroad Commission which required the carrier to collect the amount of the undercharges.

The judgment is affirmed.

DESMOND, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 705

GEISENDORFER v. RAINBOW MILL & LUMBER CO.

Civ. 7155; Sac. 5709.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 5, 1945.

Hearing Denied Nov. 1, 1945.

1. Corporations 🔑389

The authorized business of a corporation must be determined primarily from the provisions of its charter or articles of incorporation.

2. Corporations 🔑596

A lumber corporation which had abandoned its primary purpose of incorporation for a long period of time was not "doing business" as a lumber corporation so as to prevent dissolution at suit of a minority stockholder because it owned stock in another lumber corporation which was not a subsidiary corporation of the former corporation. Civ.Code, §§ 278, 404(B) (1), (E).

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Doing Business".

3. Corporations 🔑377(2)

Corporate charter provision authorizing lumber corporation to acquire and vote shares and obligations of other corporations did not constitute the corporation a "holding corporation" authorizing it to carry on the business of buying or selling stocks and bonds as an occupation distinct from its primary business of manufacturing lumbering products. Civ.Code, § 278.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Holding Corporation".

4. Corporations 🔑614(5)

In stockholder's suit for dissolution of corporation, testimony offered to ascertain what activities corporation had engaged in in recent years, so that court could determine by independent construction of charter whether corporation had abandoned for more than one year business it was authorized by its charter to perform, was properly admitted. Civ.Code, § 404(B) (1), (E).

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James M. Allen, Judge.

Suit by H. A. Geisendorfer, a minority stockholder, against Rainbow Mill & Lumber Company, Incorporated, to procure the involuntary dissolution of the corporation on ground of abandonment of business for more than one year. From an adverse judgment, defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

C. J. Luttrell and J. Everett Barr, both of Yreka, and Carlton & Shadwell, of Redding, for appellant.

Roy A. Weaver, of Dunsmuir, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice.

This is a suit instituted by a minority stockholder of the defendant Rainbow Mill and Lumber Company, a corporation, under Section 404(B) (1) of the Civil Code, to procure the involuntary dissolution of the corporation on the ground that it had "abandoned its business for more than one year." The judgment was rendered in the alternative, pursuant to Subdivision (E) of that section as amended in 1941. It provides that unless the holders of 50% of the outstanding shares of stock vote to purchase stock belonging to plaintiff at a fair cash value thereof, and notify him to that effect within ten days from the entry and notice of judgment, the corporation shall become dissolved. No such notice of proposed purchase of stock was served. The decree of dissolution became effective. From that judgment the defendant has appealed.

It is urged that the findings and judgment are not supported by the evidence for the chief reasons that it does not appear the corporation abandoned its business for more than a year prior to the commencement of the action, or that it mismanaged its business, and that the court erred in receiving oral evidence to vary the terms of the charter.

In the sixth finding of fact the court determined:

"That the defendant corporation had abandoned its business for more than one year prior to the filing plaintiff's complaint for dissolution in this action; that no Corporate meetings of the stockholders or directors of said Corporation had been held for more than one (1) year prior to the filing of said complaint; that all of the physical assets of said Company have been sold; that all of the operating assets of said Company used in the operation of its sawmill and lumbering business were sold by said Company in the year 1921, and said Company has not since said date engaged in the lumber manufacturing or sawmill business; that the defendant Corporation has not engaged in any business for more than one (1) year prior to the filing of plaintiff's complaint."

In the ninth finding of fact the court further determined:

"That those in control of the Corporation have been guilty of persistent abuse of authority and unfairness toward the plaintiff and have used their control of said Corporation for purposes personal to the majority stockholders and without benefit but to the contrary thereof to the detriment of the plaintiff and said Corporation."

We are of the opinion the findings and judgment are adequately supported by the evidence. The defendant is a California corporation organized prior to 1921, primarily to operate a logging and lumber business, with its principal place of business in Siskiyou County. For a number of years the defendant did actively conduct a lumber and logging business. There were 40,000 shares of capital stock issued and outstanding. At, and for sometime prior to, the commencement of this action, the plaintiff owned 11,561.81 shares, which was one-third of the outstanding stock. There is some evidence that the stock was worth about $35 per share. There were 8,375 shares held as treasury stock. Frank, Joe and Tom Ball, who are members of the same family, owned and controlled more than 50% of the stock. Frank Ball was the President of the corporation. In November, 1921, the "Mill Plant" was sold for $18,000. About the same time the "Logging Equipment" was sold to Pioneer Box Company, another corporation, for $16,500, in which company Frank Ball owned a one-ninth interest. Since the last-mentioned sales of the equipment, assets and property of the defendant corporation, it did not engage in further logging or lumber business.

The Pioneer Box Company was succeeded in 1928 by the Mt. Shasta Pine Manufacturing Company, which assumed its indebtedness to Rainbow Mill and Lumber Company for the milling equipment purchased. The Mt. Shasta Company issued and delivered to the defendant corporation 401 shares of its capital stock in payment of that debt. That stock is still held by the defendant. No dividends have been declared or paid upon defendant's stock since 1937. That Mt. Shasta stock is the only property held by the defendant. It is not contended the defendant corporation has engaged in or operated a logging or lumber business since it disposed of its milling plant, equipment and property prior to 1928.

The board of directors of the defendant corporation passed a resolution after the sale of its property, directing the procuring of dissolution of the corporation. The President, Mr. Frank Ball, failed and refused to proceed to procure a dissolution because, as he testified, "I believe to dissolve the Rainbow Corporation would have a bad effect on the value of this [Mt. Shasta Company] stock held by Rainbow." He said he considered the Rainbow Mill and Lumber Company was engaged in doing business for which it was incorporated because it was holding the 401 shares of Mt. Shasta Pine Manufacturing Company upon which "It has been keeping a watchful eye on this business that they own stock in." It is conceded that no stockholders' meeting of the defendant corporation has been held since 1937. It has not pretended to carry on or operate a logging or lumber business since 1928.

[1-3] The important issue on this appeal is the question of whether a lumber corporation which has abandoned its primary purpose of incorporation for a long period of time may be considered as maintaining its lumber business merely because it owns stock in another corporation. We think that question must be answered in the negative. The authorized business of a corporation must be determined primarily from the provisions of its charter or articles of incorporation. Silveira v. Associated Milk Producers, 63 Cal.App. 572, 219 P. 461; 6A Cal.Jur. 143, sec. 60. The first article of the defendant's charter clearly indicates that the purpose of the corporation was to conduct a logging and lumber manufacturing business. It reads:

"1. To carry on the business of lumber manufacturing in all its branches, and for the purpose to acquire by purchase or otherwise, and to operate, logging camps and equipment; to log timber lands for itself or others under contract or otherwise; to purchase, construct, or otherwise acquire, and to operate, sawmills, planing mills, and any or all kinds of factories for lumber and wood-working; and generally to do all things necessary or convenient for the complete operation of a lumber manufacturing business."

Incidental to the operation and maintenance of a lumber and logging business, article six of the charter authorizes the corporation:

"To subscribe for, purchase, or otherwise acquire, and hold with the same rights of ownership therein, including the right to vote the same, as may be permitted to natural persons, the shares, bonds and obligations of any corporation organized under the laws of any state, * * *."

Clearly the last quoted article did not constitute the defendant a "holding corporation" authorizing it to carry on the business or traffic in buying and selling stocks and bonds as an occupation separate and distinct from its primary business of logging and manufacturing lumber products. The Mt. Shasta Pine Manufacturing Company, in which the defendant held 401 shares of stock, was not a subsidiary corporation of the Rainbow Mill and Lumber Company. Civil Code, sec. 278; People v. Alexander Goldstein Co., 66 Cal.App.2d 771, 774, 152 P.2d 1016. It has been held a corporation which is organized for the chief purpose of conducting a specified mercantile or manufacturing business, with the incidental right to acquire or hold notes, stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness, may not be deemed to be "doing business" merely because it holds such stock or maintains a suit to collect indebtedness due to it, after the business property has been sold and the maintenance of the business has been abandoned for years. Van Oss v. Premier Petroleum Co., 113 Me. 180, 93 A. 72; People ex rel. Butterick Co. v. Gilchrist, 213 App.Div. 533, 211 N.Y.S. 75, 77; Rose v. Nunnally Inv. Co., 5 Cir., 22 F.2d 102; Chile Copper Co. v. Edwards, D.C., 294 F. 581; Three Forks Coal Co. v. United States, D.C., 9 F.2d 946; 13 Words and Phrases, Perm.Ed., p. 194.

[4] Conceding, without so deciding, that the articles must necessarily determine the purpose for which the corporation was organized and authorized to do business, and that oral evidence is incompetent by means of which to vary the terms of the charter, we are of the opinion the court did not err in the admission of evidence tending to vary the terms of the charter. The challenged evidence was offered for the purpose of determining what business, if any, the corporation engaged in during the fifteen years which had elapsed after its lumbering equipment and mill property had been sold. Objections were made to plaintiff's question propounded to Mr. Ball, the President of the corporation, as follows:

"Q. Mr. Ball, isn't it true that the Rainbow Corporation is not engaged in the lumber business at all since the transfers were made as shown by the minutes we were just discussing?"

The preceding question was followed by the inquiry:

"Q. Is it your opinion * * * Mr. Ball, that the Rainbow Corporation was in the lumber business by reason of being a stockholder in another lumber company? * * * A. Yes, I think so."

It will be observed those questions do not call for evidence to vary the terms of the charter. On the contrary, they sought to elicit an admission that the corporation had not engaged in "the lumber business" since it disposed of its logging and lumber equipment and property. That seemed to be a conceded fact, for the President, Mr. Ball, explained that he assumed the corporation had not abandoned its lumber and logging business, in spite of its disposal of all other property, because it still held 401 shares of stock "in another lumber company." The foregoing questions were merely propounded to ascertain what activities the corporation had engaged in so as to determine by an independent construction of the charter whether it had abandoned for more than one year the business it was authorized by its charter to perform. The rulings of the court in that regard were not erroneous.

In view of what we have previously said, it is unnecessary to determine whether there is sufficient evidence to support the findings that the directors of the corporation mismanaged the business.

The judgment for dissolution and liquidation of the corporation appears to have been justified by ample proof that it is for the necessary protection and best interest of a minority stockholder who owns one-third of the capital stock of the corporation. We find no reversible error in the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

ADAMS, P. J., and PEEK, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 740

HICKS v. HAITIAN COFFEE CO. et al.

Civ. 14926.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 13, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑948

Relief cannot be granted by appellate court from an order denying a motion for change of place of trial for convenience of witnesses unless movant has made a positive showing of abuse of discretion.

2. Venue 🔑70

Where plaintiff's and defendants' affidavits disclosed no disparity in quality and quantity of evidence available in both cities, superior court of Long Beach did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' motion for transfer of action to superior court of Los Angeles on ground of convenience of witnesses.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred Miller, Judge Pro Tempore.

Action by Jessie Belle Hicks against Haitian Coffee Company and others. From an order denying defendants' motion for a change of place of trial, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hugh G. Maddox, of Long Beach, for plaintiff and respondent.

Marshall Denton, Jr., of Los Angeles, for defendants and appellants.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

After due notice defendants moved for an order transferring the action from the Superior Court at Long Beach to the same court in the city of Los Angeles on the ground of convenience of witnesses. In support of their motion they filed and presented the affidavit of defendant Burgess specifying various items of evidence essential to the defense and alleging that all of their witnesses as to such matters reside in Los Angeles. In response to such affidavit, plaintiff averred the same items of proof as essential to the establishment of her cause and that all of her specified witnesses reside in the seaside city. The motion was denied.

[1, 2] From an order denying a motion for the change of place of trial no relief can be granted by the appellate court unless the movant has made a positive showing of abuse of discretion by the trial court. Wrin v. Ohlandt, 213 Cal. 158, 1 P.2d 991; Scott v. Stuart, 190 Cal. 526, 213 P. 947. No such showing has been made herein. The two affidavits disclose no disparity in the quality or the quantity of the evidence available in the two cities.

The order is affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 856

WHITAKER v. HAITIAN COFFEE CO et al.

Civ. 14927.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 13, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑948

Relief cannot be granted by appellate court from an order denying a motion for change of place of trial for convenience of witnesses unless movant has made a positive showing of abuse of discretion by trial court.

2. Venue 🔑70

Where plaintiff's and defendants' affidavits disclosed no disparity in quality and quantity of evidence available in both cities, superior court of Long Beach did not abuse its discretion in denying defendants' motion for transfer of action to superior court of Los Angeles on ground of convenience of witnesses.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred Miller, Judge Pro Tempore.

Action by Mrs. R. C. Whitaker against Haitian Coffee Company and others. From an order denying defendants' motion for a change of the place of trial, defendants appeal.

Affirmed.

Hugh G. Maddox, of Long Beach, for plaintiff and respondent.

Marshall Denton, Jr., of Los Angeles, for defendants and appellants.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

[1, 2] This case is a companion to that of Hicks v. Haitian Coffee Co. et al., Cal. App., 161 P.2d 564. The averments in the affidavits filed on behalf of the respective parties are practically identical with those contained in the affidavits filed in the Hicks case. The order entered is the same. For the reason stated and upon the authorities therein cited the order herein is affirmed.

McCOMB, J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 711

FREITAS v. MARSH.

Civ. 12837.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 6, 1945.

1. Automobiles ⇒19

In claim and delivery action to recover automobile sold by borrower thereof, who was plaintiff's agent for sole purpose of securing new registration, evidence was insufficient to warrant inference that plaintiff indorsed ownership and registration certificates or that he authorized borrower to indorse them or that borrower indorsed them in presence of plaintiff or that they were indorsed with knowledge of plaintiff for purpose of sale.

2. Estoppel ⇒72

To apply the maxim that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the acts of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer, it must appear that negligence of one of the parties was the cause of the loss. Civ.Code, § 3543.

3. Appeal and error ⇒1008(1)

Where plaintiff loaned his automobile to third person and intrusted such person with blank certificate of ownership for sole purpose of securing new registration certificate and defendant purchased automobile from third person but failed to examine ownership and registration certificates which bore crudely forged indorsements of plaintiff's name, whether plaintiff or defendant was negligent within maxim that, where one of two innocent persons must suffer by act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer, was for trial court. Civ.Code, § 3543.

4. Principal and agent ⇒99

An agent has such authority as is given by statute unless deprived thereof by his principal, and even then has such authority ostensibly, except as to persons who have actual or constructive notice of restriction upon authority. Civ.Code, §§ 2304 et seq., 2317, 2318, 2334.

5. Principal and agent ⇒99

Ostensible authority rests upon doctrine of estoppel, and its essential elements are representation by principal, justifiable reliance thereon by a third party, and change of position or injury resulting from such reliance. Civ.Code, §§ 2317, 2318, 2334.

6. Automobiles ⇒19

The delivery by plaintiff to third person, who had borrowed plaintiff's automobile, of unindorsed certificate of ownership to enable third person to obtain a new registration certificate, did not make third person an ostensible agent to sell automobile, so as to bar plaintiff from recovering automobile from defendant who had purchased it without examination of certificates of ownership and registration, which were indorsed with crude, easily detectable forgeries of plaintiff's name. Civ.Code, §§ 2304 et seq., 2317, 2318, 2334, 3543.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Claim and delivery action by Antone T. Freitas against R. P. Marsh, involving the sale of an automobile. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Affirmed.

R. A. Rapsey, of San Bruno, for appellant.

Joseph A. Garry, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WARD, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant in an action for claim and delivery involving the sale of an automobile. It is contended that the facts as found compel a finding of ostensible agency in the seller in negotiating a sale of plaintiff's automobile, and that the trial court erred in not protecting defendant in his claimed title.

Plaintiff loaned the automobile in question to one Stone for personal use during a short period when Stone's car was out of order. Stone used the borrowed automobile to convey plaintiff to and from work. He also used it to peddle eggs. While the car was in Stone's possession, plaintiff delivered to Stone the pink certificate of ownership, entirely in blank as to signature, for the purpose of procuring a new registration certificate to replace his certificate which had been lost. Stone, while using this vehicle in his temporary business of peddling eggs, became acquainted with defendant and agreed to sell defendant certain furniture and the automobile for $1,400 cash, of which $850 represented the purchase price of the automobile. At the time of the sale Stone delivered to defendant the pink and white certificates bearing plaintiff's purported endorsements. Stone told defendant that Freitas, the plaintiff, owed him money and had authorized him to sell the car to pay the indebtedness, all of which was untrue. During this period of ten days plaintiff and defendant were unknown to each other, and defendant had met Stone only a few times. Defendant did not get in touch with plaintiff before the sale of the automobile and made no further inquiry relative to plaintiff's interest in the car or the amount of the claimed indebtedness. The trial court found that the automobile which was sold for $850 was of the value of $1,100. At the time of the delivery of the slips by Stone to defendant no examination was made of the contents thereof other than to note that some name had been written thereon.

[1] No inference may be drawn from the evidence that plaintiff endorsed the certificates or that he authorized Stone to endorse them, or that Stone endorsed the slips in the presence of plaintiff, or that they were endorsed with the knowledge of plaintiff for the purpose of sale.

The transcript of evidence discloses that the endorsements were crude forgeries. The name of plaintiff, "Antone T. Freitas," was typed on the face of each certificate. It appears that the person who wrote the signatures wrote "A. Freitas" on both certificates in blue ink. On the registration card, the signature had later been traced in black ink, and "nton" had been added between the "A" and "Freitas." The final "e" of the given name was left out, as was also his middle initial "T". On the certificate of ownership, where the signatures had also later been traced in black ink, the second had been written with the initial "A" so close to "Freitas" that the full given name could not be placed between them and "Anton" had been written anew so that the "o" of "Anton" covers the initial "A" which had been originally placed there. Here, too, the final "e" and the initial "T" had been omitted. Defendant testified that he did not examine the certificates because his glasses happened to be in the house.

[2] It is appellant's position that this case falls within the rules governing ostensible agency and the maxim in Civil Code, section 3543, that, "Where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third, he, by whose negligence it happened, must be the sufferer." To apply this rule it must appear that negligence of one of the parties must have been the cause of the loss of the property. Jeannerette v. Taylor, 2 Cal.App.2d 568, 38 P.2d 831. It was within the province of the trial court to determine whether negligence might be based on the act of plaintiff in loaning the car to Stone and giving him the unendorsed pink slip, which when endorsed is an indicia of ownership, or upon the conduct of the defendant, including the failure to examine the forged signatures. The judgment must be affirmed unless this court, as a matter of law, must determine that the acts of plaintiff created an ostensible authority to sell the automobile for plaintiff's account. "'Ostensible authority is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess.' Cal.Civ.Code, § 2317. An agent also has such authority as is given by statute (Cal.Civ.Code, § 2304 et seq.), unless deprived thereof by his principal; 'and has even then such authority ostensibly, except as to persons who have actual or constructive notice of the restriction upon his authority' (Cal.Civ.Code, § 2318). Ostensible authority rests upon the doctrine of estoppel, and its essential elements are representation by the principal, justifiable reliance thereon by the third party, and change of position or injury resulting from such reliance. Cal.Civ.Code, § 2334; * * *." Ernst v. Searle, 218 Cal. 233, 236, 237, 22 P.2d 715, 716; Hobart v. Hobart Estate Co., 26 Cal.2d 412, 159 P.2d 958; Restatement of the Law, Agency, sec. 265. Civil Code, section 2334, expressly provides: "A principal is bound by acts of his agent, under a merely ostensible authority, to those persons only who have in good faith, and without want of ordinary care, incurred a liability or parted with value, upon the faith thereof." In the majority opinion in County First Nat. Bank v. Coast Dairies & Land Co., 46 Cal.App.2d 355, 366, 115 P.2d 988, 994, it is said: "The two essential elements of an ostensible agency are: (1) The third person must believe that the agent had authority; and (2) such belief must be generated by some act or neglect of the person or company to be held. Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 P. 758."

It is true that Stone became an agent of plaintiff for the purpose of procuring a new registration certificate for the one which had been lost. But this is not the agency relationship upon which the defendant claims to have relied. No such representation was made by Stone. Defendant contends that by the delivery of possession of the automobile, even with the pink slip unendorsed, the plaintiff created a deceptive situation from which anyone could reasonably have concluded that Stone was the agent to sell the car for plaintiff.

Appellant's citation of cases does not assist in presenting his contentions. In W. P. Herbert Co. v. Powell, 90 Cal.App. 782, 266 P. 620, the automobile was transferred with the understanding that payment therefor would be made at some indefinite time in the future. Under such circumstances the recipient of the car was authorized to have the car registered in his name and to sign the previous owner's name to the pink slip. Mitchell v. Porter, 123 Cal.App. 329, 11 P.2d 58, involves forging the name of the owner on the ownership slip and selling the automobile to a party in the business of buying and selling cars. It was held that the owner was entitled to reclaim his property. At page 333 of 123 Cal.App., at page 59 of 11 P.2d, the court said: "If the plaintiff had inserted his signature in the blanks on the reverse side of the certificate of ownership, and if he had thereafter intrusted his automobile and the certificate so filled out into the hands of Marks, the defendants might have cause to complain." In the present case the owner's name had not been inserted by the owner on the certificate. In Carter v. Rowley, 59 Cal.App. 486, 211 P. 267, the purchase price of the automobile was embezzled. The facts are set forth at page 492 of 59 Cal.App., at page 269 of 211 P., as follows: "Plaintiff, who employed McNabb as his agent to find a purchaser, voluntarily left his car with McNabb, a dealer in secondhand cars * * *. His premises were surrounded by conspicuous signs advertising to the world that his business was that of selling used cars. Plaintiff testified that he knew McNabb's line of business. With this knowledge he left his car with McNabb in order that the latter might find a purchaser for it. McNabb was more than a mere bailee; he was plaintiff's agent to find a purchaser. Whatever may have been the private arrangement between plaintiff and McNabb, whatever the latter's actual authority may have been, plaintiff, by his own voluntary act, clothed McNabb with such indicia of authority to sell the car as usually accompanies such authority according to the custom of trade and the general understanding of business men." At page 491 of 59 Cal.App., at page 269 of 211 P., the court said: "But where, in addition to possession by the vendor, the owner has given such evidence of authority to sell as usually accompanies such authority according to the custom of trade or the general understanding of business men, then, as was stated by Mr. Justice Field in an early California case, Wright v. Solomon, 19 Cal. [64], 76, 79 Am. Dec. 196 the vendor's possession under such circumstances is evidence, not that he is the owner, but that he has received authority from the owner to sell." The Carter case is particularly applicable where the legal owner gives possession of an automobile to one who is in the recognized business of selling second-hand cars. Pacific Finance Corporation v. Hendley, 119 Cal. App. 697, 7 P.2d 391. In the Carter case the "dealer" was authorized to find a purchaser at a particular price. To that extent the purchaser should be protected. Further, by reason of the agent's business of selling second-hand cars, the purchaser was justified in relying on the appearance of authority to sell evidenced by the true owner's giving possession to a dealer whose business it was to sell. That case is not authority for the proposition here urged—that without any investigation on the part of the prospective purchaser—possession of a car, and the pink slip unendorsed, by a man engaged temporarily in peddling eggs creates the appearance of authority to sell. Under the circumstances surrounding this case plaintiff, the legal owner, is entitled to the possession or the reasonable value of the automobile.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 716

PEOPLE v. GREGORIS.

Cr. 2349.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 6, 1945.

1. Poisons 🔑9

Evidence supported conviction of violating statute making it an offense to knowingly plant, cultivate, cut, harvest, dry, or process any loco weed or marihuana or any part thereof. St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 22, § 11530.

2. Criminal law 🔑351(3)

The flight of a person after commission of a crime is a circumstance which may be considered along with all others as tending in some degree to show a consciousness of guilt.

3. Criminal law 🔑260(11)

Question as to why defendant fled after seeing police at his home was one for trial court trying case without a jury to determine from all the facts before it.

4. Criminal law 🔑260(11)

If not wanting in evidentiary support, decision of trial court trying case without a jury is controlling on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Edward J. Tyrrell, Judge.

Frank C. Gregoris was convicted of violating section 11530 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 22, § 11530, making it an offense to knowingly plant, cultivate, cut, harvest, dry, or process any loco weed or marihuana or any part thereof, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Raymond A. Ferrario, of Oakland, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener and Miriam E. Wolff, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

The defendant was accused of violating section 11530 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1940, 1st Ex.Sess., p. 22, which declares that: "No person shall knowingly plant, cultivate, cut, harvest, dry, or process any loco weed or cannabis sativa [marihuana] or any part thereof." He was accused also of having been previously convicted of burglary, in Alameda County, and of having served a sentence therefor in the state prison at San Quentin. He was represented by counsel, pleaded not guilty to the main charge, and stood mute as to the prior conviction; whereupon the court directed that a denial thereof be entered in his behalf. A trial by jury was waived, and after hearing the evidence the trial court found the defendant guilty of the offense charged and that the allegations relating to the prior conviction were true. Motions for probation and a new trial were heard and denied, and defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for the term prescribed by law; whereupon he took this appeal.

The only question presented by the appeal is whether the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the conviction; and after an examination of the record it is our opinion that it is. Among the facts and circumstances disclosed thereby are the following:

Defendant was employed as a brewery truck driver in Oakland, and lived with his wife and two children on Twenty-second Street in that city. He had occupied the premises for about five years. The back yard was enclosed with a five-foot board fence and most of the yard was devoted to the raising of vegetables. On the day of defendant's arrest, in response to a telephone message, two police officers and a state narcotic inspector drove to the premises, and looking over the fence they saw a number of marihuana plants growing among the tomato vines. Thereupon they entered the yard to examine the plants and found eleven of them. The plants were well matured and it was evident from the manner in which they were set in the soil, the size of the plants and the condition of the soil around them that they were not volunteer plants, but on the contrary had been purposely planted some months before and thereafter carefully cultivated. Ten of them were set in even rows, equal distances apart, between the tomato vines; there were no weeds growing around the marihuana plants, and the soil was damp and well cultivated. In fact, some of the plants were supported by stakes driven in the ground. One of the officers testified that when he first arrived at the premises and as he looked over the fence he saw the defendant standing on the back stairs; that he called to the defendant but he ran away.

The circumstances which brought about the discovery of the marihuana plants and the arrest of the defendant are shown by the testimony given by defendant's wife and a friend of the defendant's named Heffley, both of whom were called as witnesses for the defense. Briefly, the circumstances were these: About nine o'clock on the morning of the day defendant was arrested, Heffley called at defendant's home to get a radio tube. Defendant was not home at the time, and before leaving Heffley went out into the back yard to examine defendant's "police" dog, which had been afflicted with an infected foot. As he walked through the yard he observed the marihuana plants growing among the tomato vines, and he called Mrs. Gregoris' attention to the plants. He told her what they were and that she should get rid of them at once. He testified that she thought he "was kidding or lying"; that she asked him what she should do about it and he replied: "You had better call the police and have somebody take care of it right away, because it's awful big." He then left the premises, saying he would be back later that afternoon. The pertinent portions of Mrs. Gregoris' testimony are as follows: "* * * he [Heffley] went in the back to look at the dog's foot because it had been sore, it had been very badly infected, and he walked in the back to call the dog back there and he seen those plants and he drawed my attention to it, he said, 'These are marihuana plants' and he asked me if I knew anything about it. I said no, in fact I didn't believe him, I thought he was kidding, and he said definitely he knew it was because he had seen them before"; that he then said to her, "* * * by all means as soon as Frank gets home you have got to have him get rid of those plants; if they are found on the property it's just too bad, it's a serious offense." Continuing, she testified that before Heffley left he told her again to be sure her husband "got rid of them, that they should be reported to the police or pulled up immediately and destroyed"; that he thought it best to leave them until her husband got home. Mrs. Gregoris then went on to say that before her husband went to work that morning they had engaged in a quarrel, during which he struck her; that because of his treatment of her she did not "care what happened to him"; that soon after Heffley left she cut some leaves off the plants and placed them in a pan near by "to make it look" as if her husband "was going to smoke it"; that after having done so she telephoned to the police, giving her home address and saying that her "husband had marihuana in the back yard"; that she then left the premises and went to her brother's house, and started drinking.

On direct examination Mrs. Gregoris testified that so far as she knew her husband had never smoked marihuana; but on cross-examination she admitted having told the police on two occasions that he did; that she made such statement first on the night he was arrested and again the next morning; but she explained that the first statement was made by her after she had drank considerable liquor, and that the next morning she was still angry with him and that she "thought, 'I am not going to change the story' * * *."

So far as the record shows, the defendant was not at any time asked whether he was a user of marihuana; but at the trial, while testifying in his own behalf, he denied knowing anything about the marihuana plants. He admitted having worked in the vegetable garden, but claimed that he had never seen any of these plants growing in the yard. In this connection he went on to say that about all he did was the digging to prepare the ground for the planting; that his wife did the planting; that occasionally he watered the garden, and that his boy, eleven years old, weeded the garden. But in contradiction of his testimony, four of his neighbors testified that they had seen him working in the garden very often; that on a number of occasions, during the preceding several weeks, they had seen him digging and cultivating around the tomato vines. And as to the truth of the defendant's statement that he had never seen the plants growing in his back yard, his wife testified, in response to questions asked by the court, that anyone working around the tomatoes would see the marihuana plants "unless he was blind."

[1] The foregoing facts and circumstances are legally sufficient, in our opinion, to support the conclusions which the trial court evidently drew therefrom, that defendant had planted and afterwards cultivated the marihuana plants, knowing the kind of plants they were; and that therefore he was guilty of violating the provisions of the statute hereinabove quoted.

[2, 3] As to the evidence of flight, defendant testified that in driving home that night he was accompanied by a friend; that as he approached his house he saw the police officers there and that believing his wife had complained to the authorities about the trouble that had taken place between them that morning and that he was about to be arrested, he drove on without stopping; that later that evening he called at his mother's home and she "explained all about it" to him; that thereupon he started to drive down to the City Hall to ascertain "what they wanted"; but that on the way there he was picked up by the police. It is well settled, however, that the flight of a person after the commission of a crime is a circumstance which may be considered along with all others as tending in some degree to show a consciousness of guilt. People v. Santora, 51 Cal.App.2d 707, 125 P.2d 606. Therefore, in the present case the question as to why the defendant fled after seeing the police at his home was one for the trial court to determine from all the facts and circumstances before it.

Defendant argues that if he had been growing the marihuana knowingly it is not "reasonable to suppose that he would have done so in such open fashion," among tomato vines which were visible to all the neighbors. In answer to this argument, respondent states that no better place to conceal the plants and to divert suspicion could scarcely be found than in a vegetable garden among tomato vines which were then from two and a half to three feet high. Evidently this was the view taken by the trial court, and since the argument advanced by defendant involves a question of pure fact the trial court's conclusion thereon is binding on appeal.

[4] It is also argued that Heffley must have believed defendant innocent of any wrongdoing, otherwise he would not have suggested to Mrs. Gregoris that she notify the police. Conceding that to be true, the trial court, after considering all the facts and circumstances before it, decided to the contrary, and since its decision is not wanting in evidentiary support it is controlling on appeal, regardless of the belief entertained by Heffley.

Finally, it may be stated that a review of the entire record shows that the defendant was given a fair and impartial trial, and that because of the seriousness of the charge the trial judge was at all times watchful of the defendant's rights. Before proceeding with the trial he clearly pointed out to the defendant the procedure that would be followed by waiving a jury trial; and it is evident from the fairness of the trial judge's rulings on the admissibility of evidence that if after having decided the cause on the merits he had entertained any reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt he would have granted a new trial. Therefore, since the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the finding as to guilt the judgment of conviction and the order denying the motion for a new trial should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concur.

PEOPLE v. BARNETT.*

Cr. 1902.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 7, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Criminal law 🔑625

Trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying motion for separate hearing to determine whether accused, who was a homosexual pervert, 45 years of age, and an architect and artist of considerable intelligence and skill, was a sexual psychopath as defined in Welfare Code and should as such be committed to a state hospital and criminal proceedings against him for acts of sex perversion suspended, particularly where all offenses charged were committed with boys 16 years of age or older. Pen. Code, § 288a; St.1939, p. 1783, §§ 5500, 5501.

2. Criminal law 🔑625

Trial judge had a sound discretion to grant or deny petition for separate hearing to determine whether accused was a sexual psychopath as defined in Welfare Code and as such should be committed to a state hospital but he could not arbitrarily reject such petition without reason. St.1939, p. 1783, §§ 5500, 5501.

3. Criminal law 🔑625

The section of Welfare Code defining sexual psychopath as one predisposed to commit sexual offenses against "children" uses quoted word as meaning very young persons under the age of puberty or discretion and does not include persons over 14 years of age. St.1939, p. 1783, § 5500.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Children".

4. Statutes 🔑188

Where legislative intention with respect to meaning or application of words or phrases used in a statute is in doubt, such words or phrases should be construed in the common, usual and ordinary acceptation of their meaning.

5. Criminal law 🔑507(7)

Victims of sexual assaults over the age of 14 years may be accessories to the crime, so that their testimony must be corroborated before convictions for sex offenses may be sustained, but if under the age of 14 they are presumed to be incapable of committing crime and, in absence of proof of knowledge and appreciation of the wrongfulness of the acts, they may not be deemed to be accessories. Pen.Code, §§ 26, 288a, 1111.

6. Infants 🔑1

Where laws for protection of "children" do not define quoted word or specify age to which law applies, and the limitation cannot be ascertained from context, quoted word must be construed in its ordinary and common acceptation which is that of very young persons under the age of puberty or discretion and not old enough to dispense with maternal aid and care.

7. Criminal law 🔑565

Time of commission of offense charged in one of 12 counts of indictment, each charging a separate offense of sex perversion committed with various boys, all over 16 years of age, was sufficiently established and corroborated when boy named in such count testified in detail to particular offense charged therein and that it was committed in July of 1944 though he was unable to fix exact date, accused admitted commission of such offense during summer of 1944, and it was the only offense charged with that boy during summer months of 1944. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1111.

8. Criminal law 🔑1144(13)

Court, in absence of proof to the contrary, must assume that boys over 14 years of age with whom accused committed acts of sex perversion were accessories to respective crimes in which they were involved, so that corroboration of their testimony was necessary to sustain conviction. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1111.

9. Criminal law 🔑511(7)

Accused's voluntary testimony before grand jury, admitting commission of sex perversions charged, was sufficient corroboration of testimony of boys with whom offenses were committed who, because of their ages, were assumed to be accessories. Pen.Code, §§ 288a, 1111.

10. Criminal law 🔑511(7)

Extrajudicial declarations of accused may be sufficient to corroborate the evidence of an accessory so as to sustain a conviction. Pen.Code, § 1111.

---

* Subsequent opinion 166 P.2d 4.

11. Criminal law ⟹511(1)

Evidence is sufficient to corroborate testimony of an accessory if it merely creates more than a suspicion of guilt though it is slight and, when standing by itself, would be entitled to but little consideration. Pen.Code, § 1111.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Raymond T. Coughlin, Judge.

Earl Barnett was convicted on 12 counts of an indictment, each charging a separate offense under Penal Code, § 288a. From the judgment of conviction and order denying his motion for a separate hearing to determine whether he was a sexual psychopath and as such should be committed to a state hospital, he appeals.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Robt. A. Zarick, Wallace Shepard, and Thos. O'Hara, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

Robt. W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, and Ward Sullivan, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

The defendant was convicted by the court sitting without a jury of twelve counts of an indictment, each charging him with a separate offense under Section 288a of the Penal Code. One other count was dismissed. Before trial the defendant moved the court under Section 5501 of the Welfare and Institutions Code St.1939, p. 1783, to grant him a separate hearing to determine whether he is a sexual psychopath as defined by Section 5500 of that Code, and if so to suspend the criminal trial and commit him to a state hospital as therein provided. The motion was heard on an affidavit of the brother of the defendant to which there were attached the written statements of three physicians to the effect that they considered him a sexual psychopath. There was also presented on that motion the testimony, including the voluntary admissions of the defendant, adduced at the hearing before the Grand Jury. The motion was denied.

On appeal it is contended the court erred in refusing to grant the motion to suspend the criminal proceedings and to commit the defendant to a state hospital, and that the evidence, as to count number three, lacks corroboration of the accessory to the crime as required by Section 1111 of the Penal Code.

[1] We are of the opinion the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to suspend the criminal proceedings and to determine in a separate hearing whether the defendant is a sexual psychopath as that term is defined in the statute. The defendant is forty-five years of age. He is an architect and an artist of considerable intelligence and skill. He is a homosexual pervert who has been preying upon young boys of high school age to their great detriment for the past five or six years. There is no evidence that he has ever attempted to interfere with young children under the age of fourteen years. He is not within the class of psychopaths covered by the definition in Section 5500 of the Welfare Code. The trial court properly denied the motion.

[2] Under Section 5501 of the Welfare Code the judge has a sound discretion to grant or deny the petition for hearing on that issue. The first paragraph of that section provides that "the court may" adjourn proceedings in the criminal trial and grant the hearing if "it appears by affidavit to the satisfaction of the court that such person is a sexual psychopath within the meaning of this chapter." That statute requires the petitioner to show by affidavit that the defendant is predisposed to commit sexual offenses against children. The granting of the separate hearing is not mandatory. To be sure, the court may not arbitrarily reject the application without reason. It has a sound discretion to be exercised only pursuant to law. People v. Haley, 46 Cal.App.2d 618, 622, 116 P.2d 498; In re Cook, 67 Cal.App.2d 20, 24, 153 P.2d 578; United States v. Hrasky, 240 Ill. 560, 88 N.E. 1031, 130 Am.St.Rep. 288, 16 Ann.Cas. 279. The only affidavit filed by the defendant in support of the motion was by his brother Chester, to which there were attached the written statements of three physicians. The testimony taken before the Grand Jury was also presented on that motion. It contained the evidence of several boys from sixteen to nineteen years of age who were defendant's victims in the commission of the crimes with which he was charged. It also contained the defendant's own testimony before the Grand Jury, in which he frankly admitted the truth of the charges.

The affiant's averments of his belief that his brother is a sexual psychopath were all based on his "review of the testimony taken before the Grand Jury." That same evidence, together with the defendant's own testimony before the Grand Jury, was presented to the trial judge and considered on that motion. The statements of the physicians, which were attached to the affidavit, were likewise chiefly based upon the testimony taken before the Grand Jury. We must assume the court gave due consideration to all the evidence which was presented to it on that motion. We are unable to say, as a matter of law, that the court abused its discretion in denying the motion.

[3] Moreover, we are of the opinion the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for the further reason that the statute applies to psychopaths who are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against children, only, which, in the sense in which it is used in that statute, does not include persons over the age of fourteen years. Section 5501 of the Welfare Code provides that the court may grant the hearing when it appears by affidavit, "to the satisfaction of the court that such person is a sexual psychopath within the meaning of this chapter." Section 5500 of that chapter defines a sexual psychopath, for the purposes of that statute, as one who is predisposed to commit sexual offenses against children. Clearly the benefits of that special proceeding are not extended to, nor is it intended to apply to, all sexual psychopaths regardless of the ages of their victims. It is specifically confined to those who are addicted to commit offenses on children as distinguished from adults or from those presumed to be of sound discretion who are in the period of adolescence. A sexual psychopath may be addicted to the commission of sexual offenses against adults only. It may not be said that psychopaths who prefer and select adults as their victims are included in the definition of those only who are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against "children", to which the statute is confined. Nor do we think the statute was intended to apply to psychopaths who are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against girls or boys in their adolescent age between puberty and majority, or it would have so stated. We must assume by the deliberate use of the word "children" in accordance with its commonest definition that the legislature intended to restrict the application of that special hearing to psychopaths who are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against very young persons under the age of puberty. Otherwise the legislature would have designated the class to which it was intended to apply as minors or persons under the age of majority, which would also include younger persons under the age of puberty. Evidently there was a deliberate purpose to limit that investigation to psychopaths who are addicted to preying upon persons who are not adults, for the word "children" as it is used could not possibly have been intended to include adults. Clearly a distinction between classes of psychopaths, dependent upon the ages and discretion of the victims upon whom they are predisposed to operate, was intended. We are convinced the word "children" was used for a limited and definite purpose. It is reasonable to assume the word "children" was also used to distinguish immature and helpless girls and boys under the age of puberty from those under the age of majority who are presumed to have reached the age of discretion. If the legislature had intended to extend the privilege of that special plea to persons who are disposed to commit sexual offenses against those under the age of majority, it would have been very easy to have so stated. The legislature did not do so.

[4, 5] When there is a doubt regarding the intention of the legislature with respect to the meaning or application of words or phrases used in a statute, they should be construed in the common, usual and ordinary acceptation of the meaning of such words or phrases. 23 Cal.Jur. sec. 124, p. 749. Almost invariably statutes for the protection of children specify the ages to which they apply. If we do not accept the foregoing rule of adopting the commonest definition of children to mean those who are under the age of puberty, since the context of the statute furnishes no aid in solving an otherwise uncertain and doubtful meaning of the word, the statute might become void for uncertainty. No doubt the legislature had a definite reason for limiting the statute to those who are psychopaths because they are addicted to committing sexual offenses against children under the age of puberty. It is not necessary for us to determine what that purpose was. But it may have been to afford protection against wrongful convictions of accused persons upon uncorroborated evidence of witnesses so young as to lack understanding and who are therefore unreliable. On numerous appeals from convictions of offenses against young children under the age of puberty who lack discretion, it has been urged that the uncorroborated testimony of such children was inherently improbable, unbelievable and unreliable. If the victims of such sexual assaults are over the age of fourteen years, they may become accessories to the crimes and their testimony is then required to be corroborated before convictions may be sustained. People v. Singh, 121 Cal.App. 107, 8 P.2d 898; 8 Cal.Jur. 176, sec. 254. If the victims are under the age of fourteen, they are presumed to be incapable of committing crimes, and in the absence of proof of their knowledge and appreciation of the wrongfulness of the act, they may not be deemed to be accessories. The presumption is that "children under the age of fourteen" years are incapable of committing crime. Penal Code, sec. 26. In statutes adopted for the protection of children, the Penal Code usually specifies the limitation of the ages to which they apply. Section 288 of that code prohibits lewd and lascivious acts against "a child under the age of fourteen years." Many other California statutes which are particularly applicable to young children specify the ages to which they apply.

In our opinion Section 5500 of the Welfare Code applies only to persons who are deemed to be sexual psychopaths because they are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against very young persons under fourteen years of age. That section provides:

"As used in this chapter 'sexual psychopath' means any person who is affected, in a form predisposing to the commission of sexual offenses against children, and in a degree constituting him a menace to the health or safety of others, with any of the following conditions:

"(a) Mental disease or disorder.

"(b) Psychopathic personality.

"(c) Marked departure from normal mentality."

It has been frequently stated by textwriters and in decisions of reviewing courts that when criminal statutes prohibit offenses against "children" without defining that term, or specifying the age to which the law applies, and the limitation cannot be ascertained from the context, it must be construed in its ordinary and common acceptation, which is that of very young persons of tender years; those who have not reached the age of discretion; persons under the age of puberty, usually fixed at fourteen years as applied to boys, and twelve years when applied to girls.

While there are some cases to the contrary, the textwriters and authorities generally support that conclusion. In 2 Century Dictionary and Encyclopedia, page 957, the word "child" is defined in part as follows:

"Specifically, a very young person; one not old enough to dispense with maternal aid and care."

[6] In 14 Corpus Juris Secundum, Child, page 1109, it is said:

"In laws for the protection of children, the term 'child' means generally the young under the age of puberty, and in this age sense the word has been defined as meaning an infant, a young person, a youth, or one of tender years, a very young person, one not old enough to dispense with maternal aid and care."

Likewise in Black's Law Dictionary, 3rd Edition, page 320, the word "child" is defined, in addition to its mere relationship as offspring of its parents, as follows:

"In the law of negligence, and in laws for the protection of children, etc., it is used as the opposite of 'adult', and means the young of the human species (generally under the age of puberty or not old enough to dispense with maternal aid and care), without any reference to parentage and without distinction of sex."

The foregoing definition is supported by several authorities.

In the case of Bell v. State, 18 Tex.App. 53, 51 Am.Rep. 293, in sustaining the conviction of the appellant for an aggravated assault "upon the person of a female or child" contrary to statute, the court held that the use of the word "child" without a definition of the word, meant a boy under fourteen years of age or a girl under twelve years of age. The court said:

"Resort, then, must be had to the common meaning and acceptation of the word 'child.' Mr. Webster defines it to mean 'a young person of either sex; hence one who exhibits the character of a very young person;' and this is its common acceptation. It means a young person as contradistinguished from one of age sufficient to be supposed to have settled habits and fixed discretion. * * * As the law now stands, we believe that the age of fourteen in boys and twelve in girls limits the age of childhood."

The affidavit and written statements of physicians which were presented on the motion to suspend the criminal trial and to adjudge the defendant to be a sexual psychopath, together with the evidence adduced before the Grand Jury, including the defendant's voluntary admissions, definitely show that the defendant was predisposed to and invariably did select for his nefarious practices boys only who were sixteen years, or more, of age. He was not predisposed to satisfy his lust upon infants, under the age of puberty. If the statute does not include within the definition of the word "children" either adults or persons over the age of puberty, as we believe that it does not, then it has no application to this case and the court properly denied the motion. That is true even though it satisfactorily appeared, which we do not concede, that the defendant is a psychopath under the general definition of that term and that he was predisposed to commit sexual offenses against individuals without regard to their ages. It does appear that he is a homosexual person with depraved and degenerate habits concealed by shrewd and cunning methods designed to deceive and seduce unwary youth, upon whom he preys to their great injury and to the detriment of society.

Even if the foregoing limitation of the application of Section 5501 of the Welfare Code is not confined to those psychopaths who are predisposed to commit sexual offenses against very young persons under the age of discretion or puberty, we are nevertheless of the opinion the court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion, as we have previously stated.

The appellant contends that the judgment finding him guilty of the offense charged in count number three is not supported by the evidence because the testimony of the victim upon whom that alleged crime was perpetrated was an accessory thereto and his testimony lacks corroboration of the date thereof and otherwise.

[7] There is no merit in that contention. The defendant was charged in separate counts with thirteen different offenses under Section 288a of the Penal Code with different boys over sixteen years of age. Each count alleged the date "on or about" which the particular offense was perpetrated together with the name of the boy upon whom it was committed. The sixth count was dismissed. The defendant was found guilty of each of the other counts, including the challenged third count, which was alleged to have been committed on a named boy "on or about the 15th day of July, A.D. 1944." It was the only offense alleged in any of the counts to have been committed upon that or any other boy in July, 1944. The boy mentioned in count three testified in detail to his association with other named boys who are involved in other counts of the indictment, and to their frequent visits to the defendant's home and their association and participation in his criminal practices. That witness testified in detail to his participation with the defendant in the crime charged in the third count. Regarding that particular alleged crime he said that he went in company with three other named boys to the home of the defendant "in the summer" of 1944, in the month of July. He was not certain of the exact date, but he testified positively to the details of the crime charged in that count of the indictment which he asserted the defendant then committed upon him. Upon the completion of the boy's testimony regarding that particular offense the prosecuting officer said "That refers to count 3," to which assertion the defendant's counsel made no reply. He did not then challenge the alleged variance regarding the exact time of the occurrence of that crime. The time of that offense was sufficiently fixed. That was the only offense charged against the defendant upon that boy during July 1944, or any of the summer months of that year. The circumstances of those offenses and the revolting practices of the defendant were corroborated in detail by several other boys. Moreover, the commission of the crime charged in count number three, together with all the other crimes charged against him, was freely and voluntarily admitted by the defendant in his sworn statement made to the Grand Jury, which was received in evidence in this case. On the trial, when the names of the several boys were read to the defendant upon each of whom he was separately charged with committing similar crimes, and he was asked specifically if he had committed that particular act upon the boy named in count number three, he replied "With the whole list you have just read." He thereby unequivocally admitted his guilt of that particular offense as charged. He was then asked if he committed that offense "during or about July 1944." He replied that he did not remember the exact date but that it occurred "during the summer" of that year. Since that was the only offense charged with that boy during any of the summer months of 1944, and the defendant admitted the commission of that offense during the summer months of that year, the time of the commission of the crime was sufficiently established and corroborated. The defendant was not misled or prejudiced by a failure to more definitely fix the date of the crime. He does not claim to have been so misled or prejudiced. The other essential circumstances of that offense were also adequately corroborated by the defendant and by proof of material circumstances related by several other boys.

[8-11] Since each of the victims of the several crimes charged in the various counts of the indictment were over the age of fourteen years, in the absence of proof to the contrary we must assume they were accessories to the respective crimes in which they were involved, and it was therefore necessary to corroborate their testimony as required by the provisions of Section 1111 of the Penal Code. People v. McCollum, 214 Cal. 601, 7 P.2d 301; People v. Singh, supra. Their testimony regarding each alleged offense was adequately corroborated by other competent evidence. 8 Cal.Jur. 178, sec. 256. The admissions of the defendant corroborated it. Extrajudicial declarations of a defendant may be sufficient to corroborate the evidence of an accessory so as to sustain a conviction. People v. Briley, 9 Cal.App.2d 84, 48 P.2d 734. Certainly his voluntary testimony before the Grand Jury, admitting the crimes with which he was charged, furnishes sufficient corroboration to meet the requirements of Section 1111 of the Penal Code. In the recent case of People v. Wilson, 25 Cal.2d 341, 347, 153 P.2d 720, 723, it was held that corroborating evidence was sufficient if it merely created "more than a suspicion of guilt," although it "be slight and when standing by itself, entitled to but little consideration." People v. Thompson, 69 Cal. App.2d 80, 158 P.2d 213, 216; People v. Negra, 208 Cal. 64, 69, 280 P. 354; People v. Dorrance, 65 Cal.App.2d 125, 130, 150 P. 2d 10; People v. Shaw, 17 Cal.2d 778, 112 P.2d 241.

The defendant was not prejudiced by the failure of the prosecution to establish the exact day upon which the crime alleged in count three was accomplished. The defendant admitted the commission of the crime upon the named boy during that summer. There was not a fatal variance with respect to the proof of the time alleged. The defendant made no objection at the trial on that account. He could not have been misled regarding the particular challenged offense of which he was convicted. The judgment of conviction of the crime charged in count three is not void for lack of corroboration of the approximate date of the commission of that offense or otherwise. People v. Becker, 140 Cal.App. 162, 35 P.2d 196; People v. Tracy, 50 Cal.App. 2d 460, 464, 123 P.2d 138.

The judgment and the orders appealed from are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. COLLUP et al.*

Cr. 3881.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 31, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 14, 1945.

Hearing Granted Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⇨409, 517(4)

Upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti, extrajudicial statements, admissions, or confessions of accused may be admitted in evidence, and proof of the corpus delicti need not be of that conclusive and convincing character necessary to satisfy minds of jurors beyond a reasonable doubt.

2. Criminal law ⇨422(1)

Extrajudicial statements of one of defendants were inadmissible against her codefendant.

3. Criminal law ⇨409

Extrajudicial statements of one of defendants were inadmissible even against defendant making statements, where there was a total lack of proof sufficient to establish prima facie the fact of a conspiracy between parties to commit rape or any assault with intent to commit rape as charged. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 6.

---

* Subsequent opinion 167 P.2d 714.

4. Criminal law ⇨559

Conviction cannot be founded upon unreasonable inferences, speculation or suspicion, but must be founded upon satisfactory evidence and reasonable inferences predicated thereon.

5. Criminal law ⇨561(1)

Although jurors are sole and exclusive judges of value and effect of evidence, their discretion may not be arbitrarily exercised when, as a matter of law, evidence upon which verdict is predicated is not of such a character that it can be said therefrom that no reasonable doubt of defendants' guilt existed.

6. Rape ⇨16(1)

In charge of assault with intent to commit rape, intent is the vital element.

7. Criminal law ⇨935(1)

Trial judge, in exercise of his salutary supervisory power over jury's verdict, should set verdict aside on motion for new trial, when in his judgment evidence as a whole is not sufficient to uphold the verdict returned.

8. Conspiracy ⇨47
Rape ⇨53(2)

Evidence was insufficient to support conviction of either defendant on charge of assault with intent to commit rape or on charge of conspiracy to commit rape. Code Civ.Proc. § 1870, subd. 6.

9. Assault and battery ⇨92

Evidence was insufficient to support conviction of either defendant on charge of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury. Pen.Code, §§ 240, 242, 245.

10. Assault and battery ⇨56

An assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury may be committed with the hands or fists. Pen.Code, § 245.

11. Assault and battery ⇨82

In order to complete the offense of assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury, it is not necessary to show that defendant actually injured his intended victim, but there need only be evidence that, as result of the physical force used or attempted to be used, there was likelihood of great bodily injury. Pen.Code, § 245.

12. Criminal law ⇨543(2)

Trial judge did not abuse his discretion in permitting testimony of witness given at preliminary examination to be read in evidence on ground that such witness could not with due diligence be found within state, where there was no showing that testimony would have been any different if absent witness had been present at trial, and there was no showing that evidence of an impeaching character had materialized since preliminary examination. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3.

13. Constitutional law ⇨266
Criminal law ⇨543(2)
Witnesses ⇨380(3)

Testimony of codefendant and her mother that absent witness who was out of state, and whose testimony given at preliminary examination was read in evidence, had afterwards stated that parts of her testimony were untrue, was inadmissible for purpose of impeaching testimony of absent witness, but trial court should have considered such evidence in exercise of its discretion as to whether testimony of absent witness given at preliminary examination should be read into evidence at trial and failure to do so amounted to a denial of due process. Pen.Code, § 686, subd. 3; U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

14. Witnesses ⇨388(2), 389

Before impeaching evidence is offered, witness sought to be impeached must be asked whether he made certain statements or had certain conversations and, if witness admits making such statements or having such conversations, then impeaching testimony is inadmissible because witness stands impeached by his own admission.

15. Constitutional law ⇨251

A compelling consideration in determining whether a right is embraced within due process of law clause of Fourteenth Amendment is whether the right involved is of such a character that it cannot be denied without violating those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at base of all our civil and political institutions. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

16. Constitutional law ⇨257, 304

The state has full control over procedure in its courts, both in civil and criminal cases, subject only to qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

17. Constitutional law ⟹266

"Due process of law", within Fourteenth Amendment, contemplates the opportunity and right to cross-examine each witness on all relevant matters relating to witness' testimony, and, when that right is refused, such refusal constitutes a denial of due process of law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Due Process of Law".

18. Witnesses ⟹269(1)

The right to cross-examine as to any matter which has a bearing, directly or indirectly, upon any portion of testimony given by witness on direct examination, is preserved by statute in addition to Fourteenth Amendment. Code Civ.Proc. § 2048; U.S. C.A.Const. Amend. 14, § 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold B. Landreth, Judge.

Thomas H. Collup and Lillianne Flaten were convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury, and of conspiracy to commit rape, and they appeal.

Reversed.

William C. Ring, of Los Angeles, for appellant Flaten.

Ward Sullivan, of Los Angeles, for appellant Collup.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Fred N. Howser, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WHITE, Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, the defendants were charged in count I with the crime of assault with intent to commit rape; count II accused the defendants of assault by means of force likely to produce great bodily injury; and, in count III, the defendants were charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit rape. Pleas of not guilty were interposed to each count and the cause proceeded to trial before a jury, resulting in the conviction of both defendants upon all three counts. A motion for a new trial was denied as to each defendant. Without pronouncing judgment, the court suspended the proceedings and placed defendants on probation, conditioned upon the payment by defendant Collup of a fine of $250; that defendant Flaten pay a fine in the sum of $100; and that both defendants refrain from the use of intoxicating liquors during their respective terms of probation, which were fixed at five years in the case of defendant Collup and two years in the case of defendant Flaten. From the order denying their motions for new trial, defendants prosecute this appeal.

The record reflects that the offenses were allegedly committed in a double apartment located in the city of Los Angeles on March 17, 1944. It appears that some two years prior thereto, the apartment was rented and occupied by Nathalie Rosenman, named as the victim in each count of the information, Sharlyn Curtiss and Marjorie Nelson. During the latter part of 1942, Miss Nelson moved away and defendant Flaten moved in, and, with the remaining two occupants, continued sharing the apartment until the date of the alleged offenses. Miss Nelson subsequently returned to Los Angeles, but did not thereafter occupy the apartment although she was a frequent visitor thereat. Miss Nelson was very friendly with Miss Rosenman, saw her practically every day during the month of March, 1944, and they frequently took their evening meal together. On Sunday morning, March 12th, Miss Nelson observed that Miss Rosenman was talking irrationally. On the same day, defendant, Miss Flaten, returned home from a visit of several months in San Francisco, and also noticed that Miss Rosenman was seriously distraught mentally. It might here be noted that Miss Rosenman's mental infirmity is conceded. A resident psychiatrist at the Psychopathic Department of the Los Angeles General Hospital diagnosed her mental illness as "dementia praecox or chizophrenia, characterized by withdrawal from reality and by periods of excitement, irritation and irrational behavior." Furthermore, at the trial it was stipulated that, if Dr. Worley, a psychiatrist at the State Hospital for the insane at Norwalk, were called as a witness, he would testify that he examined Miss Rosenman on March 22, 1944, and that, in his opinion, she is insane. Count III of the information, charging conspiracy to commit rape alleged that Miss Rosenman, the victim named therein, "was then and there a person of unsound mind, and incapable of giving legal consent." On the evening of March 16th, Miss Nelson stopped at Miss Rosenman's apartment and found the latter acting very irrationally. Defendant Miss Flaten was also present. On that evening Miss Nelson informed the defendant Miss Flaten that she had contacted Miss Rosenman's father in an eastern city and had been told by him to take care of Miss Rosenman until her mother would arrive in a few days. The father suggested to Miss Nelson that his daughter should go to a rest home and there await the mother's arrival. Miss Nelson called a rest home and made arrangement for Miss Rosenman to go there. On that occasion Miss Flaten stated to Miss Nelson that she was exhausted from taking care of Miss Rosenman for the preceding five days and that she could not stand it much longer. Miss Nelson testified that on the evening of March 16th she observed Miss Rosenman taking a bath and that there were no bruises, scratches, or marks of any sort upon her body.

The owner and manager of the Women's Sanitarium called about nine o'clock on the morning of March 17th to take Miss Rosenman and was informed by Miss Flaten that "we have decided not to send her to the sanitarium; we are going to take care of her." Thereupon the sanitarium manager departed.

On the evening of March 17th about six o'clock, according to her testimony, Miss Marjorie Nelson came to the apartment and observed Miss Rosenman in her bedroom. There was a pile of clothes on the kitchen sink and a portion of such clothes had blood upon them. As Miss Nelson entered the apartment she observed Miss Rosenman in the middle of the bed in a "praying position" and she also observed defendant Collup standing by the foot of the bed. At that time Miss Rosenman and defendant Collup were completely in the nude, there was blood on a sheet and blood was also running down Miss Rosenman's face. Miss Nelson called the police.

The physician at the Los Angeles General Hospital who examined Miss Rosenman on the evening in question testified that he found "a very small cut just not large enough to require suturing and a small amount of blood in connection with it." This injury was on the "back portion of the top of the head". The physician further testified "coming down to the neck there was a bruise, contusion on the throat here. As a matter of fact, I think there was a small abrasion on the back of the neck. Then coming down to the chest, I don't recall finding anything pathological there." Then "on the back of each one of the shoulder blades was also a contusion or an abrasion about two or three inches long * * then coming down to the abdomen, down on the lower portion there were several excoriations, other marks, and those looked like there was some pretty heavy blows because there was a portion all around all of those small scratches as though some more or less heavy pressure had caused them." "I believe it was the right thigh had some marks, reddened portions around it and also some on the inner portion of the right thigh."

With reference to his vaginal examination of Miss Rosenman, this physician testified that the hymen had been ruptured, but as to whether it was a recent rupture he testified "I would be unable to say." This physician testified that, except for the blood he observed on Miss Rosenman's head there was no blood on any other part of her body. In answer to the question, "Doctor, was there anything about the examination to indicate to you that any recent act of sexual intercourse had occurred?" the physician replied "No, sir."

Miss Nelson testified that on the evening of March 17, when she met the defendant Flaten in front of the apartment, defendant told her not to go into the apartment, saying: "'I called a friend of mine, and he sent some friend over that knows all about these things, he has been in one of these institutions and he knows.' I said, 'Did the nurse come?' She said, 'No, the nurse didn't come,' she said, 'The doctor was not going to be there today,' and she said, 'Marge, I think all Nathalie needs is a good lay, so' she said, 'I brought a man over and he has been beating her all day,' she said 'You should see the apartment, it's full of blood, he has been hitting her and everything all day in there,' and I said, 'I am going in the house, Lillianne,' and she stayed out in front and I went in the house."

When the police officers arrived at the apartment Miss Rosenman was dressed and defendant Collup was lying across the bed with a robe on.

Another witness, Sharlyn Curtiss, testified that on March 17th, about 10 o'clock in the morning she called defendant Flaten on the telephone and inquired if Miss Rosenman had been taken to the hospital to which the defendant Flaten replied that the nurse had telephoned stating that her automobile had broken down and that the defendant Flaten did not know when the nurse would call.

On the same evening before she left her office, Miss Curtiss received a telephone call from defendant Flaten advising her not to come home until about 11 o'clock, because, defendant Flaten stated, she "was experimenting. * * * she and a doctor were experimenting on Miss Rosenman and she did not want me to come home." Miss Curtiss further testified that she then requested Miss Flaten to permit her to talk to the doctor, to which defendant Flaten replied: "No, you cannot talk to him. He is busy." Miss Curtiss, however, persisted in her demand to talk to the doctor and finally defendant Collup came to the telephone, whereupon Miss Curtiss said to him "Are you a doctor?" to which he replied "Yes, I am. * * * He said he was taking care of Miss Rosenman. I said 'Well, can I come home?' He said, 'Why, of course you can come.'"

The witness Miss Curtiss arrived about six o'clock and met defendant Flaten as she was entering the apartment, whereupon, according to the witness, the following transpired: "I asked her first, of course, if Nathalie had been taken to the hospital, and she quieted me, said 'Just a moment, I have something to tell you instead.' She said 'Nathalie is fine, there is nothing wrong with Nathalie, she is as normal as you and I, and after what I am doing she will be perfectly normal and she will snap out of this condition that she is in.' She said, 'I brought in a man and he is giving her a good beating, he has been here all day and he has slapped her and beat her up.' She said, 'That will knock her out of this condition she is in,' and she said, 'All Nathalie needs is a man and a good * * *.'"

The witness Miss Curtiss further testified that defendant Miss Flaten told her that the defendant Collup had recommended that Miss Rosenman not be taken to the rest home "because these institutions are horrible places, and he thought he could treat her better, under his treatment that she would snap out of this condition that she was in."

This witness testified further that subsequently, while she was in the dinette, defendant Collup emerged from Miss Rosenman's room "wearing that green robe with blood all over it and blood all over his face and all over his hands." That defendant Collup told the witness, referring to Miss Rosenman, that he "had beat her up."

Defendant Miss Flaten testified that she first observed Miss Rosenman's unusual and irrational conduct on March 12th; that Miss Rosenman told her "she was losing her mind and her life, she said she had an affair previously with one fellow she was with in San Francisco that had bothered her, and that she went to have a physical examination by Dr. Clark, and that he had told her that there was nothing wrong with her, to come back and see him in three months. She did not go back to see him in three months, and that was the reason for that cancer, she said she had. She said she had had a love affair two or three years previously, and she talked a great deal about an imaginary husband she had. She had hallucinations of grandeur that she had a message to give to the world and she told me to write down what she had to give because she was going to die. She talked about a dream, having an affair with me, * * * and hallucinations, people accusing her of all sorts of things. She tried to burn the house down on one occasion, and she beat me up on another occasion, and a lot of conversation that took place was due to the fact that she said she had never had a man to satisfy her and she was living a subdued lovelife."

According to the testimony of defendant Miss Flaten, she had known her co-defendant Collup some three or four months, but had not seen him for two months preceding March 17th, on which morning, according to her testimony, defendant Collup telephoned and Miss Flaten explained to him "the situation that occurred with this girl, and that we had called and arranged for her to go to a sanitarium and he said 'Hold everything, I will be right over.'" According to defendant Miss Flaten's testimony, her co-defendant Collup arrived about ten or ten-thirty o'clock on the morning of March 17th, they went directly to the bedroom where they found Miss Rosenman sitting on "top of the bed with her green slacks on and her T shirt, I had dressed her in the morning. She was waving her arms and nodding her head and pulling her hair like this, going into the same type of motion with him, pulling her hair and waving her arms around and he lifted her off the bed and lifted her down across his lap and started to comb her hair and push her hair out of her eyes, and tried to soothe her, and then said, 'What's her name,' and I said, 'Her name is Nathalie, but she calls herself Nettie,' and he said 'What's the matter Nettie,' and she wouldn't talk and he seemed to try to talk to her but she wouldn't answer." On that occasion, according to defendant Miss Flaten's testimony, she related to her co-defendant some conversations that she had had with Miss Rosenman "about her imaginary husband and the fact that she acted sort of homosexual towards me and I thought that she might be subdued through some sort of treatments. I said that she was in love with me, and in love with this man in Arrowhead, and I also showed him an article I had read in the Reader's Digest pertaining to the treatment of dementia praecox, something that other people said she had, and he said he didn't believe in that stuff." Defendant Miss Flaten testified that her co-defendant took Miss Rosenman off the bed six or seven times, finally the two defendants went into the kitchen. Subsequently Miss Rosenman came into the kitchen whereupon defendant Collup took her by the shoulders and told her to open her eyes, that Miss Rosenman "started talking about something and Collup said 'That's all right' and he slapped her across the face with his hand."

Shortly after the arrival of defendant Collup, he and his co-defendant commenced imbibing alcoholic beverages, which continued throughout the day. Defendant Flaten had one and defendant Collup two drinks of whiskey, and, in addition thereto, they consumed all of the contents of one and practically all of a second bottle of rum. A police officer testified that defendant Collup was intoxicated and that defendant Flaten had been drinking.

Concerning the scarcity of his attire, the defendant Collup testified that he and his co-defendant went into one of the bedrooms about 4:30 p.m. where he "stripped down to my shorts" and engaged in an act of sexual intercourse.

A police officer testified that he and two other officers had a conversation with defendant Flaten at her apartment on March 22nd, which was several days after the occurrence of the incidents which gave rise to this prosecution, and in which conversation the last named defendant stated, among other things, "that she was of the opinion that perhaps Miss Rosenman, that if Miss Rosenman had an act of sexual intercourse with a man it would relieve the nervous tension and probably help her"; that "Mr. Collup had said that he was of the same opinion." At a subsequent conversation on the same day, defendant Flaten was quoted as saying "there was some more talk between Collup and her to the effect that intercourse might relieve the nervous tension, and would probably help Miss Rosenman"; that after she and defendant Collup "had consummated the act of intercourse between themselves, she took Mr. Collup into Miss Rosenman's bedroom and left him there with the idea in mind that he would have sexual intercourse with her." At a third conversation on March 23rd, in the office of the district attorney, defendant Flaten was asked whether she actually knew that her co-defendant had an act of sexual intercourse with Miss Rosenman to which she answered "that she did not actually know but that he went into the bedroom with that intention."

Defendant Collup, testifying in his own behalf, denied that he had sexual intercourse with Miss Rosenman; stated that he telephoned his co-defendant about 9:30 a.m. March 17th, at which time the latter informed him that "my roommate beat me up; I am going to have to put her in some institution," to which he replied "All right, I will be right over." That when he arrived at the apartment Miss Rosenman "was sitting on top of the head of the bed, pulling her hair around in her eyes, and swinging her head back and forth." He went over to her and said, "Here, come on; you are all right; come down from there before you hurt yourself." He put his arm around her back and lifted her off the head of the bed and sat at the foot of the bed holding Miss Rosenman; he brushed the hair out of her eyes. Defendant Flaten got him a comb and he combed Nathalie's hair. She was trying to get away from him and he put his arm behind her and told her: "Come on, Nettie. Just take it easy. You are okeh." He sat with her for about fifteen minutes attempting to quiet her and telling her that she was just unstrung; all she needed was a little rest and not to get excited. He took her and laid her down on the bed and she remained quiet. He stood there and watched her for a few minutes and she remained quiet and he and defendant Flaten then went to the kitchen.

The latter told him she was going to send her to a mental institution and that she had telephoned Miss Rosenman's mother and that her mother would be here. He then said: "I don't know why you don't wait for her mother to get her * * * let her mother handle this. I wouldn't want it on my conscience to send any girl to a mental institution."

While he and Miss Flaten were in the kitchen, he saw Miss Rosenman coming through the door with nothing on but a shirt; she came over and picked up a cloth and wiped her nose. He grabbed her by the shoulders and shook her and said: "Come on, Nettie; snap out of it." She stepped backward and her head hit against one of the cabinets in the kitchen. He grabbed her and pulled her forward and she shook her head from side to side and up and down. At that time he slapped her across the chin and said: "Come on, snap out of it. We wouldn't want to be in any mess like this." He then took Miss Rosenman by the hand into her bedroom and put her to bed, and then went out into the kitchen and made himself a drink.

About 4:30 p.m., after he and Miss Flaten had consumed a number of drinks, they went into a bedroom together and about forty-five minutes later he was called to the telephone.

As he was returning to the bedroom which he and Miss Flaten had been occupying, he heard a noise on the wall and he walked into Nathalie's bedroom where he found her sitting on top of the bed with her head back against the wall. He picked her up and slapped her face several times and then laid her down on the bed. At that time she was in the nude, and there were no bed clothes on the bed and he grabbed a sheet or blanket and put it over her. As soon as he would get her covered, she would kick it off. She got up on her knees and started moving her arms "as though she were swimming" and while doing so she slid off the edge of the bed. He picked her up, put her back in bed, put another blanket on her and went into the kitchen and poured himself a drink.

In explanation of the blood upon himself and Miss Rosenman, defendant Collup testified that, while she was "swinging her head, she bumped her head against his nose causing it to bleed and that he wiped his nose with the sleeve of his robe."

Defendant Collup testified that at no time did his co-defendant say anything to him with reference to his having sexual intercourse with Miss Rosenman. This witness also testified that later in the afternoon of March 17th, Miss Rosenman "was again sitting on top of her bed, that was all that was holding her up, with her head back against the wall, and that is why I heard this sound, so I picked her up and slapped her face several times and then laid her down on the bed. She was in the nude."

[1] Appellant's contention that, before the extrajudicial statements of a defendant can be admitted, the corpus delicti must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, is without merit. The general trend of authority holds that it is not a prerequisite to the reception in evidence of the extrajudicial statements of the defendant that proof of the corpus delicti of that conclusive and convincing character necessary to satisfy the minds of jurors beyond a reasonable doubt shall be supplied. Upon prima facie proof of the corpus delicti, the extrajudicial statements, admissions or confessions of the accused may be admitted in evidence. People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 434, 245 P. 426; People v. Sameniego, 118 Cal.App. 165, 4 P.2d 809, 5 P.2d 653.

[2-5] As to counts I and III, except for the extrajudicial statements of defendant Flaten, we find no substantial evidence whatever establishing the corpus delicti of the offenses of assault with intent to commit rape or conspiracy to commit rape. In any event the extrajudicial statements of defendant Flaten were inadmissible against her co-defendant and, because of a total lack of proof sufficient to establish prima facie the fact of a conspiracy between the parties to commit rape, Subd. 6, Sec. 1870, Code of Civil Procedure, or any assault with intent to commit rape, such extrajudicial statements were equally inadmissible against defendant Flaten, herself. In the instant case it may be true that appellants had opportunity for commission of the crimes charged against them, but conviction of crime cannot be founded upon unreasonable inferences, speculation or suspicion, but must be grounded upon satisfactory evidence and reasonable inference predicated thereon; and while jurors are the sole and exclusive judges of the value and effect of evidence, their discretion and power in that regard is not absolute and may not be arbitrarily exercised when, as a matter of law, the evidence upon which the verdict is predicated is not of such a character that it can be said therefrom that no reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt existed.

[6-8] In a charge of assault with intent to commit rape, intent is the vital element. The record before us, exclusive of the aforesaid extrajudicial statements, is barren of any evidence indicative of such required intent. In fact, the surrounding circumstances point strongly toward the conclusion that any assault made upon the person of Miss Rosenman was in an attempt to "snap her out of" the mental condition with which she was afflicted and not for the purpose of ravishing her. We have searched the record in vain for any competent evidence that any assault was made upon Miss Rosenman with intent to commit rape, or of the formation of any conspiracy to commit rape, and, as heretofore pointed out, the medical testimony negatived the inference that any such assault was made. On the hearing of the application for probation of defendant Collup, the trial judge thus expressed himself: "I am not satisfied at all that there was any real serious attempt to have sexual intercourse with Miss Rosenman. I don't know. I think Mr. Collup thought certain things might snap the girl out of it, as he expressed it, just as sometimes a prizefighter is slapped on the head by a trainer to bring him out of it. However, I don't know what was in his mind." While it is not within the province of the trial judge to interfere with or control the jury in passing upon the evidence, he has nevertheless a very salutary supervisory power over their verdict. Possessed of this power he should always be satisfied that the evidence as a whole is sufficient to uphold the verdict returned. When in his judgment it is not, he should not only unhesitatingly say so, as he did in this case, but he should set the verdict aside. One of the most prolific causes of injustice, in view of the restricted right of appellate courts with reference to the value and effect of evidence and the credibility of witnesses, is the reluctance of trial judges to set aside verdicts upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, when the judge is not satisfied that the verdict returned by the jury is sustained by the evidence. As suggested in People v. Lum Yit, 83 Cal. 130, 133, 23 P. 228, 229, the judge has the witnesses before him and "an equal opportunity with the jury to observe the manner of the witnesses, the character of their testimony, and to judge of their credibility, and to discover their motives. He, too, had to be satisfied that the evidence, as a whole, was sufficient to sustain the verdict. If he was not, it was not only the proper exercise of a legal discretion, but his duty, to grant a new trial." However contrary to public morals and decency was the conduct of defendants herein, there is no legal and substantial evidence that any assault committed by them, or either of them, upon Miss Rosenman was motivated by an intent to commit rape, nor that they entered into an illegal and unlawful and corrupt agreement to commit the crime of rape upon her. The medical testimony hereinbefore referred to, instead of establishing the fact that an act of sexual intercourse had taken place with Miss Rosenman, negatived that fact. Nor is proof of the corpus delicti of either crime aided to any extent by the extrajudicial statements or testimony of defendant Flaten, whose narrative is replete with statements that she "was of the opinion" that certain things were going to be done; that defendant Collup went into the room with Miss Rosenman "with the idea in mind" of having sexual intercourse; that "such was the intention" of her co-defendant; and that "such was the assumption," all of which amount only to her conclusions and possess no evidentiary weight or probative value.

[9-11] Much of what we have heretofore said is applicable to the offense of assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury as charged in count II of the information. From the evidence in this case it cannot be assumed that all of the injuries sustained by Miss Rosenman were inflicted by either of the defendants. As to defendant Flaten, there is no testimony that she committed any assault upon the alleged victim, and although it be conceded that she aided and abetted in the commission of any assault by her co-defendant, we are still persuaded that the proven assault cannot be classed as one violative of section 245 of the Penal Code. The victim of the alleged assault was concededly insane and unable to properly care for herself. From the reading of this record, it is obvious that neither defendant bore any ill-will toward the insane Miss Rosenman. Defendant Flaten, for several days prior to March 17, had been caring for Miss Rosenman who was given to violent outbreaks. Other than the testimony given by the defendants themselves that defendant Collup slapped the face of Miss Rosenman on one occasion in the kitchen and again in the bedroom to "snap her out of it," we can find no evidence of any assault on the part of either defendant, and it is not contended that such assaults produced the injuries on the head and other parts of Miss Rosenman's body. We are forced to the conclusion that the assault committed by defendant Collup was not of the kind or character contemplated by section 245, Penal Code, and amounted to no more than a violation of section 240 or 242 of the same code. That an assault by means likely to produce great bodily injury may be committed with the hands or fists is undoubtedly the law, and it is equally well-established that it is not necessary in order to complete the offense to show that the defendant actually injured his intended victim, but there must be evidence that, as the result of the physical force used or attempted to be used, there was likelihood of great bodily injury. If it be the manner in which the force was used that assumes importance, and not so much the degree thereof, then we are impressed that under the facts and circumstances here present it cannot, as a matter of law, be held that the proven force used herein was likely to produce great bodily injury; or that it amounted to the unlawful use of force and violence other than that denounced by section 242 of the Penal Code, or an unlawful attempt, coupled with the present ability to commit a violent injury on the person of Miss Rosenman which is prohibited by section 240 of the same code.

The picture presented by the record before us indicates that defendant Flaten was caring for an insane companion and attempted to help her. When her co-defendant phoned on the morning of March 17th, she explained her plight to him and accepted his offer to aid her; that following the arrival of defendant Collup it was, as stated by the trial court, "their over-indulgence in liquor that was to blame for a great deal of what happened." But, however disgraceful, immoral or reprehensible their conduct may have been, there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality establishing the commission by them of the felonies charged in the information.

Finally, what we regard as the most important question raised on this appeal is the contention of appellants that the court abused its discretion in permitting the prosecution to read into evidence the testimony of the witnesses Nelson and Curtiss given at the preliminary examination, on the ground that such witnesses could not with due diligence be found within the State of California.

[12] As to the witness Curtiss, we are satisfied that there was no abuse of discretion committed by the trial judge in his determination that due diligence had been used and that it was "satisfactorily shown" that the witness could not be found within the state. Sub. 3, sec. 686, Penal Code. As to this witness there was no showing that the testimony in question would have been any different if the absent witness had been present at the trial, nor was there any showing that evidence of an impeaching character had materialized since the preliminary examination. People v. Bernstein, 70 Cal.App.2d 462, 161 P.2d 381.

[13, 14] However, as to the witness Nelson, a very different situation is presented. In the case of this witness, the District Attorney announced that he had received a letter from her in which she advised that since the preliminary examination she had remarried and moved her residence to Caliente, Nevada, where she was permanently employed as a registered nurse in a hospital.

The District Attorney stated that he had received several other communications from the witness asking to be excused, that "she was served with a subpoena before leaving California. * * * I told her we would expect her here, but we have no way of enforcing the subpoena. On that showing the People will ask leave to read the testimony of Miss Nelson." Each defendant objected to the reading of the testimony of this witness on the ground that "I don't think due diligence has been exercised in obtaining this witness. We desire to have the witness present in front of the jury for examination * * *." Thereupon it was stipulated that if the Deputy District Attorney were sworn he would testify to the truth of the facts stated by him; the court ruled that the testimony might be read to the jury; and it was.

After the prosecution had rested its case, and while defendant Flaten was testifying as a witness in her own behalf, she was asked whether subsequent to the preliminary examination she had a conversation with the absent witness, Miss Nelson, relative to the latter's testimony given at the preliminary examination, to which interrogatory she replied in the affirmative. When asked to state the conversation defendant Flaten, over the objection of the prosecution, testified that the witness Nelson in the conversation with her said that "they hadn't gotten this story straight, and that she had said so many things that were prompted by Miss Curtiss that were untrue, she was very sorry, that she was making no charges against me * * *." Defendant Flaten's mother, testifying as a witness, corroborated the foregoing. Thereafter, on motion of the District Attorney, the court struck the foregoing testimony of defendant Flaten and her mother from the record and instructed the jury to disregard the same. In this ruling the trial judge was correct for manifestly such testimony was admissible only for the purpose of impeaching the testimony of the absent witness Miss Nelson. It is elementary that, before the impeaching evidence is offered, the witness sought to be impeached must be asked whether or not he or she made certain statements or had certain conversations. If the witness admits making such statements or having such conversations, then the impeaching testimony is inadmissible because the witness stands impeached by his own admissions. But, if the witness denied making the statements or having the conversations attributed to him, then the impeaching evidence becomes material and proper. But, in the instant case, it was impossible for defendant Flaten to lay the necessary foundation because the witness sought to be impeached was not present at the trial.

While the ruling of the court in striking out the testimony was correct in that it excluded the testimony for impeachment purposes, nevertheless the evidence was material and should have been considered by the court in the exercise of its discretion as to whether the testimony of the witness Nelson given at the preliminary examination should be read into evidence at the trial because of her absence therefrom. It might here be noted that a mere reading of the factual background surrounding this prosecution at once suggests the importance of the testimony of the absent witness.

The testimony of defendant Flaten and her mother should have been offered at the time objection was made to the reading of Miss Nelson's testimony. Had it been so offered it would have been the duty of the court, in view of the importance of the defendant's right to be confronted in person by the witnesses against her, to weigh and consider such evidence in exercising judicial discretion on the motion to permit the testimony given at the preliminary examination to be read. While in the case at bar, the impeaching testimony was not, as it should have been, before the court at the time the motion to read the absent witness' testimony was made, it was later received in evidence, and, while not admissible for the purposes of impeachment, it could and should have been considered by the court in determining whether the testimony of the absent witness should not also have been stricken from the record. In the case with which we are here concerned there was a showing not only that the testimony of the absent witness, Miss Nelson, might have been different from that given by her at the preliminary examination had she been confronted with the impeaching testimony, but there was also a showing that the proffered testimony of an impeaching character materialized subsequent to the preliminary examination.

[15, 16] As an assurance against ancient evils of tyrannical governments, our country, in order to preserve "the blessings of liberty," wrote into its basic law the requirement, among others, that the forfeiture of the lives or liberties of persons accused of crime can only follow if procedural safeguards of due process have been obeyed. Sec. 1, 14th Amendment, Constitution of the United States. A compelling consideration in determining whether a right is embraced within the due process clause of the 14th Amendment is whether the right involved is of such a character that it cannot be denied without violating those "fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions." Hebert v. State of Louisiana, 272 U.S. 312, 316, 47 S.Ct. 103, 104, 71 L.Ed. 270, 272, 48 A.L.R. 1102. It would indeed be vain to give the accused his day in court with no opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses against him. While, as stated by this court in People v. Bernstein, supra, the procedure allowing the introduction of such evidence is not repugnant to pertinent constitutional provisions where the defendant is confronted by the witness and given an opportunity to and did in fact cross-examine the witness, it was nevertheless, as stated in the case just cited, held in Brown v. State of New Jersey, 175 U.S. 172, 174, 20 S.Ct. 77, 78, 44 L.Ed. 119: "The state has full control over the procedure in its courts, both in civil and in criminal cases, subject only to the qualification that such procedure must not work a denial of fundamental rights, or conflict with specific and applicable provisions of the Federal Constitution." (Emphasis added.)

[17, 18] It must therefore follow that "due process" contemplates the opportunity and right to cross-examine each witness on all relevant and material matters relating to the witness' testimony, and, when that right and opportunity is refused, such refusal constitutes a denial of "due process." This right to cross-examine as to any matter which has a bearing, directly or indirectly, upon any portion of the testimony given by a witness on direct examination is also preserved by section 2048 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sharp v. Hoffman, 79 Cal. 404, 408, 21 P. 846, cited with approval in People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 655, 49 P. 1049, 40 L.R.A. 269, and In re Estate of Kasson, 127 Cal. 496, 500, 59 P. 950. Whether, on account of the witness' absence, or, if the witness is present, on account of an erroneous ruling the effect is the same. It was no fault of the defendant that the witness was absent. Nevertheless, as a result of such absence, the defendant was denied the opportunity and right to cross-examine and lay the necessary foundation for impeachment, a matter that obviously and vitally affected the substantial rights of the defendant. If therefore the trial court believed that the testimony which was to be offered for the purpose of impeachment concerned transactions, conversations or actions of an absent witness which occurred after the preliminary examination, and of which the defendant could not therefore have had knowledge when she was confronted by the witness at such preliminary examination and had an opportunity to cross-examine her, and, unless there were logical and reasonable grounds for disbelieving and rejecting the testimony of such witnesses, in accordance with accepted rules for determining the credibility of witnesses, then he should have sustained the objection made to the motion of the District Attorney for leave to read into the record the testimony given by the witness before the committing magistrate. Although the evidence above referred to which tended to impeach the absent witness was not offered at the time the objection was made to the reading of the transcript of said witness' testimony, nevertheless, it was not too late in the interests of justice to reconsider the objection at that time to determine whether the testimony of such absent witness should not have been stricken from the record and the jury instructed to disregard it. To hold otherwise would impinge upon the hereinbefore mentioned applicable provisions of the Constitution, and therefore would amount to a denial of due process.

In view of the foregoing conclusions at which we have arrived, we need not consider any of the other several contentions urged by defendants upon this appeal.

The orders denying the motions of the defendants for a new trial are, and each is, reversed.

DORAN, J., concurs.

YORK, P. J., concurs in the order reversing the orders denying a new trial.

70 Cal.App.2d 736

PEOPLE v. PARTEE.

Cr. 2341.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 12, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⇐398(1)

In prosecution for keeping and occupying a room for recording and registering bets on horse races, a card, written on by defendant and handed by him to police officer, at such officer's request, as copy of card which officer saw defendant write on and place under counter with money bet on horse race, when defendant said he could not find original card, was admissible as original evidence of original card's contents. Code Civ.Proc. § 1855, subd. 1; Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

2. Gaming ⇐97(2)

In prosecution for keeping and occupying a room for recording and registering bets on horse races, cards on which day's bets were recorded, found in room adjoining hall in which "run-down sheets", bearing names and post positions of horses in each race, were suspended from pipe over counter, were admissible as constituting, with such sheets, day's bookmaking business, though there was no evidence that handwriting thereon was that of defendant or that he knew of cards' presence. Pen. Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

3. Gaming ⚿98(5)

Evidence supported conviction of keeping and occupying a room for recording and registering bets on horse races, though there was no evidence that defendant was owner or lessee of, or employee on, premises in question, and none of racing paraphernalia found thereon was in defendant's handwriting. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

4. Gaming ⚿79(1)

In prosecution for keeping and occupying a room for recording and registering bets on horse races, instruction that prosecution need only establish to moral certainty and beyond reasonable doubt that defendant occupied premises in question or aided and abetted in occupancy thereof was not erroneous. Pen.Code, § 337a, subd. 2.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edward P. Murphy, Judge.

Gordon Partee was convicted of keeping and occupying a room for the purpose of recording and registering bets on horse races, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Joseph C. Haughey, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

The defendant was duly informed against, tried and convicted of violating subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code. He has appealed from the judgment. Before stating his points it will clarify the case to recite some of the facts.

On the 24th day of May, 1944, Thomas M. Cole and Walter V. Heagney, police officers of the City and County of San Francisco, visited the place known as 83 First Street. Fronting on said street the premises consist of a cigar store and back of the cigar store is a large room 50X20. In that room there is a counter about 18 feet long running lengthwise of the room. Over the counter is a pipe running lengthwise of the counter and a few feet above it. At the time the police officers entered the room there were suspended from the pipe three "turf digest" or "run down" sheets with the names and initials of horses and the post positions of the horses in each race. Said sheets designated the horses and races that were being run on said 24th day of May, 1944. Certain horses on the run down sheets were circled to show which horse won. After another horse a figure "2" was marked to show that that horse ran second, and after another horse was marked the figure "3" showing that that horse ran to show. All of the run down sheets were dated May 24, 1944. At the bottom of the run down sheets were the prices showing what each horse paid. The run down sheets were on cardboard and one was turned toward the audience and the other sheet toward the defendant who was standing behind the counter. While the officers were present they heard the defendant say, "You better place your wagers before we close the race." At about that time a naval chief petty officer stepped up to the counter and asked to bet on 328, $1 to place and $1 to show. At the same time he placed $2 on the counter. The defendant placed the money on a rack under the counter and at the same time he wrote out a card and placed it under the counter. Officer Cole stepped up and asked defendant for the card. The defendant stated he could not find it and Cole then asked for a copy. Thereupon Partee prepared a card and handed it over to Cole as a copy. Such facts were testified to by Cole and also by Heagney. The three sheets just mentioned and also the card were received in evidence. Although the defendant was present he did not take the stand as a witness nor did he call any other persons as witnesses. The officers and Partee then stepped into an adjoining room where there were some tables and chairs. Murray Kleinstein and another whose name was not disclosed were present. On the table were twenty-four cards. Cole asked, "Is that a record of today's bets?" Cole also asked if they wanted copies. Partee interposed directing Kleinstein to make the copies which Kleinstein did. Those twenty-four cards were also admitted in evidence. The card first mentioned was similar in form to the other twenty-four cards just mentioned.

The prosecution introduced as exhibit one the sheet marked California Turf Digest, as exhibit two the sheet marked California Turf Digest for Belmont, New York, as exhibit three the sheet marked Daily Racing News and Sports Bulletin Suffolk Downs, and as exhibit four another sheet, Suffolk Downs Run Down Sheet of May 24, 1944.

The defendant contends: "The mere presence of appellant in a room where bookmaking paraphernalia is found is not in and of itself sufficient to support a charge that appellant was keeping and occupying a room for the purpose of recording and registering a bet on horse races." That is not a comprehensive statement of the evidence. The evidence stated above shows facts that the jury was warranted in holding the defendant was more than merely "present". A careful reading of People v. Rabalete, 28 Cal.App.2d 480, 82 P.2d 707, shows that the facts were quite different. In the instant case the evidence showed a gambling room fully equipped, a counter for the transaction of business and the defendant standing back of the counter transacting the business.

[1] The card written out by the defendant and handed to Officer Cole was introduced as exhibit number five. The defendant contends it was improperly introduced. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1855, subd. 1. The contention has no support. The officer saw the defendant write out a card and place it under the counter. When the defendant could not find it the officer asked him for a copy. Defendant wrote out the card and handed it, as a copy, to the officer. It was original evidence of its contents.

[2] The twenty-four cards found on the table in the office or room adjoining the main hall hereinabove described were offered in one package as People's Exhibit Six. The defendant contends they should not have been received because the writing thereon was not shown to be the handwriting of the defendant or that the defendant had any knowledge of the presence of said cards. We find no merit in the point. Each of said cards read in connection with the run down sheets authorized the jury to find that said cards constituted the day's business in operating the bookmaking.

[3] In its brief the prosecution cited People v. Hinkle, 64 Cal.App. 375, 221 P. 693 and several other cases as defining the meaning of subdivision 2 of section 337a of the Penal Code. The defendant replies that said cases present a factual situation which is quite different from the facts in the instant record. To a certain extent the distinction is well founded. But comparing the calls of the statute, Penal Code, sec. 337a, subdivision 2, with the facts herein recited we think it is clear that it may not be said the evidence did not fully support the judgment. Again, on page 9 of his closing brief, the defendant says: "In the instant case there is not a particle of evidence that appellant is the owner, proprietor or lessee of the premises in question. There is no evidence showing that he was an employee of such premises. None of the racing paraphernalia was in the handwriting of appellant." That criticism is not helpful. The defendant was charged with "keeping" and "occupying" a certain premises. He was not charged as being the "owner, proprietor or lessee" thereof, nor as an "employee" therein. Nor was he charged as being the author of any "writing". The writings came into the case incidentally as evidence descriptive of the plant kept and occupied by the defendant.

[4] Among others the trial court gave an instruction which contained this language: "It is sufficient on this point if the prosecution establishes to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant Gordon Partee occupied the premises or aided and abetted in the occupancy of the premises at 83 First Street * * *." The defendant contends the giving of said instruction was error. We think not. Bearing in mind that defendant was charged with "keeping" and "occupying" said premises, we think what is said in People v. Steinfeld, 38 Cal.App.2d 280, 101 P.2d 89, was sufficient authority for giving the instruction as written.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

In re BEVILACQUA'S ESTATE.*

Civ. 12770.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Aug. 21, 1945.

As Amended Sept. 17, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 19, 1945.

1. Constitutional law 🔑94

An intestate's alien heirs, before enactment of statutes imposing conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property by will or succession under state laws, had no vested right of inheritance, but at most only a hope or expectancy of inheritance from intestate. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

2. Descent and distribution 🔑1

The authority which confers a right of inheritance may abolish it at any time or impose conditions on its existence.

3. Descent and distribution 🔑1

Since right of inheritance exists only by statutory authority, law of succession to property of deceased residents of state within boundaries thereof is entirely within state legislature's control, and designation of heirs and their proportions of such decedents' estates are subject to legislative will.

4. Aliens 🔑10

A state, having power to deny aliens privilege of taking property within state either as heirs or legatees, may annex to its grant of such privilege any conditions which it supposes to be required by its interests or policy.

5. Constitutional law 🔑47

In determining constitutionality of statute, court must confine itself to consideration of matters appearing on face of law and facts of which court can take judicial notice, and if statute, thus considered, does not appear to be unconstitutional, court will not go behind it and undertake to ascertain from evidence whether legislature observed constitutional restrictions in enacting statute.

6. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)

The legislature's reasons or motives for enacting statutes imposing conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by will or succession and for putting them into operation immediately, as expressed in appended statement of urgency, cannot be inquired into, by courts for purpose of invalidating, or preventing full operation of, law. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

7. Constitutional law 🔑47
Evidence 🔑29

While courts take judicial notice of statement of urgency appended to statute made operative immediately, such statement cannot be used to impeach constitutionality of statute. St. 1941, c. 895, § 2; Const. art. 4, § 1.

8. Aliens 🔑10

The statutes, declaring nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by succession or will dependent on existence of citizens' reciprocal right to take property on same conditions as residents and citizens of such aliens' countries, are not unconstitutional as not laws of succession, but primarily intended to control transmission of estate funds and property between United States and foreign countries according to appended statement of emergency requiring immediate effectiveness of acts. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; St. 1941, c. 895, § 2; Const. art. 4, § 1.

9. Commerce 🔑48

The statutes, declaring nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by succession or will dependent on citizens' reciprocal right to take property on same conditions as residents and citizens of such aliens' countries are not invalid as violating clause of Federal Constitution, giving Congress exclusive power to regulate foreign commerce. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 3.

10. Treaties 🔑2

The statutes, declaring nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by succession or will dependent on United States citizens' reciprocal right to take property on same conditions as residents and citizens of such aliens' countries, are not unconstitutional as invading treaty-making powers of United States by exacting reciprocal rights from foreign countries in exchange for concessions as to succession, though they impose conditions on inheritance under state laws. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 10.

11. War 🔑2

The statutes declaring nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by succession or will dependent on citizens' reciprocal rights of inheritance from persons dying in such aliens' countries are not invalid as constituting possible source of embarrassment to United States with respect to neutral countries and its allies or direct impediment to its prosecution of war. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

---

* Subsequent opinion 191 P.2d 752.

12. Evidence 🔑39

Courts are bound to take judicial notice of existence or nonexistence of treaties between United States and foreign countries. Code Civ.Proc. § 1875.

13. Constitutional law 🔑47

In proceedings for letters of administration on estate of decedent, leaving alien widow and children residing in Italy, introduction in evidence of Italian statutes, granting foreigners same inheritance rights as Italian citizens on reciprocal conditions, would prove nothing on questions of constitutionality of state statutes imposing such conditions on rights of nonresident aliens to take property in state by will or succession under state laws. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; Code Civ.Proc. §§ 1901–1904.

14. Aliens 🔑10

Under statutes declaring nonresident aliens' rights to take property in state by succession or will dependent on citizens' reciprocal rights to take property on same conditions as citizens of such aliens' countries, no interest in estate of state resident dying intestate passed to his widow and children who were citizens and residents of Italy. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

15. States 🔑4

The United States, with its programs of controlling foreign funds and sequestering enemy nationals' property under Trading with the Enemy Act, did not pre-empt field of foreign relationships concerning inheritance rights, and hence did not thereby preclude enactment of state laws imposing conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by will or succession under state laws. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix § 1 et seq.

16. War 🔑2

The entry of United States into war does not automatically curtail state's normal powers to enact legislation, so that state statutes, imposing reciprocal conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by will or succession under state laws, are not invalid as invading war powers of United States. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 10.

17. Evidence 🔑80(1), 81

The presumption that law of foreign state or country is same as that of California is inapplicable in cases arising under statutes imposing reciprocal conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by will or succession under state laws in view of provision in such statutes that burden shall be on such aliens to establish United States citizens' reciprocal rights to take property in such aliens' countries on same terms as residents and citizens thereof. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

18. Evidence 🔑90

Statutes casting on either party to action burden of proof on certain issue are within Legislature's constitutional power to enact.

19. Evidence 🔑98

Where no direct evidence is introduced on issue, finding thereon should be against party having burden of proof.

20. Aliens 🔑10

Under statutes imposing reciprocal conditions on nonresident aliens' rights to take property in state by will or succession under state laws, inheritance from state resident, dying intestate, should not vest in nonresident Italian nationals subject to defeasance, in view of statutory provision casting burden on foreign heirs to show their right to inherit. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

21. Executors and administrators 🔑20(7)

The right of intestate's cousin, as intestate's only relative residing in state, to letters of administration as against public administrator representing intestate's widow and children residing in Italy, of which they were nationals, was not defeated by such cousin's failure to prove that person under whom he claimed was not an alien or was an alien entitled to inherit, as such statutes impose no such condition. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; § 422, subds. 6, 8.

22. Aliens 🔑10

Constitutional law 🔑278(1)

The statutes imposing reciprocal conditions on nonresident aliens' right to take property in state by will or succession under state laws are not invalid as violating 14th Amendment. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; U.S.C.A. Const. Amend. 14.

23. Executors and administrators ⇐17(2)

A resident cousin of intestate, having no other relatives in United States and leaving widow and four adult children residing in Italy, of which they were nationals, was an heir, eligible to take intestate's property, and next of kin, entitled to share in his estate, and hence entitled to administer estate in preference to public administrator. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; § 422, subds. 6, 8.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; T. I. Fitzpatrick, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Ignazio Bevilacqua, also called E. Bevilacqua and Egnazio Beveacqua, deceased. From an order granting the petition of Phil C. Katz, as Public Administrator of the City and County of San Francisco, and denying that of Pietro Bevilacqua, for letters of administration, petitioner Bevilacqua appeals.

Reversed.

Charles Baer, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Everett W. Mattoon, Deputy Atty. Gen., amici curiae in support of appellant.

Henry F. Boyen, Frank J. Fontes, and A. E. Levinson, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

Herbert Wechsler, Asst. Atty. Gen. of the United States, Frank J. Hennessy, U. S. Atty., of San Francisco, Harry LeRoy Jones, Chief, Alien Property Litigation Unit, Wallace H. Walker, Richard P. Lott, for Alien Property Litigation Unit, War Div., Dept. of Justice, all of Washington, D. C., and Arthur J. DeLorimier, Asst. U. S. Atty., of San Franciso, Cal., amici curiae in support of respondent.

GOODELL, Justice.

This appeal is from an order granting the petition of the public administrator, and denying that of the appellant, for letters of administration.

The question presented for decision is as to the constitutionality of sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the probate code, which impose conditions on the right of aliens who are not residents of the United States to take by will or succession under the laws of this state. The issue arose in a contest between the appellant, a first cousin of the decedent, and the respondent public administrator, over the right to administer the estate of Ignazio Bevilacqua. This decedent, a resident of San Francisco, died intestate on January 28, 1944, leaving an estate worth about $9000 in personal property. His next of kin are his widow and four adult children, all of whom are aliens and residents of Italy. The appellant's application for letters was based on the theory that the widow and children had been by these three sections cut off as heirs at law because they are Italian nationals resident in Italy, and that he, Pietro, a resident of California (and decedent's only relative in the United States) automatically became "The next of kin entitled to share in the estate" (subd. 6, sec. 422, Probate Code) and therefore qualified to administer it. The public administrator's application was based on the theory that the sections are invalid because they violate the constitution of the United States and therefore that the five aliens are the heirs at law (and hence that Pietro cannot inherit). The judge took the latter view, and made an order granting letters to the public administrator (subd. 8, sec. 422, Probate Code) and it was from that order that this appeal was taken.

The only evidence at the hearing in probate was that produced by the appellant. No evidence whatever was presented touching the important question whether or not reciprocal rights of inheritance existed by treaty or otherwise. It is brought to this court's notice by the briefs that at the time sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 were adopted there was no treaty in existence between the United States and Italy on the subject of reciprocal inheritance, and that there is none now.

The case has been ably briefed and we have had the benefit of two amici curiae briefs filed by the United States on the side of the respondent and one by the Attorney General of California on the side of the appellant. In the last brief filed by the United States we are told that on January 19, 1945, the Alien Property Custodian "vested all right, title, interest and claim in and to this estate of the wife and children of the decedent, who are nationals of Italy" and that "at an appropriate time, a motion will be made * * * for leave to intervene." This would seem to place the Custodian, to all intents and purposes, in the shoes of the alien "heirs" in this litigation. That the Custodian has the power and authority to appear for foreigners who may turn out to be entitled to inherit is held in the recent case of Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 842, 155 P.2d 823.

The three sections under attack read as follows:

Section 259: "The rights of aliens not residing within the United States or its territories to take either real or personal property or the proceeds thereof in this State by succession or testamentary disposition, upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the United States is dependent in each case upon the existence of a reciprocal right upon the part of citizens of the United States to take real and personal property and the proceeds thereof upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the respective countries of which such aliens are inhabitants and citizens and upon the rights of citizens of the United States to receive by payment to them within the United States or its territories money originating from the estates of persons dying within such foreign countries."

Section 259.1: "The burden shall be upon such nonresident aliens to establish the fact of existence of the reciprocal rights set forth in Section 259."

Section 259.2: "If such reciprocal rights are not found to exist and if no heirs other than such aliens are found eligible to take such property, the property shall be disposed of as escheated property."

The appellant contends that these sections are constitutional for the reason that the inheritance of property within a state is a matter with which that state, in the proper exercise of its sovereign powers, is alone concerned. He contends, further, that the Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix § 1 et seq., does not pretend to, and cannot possibly, affect or control the laws of succession within a state, but that it is concerned chiefly, if not entirely, with the sequestering or "capturing" of property which belongs to, or has become vested in, alien enemies and which otherwise would get into their possession. The Attorney General concurs unreservedly in these views.

The respondent and the government take the position that this legislation impinges seriously, and to an alarming extent, upon the powers and functions of the federal government, indeed that it not only embarrasses, but actually hinders and impedes, the war effort.

[1, 2] In the first place, the five alien "heirs", before the enactment of sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2, had at most but a hope or expectancy of inheriting from this decedent. They had no vested right in any sense, and the authority which confers a right of inheritance may abolish it at any time or impose conditions on its existence.

[3] In Re Estate of Perkins, 21 Cal.2d 561, 569, 134 P.2d 231, 236, the court says: "Since the right of inheritance is not an inherent or natural right but one which exists only by statutory authority, the law of succession is entirely within the control of the Legislature. [Citing cases.] The designation of heirs and the proportions which they shall receive are subject to the legislative will, * * * and until the death of the ancestor, the right of inheritance is not a vested one but a mere expectancy [citing cases]." See also 9 Cal.Jur. 450, 451; 16 Am.Jur. 777–780; and 26 C.J.S., Descent and Distribution, §§ 2–6, pp. 996–1004. While the foregoing is a concise statement of the law of this state, as well as of the law generally, in view of the fact that the attack on this legislation is based on a claimed violation of the federal constitution, it is not inappropriate that inquiry should be directed as well into the federal authorities. The cases relied on by the appellant show that the Supreme Court of the United States has made unequivocal pronouncements which square with those of our own courts in favor of the exclusive right and power of the states to determine by their own legislation how property within their own boundaries shall descend by inheritance on the death of one of their own residents.

[4] Mager v. Grima et al., 49 U.S. 490, 503, 8 How. 490, 503, 12 L.Ed. 1168, one of the leading cases on this subject, is singularly apt because it involves the taxability of the legacy of an alien. There the state of Louisiana enacted a law imposing a tax of 10% on legacies, inheritances and gifts to aliens not residing in the United States. In upholding its constitutionality the court said (49 U.S. at pages 492, 493, 8 How. at pages 492, 493, 12 L.Ed. 1168): "Now the law in question is nothing more than an exercise of the power which every state and sovereignty possesses, of regulating the manner and term[s] upon which property real or personal within its dominion may be transmitted by last will and testament, or by inheritance; and of prescribing who shall and who shall not be capable of taking it. Every state or nation may unquestionably refuse to allow an alien to take either real or personal property, situated within its limits, either as heir or legatee, and may, if it thinks proper, direct that property so descending or bequeathed shall belong to the state. In many of the States of this Union at this day, real property devised to an alien is liable to escheat. And if a State may deny the privilege altogether, it follows that, when it grants it, it may annex to the grant any conditions which it supposes to be required by its interests or policy." (Emphasis ours.) That case, decided in 1850, has been consistently followed ever since. As recently as 1942, in Irving Trust Co. v. Day, 314 U.S. 556, 62 S.Ct. 398, 401, 86 L.Ed. 452, 137 A.L.R. 1093, the court said: "Rights of succession to the property of a deceased, whether by will or by intestacy, are of statutory creation, and the dead hand rules succession only by sufferance. Nothing in the Federal Constitution forbids the legislature of a state to limit, condition, or even abolish the power of testamentary disposition over property within its jurisdiction. Mager v. Grima, 8 How. 490, 12 L.Ed. 1168; United States v. Fox, 94 U.S. 315, 24 L.Ed. 192; United States v. Perkins, 163 U.S. 625, 16 S.Ct. 1073, 41 L.Ed. 287; cf. Randall v. Kreiger, 23 Wall. 137, 148, 23 L.Ed. 124 [126]. Expectations or hopes of succession, whether testate or intestate, to the property of a living person, do not vest until the death of that person." (Emphasis ours.) In 1944 the court said in Demorest v. City Bank, etc., Co., 321 U.S. 36, 64 S.Ct. 384, 391, 88 L.Ed. 526: "Rights to succession by will are created by the state and may be limited, conditioned, or abolished by it." It is interesting to note that in United States v. Fox, supra, a devise of real property in New York to the United States was held invalid under the laws of that state. And in United States v. Perkins, supra, the state of New York had imposed an inheritance tax on a legacy to the United States. It was held that, under the laws of that state, the legacy was taxable, the court saying [163 U.S. 625, 16 S.Ct. 1075]: "The legacy becomes the property of the United States only after it has suffered a diminution to the amount of the tax, and it is only upon this condition that the legislature assents to a bequest of it." (Emphasis ours.)

It is true, as the respondent observes, that most of these cases deal with inheritance taxes, but a glance at them shows that the rationale of each of them is the exclusive right and power of a state to limit, condition, or even abolish the right of inheritance. No authority running counter to these decisions has been forthcoming, and we are satisfied none is to be found.

[5-7] The respondent and the United States present many grounds upon which they contend this legislation is invalid. Perhaps the broadest ground urged by the respondent is that the three sections are not laws of succession at all. Counsel say: "Although incorporated in the Probate Code, the primary purpose of the sections in question is to control the transmission of estate funds and property between the United States and foreign countries" which purpose (they argue) is disclosed by the statement of the emergency whereby these sections went into immediate effect. Elsewhere, the respondent says: "Section 259 is therefore expressly declared to have been enacted as a limitation on the export of money and property to foreign countries, and by thus regulating foreign commerce, to protect the United States from 'a war that eventually may be directed against the Government of the United States.'" The United States makes the same contention as follows: "The declared considerations bringing the statute into effect [referring to the statement of the reasons for the urgency] and the considerations making it operative or inoperative to change the course of devolution of property upon the death of the owner are all matters relating to foreign affairs. The operation and effect of the statute is inextricably enmeshed in international affairs and matters of foreign policy. The statute does not work disinheritance of, or affect ownership of property in California by, any group or class, but on the contrary operates in fields exclusively for, and pre-empted by, the United States; namely, the control of the international transmission of property, funds, and credits, and the capture of enemy property. The statute is not an inheritance statute, but a statute of confiscation and retaliation." From this it is plain to be seen that counsel base their attack largely on the statement of urgency, Section 2 of chapter 895, Statutes of 1941, which reads: "This act is hereby declared to be an urgency measure necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health and safety within the meaning of Section 1 of Article IV of the Constitution of the State of California, and shall take effect immediately. The following is a statement of the facts constituting such necessity: A great number of foreign nations are either at war, preparing for war or under the control and domination of conquering nations with the result that money and property left to citizens of California is impounded in such foreign countries or taken by confiscatory taxes for war uses. Likewise money and property left to friends and relatives in such foreign countries by persons dying in California is often never received by such nonresident aliens but is seized by these foreign governments and used for war purposes. Because the foreign governments guilty of these practices constitute a direct threat to the Government of the United States, it is immediately necessary that the property and money of citizens dying in this country should remain in this country and not be sent to such foreign countries to be used for the purposes of waging a war that eventually may be directed against the Government of the United States."

This statement of course is not itself legislation. It is simply the explanation required by the state constitution why sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 should become operative immediately rather than 90 days after the adjournment of the legislature. It is settled law in this state "that, in passing upon the constitutionality of a statute, the court must confine itself to a consideration of those matters which appear upon the face of the law, and those facts of which it can take judicial notice. If the law, when thus considered, does not appear to be unconstitutional, the court will not go behind it, and by a resort to evidence undertake to ascertain whether the legislature in its enactment observed the restrictions which the constitution imposed upon it as a duty to do, and to the performance of which its members were bound by their oaths of office. * * * This view * * * is in harmony with the central idea of the constitution in prescribing the independence and equality of the three great departments of the state." Stevenson v. Colgan, 91 Cal. 649, 652, 27 P. 1089, 1090, 14 L.R.A. 459, 25 Am.St.Rep. 230. In Davis v. County of Los Angeles, 12 Cal.2d 412, 420, 84 P.2d 1034, 1039, an attack was made upon the declaration of urgency, and the court held, following Stevenson v. Colgan, that "the law makers in the process of enacting laws must pass upon all questions of expediency, necessity and fact connected therewith." Hence, whatever reasons were before the legislature for the enactment of these three sections, or for putting them into operation immediately, were the legislature's own reasons, and they cannot be inquired into, questioned or reviewed by the courts. Conceding, of course, that the courts take judicial notice (see Stevenson v. Colgan) of the statement of urgency, still such statement cannot be used to impeach the substantive legislation to which it is but an appendage. Granting that it expresses the motives which impelled the legislature to enact the law, it is nevertheless settled law that those motives "cannot be made a subject of judicial inquiry for the purpose of invalidating or preventing the full operation of the law." Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal. 498, 505, 105 P. 593, 596, 36 L.R.A., N.S., 244, 20 Ann.Cas. 158. In Plum v. State Board of Control, 51 Cal.App.2d 382, 385, 124 P.2d 891, 892, it is said: "When the legislature enacts a law, the courts must take it as it is passed. They cannot go behind it, inquire the motives which prompted it, or interpret it as those who voted it believed it to be. When a bill has been passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor, it becomes a law, and 'no evidence, nor the judgment of any court, can be allowed to modify or change its terms or effect, or prevent or impair its complete operative force.' Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal. 498, 105 P. 593, 595, 36 L.R.A., N.S., 244, 20 Ann.Cas. 158."

[8] The language of the three sections shows the clear legislative intent to do that which the authorities cited earlier hold the legislature can rightfully do by way of "limiting" or "conditioning" inheritances. We find the contention that the sections are not laws of succession to be wholly without merit. The argument on the respondent's side is simply an invitation to the court to go out of its way to hold these sections unconstitutional not because of what they say, but because of what the statement of urgency says. The court's duty lies in the opposite direction. 5 Cal. Jur. 611; 5 McKinney's Dig. 144.

[9] The commerce clause: The respondent's contention that these sections violate the commerce clause is within the general scope of the argument just discussed. The respondent argues that: "Succession cannot be made dependent on a compliance with conditions which operate as regulations of foreign commerce, or on any condition of an international character. The power to regulate foreign commerce is exclusively reserved to the Congress * * *. Section 259 was enacted for the express purpose of controlling the transmission of estate funds between foreign countries and the United States, i. e., to regulate foreign commerce arising from the estates of decedents, and to thereby prevent foreign countries from seizing estate funds to wage war on the United States. Such attempted regulation is invalid even if it is interwoven with, or made a part of a law of succession. Foreign commerce cannot be regulated by laws of succession or any other state laws." In developing this argument counsel devote many pages of their briefs and cite upwards of 35 cases on the general subject of interstate and foreign commerce, such cases dating all the way from 1824, Gibbons v. Ogden, 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L.Ed. 23 (a case dealing with navigation) down to the recent case of United States v. Southeastern Underwriters' Ass'n, 322 U.S. 533, 64 S.Ct. 1162, 88 L.Ed. 1440 (a case dealing with fire insurance). These cases discuss and decide what is, and what is not, "commerce" and deal with subjects as varied in range as the cases are numerous. Not one of them, however, holds that property passing by will or descent is commerce within the purview of the commerce clause, and nothing would be gained by reviewing them herein. On the other hand it has been held by the highest authority that property passing by will or descent to a beneficiary in a foreign country is not commerce within the meaning of the commerce clause. In Mager v. Grima et al., supra, the only points made by the plaintiff in error (see 49 U.S. 491, 492, 12 L.Ed. 1168) were that the Louisiana inheritance tax law was (1) an attempted regulation of foreign commerce (the legatee lived in France) and (2) a tax on exports. The court disposed of these contentions as follows: "We can see no objection to such a tax, whether imposed on citizens and aliens alike, or upon the latter exclusively. It certainly has no concern with commerce, or with imports or exports. It has been suggested, indeed, in the argument, that, as the legatee resided abroad, it would be necessary to transmit to her the proceeds of the portion of the estate to which she was entitled, and that the law was therefore a tax on exports. But if that argument was sound, no property would be liable to be taxed in a State, when the owner intended to convert it into money and send it abroad." (Emphasis ours.)

[10] The respondent and the United States claim that this legislation invades the treaty-making powers of the United States. The respondent says: "Section 259 violates Section 10 of Article I of the Federal Constitution forbidding states to enter into treaties, alliances or confederations, and necessarily prevents states from exacting reciprocal rights from foreign countries in exchange for concessions as to succession."

By this legislation California did not exact "reciprocal rights from foreign countries in exchange for concessions as to succession." Our legislature simply provided that if reciprocity existed foreign heirs could inherit under our laws, otherwise not. This, it is true, imposed a condition on inheritance under California laws, but the authorities already cited hold that this is permissible.

At the time when these three sections were enacted and at the time of decedent's death there was no treaty in effect between the United States and Italy touching on rights of inheritance. This is conceded by both sides. The appellant informs us that the earlier treaty terminated on December 15, 1937. The respondent adds that "a new treaty was in the course of preparation—one article having been agreed upon and ratified when war was declared." The instant case, therefore, is free from and uncomplicated by any treaty question.

In the brief of the United States we are told that at the time when these three sections became effective the United States had dealt specifically with reciprocal inheritance rights in treaties then in effect with 22 foreign nations, and that since then 4 other nations have been added. The list of these 26 foreign nations shows Germany and Japan among them, but not Italy.

[11] In the brief of the United States we are told that "So far as we are aware, on July 1, 1941, there was no civilized nation which did not grant to citizens of the United States the right to inherit from its nationals, with limitations, however, upon the inheritance of real property." If this be true the apprehensions so frequently expressed on the side of the respondent should be greatly minimized if not entirely dissipated. In spite of this, counsel say "Though we are now at war, Chapter 895 is still a possible source of embarrassment to the United States with respect to neutral countries and our allies. With respect to our enemies, Chapter 895 is not a potential embarrassment, but rather a direct impediment to the United States in its prosecution of the war." Just how any embarrassment could arise in our country's dealings with a neutral country or an ally is not explained or developed by counsel. It is difficult to see how, if reciprocal rights of inheritance exist (as we are told they do), there can be any such embarrassment. And if such reciprocity does not exist, it is not easy to see how a neutral or allied nation could within reason expect more for its nationals than its laws give to ours. The statement that this legislation is "a direct impediment to the United States in its prosecution of the war" is even more difficult to understand. Without more of an explanation than has been vouchsafed, we are not convinced either on the count of "embarrassment" or on the count of outright "impediment".

[12, 13] If the important subject of reciprocal inheritance is one which can be covered only by treaty, then the sections in question present no procedural or other difficulty, for courts are bound to take judicial notice of the existence or non-existence of treaties. Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1875; United States v. Rauscher, 119 U.S. 407, 419, 7 S.Ct. 234, 30 L.Ed. 425. That being so, the rights of an heir living in a country with which the United States has a treaty can be easily and speedily established under section 1875 in any court where an estate is being administered. Presumably if this country and that in which the heir resides are at war, the Custodian would step into the shoes of the alien heir and sequester his inheritance. See Farmers & Merchants Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 842, 847, 155 P.2d 823 supra. That question, of course, is not before us. It is mentioned only to show the simplicity with which this legislation would operate in such circumstances. In the opening brief of the United States we are told that "at the appropriate stage of the proceedings herein, and if such proof should be necessary, it is expected that there will be offered in evidence on behalf of the widow and children of the decedent Article 16 of the Italian Civil Code of 1942, which grants foreigners the civil rights attributed to citizens on condition of reciprocity, including inheritance rights, and Article 312 of the Italian Law of War of 1938, which provides that no property may be transferred to an enemy in time of war except, inter alia, by inheritance."

The record on which the present case has to be decided is silent both as to treaty and as to Italian statute law. The question presented on this record is solely as to the constitutionality of sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2. If the two Italian statutory provisions can be proved "at the appropriate stage of the proceedings"—which we assume means on a petition to determine heirship or for distribution—such result will prove nothing one way or the other with respect to the constitutionality of these sections. If reciprocity of inheritance may be established in the absence of proof of a treaty (see Re Estate of Blak, 65 Cal. App.2d 232, 150 P.2d 567) the claimant would proceed to prove the foreign law as a fact under Code Civ. Proc. sections 1901-1904 the burden being on him. Sec. 259.1, Probate Code. If the court before which such evidence is offered is satisfied that the Italian statutes by themselves, and without benefit of treaty, afford reciprocity within the meaning of sec. 259, presumably the condition imposed by sec. 259 will have been met. That point is not before us and of course we do not pass upon it. We mention it only to emphasize that if the probate court should so hold, that would not mean that this legislation is bad; it would simply mean that it operates according to design.

The pending problem is not, who should inherit Ignazio Bevilacqua's estate? It is, who should administer his estate on the present record?

[14-16] The respondent and the United States claim that this legislation invades the war powers of the United States. The respondent says: "The sections violate Section 10 of Article I reserving to Congress the exclusive right to declare war, i. e., the control of moneys going to or coming from foreign countries to protect the United States from attack, constitutes engaging in a form of defensive warfare." Counsel for the United States say: "If construed so as to disinherit the widow and children of the decedent, the California statute is unconstitutional as an invasion of the exclusive powers of the federal government over foreign affairs and to make captures of enemy property." They say further that "The United States had already fully occupied the fields which the California statute sought to enter" in that the Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix § 1 et seq., has "provided machinery for the capture of enemy property in times of war." This argument is elaborated and extended to show that "After the end of the war, the property so sequestered or captured will be available as a bargaining weapon at the peace conference, and as leverage to enforce compensation by or retribution upon the defeated enemy."

There can be no question that, as argued, "the war powers of the United States, like its powers over foreign affairs, are exclusive"; nor that, under the Trading with the Enemy Act, the powers of the President, and of any agency designated by him, are far-reaching. But those powers extend, of course, only to "property in which any foreign country or a national thereof has any interest"; the act does not pretend to go any further than that. If we adhere to the rule of Mager v. Grima, and the cases which follow it, first discussed herein, we must consistently hold that the probate court erred in determining on the present record that any interest passed to the five Italian nationals.

We therefore cannot accede to the proposition that "the United States has preempted the field of foreign relationships concerning inheritance rights, with its programs of control of foreign funds and of vesting of property of enemy nationals, * * *." If the contention of the United States and the respondent were to be followed it would mean that upon the entry of the United States into a war the normal powers of the states to enact legislation, admittedly within their powers in times of peace, would be automatically curtailed. That such is not the law is indicated by such cases as Ex parte Milligan, 4 Wall. 2, 120, 121, 71 U.S. 2, 120, 121, 18 L.Ed. 281, where it is said: "The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances"; and State of South Carolina v. United States, 199 U.S. 437, 448, 449, 26 S.Ct. 110, 50 L.Ed. 261, 4 Ann.Cas. 737. We appreciate that the questions presented by these cases were far different from the question presented herein, but those cases announce the doctrine of the changeless nature of the constitution whether the nation be at war or enjoying peace-time and normal conditions. In the recent case of Home Building & Loan Ass'n v. Blaisdell, 290 U.S. 398, 425, 54 S. Ct. 231, 235, 78 L.Ed. 413, 422, 88 A.L.R. 1481, it is said: "Emergency does not create power. Emergency does not increase granted power or remove or diminish the restrictions imposed upon power granted or reserved. The Constitution was adopted in a period of grave emergency. Its grants of power to the federal government and its limitations of the power of the States were determined in the light of emergency, and they are not altered by emergency."

[17-19] The respondent and the United States invoke the presumption that the law of an outside state or country is the same as the law of California, and hence that in the absence of any affirmative showing in this case Italian laws of inheritance must be held to be the same as ours. The legislature, in providing in section 259.1 that "The burden shall be upon such nonresident aliens to establish the fact of existence of the reciprocal rights * * *" showed clearly, in our opinion, its intent that said presumption should have no application in cases arising under section 259. Otherwise the provisions of section 259.1 are meaningless. It is settled law that statutes "which cast the burden of proof in an issue upon either party to the action, are within the constitutional power of the legislature." McDonald v. Conniff, 99 Cal. 386, 390, 34 P. 71, 73 (citing Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 450); Clarke v. Mead, 102 Cal. 516, 519, 36 P. 862 (citing Marx v. Hanthorn, 148 U.S. 172, 181, 13 S.Ct. 508, 37 L.Ed. 410). In People v. Ellis, 206 Cal. 353, 357, 274 P. 353, 355, it is said: "When the law provides on whom shall rest the burden of proof, it establishes a rule as to which party shall first proceed and go forward with the evidence, or prove the issue, the presumption then being against the party having the burden of proof. 22 Corp.Jur. 83." And in Monterey County v. Cushing, 83 Cal. 507, 510, 23 P. 700, 701, the court stated the familiar rule that "If no direct evidence be introduced upon any issue, the finding should be against the party who had the burden of proof. [Citing cases]. To say that the burden of proof is upon a party is equivalent to saying that the presumption is against him." In addition to what has been said, this court in Re Estate of Michaud, 53 Cal.App.2d 835, 128 P.2d 595, in a contest similar to that now presented, applied section 259.1 and held that before the public administratrix could show a right to administer the estate she must first show that the foreign "heirs" were entitled to inherit—that was her burden.

[20] What has just been said likewise, in our opinion, answers the argument advanced by the United States in its closing brief that this inheritance should vest in the five Italian nationals subject to a defeasance. Section 259.1 casts the burden in the first instance upon the foreign "heirs" of showing their right to inherit.

[21] With respect to the respondent's claim that the appellant's right to letters of administration was not established because he did not prove that the person under whom he claims was not an alien, or at least was an alien entitled to inherit, it is sufficient to say that these sections impose no such condition. When section 259.2 says "no heirs other than such aliens" it undoubtedly means "aliens not residing within the United States or its territories" for it is with the rights of only such aliens as these that section 259 deals. See also In re Estate of Michaud, supra. Section 259 does not pretend to limit the rights of resident aliens.

[22] We find no merit in the respondent's claim that these sections violate the fourteenth amendment.

Other points raised by the respondent are answered by the views already expressed that the rule of Mager v. Grima et al., and the cases following it, is decisive of this case.

In their opening brief counsel for the United States cite Crowley v. Allen, D. C., 52 F.Supp. 850, which held the sections in question to be unconstitutional. Since the brief was filed that case was reversed in Allen v. Markham, 9 Cir., 147 F.2d 136. On May 28, 1945, however, a petition for a writ of certiorari was granted (65 S.Ct. 1402, 89 L.Ed. 1969) so the subject is at large as far as the federal courts are concerned.

[23] In our opinion the court erred in holding that sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 are unconstitutional, and that therefore the appellant was not entitled to letters of administration. On the present record the appellant appears to be an heir of the decedent "eligible to take such property" and "The next of kin entitled to share in the estate" subd. 6, sec. 422, Probate Code, and therefore entitled to administer it. In re Estate of Michaud, supra.

The order appealed from is reversed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

In re KNUTZEN'S ESTATE.*

Civ. 7122; Sac. 5688.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Sept. 5, 1945.

Hearing Granted Nov. 1, 1945.

1. Aliens 🔑10
Constitutional law 🔑278(1)
Treaties 🔑2
War 🔑2

The probate code sections, declaring nonresident aliens' rights to take property in state by succession or will dependent on United States citizens' reciprocal rights to take property in such aliens' countries on same terms as residents and citizens thereof, imposing burden on such aliens to establish such reciprocal rights, and providing for escheat of decedent's property, which no heirs except such aliens are eligible to take, in absence of such rights, are not unconstitutional as violative of provision respecting right of Congress to declare war, of provision that treaties shall be supreme law of land, or as denying due process. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; U.S.C.A. Const. art. 1, § 8, cl. 11, art. 6, cl. 2, and Amend. 14 § 1.

2. Evidence 🔑81

Nonresident alien claimants of deceased resident's property in state cannot rely on presumption that inheritance laws of such alien's country are same as those of state, but burden is on him to show such fact. Probate Code, §§ 259, 259.1.

3. Aliens 🔑9

In absence of proof that inheritance laws of nonresident aliens' country are same as those of state, no interest, defeasible or otherwise, in resident decedent's property in state passes to such aliens under state statutes. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2.

---

* Subsequent opinion 191 P.2d 747.

4. Aliens 🔑9
War 🔑12

German nationals, residing in Germany, acquired no right under state statutes to share in estate of their deceased brother residing in state, in absence of proof of pertinent German inheritance statutes giving American citizens reciprocal rights to take property in Germany so that Alien Property Custodian's order, vesting in him all such nationals' interests in decedent's estate under Trading with the Enemy Act, vested nothing in United States. Probate Code, §§ 259–259.2; Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix § 616 et seq.

5. Descent and distribution 🔑1

The Legislatures of various states have right to determine how property within their boundaries shall descend by inheritance.

6. Aliens 🔑13

The paragraph of treaty between United States and Germany, providing that where decedent's realty within one party's territories would descend to national of other party, by laws of country or will, were he not disqualified by laws of country where such property is situated, such national shall be allowed three years in which to sell property and withdraw proceeds without restraint or interference, does not supplant or limit either country's laws of succession. Treaty between the United States and Germany Oct. 14, 1925, art. 4, 44 Stat. 2135.

7. Aliens 🔑13

The treaty between United States and Germany, respecting right of inheritance of either party's national, does not secure to German nationals, residing in Germany, right to inherit property in United States without complying with local laws nor evidence broad purpose to remove impediment of alienage. Treaty between United States and Germany Oct. 14, 1925, art. 4, 44 Stat. 2135.

8. Treaties 🔑11

The language of treaty will be construed, wherever reasonably possible so as not to override state laws or impair rights arising thereunder, and intent to do so will not be imputed to federal government, unless plainly expressed in, or necessarily implied from, language of treaty.

9. Aliens 🔑13

The treaty between United States and Germany, respecting right of inheritance of either party's nationals, does not conflict with or override provisions of State Probate Code, declaring nonresident aliens' rights to take decedent's property in state dependent on American citizens' reciprocal rights to take property in such aliens' countries. Probate Code, §§ 259, 259.1; Treaty between the United States and Germany Oct. 14, 1925, art. 4, 44 Stat. 2135.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Joaquin; C. W. Miller, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Alfred Carl Knutzen, deceased. From a decree settling the account of Theodore J. Knutzen as administrator of the estate and ordering distribution to him of the entire estate to the exclusion of foreign heirs, the United States appeals.

Affirmed.

Frank J. Hennessy, U. S. Atty., of San Francisco, Emmet J. Seawell and Thomas O'Hara, Asst. U. S. Attys., both of Sacramento, Herbert Wechsler, Asst. Atty. Gen., and Harry LeRoy Jones, Chief, Wallace H. Walker, and Richard P. Lott, Attys., and John Ernest Roe, Gen. Counsel, Alien Property Litigation Unit, all of Washington, D. C., for appellant.

O. H. Speciale, of San Jose, Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Everett A. Mattoon, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

Alfred Carl Knutzen, a resident of San Joaquin County, California, died intestate January 24, 1943. He left surviving him one brother, Theodore J. Knutzen, living in Los Gatos, California, and one brother and two sisters living in Sylt, Schlesswig-Holstein, Germany, and no other heirs. Theodore J. Knutzen was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate of said decedent, and after proceedings had, filed his first and final account and petition for distribution on or about February 19, 1944. On or about April 4, 1944, the Alien Property Custodian filed in the proceeding a document entitled "Vesting Order No.

3294," which recited that such custodian on investigation had found that in the said estate were property and interests "payable or deliverable to, or claimed by" nationals of Germany, to wit, the two sisters and the brother of decedent, and purported to vest in such custodian all the "right, title, interest and claim of any kind" of said German nationals in and to the estate of Alfred Carl Knutzen, deceased. No appearance was made by the German heirs.

On April 17, 1944, the probate court heard the petition of the administrator for settlement of his account and petition for distribution, and on May 1, 1944, made and entered a decree settling the account and ordering the distribution of the entire estate to Theodore J. Knutzen in accordance with sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the Probate Code of the state of California, to the exclusion of the foreign heirs.

On May 10, 1944, the United States of America, by Frank J. Hennessy, United States Attorney, appearing "as successor in interest of Arthur Knutzen, Helen Ruge and [Irene] Knutzen, heirs at law" of said decedent, filed a notice of motion to vacate said decree, and a notice of intention to move for a new trial, the grounds therefor being that the decree violates the provisions of Article IV of the "Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights" between the United States and Germany, proclaimed October 14, 1925, 44 Stat. 2132; that it is based upon a construction of sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the California Probate Code, which is inconsistent with and violates the provisions of Article I, section 8, clause 11, Article VI, clause 2, and section 1 of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and that, as construed by the court in its decree, those statutes invade the field of international affairs and are therefore invalid.

These motions were heard by the court on June 12, 1944, and on June 30, 1944, the court amended its decree so as to include the following:

"The Court finds that but for the provisions of the Sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the Probate Code of the State of California, the said Arthur Knutzen, Helen Knutzen Ruge and Irene Knutzen all of whom are non resident aliens would each take a one-fourth part of the estate of said deceased, but that no reciprocal rights referred to in said sections of the Probate Code exist between the United States and Germany, and hence the three last named persons are not entitle to inherit any part of said estate."

The provisions of the decree ordering distribution to Theodore J. Knutzen remained unchanged.

From such decree the United States of America has appealed, the record before us consisting solely of the files and records in the probate proceeding, and the only questions for our determination are those that appear upon the face of said record.

Sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 read as follows:

"259. Aliens residing abroad: Dependence of rights upon reciprocity. The rights of aliens not residing within the United States or its territories to take either real or personal property or the proceeds thereof in this State by succession or testamentary disposition, upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the United States is dependent in each case upon the existence of a reciprocal right upon the part of citizens of the United States to take real and personal property and the proceeds thereof upon the same terms and conditions as residents and citizens of the respective countries of which such aliens are inhabitants and citizens and upon the rights of citizens of the United States to receive by payment to them within the United States or its territories money originating from the estates of persons dying within such foreign countries.

"259.1. Same: Burden of establishing that rights are reciprocal. The burden shall be upon such nonresident aliens to establish the fact of existence of the reciprocal rights set forth in Section 259.

"259.2. Same: Disposition of property on finding of non-reciprocity. If such reciprocal rights are not found to exist and if no heirs other than such aliens are found eligible to take such property, the property shall be disposed of as escheated property."

[1-4] Appellant's argument before us is that the trial court erred in distributing the whole estate to Theodore J. Knutzen because (1) the California statute is not self-executing, and the aliens took at least defeasible interests in the estate which upon acquisition by the United States in some manner became indefeasible; (2) it is presumed that the laws of Germany are the same as the laws of California and reciprocal inheritance rights therefore exist under the German laws; (3) as construed and applied the statute contravenes the provisions of the treaty with Germany; and (4) as construed and applied the statute is unconstitutional.

Points (1), (2) and (4) above set forth have but recently been before the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division Two, in the Matter of the Estate of Bevilacqua, — Cal.App.2d —, 161 P.2d 589, and decided contrary to appellant's contentions. It was there held that the aforesaid probate code sections are constitutional, that an alien claimant cannot rely upon a presumption that the laws of Germany respecting inheritance are the same as those of California but the burden is on him to show that such is the case; and that, in the absence of such proof, no interest passes to aliens not residing within the United States. We are in full accord with the reasoning and conclusions of that court, and take the liberty of adopting them as our own. Applying such conclusions to the case before us, we hold that since no proof whatever as to the pertinent statutes of Germany was adduced in this proceeding, the two sisters and the brother of decedent, who are nationals of Germany residing therein, never acquired any right to share in the estate of decedent, and, accordingly, appellant, which under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix § 616 et seq., was entitled to take and sought to take only such interests as were "payable or deliverable to, or claimed by" such heirs, became vested with nothing by virtue of the Vesting Order filed in the probate court.

We have left for consideration then the contention of appellant that the treaty with Germany secures to the German sisters and brother of decedent, rights to inherit proportionate shares of the estate of decedent. In considering this question we shall assume, without deciding, that the treaty was not abrogated by the declaration of war between the United States and Germany, and that, if in conflict therewith, it supersedes the statutes of the state regarding succession. Cf. United States v. Fox, 94 U.S. 315, 24 L.Ed. 192; and "Limitations on the Treaty Making Power" by Henry St. George Tucker, ch. VI.

Article IV of that treaty provides:

"Where, on the death of any person holding real or other immovable property or interests therein within the territories of one High Contracting Party, such property or interests therein would, by the laws of the country or by a testamentary disposition, descend or pass to a national of the other High Contracting Party, whether resident or nonresident, were he not disqualified by the laws of the country where such property or interests therein is or are situated, such national shall be allowed a term of three years in which to sell the same, this term to be reasonably prolonged if circumstances render it necessary, and withdraw the proceeds thereof, without restraint or interference, and exempt from any succession, probate or administrative duties or charges other than those which may be imposed in like cases upon the nationals of the country from which such proceeds may be drawn.

"Nationals of either High Contracting Party may have full power to dispose of their personal property of every kind within the territories of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise, and their heirs, legatees and donees, of whatsoever nationality, whether resident or non-resident, shall succeed to such personal property, and may take possession thereof, either by themselves or by others acting for them, and retain or dispose of the same at their pleasure subject to the payment of such duties or charges only as the nationals of the High Contracting Party within whose territories such property may be or belong shall be liable to pay in like cases." (Italics ours.)

[5] Before attempting an analysis of these treaty provisions reference may properly be made to the principle set forth in the opinion in Estate of Bevilacqua, supra, and cases there cited, that the right to determine how property within their own boundaries shall descend by inheritance is matter for the legislatures of the various states. See particularly In re Estate of Perkins, 21 Cal.2d 561, 569, 134 P.2d 231; Farmers, etc., National Bank v. Superior Court, 25 Cal.2d 842, 155 P.2d 823; Irving Trust Co. v. Day, 314 U.S. 556, 62 S.Ct. 398, 86 L.Ed. 452, 137 A.L.R. 1093. Therefore unless it can be said that by reason of the provisions of the treaty with Germany above set forth the rights of California to provide how the property involved in the proceeding before us should descend, the provisions of the Probate Code above set forth must be held to govern.

Also it may be well to consider what is and what is not involved in this proceeding. Strictly speaking, all that is involved is the right of the brother and sisters of decedent, who are aliens residing in Germany, to inherit the respective shares of the estate of their deceased brother, in the absence of proof of reciprocal rights under the laws of Germany, proof of which is required by sections 259 and 259.1 of the Probate Code. Neither the right of German nationals to hold real property within this state, nor the right of German nationals to dispose of their personal property within this state is involved. It is not contended that decedent was a German national, and the record discloses no attempt by any German national to dispose of his personal property within this state. Decedent, it is conceded, died intestate, and the property remaining for distribution consists solely of cash.

[6] An analysis of the first paragraph of Article IV of the treaty shows, first, that it purports to deal only with real property or interests therein. Second, it purports to provide only that where a national of either country may, either by descent or testamentary disposition, acquire real property situated within the boundaries of the other, such national may have three years within which to sell same—or longer if circumstances render it necessary—and withdraw the proceeds without interference and exempt from any charges other than those that may be imposed in like cases upon the nationals of the country from which such proceeds may be drawn; and, third, it specifically applies only to such real property or interests therein as would pass or descend to the nationals of the other, "by the laws of the country or by a testamentary disposition," were the party taking "not disqualified by the laws of the country where such property or interests therein is or are situated." It is, we think, apparent that the said provision does not purport to supplant or limit the laws of succession of either of the contracting countries. The use of the above quoted language evidences, on the contrary, a recognition that real property and interests therein may not, because of the laws of the various states in the United States and of Germany, pass to the nationals of the other, and that the nationals of either may, by the laws of the other, be disqualified from taking or holding title to real property located within its boundaries.

An analysis of the second paragraph of the article shows that it purports to provide only for the rights of the nationals of the one residing in the other, to dispose of their personal property, and the rights of those who may acquire personal property so disposed of by such nationals to succeed to same, take possession thereof, and retain or dispose of same without paying any duties or charges other than the nationals of the country within whose territory the property may be would be liable to pay in like cases. No right of any German national to dispose of his property is involved in this proceeding, nor is the right of any person to whom any national has conveyed or from whom the property of any national has descended, to dispose of same involved. The right here involved is the right of German nationals not residents of the United States to acquire rights under the succession laws of California, without proving that an American citizen not residing in Germany would have the right to inherit from a German national residing in Germany, property located in Germany.

[7] Appellant states in its brief that "Both provisions of Article IV evidence a broad purpose to remove the impediment of alienage and thereby secure to nationals of either country the right to dispose of property located in the other, and passing to them by will or by the laws of succession of that country. Thus the treaty secures to the German legatees involved herein the right to inherit property located in the United States and left to them under the will of the testatrix." (Italics added.)

While it may be conceded that the provisions of Article IV evidence a purpose to secure to the nationals of either country the right to dispose of their property located in the other, it does not follow that the treaty therefore secures to the German nationals in this case, or in any case, the right to inherit property located in the United States without complying with the provisions of local law; and in this case no property was left by will. Nor can it be said that the provisions of the treaty "evidence a broad purpose to remove the impediment of alienage." On the contrary the phrases "Where * * * such property or interests therein would, by the laws of the country * * * descend or pass to a national of the other," and "were he not disqualified by the laws of the country where such property or interests therein is or are situated" give specific recognition to the fact that rights of inheritance and the right to hold real property within their borders are matters within the control of the respective countries. Throughout this treaty recognition of the force and effect of local laws is given. See Articles I, XII, XIII and XXIV. In the latter article, which deals with the rights of consular officers to deal with the estates of the nationals of their country who may die within the territory of the other, the phrases "so far as the laws of the country permit," and "provided the laws of the place where the estate is administered so permit," are used in defining the rights of such consular officers.

The effect of such phrases in treaties has been considered in numerous decisions of our courts. In Re Estate of Ghio, 157 Cal. 552, 108 P. 552, 37 L.R.A.,N.S., 549, 137 Am. St.Rep. 145, affirmed in Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U.S. 317, 32 S.Ct. 207, 56 L.Ed. 453, a provision of the treaty with Argentina was relied upon by the consul of Italy—under the most favored nation clause in the treaty with Italy—which gave consuls the right to intervene in the possession, administration, and judicial liquidation of the estate of a deceased conformably with the laws of the country, for the benefit of the creditors and legal heirs. And it was contended that this gave consuls the right to administer property left by a foreigner within the jurisdiction of California. But it was held that in this country the right to administer such property is primarily committed to state law, that it is so regulated in California, and that the treaty was not to be construed to give the consul the right to administer and thus supersede the local law. Also see In re Estate of Servas, 169 Cal. 240, 146 P. 651, Ann.Cas.1916D, 233.

In Santovincenzo v. Egan, 284 U.S. 30, 52 S.Ct. 81, 82, 76 L.Ed. 151, the consul for Italy in New York claimed the right to receive the net assets of a deceased native of Italy for distribution to the Kingdom of Italy. He relied upon a provision in a treaty with Persia, under the most favored nation clause in a consular convention with Italy. The provision relied upon read:

> "In case of a citizen or subject of either of the contracting parties dying within the territories of the other, his effects shall be delivered up integrally to the family or partners in business of the deceased; and in case he has no relations or partners, his effects in either country shall be delivered up to the consul or agent of the nation of which the deceased was a subject or citizen, so that he may dispose of them in accordance with the laws of his country."

The court upheld the contentions of Santovincenzo in that case, but it was stated, 284 U.S. at page 36, 52 S.Ct. at page 83, 76 L.Ed. 153:

> "The provision of article VI of the Treaty with Persia does not contain the qualifying words 'conformably with the laws of the country' (where the death occurred) as in the case of the Treaty between the United States and the Argentine Confederation of [July 10] 1853 (article IX, 10 Stat. 1001, 1009; Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U.S. 317, 326, 330, 332, 32 S.Ct. 207, 56 L.Ed. 453 [456-458]); or the phrase 'so far as the laws of each country will permit,' as in the Consular Convention between the United States and Sweden of [June 1] 1910 (article XIV, 37 Stat. 1479, 1487, 1488; Rocca v. Thompson, supra; In re D'Adamo's Estate, 212 N.Y. 214, 222, 223, 106 N.E. 81, L.R.A.1915D, 373). The omission from article VI of the Treaty with Persia of a clause of this sort, so frequently found in treaties of this class, must be regarded as deliberate. In the circumstances shown, it is plain that effect must be given to the requirement that the property of the decedent 'shall be delivered up to the consul or agent of the nation of which the deceased was a subject or citizen, so that he may dispose of them in accordance with the laws of his country,' unless a different rule is to apply simply because the decedent was domiciled in the United States."

That opinion was written by Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, who, it should be noted, was the United States plenipotentiary who signed the treaty with Germany here under consideration; and it clearly indicates that where such language as is quoted above, and as appears in Article IV of the treaty with Germany, is used, it is not to be disregarded or its use said to be inadvertent.

In Re D'Adamo's Estate, 212 N.Y. 214, 106 N.E. 81, 83, L.R.A.1915D, 373, cited in the foregoing quotation, the right of a consul of Italy to administer the estate of an Italian national who died in New York was in question. The decedent left a wife and child in Italy who were his sole heirs; but he left a brother in New York who claimed the right, under the New York statutes to administer the estate, and who was held to have such right unless some treaty provision prevented. Under a most favored nation clause the consul relied upon a provision in a consular convention with Sweden (and not that of the treaty with Argentina as in Rocca v. Thompson, supra), which provided that in the event of the death, intestate, of any citizen of either of the contracting parties within the territory of the other the consul of the nation to which the deceased belonged should "so far as the laws of each country will permit and pending the appointment of an administrator, * * * take charge of the property left by the deceased for the benefit of his lawful heirs and creditors, and, moreover, have the right to be appointed as administrator of such estate." This language, it was contended, superseded the local law and gave the consul a paramount and conclusive right to administer the estate of decedent. But the court, in an opinion by Mr. Justice Cardozo, held that the phrase, "so far as the laws of each country will permit," qualified the whole sentence of the treaty; and that such phrase is equivalent to the phrase "conformably with the laws of the country," construed in Rocca v. Thompson, supra, and that "it maintains the continuity of the purpose, revealed repeatedly in conventions and treaties throughout our history, to subject the rights of consuls to the requirements of local law." That opinion also set forth certain incidents in our diplomatic history disclosing a disinclination of the federal government by treaty to trench upon the rights of the states to administer the estates of those dying within their territorial limits.

Re D'Adamo is cited and followed in numerous later decisions. See Lely v. Kalinoglu, 64 App.D.C. 213, 76 F.2d 983, 100 A.L.R. 1523, certiorari denied, 295 U.S. 765, 55 S.Ct. 925, 79 L.Ed. 1707, Schneider v. Hawkins, 179 Md. 21, 16 A.2d 861, and cases cited in note in 100 A.L.R. 1527–1537.

In Wyers v. Arnold, 347 Mo. 413, 147 S.W.2d 644, 134 A.L.R. 876, Babette Orth, a German national resident in Germany died, leaving, as the only assets of her estate, an interest in the estate of a brother, Carl Orth, who had died in Missouri. After the estate of Carl Orth was fully administered the portion thereof payable to the estate of Babette Orth was paid to her administrator. More than three years after the administration of Carl Orth's estate was begun, a copy of a purported will of Babette Orth was presented to the Missouri probate court, with a petition that her estate be paid over to the legatees named in that will, who were nationals and residents of Germany. The will was admitted to probate, whereupon a proceeding was begun by a nephew and heir at law of Babette Orth, not mentioned in the will, to prohibit the Missouri court from distributing the estate to the named legatees, on the ground that under the law of Missouri the probate court had no authority to admit the will to probate after the lapse of the time provided by Missouri law for the admission of a will to probate. It was contended, in opposition to the writ, that under Article IV of the treaty with Germany the court was bound to admit the will to probate regardless of the local law. The court held that the provisions of the treaty did not override the state statute. Todok v. Union State Bank, 281 U.S. 449, 50 S.Ct. 363, 74 L.Ed. 956, was cited, in which case it was held that a provision in a treaty with Sweden, that the subjects of the contracting parties might freely dispose of their goods and effects in favor of such persons as they thought proper, did not supersede a statute of the state of Nebraska providing that a homestead could not be conveyed unless both husband and wife joined in the conveyance; and that the husband, though a national of Sweden, was powerless to dispose of homestead property without the consent of his wife. Certiorari was denied by the United States Supreme Court, Arnold v. Wyers, 313 U.S. 589, 61 S.Ct. 1112, 85 L.Ed. 1544.

In an interesting note in 57 Harvard Law Review, 730, 731, it is said that "since the treaty of 1923 [with Germany] gives only a right of sale to aliens who are disqualified from taking property by the law of the situs, it contemplates that there shall be state laws on the subject." Reference is there made to Gibson, Aliens and the Law, in which work it is stated at pages 37, 38:

"The treaties still leave it to the state governments to decide whether aliens may or may not continue in possession of real property acquired by inheritance. If the state government permits this, then there are treaties requiring national treatment, thereby preventing the state, at least as far as the nationals of the contracting parties are concerned, from discriminating against them. But on the other hand, if the state governments decide that aliens shall not acquire real property by inheritance, the only provision to be found in the treaties is that aliens, nationals of the other contracting party, inheriting real property in such states shall have the right not of holding the property, but merely of liquidating it and removing the proceeds. All of which seems to indicate clearly that 'the Government of the United States has exhibited restraint in generally refraining from attempts to hinder the several States of the Union from shaping their own policies with regard to lands within their respective territorial limits.'"

Also at pages 49, 50:

"Treaty provisions relative to aliens' acquisition of real property by descent do not in most instances permit aliens to receive property upon the same basis as citizens. For the most part, the state governments determine one's right to real property and prescribe the manner in which such property is to be enjoyed in the United States. It is a principle of American constitutional law that a treaty takes precedence over a conflicting state constitution or legislation. However, the federal government has used the treaty-making power in this connection cautiously. Most of the provisions do not give the alien the right to obtain real property ab intestato in the fullest sense. What these provisions do grant is the right to dispose of the real property inherited and to remove the proceeds of such disposal. This arrangement assures to the alien the market value of the property and leaves the state governments free to keep the real estate situated in their jurisdictions out of alien hands should they so desire. The provisions do not deny the state the power to determine who shall own real property within its jurisdiction. In fact they specifically recognize this power by the phrase, 'were he not disqualified by being an alien.' Therefore, in most of the provisions concerned with descent of real property to aliens, all that is granted is that when 'such real estate would by the laws of the land [in the United States this means state laws] descend on a citizen or subject of the other, such citizen or subject shall be allowed,' not to enter into full and complete enjoyment and possession thereof, but to have a specified time or a reasonable time 'to sell the same and to withdraw the proceeds.' The treaty-making power has been used to modify the common law to the benefit of alien heirs. By virtue of these provisions, aliens have been extended national treatment in that they receive distributive shares in cases of intestacy the same as citizens. They further grant aliens the right to sell that which they obtain by operation of law. But here the provisions stop. They do not grant aliens the right to enter into unconditional possession."

Appellant argues that treaties are to be liberally construed, and that if there is any doubt as to their meaning the more liberal construction is to be adopted—which in this case should be a construction in favor of the United States as claimant of the rights of the German nationals. But we find nothing ambiguous or uncertain in the provisions of Article IV. As we read it, the first paragraph merely means that in the event that the national of the one country should, by the laws of descent of the other or by testamentary disposition, become entitled to real property, which, under the laws of that country, he was not, because of alienage, entitled to hold, he should have three years or more within which to dispose of same exempt from any charges which would not be imposed on the nationals of the country in which said property was located. And the second paragraph merely gives a national of one country residing in the other the right to dispose of his personal property in that territory, and any persons who may acquire such property from such national the right to dispose of same without the imposition of charges not imposed upon nationals of the country where the property is situated.

Treaties are not formulated by illiterate amateurs. In Rocca v. Thompson, supra, the court said, 223 U.S. at page 332, 32 S. Ct. at page 210, 56 L.Ed. 458:

"It is further to be observed that treaties are the subject of careful consideration before they are entered into, and are drawn by persons competent to express their meaning, and to choose apt words in which to embody the purposes of the high contracting parties. Had it been the intention to commit the administration of estates of citizens of one country, dying in another, exclusively to the consul of the foreign nation, it would have been very easy to have declared that purpose in unmistakable terms."

Similarly, if the parties to this treaty intended it should have the meaning attributed to it by appellant, no reason appears why they should not have said so in so many words.

Such statutes as sections 259 and 259.1, supra, are not peculiar to California. Similar provisions are found in the statutes of other states. See Oregon Compiled Laws, Annotated, Vol. 5, pp. 4, 5, section 61-107, and Chapter 104 of the 1939 Laws of Montana, sections 2–5. To hold that the language of the treaty with Germany supersedes the statutes of the state of California regarding the rights of succession by nonresident German aliens, would have the effect of nullifying the statutes of those states and every other state on the same subject; and since most treaties contain a "most favored nation" clause, such as was relied upon in Rocca v. Thompson; In re D'Adamo; and Santovincenzo v. Egan, supra, it would have the effect of holding that all other countries whose treaties have such "most favored nation" clauses would enjoy the same rights.

[8] No purpose to so limit or restrict the recognized rights of states to regulate through their legislatures the manner and terms upon which property within their dominion may pass by succession, should be lightly assumed; rather the contrary. The language of a treaty wherever reasonably possible will be construed so as not to override state laws or to impair rights arising under them. Guaranty Trust Co. v. United States, 304 U.S. 126, 143, 58 S.Ct. 785, 82 L.Ed. 1224, 1234. As was said by our Supreme Court in Re Estate of Ghio, 157 Cal. 552, 557, 108 P. 516, 523, 37 L.R.A., N.S., 549, 137 Am.St.Rep. 145, affirmed in Rocca v. Thompson, supra, "such intent is not to be lightly imputed to the federal government, and that it cannot be allowed to exist except where the language used in a treaty plainly expresses it, or necessarily implies it." Also it was there said, 157 Cal. at page 560, 108 P. at page 525, 37 L.R.A.,N.S., 549, 137 Am.St.Rep. 145, that it was not probable "that the words of the treaty under consideration were chosen with the intent to have the international agreement become a part of, and in part supplant, the laws of the states of the United States, or of the provinces of Argentina, in matters committed solely to the states or provinces." And in Chryssikos v. Demarco, 134 Md. 533, 107 A. 358, 360, it was said: "It would not be just to assume that in making a treaty with a foreign country laws of the different states were intended to be repealed or ignored, in the absence of express language or clear implication showing such intent, especially such as testamentary laws, which are necessary and exist in every state, although they differ in some particulars."

[9] We therefore conclude that the treaty with Germany does not conflict with or override the provisions of sections 259 and 259.1 of the Probate Code of California. This conclusion renders it unnecessary to determine whether or not the said treaty was abrogated by the declaration of war between the United States and Germany.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEEK, J., concurs.

THOMPSON, Justice (concurring).

I concur in the conclusion. The chief question is whether the court erred in distributing the entire estate to a resident brother of the deceased to the exclusion of another brother and two sisters residing in Germany. If the German relatives were heirs under sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the Probate Code, they were entitled to inherit equal one-fourth shares, subject to the claim of the Federal Alien Property Custodian. Section 259.1 places the burden on the claimants to affirmatively prove the country in which they live confers similar reciprocal rights of inheritance. In other language section 259 authorizes nonresident aliens to inherit property from the estate of a resident intestate deceased person, conditioned upon their proof of the existence of law in their country conferring similar reciprocal rights upon our residents. On distribution, no affirmative proof of the existence of a similar statute in Germany was offered. The court did, however, consider the treaty of 1925 between the United States and Germany which contains provisions with respect to reciprocal rights of inheritance by nonresident aliens of the respective nations. The court was bound to take notice of the provisions of that treaty since it is considered the supreme law of our land.

It has been held that courts will take judicial notice of treaties with foreign countries. United States v. Rauscher, 119 U.S. 407, 419, 7 S.Ct. 234, 30 L.Ed. 425; San Lorenzo Title & Imp. Co. v. Caples, Tex. Civ.App., 48 S.W.2d 329. Treaties become the supreme law of the land (U.S.Const., Art. VI, cl. 2) and upon subjects which are self-executing they take precedence over state statutes in conflict therewith. In re Terui, 187 Cal. 20, 24, 200 P. 954, 17 A.L.R. 630; 24 Cal.Jur. 650, sec. 5; 52 Am.Jur. 815, secs. 17, 18; 134 A.L.R. 886, note. It is contended that the treaty of Germany was self-executing with respect to reciprocal rights of nonresidents to inherit property by will or by succession; that no subsequent enactment of a statute was required. Provisions in treaties with respect to the rights of individuals should be construed exactly as Federal statutes are interpreted. Edye v. Robertson, 112 U.S. 580, 5 S.Ct. 247, 254, 28 L.Ed. 798; 52 Am.Jur. 815, secs. 17, 18. Courts take judicial notice of the acts of Congress. Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1875, subd. 3; Young v. Boy Scouts of America, 9 Cal. App.2d 760, 764, 51 P.2d 191; Sheehan v. Vedder, 108 Cal.App. 419, 292 P. 175; 31 C.J.S., Evidence, § 16.

Treaties should receive a liberal construction to ascertain and carry out the intentions of the contracting nations. De Geofroy v. Riggs, 133 U.S. 258, 10 S.Ct. 295, 33 L.Ed. 642; Nielsen v. Johnson, 279 U.S. 47, 49 S.Ct. 223, 75 L.Ed. 607; In re Estate of Romaris, 191 Cal. 740, 218 P. 421; 52 Am.Jur. 825, sec. 34.

If the treaty with Germany conferred unconditional reciprocal rights of inheritance conforming to the requirement of section 259, then the burden of proof was sustained and the German heirs acquired title to their respective interests, unless those inheritable rights were abrogated by the subsequent declaration of war between the United States and Germany in 1941, which was prior to the death of Knutzen.

I am of the opinion that the covenants in the treaty providing for reciprocal rights of inheritance were neither abrogated nor suspended by the subsequent declaration of war. Modern authorities assert that the provisions of treaties fixing what are deemed to be permanent rights of nations, like state lines, and covenants purporting to establish permanent personal rights of individuals, like the rights of nonresident aliens to inherit property, are neither abrogated nor suspended by a subsequent declaration of war, unless the language of the treaty specifically so provides. Techt v. Hughes, 229 N.Y. 222, 128 N.E. 185, 11 A.L.R. 166, certiorari denied; State ex rel. Miner v. Reardon, 120 Kan. 614, 245 P. 158, 47 A.L.R. 452; Goos v. Brocks, 117 Neb. 750, 223 N.W. 13; Rickmers, etc., v. United States, D.C., 45 F.2d 413, 418; Society, etc., v. New Haven, 21 U.S. 464, 5 L.Ed. 662; 1929 Supp. Thompson on Real Property, 767, sec. 2352; 63 C.J. 833, sec. 13; 3 C.J.S., Aliens § 7f; 52 Am.Jur. 813, sec. 15; 11 A.L.R. 180, elaborate note. No intention to abrogate individual reciprocal rights of inheritance by the subsequent declaration of war is suggested by the treaty. The leading cases on that subject are the Techt and the Miner decisions above cited.

No one has the natural inherent right to inherit property from the estates of deceased persons. That right exists only by grace of legislative authority. In re Estate of Perkins, 21 Cal.2d 561, 569, 134 P.2d 231; McCaughey v. Lyall, 152 Cal. 615, 93 P. 681; Childs v. Gross, 41 Cal.App.2d 680, 689, 107 P.2d 424; 9 Cal.Jur. 450, sec. 4; 16 Am.Jur. 777, sec. 12; 2 Am.Jur. 484, sec. 42; 26 C.J.S., Descent and Distribution, § 2. Since the burden was cast by section 259.1 of the Probate Code upon the nonresident relatives of the deceased to prove that a German statute existed, as distinguished from the treaty provisions, conferring reciprocal inheritable rights, and no proof was offered in that regard, there is no presumption, under the circumstances of this case, that such statute existed. Ordinarily, according to California authorities, the presumption is indulged, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the law of a foreign country is the same as the law of our own state. Murphy v. Murphy, 145 Cal. 482, 78 P. 1053; Nesbit v. MacDonald, 203 Cal. 219, 224, 263 P. 1007; Wickersham v. Johnston, 104 Cal. 407, 411, 38 P. 89, 43 Am. St.Rep. 118; Christ v. Superior Court, 211 Cal. 593, 598, 296 P. 612; Marsters v. Lash, 61 Cal. 622, although a different rule may exist in some other jurisdictions. 31 C.J.S., Evidence, § 21. But when the statute definitely casts the burden upon a litigant to affirmatively prove the fact, the presumption of the similarity of the laws may not be indulged or relied upon as proof. Under such statute there is no presumption that the law of a foreign country is the same as our own statute, or at least the presumption is against the party upon whom the burden is cast. 31 C.J.S., Evidence, § 114. In the text last cited it is said:

"It has also been considered that a presumption is generally only a rule of law as to which party shall first proceed and go forward with the evidence, to prove an issue, the presumption being against the party having the burden of proof."

I am convinced sections 259, 259.1 and 259.2 of the Probate Code, which were adopted in 1941, are constitutional. Estate of Bevilacqua, — Cal.App.2d —, 161 P.2d 589; In re Estate of Blak, 65 Cal.App.2d 232, 150 P.2d 567; In re Estate of Michaud, 53 Cal.App.2d 835, 128 P.2d 595. The Estate of Bevilacqua, supra, does not involve the construction of a treaty. Even though the German residents in this case failed to sustain the burden cast upon them by our code they would nevertheless be entitled to inherit provided the treaty conferred unqualified reciprocal rights to do so independently of the statute since the treaty is the supreme law of the land and would be controlling in that regard. I believe the covenants of a treaty providing unqualified reciprocal rights of inheritance are not abrogated by a subsequent declaration of war between the contracting nations.

The serious question to be determined in this case depends upon the construction of the language of the treaty with respect to reciprocal rights of inheritance of real and personal property. This case definitely involves the right of nonresident aliens to inherit real estate, and a construction of paragraph one of the treaty applying to real property is therefore necessary. The chief value of the estate consisted of real property. The deceased died possessed of real property which was subsequently sold to pay debts and expenses of administration. There was but $338 in cash. If the German heirs were entitled to inherit a share of the estate, the title to their proportion vested immediately upon the death of Alfred Knutzen, which occurred January 24, 1943, before the real property was sold. Prob. Code, sec. 300; 26 C.J.S., Descent and Distribution, § 65; 16 Am.Jur. 786, sec. 20. The right of the administrator to sell the real property to pay debts and expenses of administration did not alter the character of the property to which title had then actually passed. I am convinced the construction of the first paragraph of the treaty is necessarily involved and that it is the important portion of the treaty to construe and apply to the issue as to whether reciprocal rights of inheritance are provided for by German law.

Mindful of the rule that statutes and treaties should be liberally construed to carry out the intentions of the contracting parties, and to preserve individual rights of the citizens of both countries, I am disposed to concede that the language of the treaty fails to absolutely confer unqualified reciprocal rights of inheritance. On the contrary, paragraph one appears to confer such rights conditionally upon proof that "Where, * * * by the laws of the country" such property would "descend or pass to a national of the other High Contracting Party." Of course a treaty is the law of both countries. Indeed it is the highest law of both nations. But the language quoted quite evidently requires proof of the existence of some statute or law, independent of the treaty, authorizing such reciprocal rights of inheritance. That paragraph of the treaty provides, in part, that:

"Where, on the death of any person holding real * * * property * * * within the territories of one High Contracting Party, such property or interests therein would, by the laws of the country, * * * descend or pass to a national of the other High Contracting Party," etc., he shall be allowed three years in which to sell or dispose of it. (Italics added.)

If that language is construed to mean that where a deceased person holds real property in either country, and the laws of that country in which he holds the property provides that it shall "descend or pass to the national of the other High Contracting Party," it would be an absolute binding provision entitling the German heirs to inherit, provided the California statute contained such an unqualified right of inheritance. But it does not so provide unconditionally. It authorizes them to inherit only conditioned upon their first affirmatively proving that Germany had a statute conferring similar reciprocal rights. That they failed to do. I am therefore persuaded that the provisions of the treaty, standing alone, do not furnish proof of reciprocal rights of inheritance sufficient to comply with the requirements of our sections of the Probate Code.

The second paragraph of the treaty, pertaining to personal property, provides that:

"Nationals of either High Contracting Party may have full power to dispose of their personal property * * * within the territories of the other, by testament, donation, or otherwise, and their heirs, * * * of whatsoever nationality, whether resident or nonresident, shall succeed to such personal property," etc. (Italics added.)

The word "national," as it is used in the treaty, means one who owes allegiance to a particular country or nation. Applying the foregoing language to the facts of this case, I assume it means that if the brother and two sisters of the deceased who live in Germany, own personal property in this country, they have "full power" to dispose of it by will, deed or otherwise, and that their heirs "shall succeed to such property." But the real issue is whether they actually owned interests in the property of the estate. The deceased did not dispose of the property. He died intestate. The language of the treaty that "their heirs * * * shall succeed to such personal property" does not directly authorize nonresident aliens to inherit it unconditionally. It does not constitute them heirs of their deceased California brother independently of a statute of Germany providing for reciprocal rights to do so. I construe it to mean that if the German residents are heirs entitled to inherit, they may "succeed" to the title to such property. In other words, the treaty appears to contemplate the necessity of an independent statute providing for reciprocal rights of inheritance. The burden was on them to prove that fact. They failed to do so and they may therefore not be deemed to be heirs who are entitled to inherit any part of the estate. The trial court therefore properly distributed the entire estate to the resident brother of the deceased. Orr v. Hodgson, 17 U.S. 453, 4 L.Ed. 613; Connolly v. Probate Court, 25 Idaho 35, 136 P. 205; 19 Am.Jur. 388, sec. 15.

Since I am unable to satisfactorily construe the language of the treaty so as to independently create reciprocal rights of inheritance under the circumstances of this case, and the claimants failed to affirmatively prove that Germany had such a statute, I conclude, as the majority opinion determines, that the trial court properly distributed the entire residue of the estate to the resident brother of the deceased. There was no title in the brother and two sisters of the deceased residing in Germany, upon which the Alien Property Custodian could fasten his claim in behalf of the United States government.

The judgment should be affirmed.

Ex parte McVICKERS.*

Cr. 1931.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 7, 1945.

Hearing Granted Oct. 1, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⚿=1202(3)

Where it was shown that defendant was convicted in 1924 in Utah for theft of automobile of value exceeding $50, but value of automobile was not established, conviction was improperly considered as a prior conviction in adjudging defendant an habitual criminal, since in 1924 theft of automobile was grand larceny in California only if its value exceeded $200. Pen.Code, §§ 487, 644, 668.

2. Criminal law ⚿=1201, 1202(1)

Conviction in federal court of forging and altering postal money orders committed in 1928 was improperly considered as a prior conviction in adjudging defendant an habitual criminal, since forgery was not included prior to 1938 among offenses enumerated in Penal Code section relating to punishment of habitual criminals, and for further reason that such act did not constitute forgery within California Penal Code. Cr.Code § 218, 18 U.S.C.A. § 347; Pen.Code Cal. §§ 470, 644.

3. Habeas corpus ⚿=28

Petitioner who had been convicted of violating the Narcotics Act and for being an habitual criminal, and who had served in excess of maximum sentence that could be imposed upon him for the primary offense, was required to be discharged where court on habeas corpus held that prior convictions were improperly made the basis of petitioners' conviction for being an habitual criminal. Pen.Code, § 644; St. 1929, p. 380.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of John Francis McVickers against Robert A. Heinze, Warden of the California State Prison at Folsom for a writ of habeas corpus.

Application granted and petitioner ordered discharged.

John Francis McVickers, in pro. per., for petitioner.

---

* Subsequent opinion 176 P.2d 40.

Robt. W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., Jess Hession, Asst. Atty. Gen., and James O. Reavis, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

ADAMS, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed in Marin County, California, on January 6, 1938, petitioner was charged in three counts with violations of the narcotic laws of California, Stats. 1929, ch. 216, p. 380. The information further charged that on June 24, 1924, defendant had been convicted in Utah of the crime of "Grand Larceny" and had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison; that on October 22, 1925, defendant had been convicted in Nevada of the crime of burglary, first degree, and had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison; and that on April 5, 1928, he had been convicted in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, in nine counts of violation of section 218 of the United States Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C.A. § 347, and served a term of imprisonment therefor in a federal prison. Defendant entered his plea of not guilty to each count and admitted the prior convictions as alleged in the information. Later, he withdrew his plea of not guilty to count three and entered his plea of guilty thereto. He went to trial before the court without a jury, on counts one and two, and the court found him guilty on both counts. He was adjudged an habitual criminal and sentenced to be imprisoned at San Quentin for the term prescribed by law. He thereafter moved to modify or vacate said judgment on the ground that two of the prior convictions did not constitute prior felony convictions within the meaning of sections 644 and 668 of the Penal Code, in that the conviction in Utah was for larceny of property of a value less than $200, and that offenses under section 218 of the United States Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C.A. § 347, were not enumerated in sections 644 and 668, supra. His motion having been denied he appealed, People v. McVicker, 37 Cal. App.2d 470, 99 P.2d 1110, but the appellate court held that these questions could not be reviewed upon their merits in that proceeding and that the proper course for appellant to pursue was to await the arrival of the time when he would be entitled to release from confinement for the primary offenses, and then test the legality of his further confinement on habeas corpus.

Petitioner has pursued the course suggested by the appellate court, and it is here conceded that if he was improperly adjudicated an habitual criminal he is entitled to his release. In support of the petition filed herein we have before us the information filed in the state of Utah which charges that defendant (with another), on May 27, 1924, "wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously took, stole and drove away a certain Light Six Studebaker automobile * * * belonging to E. Rosenberg, the same having a value in excess of $50.00."

In 1924 our Penal Code, sec. 487, which now provides that the theft of an automobile is grand theft, did not so provide. In order to constitute grand larceny under said section as it then read it was necessary that the property stolen have a value in excess of $200, or be taken from the person of another or consist of the specific kinds of property enumerated. The value of the automobile alleged to have been taken by petitioner does not appear, nor was it shown at the trial on the primary charges. Also, in 1924, section 644 of the Penal Code did not include grand larceny among the felonies enumerated.

In People v. Hayes, 3 Cal.App.2d 59, 63, 39 P.2d 213, 214, where one of the priors charged against Hayes in the information was larceny committed in Illinois, the court said:

"Larceny in Illinois is grand larceny if the property stolen exceeds the value of $15, or if the property is stolen from the person of another. But the California law is different in this, that in California the value test is that the property, in order to make the offense grand theft, must be of a value to exceed $200. Penal Code, § 487. The mere proof that a person in the state of Illinois was convicted of larceny is not proof that the value of the property stolen was more than $200, nor is it proof that there was any larceny by taking from the person of another. Therefore in this case there is no evidence that there was any conviction of the defendant of the crime of grand theft committed in Illinois, so as to bring the present case within the provisions of sections 668 and 644 of the Penal Code of California."

And in People v. McChesney, 39 Cal.App. 2d 36, 41, 102 P.2d 455, 458, the court said regarding the charge of a prior conviction in Louisiana of "Breaking and entering a building in the night time," that such charge is not comparable with section 459 of our Penal Code, which provides that the entry must be "with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony"; that "Under language set forth in the Louisiana conviction, we must assume that defendant was convicted of the least degree of offense enumerated in the Louisiana statute, that is, an unidentified misdemeanor." And it was held that the Louisiana conviction did not constitute a "prior" under section 644 of our Penal Code.

A recent opinion of the Attorney General of this state, N.S. #5371, reported in Vol. 3 of Opinions of Attorney General, p. 198, is to the same effect. There one of the priors charged was larceny in 1925 of an automobile of the value of over $50, and there was no evidence that the automobile was of the value of more than $200. The prior conviction was held not to be one within the provisions of sections 644 and 668 of the Penal Code, citing People v. Hayes, and People v. McChesney, supra.

[1] The record in the Marin County proceeding which has been introduced in evidence in the proceeding before us reveals that there was no showing in the trial court as to the value of the automobile stolen in Utah, and we are therefore of the opinion that the conviction in that state was improperly considered as a prior conviction upon which to base an adjudication that petitioner was an habitual criminal.

[2] As for petitioner's contention that his conviction of violations of section 218 of the United States Criminal Code, 18 U.S.C.A. § 347, was improperly considered as a prior, we have been furnished with a copy of the indictment in that case, and a copy of the judgment. They show that defendant was convicted of forging and uttering, on different dates in January, 1928, United States Postal Money Orders. Respondent asserts, without furnishing any authorities on the subject, that the crimes constituted forgery. But in 1928, when the foregoing offenses were committed, forgery was not included among the offenses enumerated in section 644 of our Penal Code, though it was so enumerated in 1938. Therefore, upon the authority of People v. McConnell, 20 Cal.App.2d 196, 66 P.2d 720, the conviction in the federal court was improperly considered as a prior, in adjudging petitioner an habitual criminal. However, the decision in this case need not rest upon that basis alone, since we are satisfied that the forging of a United States Postal Money Order is not, and was not, either in 1928 or in 1938, a violation of section 470 of the California Penal Code, defining forgery. While the latter section goes to considerable length in enumerating the instruments the forgery of which constitutes the offense defined, neither United States Post Money Orders nor any other instruments issued by the United States or under its authority are included. And in view of the scope of that which is included, it may fairly be assumed that the legislature intended to and did enumerate all instruments whose falsification it intended should constitute forgery.

Section 218 of the United States Criminal Code is found in a chapter entitled "Offenses against the Postal Service," and the section itself is headed "Counterfeiting money orders." Our California Penal Code does not purport to define any crimes against the postal service, and the only counterfeiting section in it is section 477 which applies only to the counterfeiting of coin, bullion, etc. Furthermore, the crime there defined is not one enumerated in section 644 of the Penal Code.

While the exact question before us apparently has not been before the courts of this state previously, a similar one was raised in People v. Fury, 279 N.Y. 433, 18 N.E.2d 650, where the conviction in a federal court of the uttering of a counterfeited federal reserve bank note was relied upon as a prior offense justifying an increased penalty after conviction in the state court of the crime of burglary. The court considered the state statutes, one of which made the uttering of certain instruments a felony. Among those instruments were enumerated "a certificate, bond, paper writing, or other public security, issued or purporting to have been issued by or under the authority of this state, or of the United States * * *." Also: "A * * * bank note * * * or other obligation or evidence of debt, issued or purporting to be issued by any bank, banking association or body corporate existing under the laws of this state, or of the United States * * *." Penal Law, § 884. For that reason the court held that the uttering of a Federal Reserve bank note constituted a violation of the penal laws of the state. But the inference from that case is that had there been no such state statute, the conviction would not have been considered as a prior justifying an increased penalty. And the decision in that case was subsequently distinguished on that basis, in People ex rel. Marks v. Brophy, 293 N.Y. 469, 58 N.E.2d 497. In that case Marks, while on parole from the state prison, was declared delinquent because of his conviction, after his parole, of the crime of using the United States mails in a scheme to defraud, and a conspiracy to so use the mails. In holding that these federal convictions could not deprive Marks of his credits because they were not for felonies under New York law, the court said, 58 N.E.2d at page 500:

"The State says, however, and the lower courts have held in this case, that People v. Fury, 279 N.Y. 433, 18 N.E.2d 650, is, somehow, authority to the contrary. We do not agree. People v. Fury, unlike People v. Gutterson, supra [244 N.Y. 243, 155 N.E. 113], involved a prior conviction where the same offense (uttering a counterfeit Federal Reserve bank note) was a felony both under the Federal Criminal Code and under our Penal Law. Fury was held to be a second offender not on the basis of a previous conviction of a crime described only in the laws of another jurisdiction but because he had been previously convicted in another jurisdiction of a crime declared to be a felony in our own statutes." (Italics added.)

In People v. Gutterson, 244 N.Y. 243, 155 N.E. 113, above mentioned, in fixing punishment the trial court considered a prior federal conviction for "using the mail to defraud." In reversing the judgment the court said, 155 N.E. at page 115:

"Here the offense is one which is cognizable only by the laws of the United States. While the citizens and residents of this state are subject to those laws, the Legislature of this state has not defined the crime or fixed penalty for its commission. * * * It rests with the Legislature to fix a standard for the crimes to which upon proof of prior conviction section 2189 of the Penal Law has attached new consequences. The Legislature has fixed a standard which can reasonably include only crimes which are punishable under the law of this state. Doubtless other reasonable standards might be used which would include the crime of using the mails to defraud. The Legislature has not seen fit to apply such standards."

In People v. Knox, 223 App.Div. 123, 227 N.Y.S. 417, in refusing to affirm a judgment including a prior, the court held that where the information and proof in a prosecution for robbery merely showed that the defendant had been formerly convicted of a violation of the Federal Law, i. e., of car burglary under the Carlin Act, and did not establish facts sufficient to show that the former conviction was for an offense which would be a felony under the laws of the state of New York if committed in that state, the trial court's sentence as a second offender, under sec. 1943 as amended, was unauthorized and erroneous.

In People v. Lohr, 28 Cal.App.2d 397, 82 P.2d 615, it was held that in order to justify the trial court in adjudging the defendant an habitual criminal, it was necessary for the prosecution to charge and prove that the prior convictions were among those set forth in section 644 of the Penal Code; and where it merely appeared that defendant was convicted of violations of the Dyer Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 408, in transporting a vehicle in interstate commerce with knowledge that the same was stolen, which offense is substantially the same as the offense denounced in section 503 of the Vehicle Code of this state, St.1935, p. 174, but is not one of those enumerated in said section 644, the court was not justified in adjudging him to be an habitual criminal. Also see People v. Rios, 175 Misc. 794, 24 N.Y.S.2d 411; Garcia v. State, 140 Tex. Cr.R. 340, 145 S.W.2d 180; People v. McGee, 24 Cal.App.2d 391, 75 P.2d 533.

[3] It is conceded by respondent that with credits earned, granted and not forfeited, petitioner has already served in excess of the maximum sentence that could be imposed upon him for the primary offense of which he stands convicted; and since we are satisfied that the offense of which he was convicted in Utah and the federal offenses above referred to did not constitute crimes within section 644 of the Penal Code, he is now entitled to his discharge; and it is so ordered.

PEEK and THOMPSON, JJ., concur.

NORTH SIDE PROPERTY OWNERS' ASS'N et al. v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY et al.

Civ. 14795.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Cemeteries 🔑9

Trial court's finding that required notices of public hearing on application for cemetery permit were duly posted, published, and mailed in compliance with Los Angeles county ordinance was supported by competent evidence, consisting of land use engineer's written report to county regional planning commission specifically setting forth the notices given and the manner in which they were posted, published, and mailed and affidavits of posting, mailing, and publication.

2. Cemeteries 🔑9

Requirements of Los Angeles county ordinance with respect to notice of public hearing on application for cemetery permit were complied with when notices stating manner and type of hearing to be held and date thereof were posted, published, and mailed in the manner provided by ordinance and fact that notices stated that at such hearing property owners would be heard did not render notices misleading so as to deprive county board of supervisors of jurisdiction to hear application and grant permit.

3. Constitutional law 🔑296(2)

Notice to others than owners of property in vicinity of proposed site of cemetery of public hearing on application for cemetery permit was not a prerequisite to due process of law, in absence of showing of what property rights or other legal rights of a non-owner could be impaired by establishment of the cemetery.

4. Cemeteries 🔑3

The policy of the law with reference to ordinances relating to establishment of cemeteries is to assure that the matter of establishing a cemetery in a community shall be fully and fairly considered, and is not inimical to the public interest.

5. Cemeteries 🔑9

The Los Angeles county board of supervisors acquired jurisdiction to act upon application for a cemetery permit when the notice required by county ordinance was given, and requirements of ordinance were met, insofar as the hearing on application was concerned, when county regional planning commission, in the manner required by law, gave notice that a public hearing would be held and the date thereof.

6. Cemeteries 🔑9

Lack of jurisdiction of county board of supervisors to grant cemetery permit could not be predicated on land use engineer's statement that in mailing notices of hearing names and addresses of property owners were taken from records of county assessor and tax collector, where record contained affidavit of acting chief engineer that he caused postcard notices to be mailed to all property owners using last known name and address as shown upon records of county assessor's office, though affidavit was not verified until after completion of proceedings. St.1939, pp. 1274 et seq., 1286, 1287, §§ 1 et seq., 441–444.

7. Process 🔑68, 150, 164(1)

The fact of service of process confers jurisdiction and, when proof of such service is absent or defective, it may be amended or supplied.

8. Cemeteries 🔑9

Requirements of Los Angeles county ordinance, requiring statement showing financial ability of applicant to maintain cemetery so as not to become a public nuisance to be attached to or made a part of application for cemetery permit, were fulfilled by filing of personal financial statements by sole stockholders of applicant corporation together with stipulation that applicant corporation had been formed solely for purpose of operating proposed cemetery and except for issuance of stock had not functioned to date of filing application and that proposed cemetery would be established as a perpetual care cemetery. St. 1939, p. 699, § 8252.

9. Cemeteries 🔑9

Written report of land use engineer to county regional planning commission and reporter's transcript of hearing before commission justified finding that a map of proposed cemetery site and surrounding territory was filed in due compliance with county ordinance requiring such map to be attached to application for cemetery permit, though map was not included in return to writ of review.

10. Certiorari ⚷53

The petitioner seeking a writ of review has the burden of seeing to it that the return is filed and that a complete record is made.

11. Cemeteries ⚷9

Petitioner for writ to review order of county board of supervisors granting cemetery permit, having failed to see to it that map of proposed cemetery site and surrounding territory was included in return to the writ of review, could not attack permit on ground that map did not contain required information in view of showing made in trial court that a map was filed with regional planning commission in conformity with ordinance and was utilized at the hearings before commission and board.

12. Cemeteries ⚷9

In proceeding to review order of county board of supervisors granting cemetery permit, evidence sustained findings approving procedural steps taken by regional planning commission and board of supervisors.

13. Cemeteries ⚷9

Parties objecting to application for permit to establish a cemetery in Los Angeles county had burden of proving that operation of cemetery in proposed location would jeopardize or adversely affect the health, safety, comfort, or welfare of the public.

14. Cemeteries ⚷9

The action taken by county board of supervisors in granting a cemetery permit raised the presumption that the existence of the necessary facts had been ascertained and found.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred E. Paonessa, Judge.

Petition by North Side Property Owners' Association, a nonprofit corporation, and another, against County of Los Angeles, a body corporate and politic, and others to review the proceedings and order of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County granting a permit to Hillside Memorial Park, a corporation, to establish, maintain, and operate a private cemetery. From a judgment affirming the action of the board in granting the permit, the petitioners appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Vernon P. Spencer, of Inglewood, for appellant North Side Property Owners' Ass'n.

Howard P. Hall, of Hollywood, for appellant Hughes Tool Co.

O'Melveny & Myers and Jackson W. Chance, all of Los Angeles, for respondents Hillside Memorial Park, Harry Groman, and Robert S. Groman.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Edward H. Gaylord, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondents Los Angeles County et al.

WHITE, Justice.

A writ was issued in the trial court for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings and order of the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County, hereinafter referred to as "the Board," granting and issuing a permit to respondent Hillside Memorial Park, a corporation, on the 27th day of July, 1943, to establish, maintain and operate a private cemetery. After a hearing on the matter, a judgment was entered affirming the action of the Board in granting the aforesaid permit. The petitioners named in the petition for the writ of review have appealed from such judgment.

The main attack upon the judgment is founded upon the contention that the trial court erred in not holding that the County Regional Planning Commission, hereinafter referred to as "the Commission," and the Board acted without jurisdiction, when the former recommended to the latter that the permit applied for be granted, and when the Board made its order granting the permit, in that:

(a) The notices of the hearing before the Planning Commission were not given as required by the law and were so given as to be misleading and to defeat their purpose;

(b) The information and material required by law was not made a part of the application for permit or in any way brought before the Planning Commission or Board of Supervisors; and

(c) There was no evidence to support several findings of the trial court, which will be hereinafter referred to.

The Cemetery Ordinance is No. 2854 (New Series) of the County of Los Angeles, as amended by Ordinance No. 2919 (New Series), hereinafter referred to as "the ordinance," and which was enacted pursuant to Section 10 of the Planning Act of 1929, Deerings General Laws, Act 5211b, which authorizes the Board to refer certain matters to the Regional Planning Commission before action is taken thereon by such board.

The main question to be here decided is whether the form of notices given pursuant to the ordinance was so inadequate and misleading that the Board never acquired jurisdiction to grant the challenged permit. In this connection, the ordinance provides that, when an application to establish or maintain a cemetery is filed with the Chief Engineer of the Commission, it shall by him be referred to the Commission, which shall fix the time and place for public hearing to be held not less than 30 days nor more than 60 days from the date when such application is filed; that said Engineer shall cause a copy of the notice of hearing on such application to be published in a newspaper of general circulation, and that said Engineer shall also cause notices of said hearing to be conspicuously posted at the exterior boundary line of the proposed cemetery, not more than 300 feet apart, and at each change of direction of said boundary line, and also in the same manner along both sides of all public streets within one and one-half miles of the exterior boundaries of the proposed cemetery, in such manner as would "reasonably give notice to passers-by of the matters contained in said notice." It is also provided that where there are 50 or more buildings, used either for residential or business purposes, within a distance of one and one-half miles from the exterior boundaries of said proposed cemetery, said Engineer shall cause a postcard notice of said hearing to be mailed to all property owners within said distance at least 15 days prior to said hearing, using for this purpose the last known name and address of such owners, as shown upon the records of the Assessor of Los Angeles County.

[1] The trial court found that the required notices were duly posted, published and mailed in compliance with the ordinance. Appellants contend there was no evidence to support such finding. This claim is without merit. There was before the trial court a record of proceedings had before the Commission, from which it appeared that Tyler Suess, Land Use Engineer of the Commission, made a written report, wherein he specifically set forth the notices given, the manner in which the same were posted, and the postcard notices mailed. The report also contained a statement of the newspaper notices given, the manner of publication, the newspaper in which publication was had, as well as the number of publications and the dates between which such publication was made. The affidavits referred to in the report of the Land Use Engineer were presented to the Commission and were also received in evidence by the court. The affidavit of posting notices states that the affiant conspicuously posted the notice of hearing "on both sides of all streets within a one and one-half mile radius, and at all intersections, and at 300 foot intervals around the border of the proposed cemetery." Attached to the affidavit was an exact copy of the notice. The affidavits of publication in the newspaper, as well as the affidavit of mailing postcard notices, show equally exact compliance with the ordinance. The findings of the trial court that due and proper notice of public hearing was given therefore was supported by competent evidence. Contrary to appellants' contention there is no inconsistency in the affidavits of publication with reference to dates thereof, because one affidavit has reference to publication in a daily newspaper, while the other refers to publication in a weekly newspaper; both, however, in exact compliance with section 3 of the ordinance.

[2-5] Appellants challenge the legality of the notice given because it was therein stated that at the public hearing "property owners who wish to present testimony pertinent to the proposed establishment of said cemetery will be heard" (emphasis added). Appellants complain that the notice was given only to property owners and that this contravenes the statute, because the proceedings in connection with the establishment of a cemetery concerns the general public, and that the restriction of the form of the notice to property owners defeats the main purpose of the notice. However, all that is required by the ordinance is that the Commission fix a time and place for a "public hearing" and that the Chief Engineer shall cause notices "of hearing" and "of said hearing" to be published, posted and mailed. With these requirements there was compliance in the instant case because the given notices did advise the public or, as stated in the ordinance, "the passers-by" that a "public hearing" would be held. Appellants do not suggest who, other than "property owners" situated in the mile and a half radius of the proposed cemetery site, would be interested in the hearing, nor is it suggested that any persons other than property owners desired or asked to be heard. What property rights, or other legal rights of a non-owner could be impaired is not called to our attention by appellants; and such being the case, notice to such non-owner is not required as a prerequisite to due process of law. The policy of the law with reference to ordinances, such as the one with which we are here concerned, is to assure that the matter of establishing a cemetery in a community shall be fully and fairly considered, and is not inimical to the public interests. This design was accomplished when due notice was given of a "public hearing" and when, as here, such a hearing was had, not only before the Commission, but later before the Board. When, as reflected by the record herein, no one was misled by the notices as to the manner and type of hearing that would be held and the date thereof, it follows that the requirements of the ordinance were complied with. Manifestly, appellants were not mislead or deceived by the notices, because both appeared and were heard not only before the Commission, but as well before the Board. And the petition for a writ herein alleges that appellant North Side Property Owners' Association is "a non-profit corporation existing under the laws of the State of California and that its members are residents and property owners" in the section closest to the property to be utilized for a cemetery site. Furthermore, neither appellant herein claims it was misled or prejudiced in any way by the form of the notices or the manner in which the same were published and posted. Having appeared, together with some 60 other people and corporate bodies, at the hearing in opposition to the application for a cemetery permit, it seems questionable that appellants should now be in a position to claim that they did not receive legal notice or that the notice which prompted their appearance at the public hearing was legally faulty. The Board, in the instant case, acquired jurisdiction to act upon the application for a cemetery permit when the notice required by the ordinance was given. The requirements of the ordinance were met, in so far as the hearing on the application was concerned, when the Commission, in the manner required by law, gave notice that a "public hearing" would be held and the date thereof.

[6, 7] Appellant Tool Company's contention that the postcard notices were improperly mailed, because the names and addresses were taken from the records of the County Assessor and Tax Collector instead of from the records of the County Assessor alone as provided in the ordinance, cannot be sustained. It is true that there is in the record a statement by Land Use Engineer Suess that postcard notices were mailed to property owners at the "last known name and address of such owners as shown in the records of the County Assessor and Tax Collector * * ." The record, however, contains an affidavit by the Acting Chief Engineer that he " * * caused a postcard notice of public hearing * * * to be mailed to all property owners * * * using for this purpose the last known name and address of such owners as shown upon the records of the Assessor's office of Los Angeles County." True, as contended by appellant Tool Company, this affidavit was not verified until February 14, 1944, some time after the proceedings before the Commission and Board were completed, but, as was said in Herman v. Santee, 103 Cal. 519, 524, 37 P. 509, 510, 42 Am.St.Rep. 145, quoting with approval from a note in American State Reports, volume 21, page 52, "'* * * It is the fact of service of process which confers jurisdiction, and it is a familiar practice in California, as well as elsewhere, when the proof of such service is absent or defective, to permit it to be amended or supplied.'"

Furthermore, there is no provision in the Revenue and Taxation Code, St.1939, p. 1274 et seq., or elsewhere, for a Tax Collector's list different from the Assessor's. On the contrary, sections 441 to 444 inclusive, of the Revenue and Taxation Code, St.1939, pp. 1286, 1287, provide for such lists and both the Assessor and Tax Collector use the same.

[8] Appellants' next attack upon the legality of the permit issued is founded on the claim that the corporate respondent Hillside Memorial Park failed to meet the requirements of subdivision (d) of section 4 of the ordinance, which provides that there shall be attached to the application, or made a part thereof, "a financial statement of applicant showing the financial ability of applicant to establish, care for, and maintain the cemetery in such a manner as to prevent the same from becoming a public nuisance." The trial court expressly found that the applicants for the permit fully complied with the mandate of the ordinance in so far as the filing of a financial statement was concerned. Section 8252 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, p. 699, makes it unlawful for any corporation, co-partnership, firm, trust association, or individual to engage in the business of operating or maintaining a cemetery, except by means of a corporation duly organized for that purpose. In so far as the filing of a financial statement in the instant proceeding is concerned, the record reflects that, while no such statement was filed by the corporation itself, the individual respondents filed their personal financial statements with the application; that respondent corporation had been formed solely for the purpose of operating the proposed cemetery and, except for issuing 160 shares of stock to the two individual respondents, had not functioned up to the date when the application for the permit was filed.

The literal requirements of the ordinance were satisfied by the statement that the corporation had no assets, and we are impressed that the spirit of the law was observed when the two and only stockholders of the corporation presented evidence as to what assets would be available should the permit be granted, thus enabling the Commission to "* * * consider whether or not * * * applicant can demonstrate adequate financial ability to establish and maintain said proposed cemetery in such a manner as to prevent the proposed cemetery from becoming a public nuisance" (Sec. 6 of the ordinance). Furthermore, section 6 of the ordinance provides that "The Regional Planning Commission shall also have power to consider whether or not, through a perpetual care fund, or otherwise, applicant can demonstrate adequate financial ability to establish and maintain such proposed cemetery in a manner so as to prevent the proposed cemetery from becoming a public nuisance." At the time respondents filed their application with the Commission, they stipulated that the proposed cemetery would be established as a "perpetual care cemetery," for which a Perpetual Care Fund should be established by setting aside in a trust a given amount of cash or a percentage of the sales price of each interment space sold in the cemetery. Based on the individual financial statements, as well as the proposed Perpetual Care Fund, the Commission determined as follows:

"3. Financial Statement and Perpetual Care Fund. With the cooperation of the County Auditor and County Counsel, the Commission has thoroughly reviewed and examined from all standpoints the financial and Perpetual Care Fund statements filed with the application, and it is the opinion of the Commission that the Applicants are financially able to establish, operate, and maintain the cemetery so as not to become a public nuisance."

A further answer to appellants' contentions of insufficiency of the financial statements is the fact that 100 per cent of the outstanding stock of respondent corporation was owned by the two individual respondents who made financial statements and who were joint applicants for the permit with the corporation. The identity of the corporation with its two and only stockholders, directors and officers who did file their financial statements, coupled with the Perpetual Care Fund, substantially complies with the requirements of the ordinance and its purposes and intent as heretofore indicated. The permit as issued, subject to the provisions recommended by the Commission, requires the corporation to establish and maintain a full and statutory Perpetual Care Fund, thereby supporting the finding of the Commission that the cemetery would not become a public nuisance, and that is what section 6 of the ordinance seeks to guard against.

[9-11] Appellants next assert that the provision of section 4(c) of the ordinance, which requires that there must be attached to the application a map containing certain data such as the location, boundaries and description of the property, location of buildings within a mile and a half radius, etc., was not met. Appellants' contention in this regard cannot be upheld. The trial court found that a map was filed in due compliance with the ordinance. This finding was justified, because, in his written report presented at the hearing before the Commission, the latter's Land Use Engineer, after detailing all of the requirements of the ordinance with reference to the map, stated: "10. Map marked Ex. A on file with the case shows in detail the conditions heretofore described". And the Reporter's Transcript of the hearing before the Commission on July 7, 1943, shows that "Mr. Suess, Land Use Engineer of the Regional Planning Commission, presented the report on factual data concerning this case, and displayed maps showing the location of the proposed use and the adjacent land uses." (Emphasis added.) The map was not included in the return to the writ of review and was, therefore, not before the trial court. Had appellants desired to present the map to the trial court to contradict the hereinbefore mentioned report of the Land Use Engineer, it was their duty to see that the same was included in the return. Upon a petitioner seeking a writ of review rests the burden of seeing to it that the return is filed and that a complete record is made. Goodrich v. Superior Court, 92 Cal.App. 695, 696, 268 P. 669. Since appellants were the parties interested in having the action of the Board reviewed, the duty devolved upon them to see that the record was complete. When they did not see fit to bring the map into the record, their attack upon it is futile, in view of the aforesaid showing made in the trial court that a map was filed with the Commission in conformity with the ordinance and was utilized at the hearings before both the Commission and the Board.

[12-14] Finally, appellants attack the sufficiency of the evidence to support certain findings of the trial court, other than those to which reference has hereinbefore been made. In the main, appellants' complaint has to do with procedural steps taken by the Commission and the Board. We do not, therefore, deem it necessary to narrate in detail the specific objections made to these findings. Suffice it to say that a reading of the record convinces us that the findings are supported by substantial evidence; that a full and fair hearing was had before the Commission and the Board. More than 60 protestants appeared before the Commission to oppose the granting of the permit and included therein were both of the appellants in the instant proceeding. When the matter came on for hearing before the Board, the entire record of proceedings had before the Commission was before the Board and, at that time, counsel for both appellants were again heard in opposition to the granting of the permit. Section 2 of the ordinance provides that the permit here in question must be granted unless it shall affirmatively appear on the hearing and be found as a fact by the Board that the operation of the cemetery in the location proposed would "jeopardize or adversely affect the health, safety, comfort or welfare of the public". The burden of proof, therefore, rested upon appellants and other protestants. Furthermore, the action taken by such Board raises the presumption that the existence of the necessary facts had been ascertained and found. Lindell Co. v. Board of Permit Appeals, 23 Cal.2d 303, 323, 144 P.2d 4; Bartholomae Oil Corporation v. Seager, 35 Cal.App.2d 77, 80, 94 P.2d 614. The evidence supports the findings, the findings support the judgment, and we find no prejudicial error in the record. The permit was granted after due notice and a full and fair hearing before the proper administrative bodies, at which both appellants appeared and were heard.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 609

NORTH SIDE PROPERTY OWNERS' ASS'N v. HILLSIDE MEMORIAL PARK et al. (HUGHES TOOL CO., Intervener).

Civ. 14810.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Aug. 30, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 25, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑863

Where judgment has been rendered for defendant on the pleadings, the sole question presented on appeal is whether the complaint states a cause of action.

2. Pleading 🔑350(3)

In passing on motion by defendant for judgment on the pleadings, only the complaint itself may be considered, the truth of allegations contained in complaint must be assumed, and, if it alleges ultimate facts which indicate existence of a cause of action in favor of plaintiff, the motion must be denied.

3. Stipulations 🔑14(11)

Where defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings in action to enjoin maintenance of a cemetery pursuant to permit granted by Los Angeles county board of supervisors was submitted upon stipulation of parties authorizing court to review proceedings had and evidence taken by regional planning commission and board in granting the permit, rule governing motions for judgment on the pleadings limiting court's consideration to complaint alone was inapplicable.

4. Injunction 🔑7

One having an adequate remedy at law may not resort to equity for injunctive relief.

5. Nuisance 🔑18

Parties opposing maintenance of a cemetery on certain land had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by writ to review legality of action of county board of supervisors in granting cemetery permit and, having pursued such remedy, they could not maintain action in equity to enjoin as a public nuisance maintenance of the cemetery on the same grounds as were urged in review proceeding.

6. Cemeteries 🔑9

In hearing and passing upon application for a cemetery permit under ordinance of Los Angeles county, county board of supervisors functioned in a judicial or quasi judicial capacity.

7. Cemeteries 🔑9

The operation of a cemetery was a "commercial use" within statute permitting such use unless unnecessary and injurious methods of operation are employed, and use of land for cemetery purposes was therefore properly confined to zone wherein county ordinance permitted unlimited use of land except that a permit must be obtained from county supervisors to operate a cemetery. Code Civ.Proc. § 731a; St.1939, pp. 671, 699, §§ 7020, 8275.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Commercial Use".

8. Nuisance 🔑32

Operation of a cemetery pursuant to permit from county board of supervisors in zone wherein county ordinance permitted unlimited use of land could not be enjoined as a nuisance, in absence of allegations of proposed operation of cemetery in any other than a reasonable and necessary manner or of the threatened use of unnecessary or injurious methods in operation of the cemetery. Code Civ.Proc. § 731a.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred E. Paonessa, Judge.

Action by North Side Property Owners' Association, a corporation, against Hillside Memorial Park, a corporation, and others to enjoin defendants from establishing and maintaining a cemetery on certain described land under a permit granted by board of supervisors of Los Angeles county, wherein Hughes Tool Company filed its complaint in intervention. From a judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants, plaintiff and intervener appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

Vernon P. Spencer, of Inglewood, for appellant North Side Property Owners' Ass'n.

Howard P. Hall, of Hollywood, and Burr & Smith, of Los Angeles, for appellant, Hughes Tool Co.

O'Melveny & Myers and Jackson W. Chance, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

J. H. O'Connor, Co. Counsel, and Edward H. Gaylord, Deputy Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for amici curiæ in support of respondents.

WHITE, Justice.

Plaintiff, North Side Property Owners' Association (hereinafter referred to as the "Association"), a non-profit corporation composed of property owners and home owners owning land in the north west portion of the City of Inglewood, in Los Angeles County, instituted this action to enjoin defendants from establishing and maintaining a cemetery on certain described land, under a permit granted and issued by the Board of Supervisors of Los Angeles County (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"), pursuant to the provisions of Ordinance No. 2854 (N.S.) of said County, as amended by Ordinance No. 2919 (N.S.). Subsequent to the filing of said action, plaintiff Hughes Tool Company, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "Tool Company") engaged in the manufacture of essential war materials upon lands situate within one-half mile of the proposed cemetery site, and employing 2500 men and women, filed its complaint in intervention. Following the filing of answers to the complaint and complaint in intervention, defendants moved for judgment on the pleadings, which motion was granted. From the judgment entered thereon, both plaintiff and intervenor prosecute this appeal.

The instant proceeding is a companion case to the one numbered in this court 14,795, entitled North Side Property Owners' Association and Hughes Tool Company, a corporation, v. County of Los Angeles and the Board of Supervisors thereof, wherein plaintiff and intervenor herein sought a writ for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings and order of the Board granting to defendants herein the permit to establish, maintain and operate the private cemetery here in question, and which case was this day decided. 70 Cal.App.2d 598, 161 P.2d 613.

In general, plaintiff's complaint and the complaint in intervention contained the identical allegations set forth in their aforesaid petition for writ of review. In short, it was alleged that defendants herein filed their application with the Regional Planning Commission of Los Angeles County (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission") for a permit to establish and maintain a private cemetery; and, after a hearing before said Commission and later before the Board, the latter made its order pursuant to the terms of the foregoing ordinance granting such permit. After challenging the jurisdiction of the Board to grant such permit on the ground that the procedural requirements of the ordinance were not complied with, it was alleged that, if defendants are permitted to establish and maintain a cemetery on lands described, the waters which drain from said cemetery land would drain into the water supply underlying the lands of members of plaintiff Association and of the Intervenor; that such water supply would be polluted and contaminated by the waters draining from the cemetery lands, thereby menacing and endangering the health of a substantial number of the members of plaintiff Association and of the employees of Intervenor, thereby interfering with the pursuit of its business by said Intervenor. It was also alleged that the operation and maintenance of said cemetery would become an obstacle to the free use of surrounding property so as to "interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property", and that the proposed cemetery would obstruct or impede the free passage on or use in the customary manner of the public streets and highways leading to and surrounding the cemetery property.

[1,2] It requires no citation of authority for the statement that where judgment has been rendered for defendants on the pleadings, the sole question is whether the complaint states a cause of action; that in passing upon such motion for judgment on the pleadings nothing may be considered but the complaint itself. Nothing de hors the complaint, nor any defense thereto set up in the answer, can be taken into account in disposing of such a motion. The truth of the allegations contained in the complaint must be assumed and, if the pleading alleges ultimate facts which disclose the existence of a cause of action in favor of plaintiff, then the motion for judgment on the pleadings must be denied.

It is the contention of appellants herein that the trial court erred in granting the motion of respondents for judgment on the pleadings, for the reason that the plaintiff's complaint and the complaint in intervention alleged ultimate facts which disclose that:

(a) The Board of Supervisors did not have jurisdiction to grant the cemetery permit sought by respondents; and

(b) The establishment and maintenance of the cemetery in question constitutes a private nuisance, which appellants are entitled to enjoin.

[3] However, in the instant action appellants cannot invoke, nor rely upon, the foregoing and well recognized rule governing motions for judgment on the pleadings. This, for the reason that in the case with which we are here concerned, when the motion for judgment on the pleadings was submitted, it was stipulated between the respective parties that, in passing upon said motion, the trial court might consider all proceedings before and all evidence taken by the Regional Planning Commission and the Board of Supervisors contained in the reporter's transcripts of both hearings, all applicable County Ordinances, the jurisdictional notices actually given and pursuant to which the aforesaid Commission and Board hearings were held; the report of the Planning Commission recommending to the Board that the cemetery permit be granted, the permit granted by the Board, the fact that counsel and representatives of both appellants appeared before and were heard by the Commission and the Board in opposition to the granting of the cemetery permit at their respective hearings, and as a result of which hearings the Board issued the cemetery permit involved in this action. Thus, we see that in ruling on the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the trial court, pursuant to the aforesaid stipulation, was permitted and authorized to review the proceedings had and evidence taken by both the Commission and the Board in granting to respondents the cemetery permit.

In the aforesaid writ of review case, the trial court held that the Board of Supervisors was clothed with jurisdiction to grant the cemetery permit sought by respondents herein, and the judgment therein was this day affirmed by this court. North Side Property Owners' Ass'n. et al v. County of Los Angeles et al., supra. Pursuant to the foregoing stipulations, and upon the authority of the case just cited, it must be held that, in so far as appellants' attack herein upon the jurisdiction of the Board of Supervisors is concerned, the trial court's ruling on the motion for judgment on the pleadings was correct and proper. The stipulation served to render totally inapplicable the many cases cited by appellants or the long established principles of law which ordinarily govern motions for judgment on the pleadings. The stipulations authorized the trial court to venture far beyond the allegations of the complaint and to consider all of the proceedings had before the administrative boards in connection with the application of respondents for the cemetery permit; to examine the applicable County Ordinances and to take into consideration the evidence offered in the proceedings before the administrative boards, to take into consideration the fact of personal appearances by appellants, through their counsel, at the hearings before the Commission and the Board. The proceedings herein, under the aforesaid stipulations, are comparable to those in which the court reviews the records of an administrative body on a general demurrer to the petition when the full transcript of the administrative proceedings is made a part of the petition for review. Vaughn v. Board of Police Commissioners, 59 Cal.App.2d 771, 140 P.2d 130; Sipper v. Urban, 22 Cal.2d 138, 137 P.2d 425.

We come now to a consideration of appellants' claim that the complaint and complaint in intervention pleaded ultimate facts which entitled them to a hearing in equity and to the right to submit proof that the establishment and maintenance of the cemetery here in question constitutes a nuisance which appellants are entitled to enjoin.

[4-6] There are two answers to appellants' contention in this regard. In the first place, it is a well recognized doctrine that where a party has an adequate remedy at law he may not resort to a court of equity for injunctive relief. City of South Pasadena v. Pasadena Land & Water Co., 152 Cal. 579, 595, 93 P. 490; Winrod v. Wolters, 141 Cal. 399, 402, 74 P. 1037. A plain, speedy and adequate remedy at law was open to appellants. In fact, they exercised such remedy when they instituted the review proceedings. A comparison of the complaint and complaint in intervention herewith with the petition for the writ of review reveals the fact that the issues presented on the writ of review and those tendered in the case at bar are identical. In the instant case, the trial court found that appellants, and each of them, "has an adequate legal remedy by the bringing and determination of said companion case No. 492,580; * * *." We are not here concerned with a case wherein the constitutionality of the ordinance under which respondents obtained their cemetery permit is under attack, and where neither certiorari nor mandamus are available as remedies. Here the appellants admit the constitutionality of the ordinance and proceeded under its terms to oppose the granting of the cemetery permit to respondents. And when the permit was granted, they challenged the validity of the same by writ of review, upon grounds exactly similar to the claims urged here. Conceding the constitutionality of the applicable ordinances, which provide that a cemetery may be established on the property here in question when a permit is granted therefor by the Board of Supervisors, it must be held that a speedy and adequate remedy at law was afforded appellants by a writ to review the legality of the Board's action in granting the permit, a remedy to which appellants resorted and in which they litigated the precise issues tendered in the instant proceeding. The record herein reflects that, at the administrative hearing before the Commission, one of the objectors present raised the point that the underground water supply would be injuriously affected by the proposed cemetery, and evidence thereon was received by the Commission from the County Health Department, which had examined the area in question, and which evidence was that the objectors' claim was groundless. Upon that issue, the Commission made a specific finding that:

"The water table in this district is low, and the Health Department and Flood Control District have submitted reports favorable to the granting of this permit. * * * After consideration of all the evidence, testimony, and factual data presented in this case, and after having made a field investigation of the premises and surrounding properties, and having determined that the use of the property in question for the establishment of a cemetery in accordance with the provisions above set forth would not become a public nuisance and would in no way jeopardize or adversely affect the public health, safety, or general welfare. * * *"

In granting the cemetery permit, the Board adopted the foregoing finding of the Commission. In hearing and passing upon an application for a cemetery permit under the ordinances, the administrative body functions in a judicial or quasi-judicial capacity. Ware v. Retirement Board, 65 Cal. App.2d 781, 793, 151 P.2d 549; Greif v. Dullea, 66 Cal.App.2d 986, 1009, 153 P.2d 589; Dierssen v. Civil Service Commission, 43 Cal.App.2d 53, 63, 110 P.2d 513. If appellants had any evidence to support their claim of underground water pollution, they should have presented it to the administrative bodies, and the same would have been reviewed by the court on the writ of review. Under the above mentioned stipulations, filed in this case, which permitted the trial court to consider the evidence presented to the administrative boards, the trial court was authorized to assume that, if appellants were in possession of any additional evidence of underground water pollution, they would not have remained silent before Commission and the Board. Whatever evidence appellants did present to the administrative board was reviewed by the court in the instant case, which, under the stipulation, amounted practically to a trial on the merits when the court had under consideration the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

We are persuaded that appellants not only had a speedy and adequate remedy at law, but that they availed themselves of the same. Therefore, a suit in equity to enjoin a private nuisance cannot be maintained. Furthermore, we are impressed from a reading of the allegations and prayer contained in appellants' pleadings in the review case and in the present proceeding, that the sole and only purpose and object of the present action is to accomplish the identical results sought in the review proceeding, namely, to attack the validity of and to set aside the cemetery permit granted respondents. The legal remedy utilized by appellants was wholly adequate to accomplish the main, if not the sole, purpose sought in the two proceedings.

Finally, we are persuaded that under the pleadings the court was required, because of the provisions of section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure, to grant the motion. The section in question was made a part of the Code in 1935 and, so far as material to the issues here involved, reads as follows:

"Whenever any city, city and county, or county shall have established zones or districts under authority of law wherein certain manufacturing or commercial uses are expressly permitted, no person or persons, firm or corporation shall be enjoined or restrained by the injunctive process from the reasonable and necessary operation in any such industrial or commercial zone of any use expressly permitted therein, nor shall such use be deemed a nuisance without evidence of the employment of unnecessary and injurious methods of operation. * * *"

The cemetery site for the establishment and maintenance of which a permit was granted respondents by the Board is situated in Zone M—3. Under County Ordinance No. 1494 (N.S.), as amended, the unincorporated area of Los Angeles is divided into 16 zones, of which one is Zone M—3, and it is further provided that the area within said Zone M—3 may be used for any commercial use whatsoever, save and except that before any property situate in such Zone M—3 can be used for cemetery purposes a permit must be obtained from the Board. Use of the property here in question for cemetery purposes is specifically authorized by the permit issued to respondents by the Board and the legality of the proceedings in which such permit was granted has been upheld by the trial court, as well as by this court. North Side Property Owners' Ass'n v. County of Los Angeles, supra.

[7] The question then arises whether the establishment and maintenance of a cemetery comes within the purview of section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure. That the maintenance and operation of a cemetery is a "commercial use" within the meaning of the Code section to us seems obvious. Section 7020 of the Health and Safety Code, St.1939, p. 671, defines the maintenance of a cemetery as a "business"; section 8275 of the same code, St.1939, p. 699, provides who may engage in or transact any of the "businesses of a cemetery" within this state. In Building Commissioner of Town of Brookline v. McManus, 1928, 263 Mass. 270, 160 N.E. 887, it was held that "undertaking, as commonly carried on, is not a profession; it is a business or occupation"; and in Meyer v. Stein, 1940, 284 Ky. 258, 145 S.W.2d 105, 107, the court stated: "Therefore, we are constrained to hold these covenants excluded the use of the residence on Lot No. 27 as a funeral home, since it cannot be denied that a funeral home is a commercial enterprize." To us it seems quite clear that the use of land for cemetery purposes is a "commercial use" within the meaning of section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and is therefore properly excluded by the County Zoning Ordinance from a residential zone and confined to Zone M—3, which provides for the unlimited and unrestricted use or occupancy of lands therein situate, except that in the case of cemeteries a permit must be obtained from the Board of Supervisors, as was done in the instant case.

[8] The only restriction enjoined upon "commercial uses" by section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure is that the operation thereof shall be "reasonable and necessary." It is only when there is evidence of the employment of "unnecessary and injurious methods of operation" that any "commercial use" referred to in section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure may be deemed a nuisance. Nowhere in the complaint or the complaint in intervention herein is there any allegation that respondent proposes to or will operate said cemetery in any other than a "reasonable and necessary" manner as cemeteries are usually and ordinarily conducted, nor is there any allegation of the threatened use of "unnecessary or injurious" methods in the operation of the cemetery. No cause of action on the nuisance theory is therefore stated in appellants' pleadings. Neither plaintiff nor intervenor in the instant proceeding seeks to recover damages. They challenge only the legality of the cemetery permit issued to defendant Hill Side Memorial Park, a corporation, and seek to enjoin the latter from establishing and maintaining the said cemetery. The "commercial use" of the property in question, located as it is in Zone M—3, being expressly authorized by County Zoning Ordinance, and a permit to establish and maintain such property as a cemetery having been granted in conformity with the County Ordinance, there being no allegation that respondents threaten to or will use the property in any but a "reasonable and necessary" manner, as cemeteries are ordinarily conducted, it follows that all the requirements of section 731a of the Code of Civil Procedure are here present, and the trial court properly denied appellants injunctive relief. McNeill v. Redington, 67 Cal.App.2d 315, 154 P.2d 428.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

YORK, P. J., and DORAN, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d Supp. 872

PEOPLE v. GILES.

No. Cr. A. 2106.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Aug. 29, 1945.

1. Assault and battery 🔑91

Evidence sustained conviction of chief of police of battery for momentarily choking one in his custody. Pen.Code, § 243.

2. Assault and battery 🔑66

Provocation by words and acts in protest against being taken into custody upon inability to immediately post bail on charge of minor traffic violation did not justify police officer's use of force upon protesting prisoner who was at the time in his custody.

3. Criminal law 🔑986

Trial court before pronouncing sentence upon police officer convicted of battery properly referred the matter to county probation officer for a report. Pen. Code, §§ 243, 1203.

4. Criminal law 🔑1208(3)

The policy enunciated in statute referring to circumstances which may aggravate or mitigate punishment, though provisions of statute are limited in their application to proceedings in superior court, governs proceedings in justice courts, in absence of express legislation on the subject. Pen.Code, §§ 1204, 1425–1461.

5. Criminal law 🔑977(1)

The steps to be taken by court in determining what sentence within the prescribed limits should be imposed in a particular case are part of the judicial proceedings in the case. Pen.Code, §§ 12, 13, 1204.

6. Criminal law ⚿986, 987

The determination of the sentence to be imposed upon one convicted of a misdemeanor should not be based even in part upon statements made to trial judge out of court and out of accused's hearing. Pen.Code, §§ 12, 13, 1204.

7. Criminal law ⚿987

One convicted of a misdemeanor for which a jail sentence may be imposed is entitled to be present when judgment is rendered, in absence of a statute to the contrary.

8. Criminal law ⚿633(1)

Though common law is of no effect so far as specification of what shall constitute a crime is concerned, with respect to criminal procedure, the common law is in force as law in absence of statutory provision at variance therewith. Pol.Code, § 4468.

9. Criminal law ⚿662(1)

Statute providing for taking of evidence by probation officer and its inclusion in his report to court creates a statutory exception to accused's fundamental right to be confronted by witnesses against him, but trial court is not authorized in disregard of such right to listen out of court to witnesses whispering against accused. Pen.Code, §§ 12, 13, 1203, 1204.

10. Criminal law ⚿662(1)

In determining sentence to be imposed on one convicted of battery, such facts as were not supplied by probation officer's report and by record of trial should have been obtained from witnesses called in open court in the presence of accused. Pen.Code, §§ 12, 13, 243, 1203, 1204.

11. Criminal law ⚿1188

Where judge in determining sentence to be imposed upon one convicted of battery permitted himself to be influenced by accusations made out of court which accused had no opportunity to refute, sentence to six months' imprisonment in county jail would be reversed with directions to re-arraign accused for sentence after proper proceedings to ascertain circumstances in aggravation and mitigation of punishment. Pen.Code, §§ 12, 13, 243, 1203, 1204.

Appeal from Justice's Court of San Antonio Township; Stanley Moffatt, Judge.

Ernest Giles was convicted in justice's court of offense of battery and was sentenced to serve six months in the county jail, and he appeals.

Judgment reversed with directions.

Edward R. Young and Milan Medigovich, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fred N. Howser, Dist. Atty., and Jere J. Sullivan and Robert Wheeler, Deputy Dist. Attys., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Judge.

The defendant, convicted on a charge of having used force and violence upon the complaining witness, was sentenced to serve six months in the county jail. We have concluded, upon his appeal from the judgment, that the evidence supports the conviction and that no reason exists for disturbing it, but that the judgment should be reversed with directions that the defendant be resentenced, because, in determining the severity of the sentence to be imposed, the trial judge erred in listening to and being influenced by accusations made against the defendant outside of court. The error referred to is not a trivial one. A person convicted of a traffic offense or of another of the many misdemeanors which have been created by state laws and local ordinances, has a real concern in the sentence which follows. Will it impose a light or a stiff fine? Or is there to be a term in jail instead of a fine? It is a matter of more than passing interest, therefore, to know whether or not the trial judge may properly take into consideration, in determining the sentence, reports against the defendant which come to the judge privately neither in open court nor known to the defendant, and which he is given no opportunity to answer.

[1,2] As we have stated, the evidence supports the conclusion that the defendant did use force unlawfully upon the complaining witness. The latter, it appears, had been charged with a minor traffic violation by a complaint filed in the City Court of the City of Vernon, where the defendant, who was the City's Chief of Police, was acting as bailiff. The complaining witness was considerably incensed at having his bail set at $200 when he pleaded not guilty and asked for a jury trial. When he found himself unable immediately to post bail, he did not yield graciously to being taken into custody by the defendant. In spite of his verbal and other protestations, however, the complaining witness was taken into custody and to the booking office of the city jail. There he continued to evince his unhappiness at what had taken place, by provoking words and perhaps provoking acts, until the defendant put a stop to it by choking him, for a brief moment. But the provocation, however great, was not legally sufficient to justify the defendant's use of force in any degree upon the complaining witness, who was at the time in custody as his prisoner.

[3] Standing convicted of the crime of battery, the defendant was subject to a fine (up to one thousand dollars) or to a jail sentence (not exceeding six months) or to a combination of the two. Section 243, Penal Code. To aid it, no doubt, in arriving at a just determination of the proper sentence to impose, the trial court referred the matter to the county probation officer for a report, and set the time for sentencing the defendant ahead twenty days. This course was a proper one, although the defendant was ineligible for probation, for the probation officer is to report not only as to matters of interest re probation, but he is further directed, section 1203, Penal Code, "to investigate and to report to the court at a specified time, upon the circumstances surrounding the crime and concerning the defendant and his prior record, which may be taken into consideration either in aggravation or mitigation of punishment." In this case, however, the probation officer's report, filed two days before the date set for the hearing, proved of little, if any, guidance to the trial judge, for his views in the matter became darkly colored from other, unofficial, reports he received.

That the trial judge listened to accusations made against the defendant out of court, and that they largely influenced his judgment, is clear from the events which took place at the time set for sentencing the defendant. "I will say in the beginning," the trial court prefaced the proceedings, "that I have received a great many telephone calls, letters and personal requests in this matter, and all of them so far have been against the defendant. I will read one letter from the probation officer's report, which duplicates most of the information I have received in an unsatisfactory hearsay sort of manner. I have tried my best to avoid hearsay testimony and not base anything on just rumor and hearsay and unreliable statements. I want to assure you in the beginning that the only purpose I have in this case is to try to rescue San Antonio Township and the City of Vernon from what most people seem to think is a bad situation."

The letter referred to was then read into the record. It was one from a Mr. Needle, and its gist is found in this paragraph: "The Chief of Police of Vernon should have never been allowed to come out on probation, for he is a menace to society; like myself, many other American citizens feel that he should be put away where he could do no further harm. He never did any direct harm to myself, but I am witness of some of his injustice in the performance of his duty. For instance, there was a certain day when a lady was letting out a soldier to whom she had given a lift, and in no way violating the traffic laws, and I saw an officer give that lady a citation. I saw that injustice and my heart bled when I found myself unable to do anything about it." The trial judge again referred to this letter when he said: "I might say that this probation officer's report here contains about a dozen letters from Mr. Giles' friends and he only gathered up one letter against Mr. Giles." We make no comment upon the value of this letter as an aid to the court in determining what punishment to inflict upon the defendant, other than to say that evidence may have graver faults than that of being hearsay.

Following the reading of the letter, two witnesses were called and interrogated by the trial judge. The first was a newspaper man who had found the office of the Chief of Police of Vernon and, upon one occasion years before, the Chief, himself, very uncommunicative when asked for "the names, etc.," of the persons involved in accidents which, presumably, although it was not stated, the department had investigated. Following the conclusion of the testimony of this witness, the trial judge inquired: "Is there any other news man here who cares to say anything on this matter? Of course, I realize the fact that the news men are in a rather tough spot in this case and I won't insist on hearing any more on that. They have certainly told me enough on the side about the matter, however." Later, following a statement by defendant's counsel to the effect that so far there was no evidence that the press had been denied access to the police department, the trial judge remarked: "The previous witness testified he had been, and dozens of people have told me the same thing, even though they are afraid to come here this morning because they are afraid of physical violence by the police department of Vernon."

The second witness called by the trial judge was the mayor of the City of Vernon. "The point is," the trial judge announced by way of explanation, "if the Mayor instructed this sort of thing I would forgive Mr. Giles for it. If he does it on his own volition that makes him solely responsible." The Mayor testified that he had never given any instructions to the defendant with reference to the treatment of prisoners in the City of Vernon, and he had not heard that the police department had refused to cooperate with the Metropolitan press regarding persons arrested in the City of Vernon, and the trial judge expressed his conviction that the Mayor "had nothing to do with the matter." This, it would seem, left the onus on the defendant for the failure of his office to cooperate with the press concerning arrests, a matter expressly stated by the witness first called to be not within his "information," and so if known to the trial judge at all was known only by virtue of the "dozens of people" who had told him about it on the outside, but who were afraid, according to the trial judge's report, to appear as witnesses in his court. There was no witness to any mistreatment of any prisoner other than of the complaining witness; that is, no witness who testified in court.

The city attorney of Vernon was called by the defendant as a witness, but was immediately taken over by the trial judge, who addressed to him these statements and questions, each revealing a state of mind, existing in the trial judge, not brought about by any court witness or judicial proceeding: "Do you know anything about his reputation that he seems to have developed of brutality or ill-considered treatment of the public or press, or anything of that kind?" "Do you know about this rule in the Vernon Police Department which requires the taking of the name and address of every person who comes into the police headquarters?" "Do you know about the law that no trailer is allowed to park in Vernon for more than thirty days?" "Do you know why it is that it is so impossible for the press to get any information from the police department?" The inquiries put to the witness concluded with this colloquy:

"Q. Let me ask you this: Have you ever heard of a jury trial being granted in Vernon? A. Yes, sir.

"Q. How many times? A. Well, I have acted as prosecutor down there a good many times.

"Q. How long ago was that? A. Well, I think the last one was about a month ago.

"Q. You actually got a jury, did you? A. Absolutely. A jury trial is never denied anybody in Vernon.

"The Court: I understand the judge has a system of hiking the bail so that only rich men can get bail."

The witness's replies to the facts assumed in the various statements and questions were, with one exception, to deny that they were facts or to disclaim having any knowledge of them. He knew that it was the practice to take the name and address of those who called at police headquarters for information, and added that it was he who had suggested the practice, many years ago. But except as noted, no substance was given by his testimony to any of the assumed facts contained in the court's statements and questions. They remained based solely upon the reports which had come to the trial judge, ex parte.

We are not undertaking to answer the question: What relevancy did the matter of jury trials, and the several other matters inquired about, have to the problem then before the court, the problem of determining what was a just and proper sentence to be imposed on the defendant? Nor are we passing upon the propriety of making the proceeding by which the sentence to be imposed upon the defendant was to be determined, a proceeding "to rescue the City of Vernon and bring it back into the United States," as the trial court stated he was trying his best to do. Our attention is centered upon an inquiry into the legal propriety of the practice of a trial judge who, in making up his mind as to the punishment to be imposed upon a convicted defendant, receives and gives heed to charges leveled at the defendant out of court and out of the defendant's hearing.

[4] In section 1204, Penal Code, we discover the legislature expressly condemning the practice followed by the trial court. That section, referring to circumstances which may either aggravate or mitigate the punishment, states: "The circumstances must be presented by the testimony of witnesses examined in open court * * *. No affidavit or testimony, or representation of any kind, verbal or written, can be offered to or received by the court, or a judge thereof, in aggravation or mitigation of the punishment, except as provided in this and the preceding section." We are not exploring the field of speculation arising out of the repeated and drastic changes made through the years in the "preceding section" to determine the effect of the amendments upon the provisions of section 1204, for we are persuaded (we are not elaborating the matter) that the provisions of section 1204 are limited in their application to proceedings in the superior court; they do not constitute legislation governing proceedings in justices' courts. But we note that there is not a word in that chapter of the Penal Code which does prescribe the proceedings for justices' courts (Sections 1425–1461) which is in any way inconsistent with the policy enunciated in section 1204, and that policy, we find, is the policy that governs in the absence of express legislation on the subject.

[5] In the first place, "The several sections of this code which declare certain crimes to be punishable as therein mentioned, devolve a duty upon the court authorized to pass sentence, to determine and impose the punishment prescribed." Section 12, Penal Code. "Whenever in this code the punishment for a crime is left undetermined between certain limits, the punishment to be inflicted in a particular case must be determined by the court authorized to pass sentence within such limits as may be prescribed by this code." Sec. 13, Penal Code. The words of these two sections (to which we have added the emphasis) need no interpretation. Plainly they stamp the steps to be taken to determine the severity of a sentence as a part of the judicial proceedings in the case. The duty here imposed upon the court is closely analogous to that imposed upon the court in these words of section 1192 of the Penal Code: "Upon a plea of guilty of a crime distinguished or divided into degrees, the court must, before passing sentence, determine the degree." Of these two duties we find the supreme court speaking in People v. Gilbert, 1943, 22 Cal. 2d 522, 528, 140 P.2d 9, 12, in these words: "In determining the degree of an offense and the punishment to be imposed, after a plea of guilty, it is the duty of the trial court to consider matters in aggravation as well as in mitigation of the offense. The legal significance of established facts may well constitute an element of which cognizance is taken in the exercise of judicial discretion. A hearing for the determination of the degree of an offense and the punishment therefor is not a trial in the full technical sense, and is not governed by the same strict rules of procedure as a trial. As stated in People v. Williams, 14 Cal.2d 532, 536, 95 P.2d 456, 458 (quoting from People v. Popescue, 345 Ill. 142, 153, 158, 177 N.E. 739, 77 A.L.R. 1199) it is 'simply a statutory hearing, by which the court examined witnesses to determine whether any facts existed to aggravate or mitigate the punishment,' and 'in considering evidence in aggravation or mitigation of the offense the court may consider many matters "not admissible on the issue of guilt or innocence" * * *.'" The fact that the hearing is not a trial in the full technical sense and is not governed by the same strict rules of procedure as a trial, does not mean, however, that the facts needed by the court to enable it to perform its duty may be picked up by the judge at the club or on the street. In People v. O'Brien, 1932, 122 Cal.App. 147, 155, 9 P.2d 902, 905, we find this statement: "Notwithstanding the fact that it has been decided that the hearing which may be conducted by the trial court for the purpose of determining the degree of the offense 'is not a trial,' nevertheless the only means by or through which the court is authorized to reach a conclusion in the matter is by the aid of evidence. People v. Chew Lan Ong, 141 Cal. [550], 551, 553, 75 P. 186, 187, 99 Am.St.Rep. 88; People v. Bellon, 180 Cal. 706, 182 P. 420, 421." In the first case cited in the text just quoted, People v. Chew Lan Ong, the defendant had pleaded guilty to the charge of murder and had been sentenced to death. The contention was made, on appeal, that the trial judge had no power to determine the degree of the crime for the reason that the section which purported to grant the power (section 1192, quoted above) failed to provide the "mode whereby the court is to reach its determination." [141 Cal. 550, 75 P. 187.] The supreme court disposed of this contention with these words, pertinent to our problem, 141 Cal. at page 552, 75 P. at page 187, 99 Am.St.Rep. 88:

"Jurisdiction to determine the matter is, however, expressly conferred on the court by the section. This means that there shall be a judicial determination, and where power is especially conferred upon a court of general jurisdiction to determine a particular question, and no special mode for that determination is pointed out, the jurisdiction conferred necessarily implies authority in such court to call to its assistance in determining the particular question, the same aid as is usually employed by it in reaching a judicial determination in other cases.

"The universal aid is evidence. This was the means employed by the lower court in determining the degree of crime in the case at bar. It is the only means by which a judicial determination can be had, and was the means which it was contemplated by the Legislature should be invoked by the court.

"If there could be any doubt of this general rule, we are satisfied that the course pursued by the lower court is provided for and sanctioned by section 187, Code Civ.Procedure, which declares that 'When jurisdiction is, by the constitution or this code, or by any other statute, conferred on a court or judicial officer, all the means necessary to carry it into effect are also given; and in the exercise of this jurisdiction, if the course of proceeding be not specifically pointed out by this Code or the statute, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of this Code.' "

[6-8] Our conclusion that the determination of the sentence to be imposed upon a defendant convicted of a misdemeanor should not be based even in part upon statements which come to the ear or eye of the trial judge in an unofficial way, finds further support in these two legal principles: the defendant has a right to be present when judgment is imposed upon him, and he has a right to be confronted by the witnesses who have accusations to make against him. As to the first of these principles, again we find the Penal Code silent, but the common law is not silent. While it is true that "In this state the common law is of no effect so far as the specification of what acts or conduct shall constitute a crime is concerned. Section 6, Pen.Code; 7 Cal.Jur. 841", People v. Whipple, 1929, 100 Cal.App. 261, 262, 279 P. 1008, 1009, with respect to criminal procedure, "The common law is in force as law in this state in the absence of statutory provisions at variance with the common law." Ex parte Hudspeth, 1929, 100 Cal.App. 478, 479, 280 P. 179, 180; Political Code, sec. 4468. Looking, then, to the common law, we find the general rule to be that in the absence of a statute to the contrary, one convicted of a misdemeanor for which a jail sentence may be imposed has the right to be present when the judgment is rendered. 24 C.J.S., Criminal Law, § 1574b, p. 79, 15 Am.Jur. 113; 1 Bishop's New Crim.Procedure, 2d Ed., 241. One of the purposes of requiring that the defendant be present may well be to give him an opportunity to show that accusations made against him, other than the one of which he stands convicted, are without foundation, and a chance to object to the consideration of improper evidence. In the latter connection, see People v. O'Brien, supra, 122 Cal.App. 147, 157, 9 P.2d 902, 905.

[9] Closely allied to the principle just considered is the second of the two to which we made reference. We find it to be recognized in People v. Beatty, 1923, 132 Cal.App. 376, 380, 22 P.2d 757, 759, that "* * * the right of a defendant to be confronted by witnesses is fundamental. * * * The right in this state is guaranteed by section 686 of the Penal Code, and the defendant can be deprived of the same only by statutory authority to the contrary. People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 652, 39 P. 33." In so far as the code approves the gathering of evidence by the probation officer and its inclusion in his report, there is "statutory authority to the contrary." But no exception to the fundamental right has been made authorizing the trial court to listen, out of court, to witnesses whispering against the defendant.

We find two decisions from sister states which condemn the practice followed by the trial court in the present case as being in violation of the fundamental right of a person to be confronted by the witnesses against him. The first of these is State v. Simms, 1925, 131 S.C. 422, 127 S.E. 840, where the defendant had been sentenced to four months' imprisonment and a $500 fine for a violation of a state law. In sentencing the defendant the trial court remarked: "Mr. Simms, you must be a bad man. A number of people from your community have been to see me at my office about you, and they have all spoken against you. I have been impressed with the fact that no one has come to see me to speak a good word in your behalf." The supreme court of South Carolina set the sentence aside and remanded the case to the trial court for a resentence, stating that they did so in reliance upon a prior decision wherein they had said that the information necessary to pass sentence should have been obtained in open court or in the presence of the defendant or his counsel, and that the defendant "has a right that everything appertaining to the case, in the way of evidence affecting the case, be open and above board and public * * *".

The second of the two cases from sister states is Commonwealth v. Johnson, 1944, 348 Pa. 349, 35 A.2d 312, 313. In this case the defendant had pleaded guilty to the charge of murder, and the degree of the crime and the sentence had been determined by three judges sitting en banc. These judges talked with the warden of the penitentiary where the defendant had been confined when the murder was committed, and from one source and another, all out of court and not in the presence of the defendant, had picked up quite a bit of information, none to his credit. "No one has a good word for him—he is troublesome and dangerous," reported one of the judges. The judgment imposed was reversed because "the record does not show affirmatively that no ex parte evidence was received by the court before it determined and declared the degree of the defendant's guilt of murder." The reversal was not because of the ex parte receipt of evidence in connection with the punishment to be inflicted. However, the opinion contains these declarations which we find pertinent to the latter matter, 35 A.2d at pages 313, 314:

"It is a prisoner's constitutional right in this Commonwealth 'to meet the witnesses face to face' (Sec. 9, Declaration of Rights Const.P.S.). In Com. v. Corsino, 261 Pa. 593, at page 598, 104 A. 739, 740, we held: 'It is the inherent right of the prisoner in a capital case to be present at every stage of the proceedings from the arraignment to the rendition of the verdict. Neither court nor judge can take any step affecting his right in his absence.' * * * A judge whose duty it is to determine the proper sentence imposed on those convicted of crime cannot be expected to limit himself to only that which appears in the record of the trial of the prisoner. It is to the benefit of society and it may be of benefit to the prisoner, to have the sentencing judge consider facts other than those adduced at the trial. Such facts might militate in a prisoner's favor or they might militate against him.

"However, when a judge is faced with the duty of determining whether or not a convicted murderer is to be sentenced to death or life imprisonment the seriousness of the problem is such that a judge who is possessed of that zeal to do justice which characterizes the just judge, will as far as is practicable, give the defendant an opportunity to confront the witnesses against him and to offer evidence in his own behalf. Such a procedure if followed will be informative to the understanding and enlightening to the judgment of the sentencing tribunal."

[10, 11] Our conclusions, then, are these: The defendant was regularly convicted, on sufficient evidence, of the charge of battery. In undertaking to ascertain facts from which it could determine what sentence should be imposed on the defendant, the trial court was engaged in a judicial proceeding. Such facts as were not supplied by the probation officer's report and by the record of the trial, which had been held, should have been obtained from the lips of witnesses called in open court, in the presence of the defendant. Instead of limiting his search for the facts to these proper sources, the trial judge listened and gave great weight to reports received outside of court, with the result that the judgment entered was prejudicially influenced by these improperly received accusations. For these reasons we reverse the judgment with directions that the defendant be rearraigned for sentence after proceedings conducted in harmony with the principles set forth in this opinion.

SHAW, P. J., and KINCAID, J., concur.

26 Cal.2d 833

KIRK v. LOS ANGELES RY. CORPORATION.

L. A. 19343.

Supreme Court of California.
Aug. 28, 1945.

1. Street railroads 🔑117(8)

Where there was evidence which would have authorized finding that defendant's streetcar entered intersection before "Go" signal and struck pedestrian who, while attempting to cross street on which streetcar was operating, was caught in intersection by change of traffic signal, defendant's negligence was for jury.

2. Trial 🔑142

Trial court must deny a motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case if there is any substantial evidence which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to plaintiff, tends to establish averments of complaint or where plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff.

3. Trial 🔑142, 143

Trial court should deny motion for nonsuit at close of plaintiff's case even when there is a conflict in the evidence and some evidence tends to sustain plaintiff's case, or when evidence for plaintiff is such that different conclusions can reasonably be drawn therefrom.

4. Appeal and error 🔑927(3)

On appeal from a judgment of nonsuit, the reviewing court must view evidence in light most favorable to appellant, must disregard all inconsistencies, and draw only those inferences from evidence which can reasonably be drawn which are favorable to appellant.

5. Negligence 🔑136(9)

Contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists, or unless reasonable men could have drawn only that conclusion, and, where different inferences may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed.

6. Street railroads 🔑98(7), 117(22)

Where traffic signal was in favor of pedestrian who was attempting to cross street, pedestrian was justified in leaving curb and starting across, and question of whether or not she should have observed that streetcar on intersecting street had started forward at that time and, if it had, whether she was aware of the danger, was for jury.

7. Street railroads 🔑98(7)

A pedestrian, while she is bound to exercise due care when crossing at an intersection in a crosswalk with the traffic signal in her favor, has the right of way and may assume that traffic signal will not be violated by traffic crossing her path.

8. Street railroads 🔑98(7)

When a pedestrian is in or about the middle of the street she is crossing, and the traffic signal changes against her, she may assume that due care will be exercised by the released cross traffic.

9. Street railroads 🔑117(22)

Whether a mistake in judgment by a pedestrian, who is crossing a street at a crosswalk with a traffic signal which is about to change, as to the speed and danger from an approaching vehicle constitutes contributory negligence, is for jury.

10. Street railroads 🔑117(22)

Whether acts of plaintiff in leaving curb to cross street in a marked crosswalk with traffic signal in her favor, and her continuation when signal changed while she was partly across and she saw defendant's streetcar approaching, were compatible with the conduct of a person of ordinary prudence, was for jury.

11. Street railroads 🔑98(7)

The fact that pedestrian's judgment may have been faulty in concluding that she had reached a place of safety at a point some two feet past the tracks on which defendant's streetcar was approaching did not necessarily establish pedestrian's negligence.

12. Street railroads 🔑117(33)

Where purse belonging to pedestrian, who was caught in an intersection by change of traffic signals, fell from her arm and she was hurrying to cross streetcar tracks in front of streetcar, which had started before the signal completely changed, whether pedestrian's act in stooping to pick up purse was contributory negligence or was an act in emergency was for jury.

13. Negligence 🔑136(27)

Generally, whether forgetfulness of known danger by one injured as result thereof constitutes negligence barring recovery of damages by showing want of ordinary care is for jury.

14. Negligence ⟹71

Where situation requires an immediate choice between alternative courses of conduct, negligence may not be inferred from an unwise choice if a reasonable man, under similar circumstances, would choose similarly.

15. Negligence ⟹72, 136(28)

Whether a person in a position of imminent danger acted reasonably is a question of fact for the jury, but, in determining the question, conduct must be viewed in light of excitement of the moment, and not from view of the surroundings of one not in danger.

16. Street railroads ⟹117(34)

Where evidence warranted finding that defendant street railroad should have anticipated that pedestrians were in crosswalk when streetcar jumped the signal and that pedestrians would act on natural impulses, and hence would have warranted a finding that defendant's negligence was proximate cause of accident to pedestrian, entry of nonsuit was error.

17. Negligence ⟹2

The actor is bound to know the qualities and habits of human beings, and the qualities characteristic and capacity of things and forces insofar as they are matters of common knowledge at the time and in the community.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles E. Haas, Judge.

Action by Helen Kirk against the Los Angeles Railway Corporation for injuries suffered when struck by defendant's streetcar. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence, the trial court granted a motion for nonsuit and, from the ensuing judgment, plaintiff appeals.

Reversed.

Prior opinion, 155 P.2d 405.

Entenza & Gramer and John J. Craig, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher and E. H. Chapman, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CARTER, Justice.

Plaintiff was nonsuited in an action for personal injuries claimed to have been received as the result of defendant's negligence.

Broadway, a north-south street, crosses at right angles Seventh, an east-west street in the city of Los Angeles. Both streets have double streetcar tracks on them. The traffic at the intersection is controlled by a traffic light. At 11 o'clock at night defendant was operating a southbound streetcar on its west track on Broadway. Plaintiff, a pedestrian, was proceeding west across Broadway on the south side of Seventh in the middle of the lane marked for pedestrians. She was accompanied by two men, one on each side of her. When she left the east curb on Broadway the traffic signals were in her favor. Two lines of cars were waiting on her left for a change of signal. When she was between the rails of the east streetcar tracks the east-west traffic signal changed to "Stop." A few seconds later, and when she was close to the west tracks, she saw the streetcar approaching. One of her companions grasped her arm, calling her attention to the approach of the streetcar. Her purse, which she was carrying under her right arm, fell to the street some two feet west of the west tracks. In plaintiff's language the following occurred:

"Q. What happened to the contents of the purse? A. They were scattered about.

"Q. Did you continue on across the street after the purse was knocked out from under your elbow? A. Well, without pausing, I attempted to retrieve the purse.

"Q. How did you do that, what did you do? A. Well, I just bent slightly and grabbed it up as I went.

"Q. Did you ever succeed in getting it in your hand? A. I don't know, I was knocked unconscious.

"The Court: You say you grabbed it up or grabbed at it? A. Grabbed at it.

"Q. By Mrs. Gramer: What movement did you make in grabbing at it; were you still in motion, your legs still moving? A. I was.

"Q. Did you ever stop or stand still even for a split second? A. Not to my recollection."

The right front of the streetcar struck plaintiff's right hip while she was in a stooping position. The streetcar was traveling 10 to 12 miles per hour when it was crossing Seventh Street. Plaintiff's two companions reached the west curb of Broadway in safety.

[1] A pedestrian, Walter S. Walters, who was crossing at the same time and place as plaintiff, testified that he was on the west rail of the east tracks when the east-west signal changed to red. At that time he saw the streetcar moving over the crossing, meaning about the middle or a "little" south of the tracks on Seventh Street, at 10 to 12 miles per hour. While there is evidence that the streetcar did not leave the north line of Seventh Street until the north-south signal signified "Go," yet it may be inferred from the foregoing evidence that it "jumped the gun on the signal." Walters stated that he saw the east-west signal change and at that time the streetcar was at or near the middle of the intersection traveling at 10 to 12 miles per hour. Inasmuch as there would be an interval between the change to red of the east-west signal and to green of the north-south signal, it must be clear that the streetcar had not waited for the "Go" sign. Also, plaintiff testified that in a few seconds after the time the east-west signal changed, the streetcar was in the intersection. Moreover, in view of the amount of traffic on the street, it was incumbent upon defendant to allow a reasonable time for the street to clear of pedestrians who had started across the street with the signal in their favor, but had been caught in the intersection between a change of signals. Considering all of those factors, including the speed of the car, it cannot be doubted that the question of whether or not defendant was negligent should have been submitted to the jury.

[2, 3] It is well settled that it is the duty of the trial court to deny a motion for a nonsuit at the close of plaintiff's case, "if there is * * * any substantial evidence, which, with the aid of all legitimate inferences favorable to the plaintiff, tends to establish the averments of the complaint, or, in other words, where the plaintiff's evidence is sufficient to support a judgment on the verdict. It should deny a nonsuit even where there is a conflict in the evidence and some evidence tends to sustain the plaintiff's case, or when the evidence of the plaintiff is such that different conclusions can reasonably be drawn therefrom. If there is any doubt, it is the duty of the court to let the case go to the jury." 9 Cal.Jur. 558, 559.

[4] The uniform rule which an appellate court should follow in disposing of an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit is, that the court must view the evidence in the light most favorable to appellant, must disregard all inconsistencies and draw only those inferences from the evidence which can reasonably be drawn which are favorable to appellant. Union Construction Co. v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 163 Cal. 298, 125 P. 242; Gregg v. Western Pac. R. Co., 193 Cal. 212, 223 P. 553; Ezmirlian v. Otto, 139 Cal.App. 486, 34 P.2d 774.

Defendant urges that plaintiff was contributively negligent as a matter of law in three respects: (1) In looking in the direction of the streetcar as she left the east curb of Broadway, but nevertheless proceeding even though the car must have then been in motion if it violated the traffic signal; (2) proceeding in front of the car when it was approaching after she was on the west-east track; (3) in stooping to retrieve her purse.

[5] In considering those contentions, the rule, as recently stated by this court in Anthony v. Hobbie, 25 Cal.2d 814, 818, 155 P.2d 826, 829, is applicable:

"But cases in which it can be said that the negligence of plaintiff contributes proximately to the accident as a matter of law are rare. The rule has been stated in various ways in a legion of cases, that contributory negligence is not established as a matter of law unless the only reasonable hypothesis is that such negligence exists; that reasonable or sensible men could have drawn that conclusion and none other; that where there are different inferences that may be drawn, one for and one against, the one against will be followed; and that before it can be held as a matter of law that contributory negligence exists, the evidence must point unerringly to that conclusion."

[6-11] Plaintiff was justified in leaving the east curb of Broadway inasmuch as the traffic signal was in her favor. Whether or not she should have observed that the streetcar had started forward at that time, and if it had, she was aware of the danger, was for the jury to decide. Moreover, a pedestrian while he is bound to exercise due care when crossing at an intersection in the crosswalk with the traffic signal in his favor, yet he has the right of way and may assume that the traffic signal will not be violated by traffic crossing his path, and the issue of his negligence is for the jury. See Lowell v. Harris, 24 Cal.App.2d 70, 74 P.2d 551; Welch v. Sink, 24 Cal. App.2d 231, 74 P.2d 832; King v. Unger, 25 Cal.App.2d 632, 78 P.2d 255; Salomon v. Meyer, 1 Cal.2d 11, 32 P.2d 631; Collom v. Bloch, 70 Cal.App. 33, 232 P. 486; Whitelaw v. McGilliard, 179 Cal. 349, 176 P. 679; Walker v. Mason, 109 Cal.App. 361, 293 P. 125; Schulman v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp., 44 Cal.App.2d 122, 111 P.2d 924; Ladas v. Johnson's B. & W. Taxicab Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 223, 110 P.2d 449; Sanker v. Humborg, 48 Cal.App.2d 203, 119 P.2d 431; Torrey v. Nelson, 51 Cal.App.2d 191, 124 P.2d 336; Reed v. Stroh, 54 Cal.App.2d 183, 128 P.2d 829; Connolly v. Zaft, 55 Cal.App.2d 383, 130 P.2d 752; Young v. Tassop, 47 Cal.App.2d 557, 118 P.2d 371; Lang v. McKinney Blueprint Paper Co., 91 Cal.App. 84, 266 P. 616; Pinello v. Taylor, 128 Cal.App. 508, 17 P.2d 1039; Nightingale v. Birnbaum, 11 Cal.App.2d 34, 52 P.2d 955; Gnesa v. San Francisco, 40 Cal. App.2d 640, 105 P.2d 376; Kuhn v. San Francisco, 13 Cal.App.2d 641, 57 P.2d 147. When a pedestrian is in or about the middle of the street he is crossing, and the traffic signal changes against him, he may assume that due care will be exercised by the released cross traffic as to pedestrians so trapped. Whether a mistake in judgment by a pedestrian when crossing a street, as to the speed and danger of an approaching vehicle constitutes contributory negligence, is a question for the jury. Lowell v. Harris, 24 Cal.App.2d 70, 84, 85, 74 P.2d 551; Welch v. Sink, 24 Cal.App.2d 231, 74 P.2d 832; Ladas v. Johnson's B. & W. Taxicab Co., 43 Cal.App.2d 223, 229, 110 P.2d 449; Sanker v. Humborg, 48 Cal. App.2d 203, 119 P.2d 431; Nightingale v. Birnbaum, 11 Cal.App.2d 34, 52 P.2d 955; Gallardo v. Luke, 33 Cal.App.2d 230, 91 P.2d 211. In the instant case whether the acts of plaintiff in leaving the curb to make the crossing, and her continuation after she was part way across, and the signal changed, and she saw the car approaching, were compatible with the conduct of a person of ordinary prudence, was for the jury to decide. She was at a busy intersection. There were automobiles behind her waiting to proceed across the course she had completed. When the signal changed she was confronted with the dilemma of whether it was wiser to retreat and run the risk of injury from the cars waiting to cross the path she had already traveled, being caught between two streams of traffic, or to proceed on across the street. She, as well as those accompanying her, chose the latter course. Her companions reached the west curb in safety. She was two feet past the tracks on which the car was approaching, and as a person of ordinary prudence, she could have concluded that she had reached a place of safety. Even though her judgment may have been faulty, that does not necessarily establish her negligence.

Defendants rely upon such cases as Gore v. Market Street Ry. Co., 4 Cal.2d 154, 48 P.2d 2; Anderson v. Market Street Ry. Co., 116 Cal.App. 282, 2 P.2d 529; and McHugh v. Market St. Ry. Co., 29 Cal. App.2d 737, 85 P.2d 467. Each case must be viewed according to its particular circumstances. In the cited cases, there was no obedience to a traffic signal by the pedestrian or disobedience by defendant as in the instant case. Nor is the instant case one in which the pedestrian blindly and without any care for her own safety walked into the path of an oncoming vehicle, the result of which must necessarily be disaster.

[12-17] Whether the act of plaintiff in stooping to retrieve her purse was contributory negligence should have been submitted to the jury. She testified that even though she stooped, she continued her forward progress, and being two feet or more past the west tracks, she might, as a person of ordinary prudence, have considered herself in a safe position, and she was very near to such a haven inasmuch as the west steps on the west front side of the car struck her hip. Under those circumstances it was a jury question whether the act of retrieving the purse was such as would be performed by a person of ordinary prudence. It could be reasoned that such act was an instinctive unthinking effort to preserve property which would be reasonable to expect of a reasonably prudent person having due regard for his safety. It is not a case of momentary forgetfulness which is not induced by some disturbing event, such as existed in Reynolds v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co., 162 Cal. 327, 122 P. 962, 39 L.R.A.,N.S., 896, Ann.Cas.1913D, 34; and Brett v. Frank & Co., 153 Cal. 267, 94 P. 1051. Rather, it was an instinctive reaction or act on sudden impulse which we are unable to say was out of character for a person of ordinary prudence. It is the rule that "Even forgetfulness of a known danger will not operate to prevent a recovery, for to forget is not negligence unless it shows a want of ordinary care. Generally the question is one for the jury." Neel v. Mannings, Inc., 19 Cal.2d 647, 656, 122 P.2d 576, 581. Moreover, there were disturbing factors, that is, the busy intersection, the change in traffic signals, the oncoming streetcar, the sudden dropping of the purse to the street. The situation presented is analogous to acts in emergencies. Defendant's negligence created a dangerous situation in which plaintiff chose to hurry across in front of the car. Her companion grasped her arm. In the process her purse fell to the ground. "Accordingly, where a situation requires an immediate choice between alternative courses of conduct, negligence may not be inferred from an unwise choice, if a reasonable man, under similar circumstances, would choose similarly. And under such circumstances one may be excused if he loses his presence of mind, momentarily forgets, errs in judgment, or omits cautionary measures which should otherwise have been taken, even though the effect of his conduct is to cause him to encounter the danger sought to be avoided. Whether a person in a position of imminent danger acted reasonably is a question of fact for the jury, but in determining the question, conduct must be viewed in the light of the confusion and excitement of the moment and not in view of the circumstances and surroundings of one not in danger." 19 Cal.Jur. 598. And the rule has been extended to cover rescue of property. Henshaw v. Belyea, 220 Cal. 458, 31 P.2d 348. The jury could have determined that defendant should have anticipated that pedestrians were in the crosswalk when the car jumped the signal and also that they would react to natural impulses. "The actor is bound to know the 'qualities and habits of human beings and animals and the qualities, characteristics and capacities of things and forces insofar as they are matters of common knowledge at the time and in the community.'" Mosley v. Arden Farms Co., 26 Cal.2d 217, 157 P.2d 372, 374. Hence, the jury could have decided that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the accident.

The judgment is reversed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, TRAYNOR, SCHAUER, and SPENCE, JJ., concurred.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 721

ZAKAESSIAN v. ZAKAESSIAN et al.

Civ. 12854.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 7, 1945.

Hearing Denied Nov. 5, 1945.

1. Trusts 🔑61(3)

If trustee of a resulting trust transfers the trust property to beneficiary or at beneficiary's direction, the resulting trust terminates.

2. Pleading 🔑254

Amended complaint insofar as it stated a cause of action to establish a resulting trust in favor of plaintiff was demurrable, where original complaint disclosed termination of the resulting trust by conveyance of trust property by trustee to plaintiff, and amended complaint merely omitted mention of such conveyance without explanation.

3. Deeds 🔑188

By alleging that he did not intend to vest title to realty in defendants' predecessor in interest, plaintiff alleged the nondelivery of deed which he allegedly executed without understanding the nature of the transaction, and stated a cause of action for cancellation of a void instrument. Civ.Code, § 3412.

4. Deeds 🔑188

Statement of the facts showing invalidity of deed constitutes a sufficient allegation of a cause of action under statute permitting an action to cancel an instrument which is void or voidable. Civ.Code, § 3412.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑37(4), 39(7), 96(2), 100(10)

A suit to set aside a void instrument is ordinarily governed by the four-year statute of limitations, but, where the gravamen of cause of action stated involves fraud or mistake, the three-year statute of limitations applies and the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until discovery of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4; § 343.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑37(4)

Where plaintiff alleged that, through ignorance of English language, he mistakenly issued a deed the existence of which he did not discover until the date on which he brought suit to cancel such deed, the basis of action was mistake and the three-year period of limitations after discovery of the mistake was applicable. Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

7. Limitation of actions ⚷182(2)

The three-year statute of limitations could not be relied on to sustain demurrer, where such statute was not pleaded. Code Civ.Proc. § 338, subd. 4.

8. Pleading ⚷205(2)

The defense of laches may be raised by general demurrer.

9. Pleading ⚷193(4)

Complaint seeking to set aside deed mistakenly issued by plaintiff through ignorance of the English language 16 years before commencement of action was not demurrable on ground of laches, where the only possible prejudice to defendants which might give rise to an estoppel appearing upon the face of the complaint other than mere lapse of time was the death of the grantee under whom defendants claimed.

10. Equity ⚷73

The death of a material witness is one factor in determining whether laches is present.

11. Appeal and error ⚷843(4)

Where reversal of judgment entered on order sustaining demurrer to amended complaint without leave to amend was necessitated by conclusion that second cause of action stated sufficient facts, it was unnecessary for appellate court to determine the effect to be given the demurrer to third cause of action containing stock complaint to quiet title.

12. Pleading ⚷204(2), 225(2)

Where one of the causes of action stated in amended complaint was sufficient as against general demurrer trial court abused its discretion in sustaining demurrer without leave to amend, regardless of the merits of the grounds for special demurrer.

13. Appeal and error ⚷1201(4)

Reversal of judgment entered on order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend necessitated by sufficiency of complaint as against general demurrer did not determine whether complaint was subject to special demurrer or preclude trial court from exercising its discretion to require clarification of any uncertainties in complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Peter J. Mullins, Judge.

Action by Dichran Zakaessian against Martha Zakaessian and another to establish a resulting trust in favor of plaintiff and to have plaintiff declared equitable owner of realty, to have a deed executed by plaintiff declared void as having been executed by mistake, and to quiet title to the realty. From a judgment entered on an order sustaining a demurrer to his second amended complaint without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded with directions.

Edmund J. Holl, Alan H. Critcher, and M. Anderson Thomas, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Samuel Vartan, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WARD, Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from a judgment entered on an order sustaining the demurrer to plaintiff's second amended complaint without leave to amend.

The second amended complaint was divided into three causes of action: First, the plaintiff alleged that on or about December 15, 1921, May and H. D. Saville and Amber H. and W. J. Chase conveyed a certain described piece of property, of which they were the owners, to Karkin Zakaessian for a consideration of $7,000, which was supplied solely by plaintiff, pursuant to an agreement between Karkin and plaintiff that title was to be taken in Karkin's name; that Karkin died intestate on January 22, 1941, and after due administration of his estate the property was distributed to the defendants in this action; that at no time had Karkin or the defendants in this action repudiated the trust in favor of plaintiff. Under the second cause of action the plaintiff alleged that on August 15, 1927, plaintiff was the owner of record of the property described in the first cause of action; that plaintiff is unable to read or write English and is able to understand only very little; that plaintiff believes he signed a deed which purported to convey the property to Karkin but that plaintiff did not understand the nature of this transaction and did not "intend to vest title" in Karkin and that no consideration was ever received for said deed; that said deed was recorded on August 15, 1927, but that plaintiff had no knowledge that record title to said property appeared to be in Karkin until the commencement of this action by the filing of the original complaint on October 26, 1943. The paragraphs relating to Karkin's death, succession of interest and non-repudiation of the trust found in the first cause of action are incorporated by reference into the second cause of action. Under the third cause of action the plaintiff set forth a stock complaint to quiet title to the property described in the first and second causes of action with no allegations of specific facts. Wherefore plaintiff prayed that he be declared the equitable owner of the property by reason of the first cause of action; that under the second cause of action the deed recorded August 15, 1927 be declared null and void, having been executed by mistake; and that defendants be required to set forth their claims to the described piece of property and that such claims be declared invalid under the third cause of action. The orginal complaint, called a complaint to declare a trust, contained all the foregoing facts except the allegation relating to plaintiff's difficulties with the English language and lack of understanding and intent concerning the deed of August 15, 1927, included one further transaction between Karkin and plaintiff whereby Karkin conveyed the property to plaintiff on or about September 12, 1924, which deed was recorded September 16, 1924, and alleged that the property was improved property which produced income and sought an accounting in addition to a decree that plaintiff was the owner of the property.

[1, 2] The defendants demurred on the grounds that the complaint did not contain facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that the first and second causes of action were barred by sections 337(1), 336(2), 339(1) and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The principal questions before the court on this appeal involve whether the alleged first and second causes of action state facts sufficient as against a general demurrer or the specific statutes of limitation pleaded. In the first cause of action plaintiff sought to have a resulting trust declared upon the property on the basis of a conveyance in 1921, for which he paid the purchase price. In the original complaint he alleged that legal title vested in himself in 1924. Consequently, plaintiff has at one time alleged the creation of a resulting trust and the termination thereof by the merger in plaintiff of the legal and equitable titles. Section 410, Com. (b) of the Restatement of the Law, Trusts, states the rule as follows: "If a trustee of a resulting trust transfers the trust property to the beneficiary or at his direction, the resulting trust terminates." 3 Scott on Trusts, sec. 410; See, also, Malinow v. Dorenbaum, 51 Cal.App.2d 645, 652, 125 P.2d 554 (hearing denied by the Supreme Court). This result is a necessary consequence of the vesting of both legal and equitable titles in the beneficiary, because there is no longer any purpose in keeping the trust relationship alive. The plaintiff cannot cure this essential defect in his cause of action upon this theory, once it has been disclosed, by omission of mention of the 1924 deed in subsequent statements of the same cause of action without explanation. Wennerholm v. Stanford Univ. Sch. of Med., 20 Cal.2d 713, 716, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358; Williamson v. Joyce, 137 Cal. 151, 153, 69 P. 980; Johnson v. Nolan, 105 Cal.App. 293, 294, 288 P. 78. Therefore the demurrer to the complaint insofar as it attacked the first cause of action was properly sustained.

[3, 4] The second cause of action seeks to set aside and cancel a deed which was issued by mistake. By the allegation that he did not intend to vest title in defendants' predecessor in interest, the plaintiff has alleged the non-delivery of the deed and therefore he is seeking to cancel an instrument which is void. Section 3412 of the Civil Code permits an action to cancel an instrument which is void or voidable and the statement of the facts constituting a deed's invalidity constitutes a sufficient allegation of a cause of action thereunder. Hart v. Church, 126 Cal. 471, 475, 58 P. 910, 59 P. 296, 77 Am.St.Rep. 195; Keele v. Clouser, 101 Cal.App. 500, 502, 281 P. 1073. Therefore the plaintiff has stated a good cause of action unless it is barred by one of the statutes of limitation pleaded or is subject to some defense which can be raised by demurrer.

[5-7] Ordinarily a suit to set aside and cancel a void instrument is governed by Sec. 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Moss v. Moss, 20 Cal.2d 640, 644, 128 P.2d 526, 141 A.L.R. 1422. However, when the gravamen of the cause of action stated involves fraud or a mistake, Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 338(4), is the statute of limitations applicable and the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the facts constituting the mistake. 4 Cal.Jur. 806. Here the plaintiff alleges that through ignorance of the English language he mistakenly issued a deed in August, 1927, the existence of which he did not discover until October 26, 1943, the date he brought suit. Clearly the basis of the action is a mistake and the three-year period after discovery, Code Civ.Proc., sec. 338(4), applies. This statute was not pleaded and therefore cannot be relied on in sustaining the demurrer.

[8] However, it is a well-settled rule of law that the defense of laches can be raised by a general demurrer. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 250, 81 P. 516; Arnold v. Universal Oil Land Co., 45 Cal.App.2d 522, 530, 114 P.2d 408. It remains to be determined if the statement of facts constituting this cause of action shows such delay in the assertion of plaintiff's rights that the defense of laches can be said to exist as a matter of law. The most recent expression of the Supreme Court on the matter of laches is in Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., 23 Cal.2d 719, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. At page 736 of 23 Cal.2d, at page 681 of 146 P.2d, the court says: "The policy of this state with respect to lapse of time is embodied in statutes applicable to both legal and equitable actions, and mere lapse of time, other than that prescribed by such statutes, does not bar relief. * * * The defense of stale claims is nothing more than a particular application of the doctrine of laches and is based on estoppel. * * * Where, for example, an action is commenced many years after its accrual, the death of witnesses or destruction of evidence, presumed as well as actual, may prejudice the defendant and justify denial of relief because of staleness of the claim. * * * Even the authorities which refer to staleness of claims as a distinct concept recognize that lapse of time is of no consequence in the absence of a showing of any act by the defendant in denial of the plaintiff's rights which would have required affirmative action by the plaintiff." Although this statement was made in reference to a claimed distinction between laches and the defense of stale claims, the court held that a complaint for declaratory relief filed after 1940 based upon allegedly invalid corporation by-laws passed in 1864, stated a cause of action. The court stated that inasmuch as it did not affirmatively appear from the face of the complaint that any of plaintiffs' rights as members had been abridged in fact, any cause of action which the plaintiffs might have as a result of the by-laws had not yet accrued and consequently neither the statute of limitations could bar the action, nor could the defense of laches or stale claims be asserted. No prejudice to defendants other than mere lapse of time was shown on the face of the complaint and the cause of action had not yet accrued.

[9, 10] The only possible prejudice to the defendants which might give rise to an estoppel in the set of facts being considered now, which appears from the face of the complaint other than that present in mere lapse of time, is presented in the death of Karkin Zakaessian, the predecessor in interest of defendants and the other party to the misunderstood transaction. The earlier cases in California, where laches has been held to appear on the face of the complaint and wherein there is no discussion of the necessity that prejudice to the defendant appear on the face of the complaint, involve much greater periods of time than that here shown, generally more than half of a normal lifetime (Garrity v. Miller, 204 Cal. 454, 268 P. 622 (55 years); Kleinclaus v. Dutard, supra (35 years); Lichtenberg v. Burdell, 101 Cal.App. 20, 47, 281 P. 518 (25 years); Lindley v. Hinch, 57 Cal.App.2d 717, 720, 135 P.2d 421 (40 years), or a great increase in value in the property as shown on the face of the complaint (Livermore v. Beal, 18 Cal.App.2d 535, 545, 64 P.2d 987; Arnold v. Universal Oil Land Co., supra, 45 Cal.App.2d at page 534, 114 P.2d 408), even though such increase in value is sometimes not specifically mentioned in the opinion. Here there is a delay of 16 years without any increase in value being shown on the face of the complaint. The cases cited in the briefs relating to actions for rescission and restoration to the status quo have no application in their discussion of laches to an action such as the one before us because of the code section requiring promptness in such actions. If the defendants in their answer and proof show a great increase in value and improvements to the property, plus possession for the elapsed 16 years, the plaintiff's cause may be barred by laches, but it can not be said as a matter of law on the basis of the facts now before us that there is such prejudice to defendants shown on the face of this complaint as to permit the assertion of that defense by general demurrer. The death of a material witness is one factor in determining whether laches is present. Austin v. Hallmark Oil Co., 21 Cal.2d 718, 735, 134 P.2d 777; Newport v. Hatton, 195 Cal. 132, 148, 231 P. 987. For the foregoing reasons the demurrer to the complaint here under consideration should not have been sustained on the ground that laches appeared from the face of the complaint.

The only case which appears to be at variance with the views herein expressed is Redpath v. Aagaard, 217 Cal. 63, at page 67, 16 P.2d 998, at page 999, wherein the court states inter alia in the last paragraph of the decision that a demurrer was properly sustained to a complaint on the ground of laches wherein the only prejudice to defendants which appeared from the face of the complaint was a delay of 16 years. However, it should be noted that the statute of limitations was properly pleaded and was an alternative and the main ground for sustaining the demurrer. In the light of the more recent statements of the Supreme Court, this case should be taken to stand on the statute of limitations ground and not on the dicta concerning laches.

Upon the oral argument appellant was asked to present to the court what amendments he would make to the second amended complaint if he were given leave to amend. A proposed amendment was submitted to this court. In view of the conclusion reached herein it is not necessary to consider at this time the merits of the proposed amendments.

[11] Counsel have argued the effect to be given the demurrer to the third cause of action containing the stock complaint to quiet title. In view of the reversal necessitated by the conclusion that the second cause of action states sufficient facts it is unnecessary to decide this point. See Bates v. Daley's, Incorporated, 5 Cal.App.2d 95, 104, 42 P.2d 706 and Earl v. Lofquist, 135 Cal.App. 373, 379, 380, 27 P.2d 416.

[12, 13] Certain grounds of special demurrer to the first and second causes of action were also urged. However, in view of the conclusions reached herein, it is unnecessary to consider the merits of the grounds for special demurrer because it is well settled that it is an abuse of discretion to sustain such demurrers without leave to amend. Wennerholm v. Stanford Univ. Sch. of Med., supra, 20 Cal.2d at page 720, 128 P.2d 522, 141 A.L.R. 1358; Maguire v. Hibernia S. & L. Soc., supra, 23 Cal.2d at page 737, 146 P.2d 673, 151 A.L.R. 1062. It is not here decided that the complaint may not be subject to special demurrer, and the trial court may in its discretion require the clarification of any uncertainties or ambiguities.

The judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded to the trial court with directions to enter an order overruling the demurrer of the defendants to the complaint as a whole.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

Hearing denied; SCHAUER, J., dissenting.

70 Cal.App.2d 731

HOWARD v. HOWARD. *

Civ. 12891.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 12, 1945.

1. Divorce 🔑331

An order of superior court, denying motion for allowance of attorney's fees and costs incurred by moving party in defending appeal from judgment establishing Nevada court's divorce and alimony decree as a judgment in California, was invalid.

2. Divorce 🔑331

An order, merely stating that superior court concluded as matter of law that counsel fees and costs could not be allowed divorced wife in aid of her defense of appeal from judgment establishing as judgment in California, a Nevada court's decree granting her divorce and alimony, without stating any facts in addition to those on which superior court based its previous invalid order denying motion for such fees and costs, was void as attempt to cure judicial error by merely stating reasons on which later order was based.

3. Divorce 🔑331

Though superior court's order, amending its order denying divorced wife's motion for attorney's fees and costs, incurred in defending appeal from judgment establishing as judgment, in California, a Nevada court's decree granting her divorce and alimony, by stating reasons for refusal of such allowance without stating any additional facts, was void, movant had right to appeal therefrom, but District Court of Appeal will dismiss appeal of its own motion for want of jurisdiction.

---

* Subsequent opinion 163 P.2d 439.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; I. L. Harris, Judge.

Action by Anita Z. Howard against Lindsay C. Howard to establish as a judgment in California a decree of a Nevada district court granting plaintiff a divorce from defendant, alimony, and support for the parties' minor children, in which defendant filed a cross-complaint. From an order amending an order denying plaintiff's motion for allowance of counsel fees and costs incurred in defense of defendant's appeal from a judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals.

Appeal dismissed.

Prior opinion 157 P.2d 874.

Supplemental opinion, 163 P.2d 439.

Francis W. Murphy, Torregano & Stark, Remington Low, and Charles M. Stark, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Walter McGovern, of San Francisco, and Neil S. McCarthy, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the plaintiff from an order refusing to allow her moneys to pay alleged attorney fees and costs in defending an appeal, which the defendant has taken from a judgment establishing as a judgment in this state a decree rendered by the Second Judicial District Court of the County of Washoe in the State of Nevada in an action brought by the plaintiff to obtain a decree of divorce. The said California decree was rendered March 3, 1944. Later the defendant appealed. Thereafter the plaintiff filed a notice of motion. In that notice she alleged she would ask an order of court allowing her $5000 as counsel fees and $500 as and for costs. She also alleged she would base her motion on "all the records and files in the above entitled action, together with the affidavit of plaintiff attached hereto, points and authorities attached hereto and further affidavits or evidence as may be introduced at the time of the hearing of said motion." In the said affidavit so attached to said notice she alleged among other things that she had no moneys, that she desired to defend said appeal, that the defendant had a personal fortune of a value in excess of $3,000,000 and an annual income in excess of $150,000 and that since the first day of December 1941 she had been dependent upon relatives for the maintenance of herself and her children and had been unable to pay any moneys to her attorneys. Said documents were served on the defendant and he served and filed an affidavit in which he alleged that the plaintiff was not without moneys to pay such alleged costs, that their children were not supported by plaintiff's relatives, that defendant had supported said children from the date they were born, that of the costs thereof $15,920 was paid by defendant's father, C. S. Howard, and the balance $27,882.38 was paid by the defendant, that said C. S. Howard was by an order of court appointed guardian of said children on January 20, 1944, duly qualified and has since acted as such guardian, that the children are in boarding schools; that plaintiff never at any time supported, educated or maintained said children; that $5000 is not a reasonable sum to pay plaintiff's attorneys and that $500 is not a reasonable sum to pay her costs. Defendant denied he had a personal fortune of $3,000,000 or that he had an annual income in excess of $150,000 and alleged that his income was not in excess of $20,000.

On those affidavits the motion was heard. The trial court, on October 17, 1944, made an order "that the motion of the above named plaintiff and cross-defendant, Anita Z. Howard, for attorney fees and costs heretofore filed herein be and the same is hereby denied." From that order no appeal was taken. On October 27, 1944, the plaintiff served and filed a notice of motion to amend said order. The notice recited said motion would be based on "the motion for an allowance of attorneys' fees and costs heretofore made, the affidavits in support thereof, the order denying the same, this motion, the affidavit in support thereof, plaintiff and cross-defendant's points and authorities in support of said motion, and the records and files of said action." On the same date Mr. Charles M. Stark, one of plaintiff's attorneys, made an "affidavit in support of motion" which we assume is the affidavit above mentioned in that notice. The only allegation of new matter contained in said affidavit was as follows: "That in order to properly present a record to said appellate court, said order denying said motion for attorneys' fees and costs properly should set forth the grounds upon which the court arrived at its conclusion that said motion should be denied." Later the trial court, on December 6, 1944, entered an order reciting no new facts but merely providing: "Said court concludes as a matter of law that counsel fees and costs in such a case as that at bar can, under no circumstances be allowed to plaintiff and cross-defendant in aid of her defense of said appeal and that counsel fees and costs are not legally allowable under the laws of the State of California in the defense of an appeal from a judgment of the court establishing as a foreign judgment the judgment of a sister state for a divorce and the payment of alimony and support for minor children as same was by said sister state decreed. For that reason, the court has not considered the application of plaintiff and cross-defendant for said fees insofar as her need therefor as a matter of fact is concerned but has hereby passed upon the allowability thereof under any circumstances as a matter of law."

[1, 2] From that order this appeal was taken. The defendant contends the order appealed from in effect impeached the order dated October 17, 1944, and was invalid. We think the latter order was invalid. The order dated October 17, 1944, was made in response to a written application therefor. From that order no appeal was taken. On December 6, 1944, the trial court made the order appealed from which in effect amends the order dated October 17, 1944. The order last mentioned was based on a written application therefor. That written application set forth no additional facts than were set forth in the preceding application. The latter order set forth no additional facts but it purported to set forth the reasons on which it was based. That was an attempt to cure judicial error and such procedure was not permissible. Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 113, 114, 59 P.2d 988; Phillips v. Trusheim, 25 Cal.2d 913, 156 P.2d 25. In that case, 25 Cal.2d at page 916, 156 P.2d at page 27, the court said:

" 'The situation here more closely resembles the cases of Egan v. Egan, supra (90 Cal. 15, 27 P. 22); Coombs v. Hibberd, 43 Cal. 452, and Owen v. Crocker-Huffman Land & Water Co., 38 Cal.App. 649, 177 P. 299, in all of which it was held that, all of the matters before the court at the time of the making of the second order having been considered by it at the time of the making the first order, it cannot, simply because upon a reexamination of the same matters it has reached a different conclusion, give effect to the second determination of the same issue by modifying or annulling the original order or judgment.' Stevens v. Superior Court, supra; see, also, Vale v. Maryland Casualty Co., 101 Cal.App. 599, 281 P. 1058.

"In the present case, Judge Thompson, before whom the appellants' action was pending determined, it must be assumed, that he had the power to enter judgment against Trusheim and his decision was correct. Trusheim's motion was heard by Judge Turrentine of the same court, who ruled that there was no jurisdiction to enter the judgment and made the order now under review. His action was clearly an attempt to correct a determination which, in his opinion, was rendered by reason of judicial error. There is no showing whatever of judicial inadvertence but the ruling on the motion was made upon the ground that the judgment had been given in disregard of section 581a of the Code of Civil Procedure. Moreover, as in the Stevens case, supra, it is neither asserted nor does it appear that, in ruling upon Trusheim's motion, Judge Turrentine had before him any matters not considered by Judge Thompson when he rendered judgment for the appellants."

[3] In Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, commencing on page 524, 78 P. 11, at page 12, the court said: "The decisions of this court are numerous and uniform to the effect that a judgment or order once regularly entered can be reviewed and set aside only in the modes prescribed by statute. If they have been entered prematurely or by inadvertence, they may be set aside on a proper showing (Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Deuprey, 66 Cal. 168, 170, 4 P. 1173, and cases cited), and if the order as entered is not the order as made, the minutes may be corrected so as to make them speak the truth (Garoutte v. Haley [104 Cal. 497, 38 P.194], and cases cited), but, subject to these exceptions, the order is reviewable only on appeal, and, the decision of the trial court having been once made after regular submission of the motion, its power is exhausted. It is functus officio. Odd Fellows' Sav. Bank v. Deuprey [66 Cal. 168, 170, 4 P. 1173]; Dorland v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 484, 6 P. 135; Lang v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. [491], 492, 12 P. 306 [416]; Carpenter v. Superior Court, 75 Cal. [596], 597, 19 P. 174; Belser v. Hoffschneider, 104 Cal. 455, 38 P. 312." It is clear, therefore, that the order dated December 6, 1944, was void. Notwithstanding that fact the plaintiff had the right to appeal. Ivory v. Superior Court, 12 Cal.2d 455, 85 P.2d 894. However, having appealed and the record being presented to us showing as it does an appeal from a void order, this court has no jurisdiction and will of its own motion dismiss the appeal. 2 Cal.Jur. 746, Appeal and Error, sec. 434; Bienenfeld v. Fresno Milling Co., 82 Cal. 425, 22 P. 1113; Pedlar v. Stroud, 116 Cal. 461, 463, 48 P. 371.

The appeal of the plaintiff is dismissed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 811

PACIFIC STATES SAVINGS & LOAN CO. v. MORTIMER, Building and Loan Com'r.

Civ. 12994.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 20, 1945.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑801(1)

District Court of Appeal could not determine on notice of appeal alone, and in absence of any other parts of the record on appeal, that an appeal was frivolous by assuming upon respondent's statement that only issue that would be tendered on appeal was one which respondent anticipated.

2. Appeal and error 🔑801(4)

Where a consideration of a motion to dismiss an appeal on ground that it is frivolous requires an examination of the appeal on its merits, the motion will be denied.

3. Appeal and error 🔑786

An appeal may be dismissed where mere examination of judgment roll demonstrates that appeal is frivolous.

4. Appeal and error 🔑91(9)

Order confirming sales of parcels of real property owned by building and loan association by commissioner in liquidation of association was an appealable order on theory that it was an order for doing of an act against association which would otherwise become final and which would deprive association of a substantial property right. Code Civ.Proc. § 963.

5. Appeal and error 🔑76(1)

A judgment conclusive of any question in controversy between parties is a "final judgment" from which an appeal is authorized. Code. Civ.Proc. § 963.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Final Judgment".

6. Appeal and error 🔑138

The word "party", as used in statute providing that any party aggrieved may appeal, includes any person who is a party to the record. Code Civ.Proc. § 938.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Party".

7. Appeal and error 🔑138

One may become "party to the record", so as to be entitled to appeal, by an order to show cause which brings him into the proceedings and enables the court to make an order adverse to him. Code Civ.Proc. § 938.

8. Appeal and error 🔑143

Where order to show cause was served on building and loan association pursuant to statute authorizing sale of property in liquidation only after a hearing "on such notice as the court shall prescribe", and association appeared and contested the order for a sale, association became a "party to the record" and entitled to appeal from the subsequent order. Code Civ.Proc. § 938; Gen.Laws 1937, No. 986.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Party to the Record".

9. Appeal and error 🔑357(2)

Where appellant and trial judge assumed that statute giving members of Legislature right to a continuance in pending proceeding was applicable to extend time for serving notices of appeal in a cause where appellant's counsel was attending the Legislature, and respondent did not question trial judge's power to grant continuance until filing date fixed in order had passed, reviewing court was authorized to relieve appellant from default in failing to file notices of appeal within time required by the new rule, especially where notices in 20 of the 62 cases in which appeal was taken were timely filed, and respondent had not been prejudiced by delay in filing other notices. Code Civ. Proc. § 1054; Rules on Appeal, rule 53.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Elmer E. Robinson, Judge.

◆

Special proceedings wherein the Pacific States Saving & Loan Company appeared in response to several orders to show cause why the several sales of 62 parcels of real property owned by the corporation by Frank C. Mortimer, as Building and Loan Commissioner, serving as commissioner in liquidation of the affairs of the corporation, should not be approved. From separate orders authorizing the commissioner in liquidation of the affairs of the corporation to sell the parcels of real property, the corporation appeals. On motion by Frank C. Mortimer, as Building and Loan Commissioner, to dismiss the appeals in the present and in the 61 other related cases, and on corporation's motion to be released from default.

Appellant ordered relieved from alleged default, and motion to dismiss the several appeals denied.

Gardiner Johnson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and John J. Dailey, Clarence A. Linn, and Lenore D. Underwood, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Respondent moves to dismiss the appeals in this and in sixty-one other related cases from separate orders of the superior court authorizing the commissioner in liquidation of the affairs of the corporation to sell sixty-two parcels of real property owned by the corporation. The appeals have been taken by the corporation as an interested party appearing in response to the several orders to show cause why the several sales should not be approved. Since the questions presented on this motion are identical in each of the sixty-two cases the reasons given for our judgment is made equally applicable to all.

[1-3] It is argued that the appeal is frivolous because the respondent is alone charged with the duty of determining whether to liquidate, and, having sold under that authority, and the sale having been approved by the superior court, the appeal merely puts in issue the question of authority heretofore determined in Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Hise, 25 Cal.2d 822, 155 P.2d 809. But we cannot determine on the notice of appeal alone, and in the absence of any other parts of the record on appeal, that an appeal is frivolous by assuming upon the statement of respondent that the only issue that will be tendered on the appeal is the one which respondent anticipates. It has been held that where a consideration of a motion to dismiss an appeal on this ground requires an examination of the appeal on its merits the motion will be denied. Christin v. Story, 211 Cal. 381, 295 P. 515; In re Estate of Sayles, 212 Cal. 437, 298 P. 971; Kelso v. Ulrich, 66 Cal.App.2d 873, 153 P.2d 440. The exception to this rule that an appeal may be dismissed where a mere examination of the judgment roll demonstrates that the appeal is frivolous, Sonoma Magnesite Co. v. National, Etc., Corporation, 189 Cal. 433, 208 P. 962, is not applicable here because no part of the judgment roll is before us.

[4, 5] Respondent states that the order of confirmation is not an appealable order, but does not argue the point. It would seem that such an order, like one made during a receivership, would be appealable on the theory that it is an order for the doing of an act by or against the appellant which would otherwise become final and which would deprive appellant of a substantial property right. Colma Vegetable Ass'n v. Superior Court, 75 Cal.App. 91, 95, 242 P. 82; Fish v. Fish, 216 Cal. 14, 16, 13 P.2d 375. See also Grant v. Superior Court, 106 Cal. 324, 39 P. 604; Grant v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 P. 872; City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 134 Cal. 121, 66 P. 198; Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 753, 96 P. 803. In the Colma Vegetable Ass'n case the court pointed out that section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorized an appeal from a final judgment—not from the final judgment; that a judgment conclusive of any question in controversy between the parties is "final" as to that question, Sharon v. Sharon, 67 Cal. 185, 196, 7 P. 456, 635, 8 P. 709; and that, if the judgment or order requires "the doing of some act by or against the aggrieved party" [75 Cal.App. 91, 242 P. 83], it is final as to that controversy and hence appealable. In the case of Fish v. Fish, supra, the clause just quoted was cited with approval in a holding that an order made in a receivership determining the interest of the parties to the main litigation was appealable as an "act by or against" the aggrieved party.

[6-8] Respondent argues that the appellant is not a proper party to the proceeding and hence has no right to appeal from the order. He cites Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. v. Hise, 25 Cal.2d 822, 155 P.2d 809, and Trede v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 630, 134 P.2d 745. Neither case is in point. Section 938 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "any party aggrieved may appeal." The word "party" includes any person who is a "party to the record." Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 507, 77 P. 1109, 1112, 103 Am.St.Rep. 102. One may become a "party to the record" by an order to show cause which brings him into the proceeding and enables the court to make an order adverse to him. Anglo-Californian Bank v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 753, 756, 96 P. 803. Section 13.16 of the Building and Loan Association Act, Deering's General Laws Act No. 986, authorizes the sale of property in liquidation only after a hearing "on such notice as the court shall prescribe." Here an order to show cause was served on appellant pursuant to this section; it appeared and contested the order for a sale, and thereby became a party entitled to appeal from the subsequent order.

The remaining ground urged by respondent for a dismissal of the appeal relates to the failure of appellant to comply with the Rules on Appeal governing the preparation of the transcript. Appellant did not serve upon the respondent its request filed with the county clerk to prepare a transcript, and in forty-two of the sixty-two cases such request was not filed within the time prescribed in the Rules on Appeal.

Appellant makes two replies: First, that all the requests for the preparation of transcripts were either delivered to counsel for respondent or were made available to him before the time for filing them had expired and that counsel for respondent undertook to accommodate appellant's counsel in relation to the proceedings on appeal while the latter was engaged in his duties at Sacramento as a member of the legislature. From this it is argued that since counsel for respondent had notice of the time and place of filing thereof in due time and made no objection to the manner in which they were received the requirement of "service" upon him has been waived.

[9] Secondly, appellant argues that the notices were in fact served within due time. The argument rests upon these facts: counsel for appellant was a member of the state Legislature which was at the time in regular session at Sacramento. Before expiration of the time within which these notices should have been filed the judge of the superior court in San Francisco in which the proceedings were pending, upon application duly made by counsel for appellant, entered an order directing that "all hearings and other proceedings in the above-entitled action and/or proceeding be continued until thirty (30) days after final adjournment of the Fifty-Sixth Session of the California Legislature." The order was made pursuant to section 1054 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But respondent argues that the section is not applicable because it permits an extension of time when an act is to be done "as provided in this code" whereas the time for filing the notices here involved is fixed in the Rules on Appeal. The argument rests upon a very narrow interpretation of the code section. When it was enacted, and during its frequent amendments, the procedure for the preparation of a record on appeal in civil cases was prescribed in the same code and the new rules which became effective in 1943 correlated and unified the various steps of procedure found in the former code sections such as § 953a et seq. Whether the right given to a member of the legislature under section 1054 of a continuance in pending proceedings was intended to cover those acts which were thereafter covered by the Rules on Appeal has not been determined by any authority cited to us and we do not deem it necessary to decide it here, because if respondent correctly interprets the section it is such a case as that contemplated by Rule 53 where the reviewing court is authorized to relieve a party from default in failing to comply with the new rules. Here the appellant and the trial judge assumed that the code section was applicable and acted accordingly. The respondent did not question the power of the court to grant the continuance until the filing date fixed in the order of court had passed. Of the sixty-two cases in which an appeal was taken, the notices in twenty were filed within the time fixed in the rules. As to the remaining forty-two, respondent states that they were filed "from fourteen to seventeen days" late. This is not a serious default as each appeal is taken separately and none have been consolidated for hearing. It may be assumed that many of the legal questions to be presented in the twenty perfected appeals would be determinative of those following. Assuming that appellant is in default in this respect the respondent has not shown any prejudice to him by reason of the short delay.

Ordered that appellant is hereby relieved from the alleged default on condition that all transcripts on appeal be filed herein without further delay. The motions to dismiss the several appeals are denied.

GOODELL, J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 755

FRENCH v. FRENCH.

Civ. 3404.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 14, 1945.

1. Contracts 🔑147(2)

Intention of the parties must be ascertained, if possible, from language of instruments constituting the contract, and when so ascertained it should be given effect.

2. Husband and wife 🔑31(4)

Where prenuptial agreement provided that husband should execute irrevocable will creating in wife a life estate in certain property the remainder of which was to be left to husband's son by prior marriage, and contained additional provision conditioning vesting of life estate in wife upon parties not being divorced or separated because of marital difficulties at time of husband's demise, subsequent provision would not be disregarded as repugnant to first provision giving wife a life estate, but would be construed as creating a condition subsequent whereby wife's right to life estate might be lost before vesting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Ann K. French against Leland Wesley French, as executor of the estate of C. W. French, also known as Charlie Wesley French, deceased, for a declaration that defendant held in trust for plaintiff a life estate in certain real property. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendant appeals.

Reversed.

William K. Young, of Los Angeles, and Glenn E. Tinder, of Bishop, for appellant.

Jess G. Sutliff, of Independence, for respondent.

MARKS, Justice.

This is an action brought by the widow of C. W. French against the executor of his estate to declare that defendant held in trust for her a life estate in certain real property in Inyo County.

Plaintiff and C. W. French were married in Reno, Nevada, on December 18, 1938. They separated on July 22, 1939, and did not thereafter live together. Mr. French died on February 18, 1943. He had one son, Leland Wesley French, the issue of a former marriage.

On December 17, 1938, plaintiff and C. W. French entered into a prenuptial agreement the provisions of which form the basis of this action. In it the prospective marriage is given as the reason for the contract. The agreement contained the following pertinent provisions:

"* * * the said first party (C. W. French) does hereby promise and agree to and with second party (Mrs. French) that he will immediately upon the solemnization of said proposed marriage make and execute in the manner and form prescribed by law, a last will and testament, under and by virtue of which document the said real property shall be disposed of in the following manner, to wit: The right to the use, occupancy and control of the same and the rents, issues and profits thereof for and during the term of the natural life of the second party, shall be vested in the second party * * * and that title in fee simple thereto, subject to such liens or encumbrances as may have been placed thereon by the first party, shall immediately vest in those who may be designated by the last will and testament or by other instrument duly executed by first party; provided, however, that should the second party at any time subsequent to the demise of the first party abandon said real property or permit the same to become dilapidated or to become substantially depreciated in value because of lack of repair or lack of proper attention, then and in that event all rights of the second party in and to the same and in and to the rents, issues and profits therefrom shall immediately cease and determine, as hereinbefore provided. * * * (if) at the time of the demise of the first party the said first party and second party be divorced or separated or living separate and apart each from the other because of marital difficulties, misunderstandings or disagreements, then and in that event and in either of said events this agreement shall be absolutely null and void and of no force and/or effect whatsoever with respect to any rights or alleged rights of the second party in and to said real estate hereinbefore described."

It was also provided that the will to be executed should be irrevocable and if French failed to make it the contract might be used for "the definition or declaration of the rights of the second party in and to the real estate." No such will was made or at least none was found when he died.

The trial court construed the provisions of the contract as repugnant and gave effect to the first, that is, the provision to make an irrevocable will, giving plaintiff a life estate in the property (Henne v. Summers, 16 Cal.App. 67, 116 P. 86. See Civ.Code, Secs. 1636 to 1654 incl.), and disregarded the subsequent provisions specifying conditions under which the life estate would be forfeited or the right to it terminated.

[1] It is a fundamental rule of construction of contracts that the intention of the parties must be ascertained, if possible, from the language of the instruments and when so ascertained should be given effect. Universal Sales Corporation v. California, etc., Mfg. Co., 20 Cal.2d 751, 128 P.2d 665; Schrank v. Sterling Products Co., 33 Cal.App.2d 107, 91 P.2d 143; Hamilton v. Ferguson, 26 Cal.App.2d 390, 79 P.2d 427; Turner v. Cook, 117 Cal.App. 399, 4 P.2d 182.

[2] We think the intention of the parties clear from the terms of the contract. They intended to provide towards the support of Mrs. French by creating in her a life estate in the property and also to provide for the son of Mr. French. However, the life estate of Mrs. French was not to be absolute but might be terminated on the happening of at least one of two conditions. The first condition set forth in the contract was intended to arise, if at all, after the death of Mr. French. If Mrs. French abandoned the property or suffered it to become dilapidated or depreciated in value because of lack of repair, her life estate was to be terminated. Second, the vesting of the life estate was conditioned upon the parties not being divorced or "separated or living separate and apart each from the other because of marital difficulties, misunderstandings or disagreements * * *" Thus it appears rather clearly that it was the intention of the parties to create conditions subsequent whereby the life estate of Mrs. French might be terminated after vesting, or the right to it might be lost before vesting. As the parties had separated and were living separate and apart from each other at the time of the death of Mr. French, it would seem that Mrs. French had lost the right to her life estate unless some legal reason can be found to suspend this condition of the contract. The present record fails to show any such reason.

Plaintiff introduced in evidence a certified copy of a complaint for separate maintenance filed by Mrs. French against Mr. French on August 13, 1940. It was alleged that Mrs. French left Mr. French because of his cruel treatment of her. No other part of the record in that case is before us and the balance of the record here is silent on the question of the reason for the separation.

Plaintiff argues that she was compelled to leave Mr. French because of his cruel and inhumane treatment of her; that it would be inequitable and unjust to deprive her of her life estate because of the separation; that to do so would permit the devisees of Mr. French to profit from his wrongs which prevented plaintiff from performing under the contract. In support of this argument she cites the cases of Barnes v. Barnes, 110 Cal. 418, 42 P. 904; Schneppe v. Schneppe, 124 Md. 330, 92 A. 891, Ann.Cas.1916D, 988; and Jackson v. Jackson, 222 Ill. 46, 78 N.E. 19, 6 L.R.A.,N.S., 785.

We cannot pass on the question under the present state of the record. If we should assume, without holding, that these arguments of plaintiff are legally sound and that defendant may not urge the voiding of the contract because of the separation if it was caused by the misconduct of Mr. French, there is no sufficient evidence in the record to support the conclusion that the cruelty of Mr. French drove plaintiff from the family domicile. Plaintiff states in her brief that the "matter was judicially decided in favor of respondent." If in so stating she referred to a final judgment in the separate maintenance action there is nothing in the record to indicate how that case was decided. There is no evidence in the record on the question of the cause of the separation. If the misconduct of defendant be finally held to be sufficient to suspend the provisions of the contract providing for the voiding of its provisions because of the separation of the parties, that matter must be left to future determination upon competent evidence produced at another trial. Under the present state of the record we need express no opinion on the legal sufficiency of the argument.

The judgment is reversed.

GRIFFIN, Acting P. J., concurs.

70 Cal.App.2d 776

FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK v. ABRAHAM et al.

Civ. 12797.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 19, 1945.

1. Trial 🔑397(1)

Where whole evidence supporting defendant's defense of estoppel depended upon oral testimony of particular witness and to determine that issue it was incumbent upon trial court to rule upon truth of such testimony, failure of court to so rule was error.

2. Evidence 🔑594

The uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness cannot be arbitrarily disregarded.

3. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)

Where trial court did not find that uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of particular witness was false, District Court of Appeal would assume that it was true.

4. Attorney and client 🔑101(2)

Attorneys for plaintiff and for defendant, without their clients' consent, did not have statutory authority to make an agreement, binding upon respective clients, that any judgment acquired would not be enforced against defendant in exchange for information which would permit a greater recovery against codefendants. Code Civ. Proc. § 283.

5. Attorney and client 🔑63

The rules governing the attorney-client relation are founded on the general rules governing the relation of principal and agent. Code Civ.Proc. § 283.

6. Attorney and client 🔑103

The rule that, notwithstanding lack of express or apparent authority in agent, his act is binding on principal if principal ratifies act and accepts benefits thereof applies to attorney-client relation. Code Civ. Proc. § 283.

7. Attorney and client 🔑104

Where plaintiff was an employee in office of attorney and acted merely as a nominal plaintiff for purpose of suit and acted upon attorney's agreement with defendant's counsel not to press collection of any judgment against such defendant in exchange for information as to property of codefendants by amending complaint and levying an attachment upon property disclosed, was charged with knowledge of agreement and could not contend that attorney, rather than plaintiff, accepted benefits. Code Civ.Proc. § 283.

8. Principal and agent 🔑177(3)

Where purchaser of judgment used employee in office of its attorney as a nominal plaintiff in action against indemnity company, which had posted an undertaking for release of an attachment made during course of original action, nominal plaintiff's knowledge of agreement between original judgment creditor and one of the judgment debtors under which judgment was not to be enforced against such judgment debtor because of information furnished concerning property of other judgment debtors was assumed to be that of her principal and she was bound thereby.

9. Estoppel 🔑92(1)

Where plaintiff, by reason of its liability on undertaking to release attachment against defendant in a prior litigation, and with knowledge of judgment creditor's agreement not to collect judgment from defendant in consideration for information which had enabled judgment creditor to attach property of a codefendant in such action, upon an outlay of less than $6,000 and over defendant's objection, purchased judgment and sued indemnity company on its undertaking to release attachment against such codefendant, recovering over $9,000, plaintiff was estopped to repudiate agreement in a subsequent action on defendant's indemnity contract to recover from defendant amount of plaintiff's attorney's fees and expenses incident to suit against indemnity company.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Robert McWilliams, Judge.

Action by the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York against N. Abraham, sometimes known as Nathan Abraham, and another, to recover attorney's fees and expenditures incidental to an indemnity agreement executed by defendants with plaintiff for the release of an attachment against named defendant. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal.

Reversed.

A. B. Bianchi, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff sued to recover attorney's fees and expenditures incidental to an indemnity agreement executed by defendants with plaintiff for the release of an attachment against N. Abraham in another action then pending against that defendant. The cause was tried to the court without a jury upon a stipulation of facts and the testimony of one witness. Plaintiff had judgment for the full amount prayed for.

In the year 1926 the defendant N. Abraham entered into a joint venture with Harry and Lou Silberman who were engaged in the scrap metal business under the corporate name of San Francisco Iron & Metal Company. The new venture became indebted to Goodyear Redwood Lumber Company in the sum of $4909.61. In December 1927 the partnership dissolved; its assets were transferred to the San Francisco Iron & Metal Company which assumed the indebtedness of the partnership including the claim of the lumber company. The Silbermans disputed this claim, asserting, on the basis of weighers' receipts, that they had been overcharged approximately one-half the amount of the claim. In 1929 the lumber company represented by attorney Hatch assigned the claim to Miss V. Berges who was a secretary in the attorney's office and who, through her attorney, filed suit on the claim against N. Abraham, the two Silbermans, and the N. Abraham Mercantile Company. On February 13, 1929, Berges caused a writ of attachment to issue and levy was made upon the personal property of N. Abraham. On February 21, 1929, N. Abraham and his wife Rose executed the indemnity agreement with respondent herein for the release of such attachment.

The foregoing facts are not controverted but the respondent disputes appellants' version of what occurred thereafter. At all the times herein mentioned A. B. Bianchi was the attorney acting for these appellants. He testified, without contradiction, that before this undertaking was filed and on many occasions thereafter he had several conversations with the attorney for Berges, the effect of which was that, for various considerations promised to Berges, the latter would press her claim against the codefendant of the Abrahams only, and would not attempt to collect from the Abrahams.

After Berges obtained judgment against all the parties sued for the full amount of the claim, it is conceded that the respondent herein carried on negotiations for the purchase of the judgment and that respondent was fully informed of the so-called Hatch-Bianchi agreement. One of the considerations for this agreement was that Bianchi would disclose to Berges the interest of the San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. and give her information as to property of the Silbermans which she could attach. Bianchi performed this part of the agreement and, acting on the information so received, Berges amended her complaint to include the corporation as a party defendant and levied an attachment on its property and upon that of the Silbermans. To release this attachment the Century Indemnity Company executed its indemnity agreement. Other elements of the Hatch-Bianchi agreement will be referred to later. Following the history of the case, it appears that over the repeated protests of these appellants and with full knowledge of the Hatch-Bianchi agreement the respondent herein purchased the Berges judgment at its face value and commenced suit in the name of Nelson, an employee in the office of the attorneys, against the Century Indemnity Company in September, 1931. This litigation was carried into the federal courts and was not ended until January, 1939, when judgment in favor of Nelson became final. Thereupon the Century Company paid to Nelson the sum of $9,528.62 covering the amount of the Berges judgment, interest and costs recovered from the Century Indemnity Company. The present suit is to recover attorneys' fees and other expenses incidental to the litigation with the Century Indemnity Company. It was tried upon an amended complaint, an answer and an amendment to the answer which set up the special defense of estoppel arising out of the Hatch-Bianchi agreement.

In support of this defense Bianchi was the sole witness. He testified that Hatch promised not to proceed to a satisfaction of a judgment against Abraham if he could obtain security against the co-defendants sufficient to satisfy any judgment he recovered, and if Bianchi would give him information by which he would obtain a judgment against the Metal Company. This portion of the agreement was immediately acted upon. Through Abraham's information, Berges acting through her attorney Hatch, amended her complaint to include the Metal Company as defendant, and through the same source, Berges attached property of the co-defendants who forthwith posted a bond in the sum of $6000 with the Century Indemnity Company as surety. But Berges was still reluctant to go to trial without the aid of Bianchi and Abraham to meet the counterclaim of the co-defendants. Upon the repeated assurance of Hatch that the agreement would be honored Bianchi and Abraham gave him the evidence through which he was able to prove that the weight receipts relied on by the Silbermans were false. Hence, through Bianchi's compliance with his agreement, Hatch and Berges were enabled to obtain a judgment against the co-defendants for the full sum sued for. This judgment was entered in October, 1929. The co-defendants took an appeal and Hatch persuaded Bianchi not to appeal in behalf of Abraham and again stated that he would abide by his agreement and asked and received, as further consideration for the agreement, the professional aid of Bianchi in securing a dismissal of the Silbermans' appeal and money paid to Hatch as attorney for Berges.

In explanation of a letter dated February 26, 1929, from Hatch to Bianchi in which he stated that he proposed "to primarily direct" his efforts against the co-defendants, and that "this is not to be considered as in any way exonerating your client" the witness Bianchi testified that this "was just a feeler" and after that date, and after Hatch got his bond from the Century Indemnity Company, and after Hatch was pretty well assured he would get a judgment in full against the co-defendants that "he expressly committed himself * * * not to enforce the judgment against the defendant Abraham." The witness also testified that knowledge of this agreement was disclosed to respondent before it purchased the Berges judgment together with a protest and demand that respondent stand suit on the bond so that the defense of estoppel might be raised against Berges—the claimed beneficiary of the Hatch-Bianchi agreement. All this testimony stands uncontradicted—except for the self-serving line in the Hatch letter of February 26, 1929. Then at the close of the trial it was stipulated that Bianchi should be deemed to have testified that he informed Hatch of the existence of a bank account of the co-defendants Silbermans, that thereafter Hatch levied on that account, and thereafter the co-defendants delivered the release bond of the Century Indemnity Company upon which the respondent herein sued and recovered judgment.

On this evidence the trial court found:

"That it was not orally or otherwise agreed or understood by the said Berges and the said Nathan Abraham, either in consideration of any promises of the defendant, Nathan Abraham, to divulge information as to the identity and location of attachable property belonging to his co-defendants in the action mentioned in paragraph III of these findings or information which would make possible and facilitate the proof of the total of the claim of the plaintiff, Berges, in said action, or in or for any other consideration, or at all that said Berges would not press the payment of any judgment obtained against said Nathan Abraham but would proceed to the satisfaction thereof against his said co-defendants only and/or their surety; that it was not further understood or agreed by said Berges and said Nathan Abraham that, pending any appeal or motion for a new trial by the co-defendants of Nathan Abraham in said action mentioned in paragraph III of these findings, said Berges would also refrain from proceedings for satisfaction of judgment against said Nathan Abraham or surety; that the counsel for Berges in said action did not promise or agree orally or otherwise or at any time that he would not proceed to enforce any judgment in said action against said Nathan Abraham or his surety; that the said defendants Nathan Abraham and Rose Abraham did not consent to or authorize the purchase of said judgment in said Berges action by the said G. Nelson and/or the plaintiff herein and that said defendants herein advised the plaintiff herein of their objection to the purchase of said judgment; that prior to the purchase of said judgment by the said G. Nelson as found in these findings, the plaintiff herein and said G. Nelson were advised by defendants that defendants claimed that said Berges and said defendant Nathan Abraham had entered into the agreements which are herein found not to have been made."

In denying a motion for a new trial the court amended this finding as follows: "That, without reflecting or ruling upon, and without intending to reflect or rule upon, the truth of the oral testimony of A. B. Bianchi as a witness for defendants, the court finds that the evidence in this case, taken as a whole, does not affirmatively establish that such agreements were made or that such understandings were had and does not affirmatively establish that the attorney for Berges (Hatch) had any authority to make such agreements or to enter into such understandings, and the findings in this paragraph in respect to said agreements or understandings are to be so understood."

[1-3] The finding is confusing. If it was intended as a finding that Berges and Abraham did not personally enter into the agreement it is correct to that extent. If it was intended as a finding that Hatch and Bianchi did not enter into the agreement as their agents it is contrary to all the evidence. The portion of the finding that plaintiff and Nelson were advised of defendants' claim or version of the Hatch-Bianchi agreement before they purchased the Berges judgment is supported by the evidence and not controverted by the respondents at this time. But the amended finding puts an entirely different phase upon the whole subject. It reads: "without reflecting or ruling upon * * * the truth of the oral testimony of A. B. Bianchi as a witness for defendants." Now the whole evidence supporting appellants' defense of estoppel depended upon the oral testimony of the witness Bianchi and to determine that issue it was incumbent upon the trial court to "rule upon" the "truth" of that testimony. If that testimony was true the defense of estoppel was proved, assuming that the contract is valid, a point to be considered later. But, if the testimony of this witness was false, it was necessary for the court to so find and then the question would be presented here whether, under all the circumstances found in the record, there was anything to support the finding that the testimony was false, or that it was so inherently improbable that it should be rejected as a matter of law. But the settled rule is that the uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony of a witness can not be arbitrarily disregarded. In Gomez v. Cecena, 15 Cal.2d 363, 366, 101 P.2d 477, 478, the supreme court said: "While no universal and immutable formula can be prescribed for determining the weight to be accorded testimonial evidence, it has frequently been said that testimony which is not inherently improbable and is not impeached or contradicted by other evidence should be accepted as true by the trier of facts." (Citing cases.) Since the trial court did not find that the testimony was false we must presume that it was true. Hence, the purport of the finding as a whole is that the agreement was made as testified to but that neither Hatch nor Bianchi had authority to make it or to bind their clients.

[4-6] It may be conceded that, under the provisions of section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure defining the powers of an attorney in relation to his client, neither Hatch nor Bianchi had statutory authority to make the agreement binding their clients without the latters' consent. But the rules governing the attorney-client relation are founded on the general rules governing the relation of principal and agent. In this respect the rule is universal that, notwithstanding the lack of express or apparent authority in the agent his act is binding on the principal if the latter ratifies it and accepts the benefits of the agent's act. This principle has been recognized in a long line of decisions commencing with Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 288, 30 P. 529, 530 where the supreme court said: "The section does not require a construction that in no instance shall an agreement which the attorney may make in behalf of his client be binding, unless entered in the minutes of the court or filed with the clerk. Its provisions have reference to executory agreements, and not to those which have been wholly or in part executed; and it was with reference to oral agreements of [an executory] character that the court said in its opinion in Borkheim v. [North B. & M.] Ins. Co., 38 Cal. [623], 628: 'Of such agreements, therefore, there can be no specific performance.' If under the terms of a mutual stipulation, which was only verbal, one party has received the advantage for which he entered into it, or the other party has at his instance given up some right, or lost some advantage, so that it would be inequitable for him to insist that the stipulation was invalid, he will not be permitted to repudiate the obligation of his own agreement upon the ground that it had not been entered in the minutes of the court. Himmelmann v. Sullivan, 40 Cal. 125; Hawes v. Clark, 84 Cal. 272, 24 P. 116; People v. Stephens, 52 N.Y. 306. If the party admits that he made such verbal stipulation, it will be as binding upon him as if it had been entered in the minutes of the court. Patterson v. Ely, 19 Cal. [28], 36; Reese v. Mahoney, 21 Cal. [305], 306." This language was quoted with approval in Webster v. Webster, 216 Cal. 485, 490, 491, 14 P.2d 522, 524, where the court added that the agreement having been fully executed, and the plaintiff therein having retained the benefits "it would be inequitable to permit plaintiff to now repudiate the agreement." The same principle was followed in Cathcart v. Gregory, 45 Cal.App.2d 179, 187, 113 P.2d 894; Witaschek v. Witaschek, 56 Cal.App.2d 277, 283, 132 P.2d 600, and Jones v. Noble, 3 Cal. App.2d 316, 320, 39 P.2d 486, to the effect that the code section had "reference to executory agreements, and not to those which have been wholly or in part executed." Cathcart v. Gregory, supra [45 Cal.App. 2d 179, 113 P.2d 898].

[7] But respondent replies that there is no evidence that Berges had knowledge of the agreement, that Hatch and not Berges accepted the benefits. Berges was an employee in the office of Hatch and acted merely as his instrument as a nominal plaintiff for the purpose of the suit. Berges first acted upon the agreement when she amended her complaint and followed this with a levy of an attachment upon property of the co-defendants disclosed to her under the agreement.

[8] Then respondent argues that there was no showing that either Nelson or respondent affirmed the agreement. Nelson was an employee of the attorneys for respondent. She was used only as a nominal plaintiff to cover the corporate interest of respondent in the litigation. When she took the assignment of the Berges judgment respondent paid her the money to pay Berges. Her knowledge must be assumed to be that of her principal. Respondent's knowledge of the agreement claimed by Bianchi was fully proved by the testimony of Bianchi and in that respect the trial court found the testimony true. The evidence is that before respondent, through Nelson, purchased the Berges judgment Bianchi informed them and their counsel of his version of the agreement, that when he learned that Hatch threatened to repudiate it he offered to go directly to Hatch to clear the matter up but was urged by respondent's counsel not to do so. There can be no question therefore that both respondent and Nelson had full knowledge of Bianchi's contention as to the purport of the agreement before they purchased the Berges judgment, and that they were at least put upon notice.

As consideration for the agreement Hatch was able to levy upon assets of the Silbermans because of which they deposited the release bond of Century Indemnity Company. Because of this bond, and not otherwise, respondent was able to recover judgment in excess of $9000 upon an outlay of less than $6000, which represented an investment at seven per cent interest. We may take notice that this was a profitable investment for the period following February 21, 1930, the date of the purchase.

[9] If we are not correct in assuming that by the amendment to paragraph twenty-four of the findings it was intended to find that the Hatch-Bianchi agreement was made as testified to, but that Hatch was without authority to make it, then the finding must be deemed amended accordingly as there is no evidence to support it in its present form. Since all the uncontradicted evidence shows that such agreement was made, that knowledge thereof was conveyed to Berges's assignee, and that all the parties affected by the agreement retained the fruits of it, it must be held that the respondent is now estopped from repudiating the agreement and that the equities demand a reversal of the judgment. For this reason it is not necessary to discuss the several other grounds raised by appellants.

The judgment is reversed.

GOODELL, J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

HARRIS v. JOFFE. *

Civ. 14910.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 20, 1945.

Hearing Granted Nov. 15, 1945.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)

Negligence and contributory negligence are fact questions for trial court, whose findings thereon, if supported by any substantial evidence, will be upheld.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑164(1)

In absence of fraud, concealment, or covenants in lease, landlord is not liable to tenant for injuries due to defective condition or faulty construction of demised premises, unless caused by landlord's failure to use ordinary care to keep portion of premises, reserved by him for use in common by himself and tenants or by different tenants, in safe condition.

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑168(1)

A tenant's contributory negligence bars his recovery of damages from landlord for injuries sustained because of defects, of which tenant has knowledge, in demised premises.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑168(1)

A tenant assumes all risks obvious to ordinary observation from defects in demised premises and cannot recover damages from landlord for injuries caused thereby, in absence of attendant circumstances relieving tenant from inference of contributory negligence.

5. Negligence 🔑66(1)

An owner or occupant of premises is not liable for injuries to another thereon as result of dangers which are obvious or as well known to injured person as to such owner or occupant.

6. Landlord and tenant 🔑168(1)

A tenant, voluntarily remaining on leased premises with full knowledge of their dangerous or defective condition, assumes all risks obvious to ordinary observation.

7. Evidence 🔑20(1)

Extensive use of tile and composition materials in both exterior and interior construction, with common and general approval, is matter of common knowledge.

8. Landlord and tenant 🔑169(6)

In action against apartment house owner for injuries to tenant falling down entrance vestibule steps, evidence that vestibule floor was of tile or artificial composition and rather slick or slippery was insufficient to support court's finding of defendant's negligent failure to exercise ordinary care to keep floor or entrance in safe condition.

9. Negligence 🔑56(3)

Violation of city ordinance is not negligence per se, unless incident, act, or omission constituting such violation is proximate or contributing cause of personal injury.

10. Landlord and tenant 🔑164(7)

An apartment house owner is not liable for injuries to tenant having knowledge of slippery condition of entrance vestibule floor and fact that it was raining before falling down vestibule steps as result of such condition.

---

* Subsequent opinion 170 P.2d 454.

* * *

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Roy V. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by Sophye Harris against Rosamond Joffe for injuries sustained in a fall down steps from the vestibule of defendant's apartment house. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Reversed.

C. A. Pinkham, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Samuel De Groot, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment for plaintiff in an action for damages.

The facts are summarized in respondent's brief as follows:

"Appellant was the owner of an apartment house, located at 211 South Fuller Street, Los Angeles, California, containing several apartments. The respondent was one of the tenants in said apartment house, and had lived there since September, 1942.

"The only entrance from the front of said apartment house was through a vestibule. The floor of said vestibule was finished with tile or a composition material. There were two steps in said vestibule. In order for respondent and other tenants to enter or leave said premises, it was necessary to pass through said vestibule, and the vestibule was at all times under the care, maintenance and control of the Appellant.

"On the 3rd day of December, 1943, about 8:00 P.M., respondent, going from her apartment to the outside of the building, had to pass through said vestibule. At said time it was dark. There was no light burning in the vestibule. The floor and steps of the vestibule were slippery and without any covering. The condition of the weather was "drizzling"; and the condition of the floor was slick and wet.

"The vestibule contained a lighting fixture with one electric lamp, which was not burning at the time. Respondent and others had notified the Appellant on several occasions prior to December 3, 1943, that the light in the vestibule had not been burning and that the floor was slippery, because of the lack of floor covering. The Appellant, on each occasion when so notified, stated that she would have the vestibule light turned on; but, notwithstanding such notices, she failed to do so and did not have the light burning on the night of December 3, 1943.

"The Municipal Code of the City of Los Angeles, Section 57.47 entitled 'Lighting Hallways,' provides:

" 'Every person conducting or managing any hotel, lodging house, boarding house, rooming house or apartment house shall, from sunset to sunrise of each day, light every hallway, corridor and stairway thereof so as to enable all persons to readily find, distinguish and use such means and ways of exit therefrom.'

"On the night of December 3, 1943, about 8:00 P.M., the respondent, in the company of her husband and nephew, had to pass into and through the vestibule. The vestibule was dark. By reason of the darkness, respondent was not able to see the condition of the floor and steps. Respondent slipped and fell and broke her ankle."

Plaintiff, on direct examination, testified as follows:

"Q. Now, as you came through the door just state what happened? A. As we came out of the door it was drizzling a little, it was wet.

"Q. The condition of the weather had been drizzling? A. Yes.

"Q. Do you know for how long that day it had been drizzling? A. No, I couldn't say because I was in my apartment from early in the evening, and when I came out I discovered it was drizzling.

"The Court: By 'drizzling' you mean a light rain? A. A light rain, yes, Your Honor.

"Q. By Mr. De Groot: Go ahead and explain what happened. A. The corridor as we stepped out was rather slick.

"Q. You mean the vestibule? A. Yes, the vestibule, and I slipped and fell clear down the steps.

"Q. When you say 'slick' what do you mean? A. Rather slippery.

"The Court: You mean it was wet? A. Yes.

"Q. By Mr. De Groot: And do you know how you fell, what caused you to fall outside of being slippery? A. No, it happened so fast."

It appears, also, that plaintiff had complained several times over a period of several months preceding the accident, of the alleged dangerous condition of the entrance.

It is contended by appellant that there was "no showing of negligence on the part of the defendant"; that, "if appellant was negligent, then respondent was contributorily negligent in two respects", first, because, with full knowledge of such alleged dangerous condition, "she remained upon the premises and thus assumed the risks attendant thereon", and, second, because, "The danger of which she complained was an open and obvious one and was as well known to her as to appellant and with such knowledge she failed to exercise ordinary care for her own safety and protection."

The trial court found for the plaintiff and, it is respondent's contention that as to contributory negligence, the burden of proof "was on the appellant"; that, "unless it appears from the transcript of the testimony that there was no basis for such finding, the judgment must be affirmed." It is also contended, in substance, that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury and that the evidence sustains the court's conclusions in this regard.

[1] There appears to be no dispute as to the facts. It is well settled that the issues of negligence and contributory negligence present questions of fact to be determined by the trial court and, that any substantial evidence in support of the findings on such issues will support them on appeal. On the contrary, where there is an absence of substantial evidence, such findings cannot be upheld on appeal.

[2-6] The parties to the within action were landlord and tenant respectively, hence, the law applicable to such relations, in the circumstances, is controlling. "In the absence of fraud, concealment, or covenants in the lease, a landlord is not liable to a tenant for injuries due to defective condition or faulty construction of the demised premises. * * * A qualification of the foregoing rule is that, 'where a portion of the premises is reserved by the landlord for use in common by himself and tenants, or by different tenants, a duty is imposed upon him to use ordinary care to keep those particular portions of the premises in a safe condition; and if he is negligent in this regard, and a personal injury results to a tenant by reason thereof, he is liable therefor.'" Ellis v. McNeese, 109 Cal.App. 667, 293 P. 854, 855; Hassell v. Denning, 84 Cal.App. 479, 258 P. 426. But in Nelson v. Myers, 94 Cal.App. 66, 270 P. 719, 722, in an action by a tenant for damages resulting from a defective gas heater, the court declared that, "The contributory negligence of a tenant will bar his recovery for injuries sustained from defects of which he has knowledge." And, in Priver v. Young, 62 Cal.App. 405, 216 P. 966, 967, an action for damages against the landlord resulting from a defective wallbed it was held that, "It must therefore be conclusively presumed that plaintiff was fully aware of the unsafe condition of the bed and, in the absence of any allegation in the complaint setting forth such attendant circumstances as would relieve plaintiff from the inference of contributory negligence, the rule of law that in such circumstances plaintiff assumed all risks which were obvious to ordinary observation would apply and preclude any recovery." And, as was quoted in Vosburgh v. Meda, 61 Cal.App.2d 396, 399, 143 P.2d 41, 42, from Mautino v. Sutter Hospital Association, 211 Cal. 556, 561, 296 P. 76, "There is no liability for injuries from dangers that are obvious, or as well known to the person injured as to the owner or occupant." Colburn v. Shuravlev, 24 Cal. App.2d 298, 74 P.2d 1060, 1061, concerned an action for damages by a tenant for injuries resulting from a fall; plaintiff had tripped on a defective rug. Plaintiff had notified defendant's manager of the defect in the rug and had received the promise that it would be repaired. Referring to the rule herein considered, the court declared that, "The purport of these decisions is that, when a tenant voluntarily remains on leased premises with full knowledge of their dangerous or defective condition, he assumes all risks which are obvious to ordinary observation." See also Zavalney v. Donovan, 70 Cal.App.2d 182, 160 P.2d 558. Although the facts in the various cases cited are different, nevertheless, the principle involved is the same.

[7, 8] The only evidence of the alleged "dangerous" condition of the surface of the entrance consisted of the testimony of the plaintiff. The floor was tile or "artificial composition" and described by the witness according to the testimony quoted above, as, "rather slick," "rather slippery." The type of floor, as above described, was not disputed; nor was there any evidence of defective construction. It is common knowledge that tile and composition materials are extensively used both in exterior and interior construction with common and general approval. With regard to the surface of the floor in question, both as to the character thereof and its condition, the record reveals no evidence of a lack of ordinary care. It follows, therefore, that the court's finding of negligence on the part of defendant due to the condition of the floor or the entrance, is not supported by substantial evidence and cannot, as a matter of law, be upheld.

[9] As to respondent's contention that the alleged violation of a city ordinance is negligence per se, it appears to be well settled that, unless the incident or act constituting such violation also is the proximate cause of the injury, the rule is not applicable. And, the converse of the rule is also true, as the court declared in Flores v. Fitzgerald, 204 Cal. 374, at page 378, 268 P. 369, at page 371, "Although the violation of the ordinance may have been negligence per se, yet, as it was not shown that such negligence was the direct or proximate cause of his injury, it will not defeat his right of recovery for damages sustained by reason of said injury." "The principle that a violation of a statute or ordinance is negligence per se is subject to the limitation that the act or omission must proximately cause or contribute to the injury in order to bar a recovery." Burtt v. Bank of California National Association, 211 Cal. 548, at page 551, 296 P. 68, at page 69. And in Blodgett v. B. H. Dyas Co., 4 Cal.2d 511, at page 513, 50 P. 2d 801, at page 803, appears the following: "The evidence shows that the lack of the hand rail was neither the proximate nor any cause of plaintiff's fall. Any violation of the ordinance by the defendant would therefore be immaterial."

[10] The evidence clearly and without dispute shows the proximate cause of plaintiff's fall to have been the slippery surface above described and not the fact that the entrance was not lighted as the ordinance required. Moreover, appellant was aware of the alleged "dangerous" condition of the entrance and of the fact that it was raining, as well. The law imposes no liability in such circumstances.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is reversed.

YORK, P. J., and WHITE, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 768

TUCKER v. FONTES.

No. 12843.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1945.

1. Execution 🔑377

An affidavit is not necessary to initiate proceeding supplemental to execution under statute providing generally for commencement of such proceeding after execution is returned unsatisfied in whole or in part by issuance of order directing judgment debtor to appear. Code Civ.Proc. § 714.

2. Execution 🔑377

The affidavit contemplated by statute providing for commencement of supplemental proceedings at any time after issuance of execution upon proof by affidavit that judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply toward satisfaction of judgment need not be in any particular form and may be made on information and belief. Code Civ.Proc. § 715.

3. Execution 🔑377

Affidavit showing issuance of execution and its return wholly unsatisfied, and alleging on information and belief that judgment debtor had property not exempt from execution that he unjustly refused to apply to satisfaction of judgment, was sufficient to warrant order requiring judgment debtor to appear and answer concerning his property. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 714, 715.

4. Execution 🔑406(1)

If evidence introduced at hearing of proceeding supplemental to execution discloses that judgment debtor has property not exempt from execution which may not be reached by execution and which judgment debtor refuses to apply to satisfaction of judgment, appointment of receiver is authorized without the necessity of taking additional evidence. Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subd. 4; §§ 714, 715.

5. Execution ⟹405

Where examination of judgment debtor in proceedings supplemental to execution showed net exempt worth to be more than $36,000, including joint tenancy interest with wife in apartment house, trial court had discretionary power to appoint receiver. Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subd. 4; §§ 714, 715.

6. Execution ⟹405

Where execution was returned wholly unsatisfied and judgment debtor claimed inability to collect accounts due him, and no legal procedure was available to judgment creditor to compel judgment debtor to take legal action to enforce collection of such accounts, judgment debtor was entitled to appointment of a receiver to take such action. Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subd. 4; §§ 714, 715.

7. Execution ⟹406(1)

Under evidence trial court could reasonably infer that at time of hearing judgment debtor owned assets other than those disclosed by him in his testimony which could be made available to satisfaction of judgment through efforts of a receiver. Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subd. 4; §§ 714, 715.

8. Execution ⟹407

Order appointing receiver in proceeding supplemental to execution was not reversible error for failure definitely to define duties of receiver, in view of terms of order. Code Civ.Proc. § 564, subd. 4; §§ 714, 715.

9. Execution ⟹409, 410

The rights, powers, and duties of a receiver appointed in proceeding supplemental to execution are limited to purposes of such proceeding and those for which he was appointed and are analogous to those of a receiver appointed in a creditor's suit. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 568, 568.5, 714, 715.

10. Execution ⟹410

The rights, powers, and duties of a receiver appointed in proceeding supplemental to execution are limited to receiving and paying out, or demanding and suing for, under order of court, and taking into possession and applying in satisfaction of judgment, money, property, and interests of judgment debtor and do not include active management of property, operation of business of judgment debtor, or administration of his estate on basis of insolvency. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 568, 568.5, 714, 715.

11. Execution ⟹407

Order appointing receiver in proceeding supplemental to execution and authorizing him, subject to order of court, to take possession of judgment debtor's property and make certain collections and execute certain assignments, was not objectionable as placing receiver in active management of all judgment debtor's property and operation of his business. Code Civ.Proc. §§ 568, 568.5, 714, 715.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas M. Foley, Judge.

Proceeding supplemental to execution by M. H. Tucker against Joe Fontes. From an order granting plaintiff's motion for the appointment of a receiver, defendant appeals.

Order, as construed by the court, affirmed.

Waldo F. Postel, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Jackson, of San Francisco, for respondent.

KNIGHT, Justice.

After hearing evidence introduced in a proceeding supplemental to execution, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for the appointment of a receiver; and from the order made in that behalf defendant has appealed.

The judgment in the action called for the payment of the sum of $3,168.75 and costs, found to be due on a promissory note. Execution issued and was returned wholly unsatisfied; whereupon plaintiff filed an affidavit setting forth the facts relating to the entry of the judgment, the issuance of the execution, the return thereof wholly unsatisfied, and averring on information and belief that defendant "has property in his possession and under his control not exempt from execution which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of said judgment." Upon the filing of the affidavit the court issued an order requiring defendant to appear before the court at the time specified therein and answer concerning his property. Two days subsequent to the issuance of that order, plaintiff served and filed a notice of motion for the appointment of a receiver. Attached to the notice of the motion was a supporting affidavit similar in form to the one initiating the supplemental proceeding, and the motion was noticed to be heard at the same time fixed for the hearing of that proceeding. The defendant appeared in obedience to the order and was examined under oath by both parties; and at the conclusion of the hearing plaintiff presented the motion for the appointment of a receiver. After hearing argument on the motion, it was granted and a written order was signed and filed to that effect naming the receiver, fixing the amount of his bond and defining his duties.

In attacking the validity of the order, defendant contends that the form of affidavit filed by plaintiff was insufficient in that it did not specify the property defendant refused to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, and that the affidavit was made on information and belief; that after hearing the supplemental proceeding no additional evidence was offered on the motion for the appointment of the receiver, and that no sufficient showing was made that such relief was necessary. We find no merit in any of the foregoing contentions.

[1-4] The two pertinent sections of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to proceedings supplemental to execution are sections 714 and 715. The former section provides generally for the commencement of such proceedings after the execution has been returned unsatisfied in whole or in part, by the issuance of an order directing the judgment debtor to appear; and it is held that in such cases no affidavit is necessary to initiate the proceedings. Collins v. Angell, 72 Cal. 513, 14 P. 135. The next section, 715, authorizes the commencement of supplemental proceedings at any time after the issuance of an execution "upon proof, by affidavit of a party or otherwise, to the satisfaction of a judge or justice of the court, that any judgment debtor has property which he unjustly refuses to apply toward the satisfaction of the judgment * * ." Defendant has not cited any authority holding that the affidavit so to be filed shall be in any particular form, or that it may not be made on information and belief; and it is well settled that if after hearing the evidence introduced at the hearing of the supplemental proceeding the court concludes that the situation calls for the appointment of a receiver, it is authorized to make such appointment. In California Jurisprudence (vol. 22, p. 455) the rule is stated as follows: " * * in supplementary proceedings if there is property which cannot be reached by execution and which the judgment debtor refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, he may be compelled, upon examination, to deliver it in satisfaction of the judgment—that is, to a receiver appointed to dispose of it in aid of the execution * * * citing, among other cases, Pacific Bank v. Robinson, 57 Cal. 520, 40 Am.Rep. 120, and Habenicht v. Lissak, 78 Cal. 351, 20 P. 874, 5 L.R.A. 713, 12 Am.St.Rep. 63." In the first cited case the court said 57 Cal. at page 522, 40 Am.Rep. 120, 5 L.R.A. 713, 12 Am.St. Rep. 63: "* * * if there be property which cannot be reached by execution, and which the judgment debtor refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, he may be compelled, upon examination, in proceedings supplementary to execution, to deliver it in satisfaction of the judgment (§§ 714-721, Code Civ. Proc.); i.e., to a receiver appointed to dispose of it in aid of the execution. (§ 564, Code Civ. Proc.)" The decision in that case was subsequently expressly confirmed in Habenicht v. Lissak, supra, and both of those cases were afterwards approvingly referred to in Bruton v. Tearle, 7 Cal.2d 48, 59 P.2d 953, 106 A.L.R. 580. It was there held that where a plaintiff is not attempting to bring an independent action in the nature of a creditor's bill, but is proceeding strictly in accordance with the statutory provisions for proceedings supplemental to execution, and it is shown that despite the plaintiff's efforts to obtain satisfaction of judgment, by execution or otherwise, the judgment is not satisfied, and that the debtor has assets which he unjustly refuses to apply to the satisfaction of the judgment, the appointment of a receiver is authorized under subdivision 4 of section 564 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That subdivision reads as follows: "A receiver may be appointed * * * 4. * * * in proceedings in aid of execution, when an execution has been returned unsatisfied, or when the judgment debtor refuses to apply his property in satisfaction of the judgment * * *."

In the present case, the material facts disclosed by the evidence at the hearing of the supplemental proceeding were these: The defendant was then and for some time prior thereto had been engaged in business in San Francisco selling machinery and parts and units thereof on consignment from various manufacturers, and among his available assets were certain unpaid accounts due him from customers with whom he had conducted sales transactions. One of the accounts called for the payment of a balance of $375, and another a balance of $400, upon which he had obtained a judgment. Moreover, he was then receiving monthly payments of $80 on an allowed claim which he had filed in a proceeding in bankruptcy pending in Portland, Oregon. The total amount of the allowed claim was $3214, and he had already received five monthly payments thereon. At the hearing defendant showed an unwillingness to turn over any of the future monthly payments or the accounts receivable in satisfaction of the judgment. Furthermore, defendant admitted that less than two years prior to the hearing of the supplemental proceeding he had filed a financial statement with the Dun & Bradstreet agency showing his net worth to be more than $36,000, which he stated included a joint tenancy interest held by him with his wife in an apartment house.

[5-7] In view of the foregoing factual showing and under the law laid down in the cases above cited, it was entirely within the discretionary power of the trial court to appoint a receiver to take over any property, not exempt from execution, of which defendant was found to be the owner, and to collect all accounts receivable, and subject the same to the satisfaction of the judgment; and for such purpose to have access to all of the books and accounts pertaining to defendant's business. It is true that ordinarily a judgment creditor is able to collect money found to be due the judgment debtor from third persons, by way of garnishment or levy of execution. But here the defendant claimed he had been unable to collect the accounts due him, and there was no legal procedure available to plaintiff to compel defendant to take legal action to enforce collection thereof. Consequently plaintiff was entitled to the appointment of a receiver to take such legal action. Moreover, it is evident that an execution issued by the courts of this state would be without legal efficacy in another state, and that, therefore, without the aid of a receiver plaintiff would be powerless to collect any part of the balance due on the allowed claim in the bankruptcy proceeding in the state of Oregon. Then again, there is the evidence showing that less than two years prior to the hearing of the supplemental proceeding defendant had filed a statement showing his net financial worth to be more than $36,000, which he stated included a joint tenancy interest in an apartment house, from which the trial court could reasonably infer that at the time of the hearing defendant was the owner of assets other than those disclosed by him in his testimony, which could be made available to the satisfaction of the judgment through the efforts of a receiver.

The opinion rendered in the case of McCutcheon v. Superior Court, 134 Cal.App. 5, 24 P.2d 911, from which defendant quotes in support of his contention that the form of affidavit filed herein was insufficient, shows that the receiver was not appointed as the result of supplemental proceedings had pursuant to either section 714 or 715 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There, after the execution had been returned wholly unsatisfied, the plaintiff instituted a separate suit, termed a "creditor's bill," for the sole purpose of having a receiver appointed; and, as pointed out in the opinion, such suits are governed by rules of pleading and procedure different from those applicable to the appointment of receivers pursuant to proceedings supplemental to execution. And the court went on to hold as a matter of law that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and that consequently the order based thereon for the appointment of a receiver was void. However, in pointing out the distinction between the two remedies the opinion therein sets forth a clear statement of the law pertaining to the appointment of receivers in proceedings supplemental to execution, and such statement fully supports the action of the trial court in the present case. It is there said (134 Cal.App. at pages 8–9, 24 P.2d at page 912): "And, although the statutory provisions [relating to proceedings supplemental to execution] may contain no express authorization for the appointment of a receiver in aid of the purpose to be effected, as early as 1864, in the case of Hathaway v. Brady, 26 Cal. 581, 593, it was ruled by the Supreme Court of this state (syllabus) that 'in proceedings supplementary to execution, the Court has power, when it has all the parties before it, to appoint a receiver.' That that principle has been recognized and established is attested by Professor Pomeroy in volume 1 of Pomeroy's Equitable Remedies, § 110, where it is said: 'Proceedings supplementary to execution being designed to be a substitute for the equity procedure by creditors' bill, receivers are appointed in such proceedings very much as a matter of course, where it appears that the judgment creditor (debtor) has, or probably has, property that ought to be subjected to the satisfaction of the judgment, after the return of the execution unsatisfied.'" From the foregoing it will be seen that since the evidence received in the present case pursuant to the supplemental proceeding was sufficient to authorize the appointment of a receiver, it was not essential to introduce any additional evidence in support of the motion therefor.

[8] Defendant further contends that the order fails to meet the requirements of the law in that the duties of the receiver are not therein definitely defined, and that the general terms used in the order are too broad and not warranted by the evidence. It is apparent that in some respects the duties imposed on the receiver could have been stated with more exactness; but we find nothing in the points urged by defendant in this behalf which would justify a reversal. In substance, the order authorizes the receiver, subject to the order of the court, to take possession of defendant's property and the books of account and papers relating to his business affairs, and to collect the debts and moneys due the defendant; also to take an assignment of the allowed claim in bankruptcy and to collect the money to be paid thereon; and defendant is ordered to make such assignment to the receiver.

[9-11] Defendant cites 33 C.J.S., Executions, § 391, at pages 717, 718, to the effect that rights, powers, and duties of a receiver appointed in a supplemental proceeding are limited to the purposes of such proceeding and those for which he was appointed; that they are not the same as those of general receivers, but are in great measure analogous to those of a receiver appointed in a creditor's suit; that they are limited to receiving and then paying out, or, more specifically, to demanding and suing for, under the order of the court, and taking into possession and applying in satisfaction of the judgment, money, property, and interests of the judgment debtor; and that they do not include active management of property or operation of a business of the judgment debtor, or the administration of his estate on the basis of his insolvency. In this connection defendant's chief contention seems to be that under the terms of the order herein the receiver is placed in the active management of all of defendant's property and the operation of his business. There is no direction to that effect in the order, and read as a whole it does not go that far. Reasonably construed, in the light of the evidence received at the hearing of the supplemental proceeding, the order simply authorizes the receiver to take possession of any property owned by the defendant, not exempt from execution, for the purpose of having it lawfully applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, as provided in sections 568 and 568.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure; also to have access to all books and papers pertaining to defendant's business for the purpose of securing the information and data necessary to collect the moneys due defendant. But, as stated, the order does not in terms or by implication authorize the receiver to take over the management of defendant's business affairs. In the event that the receiver should act in excess of authority granted by the order as above construed, or the law governing the activities of receivers of this type, defendant may invoke ample protection by bringing the matter before the trial court in an appropriate proceeding.

As thus construed, the order is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and WARD, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 664

SIMMONS CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al.

Civ. 12923.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 5, 1945.

Hearing Denied Nov. 1, 1945.

1. Workmen's compensation ⟹940

A foreman, with general discretionary powers as managing officer and superintendent, and particular supervisory authority over punch machine, was not "employee occupying a subservient position", so as to relieve employer from liability because of serious and willful misconduct for more than normal compensation of employee, injured in operation of such machine.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Employee Occupying Subservient Position".

2. Evidence ⟹539

Ordinarily, engineers qualified by training and experience are proper witnesses as to matters within purview of their training, including construction, operation, and safety of instruments propelled by power or mechanical force.

3. Workmen's compensation ⟹1693

A referee's observations in viewing employer's premises or mechanical device, failure to guard which is claimed to have constituted serious and willful misconduct rendering employer liable to injured employee for more than normal compensation, may be considered by Industrial Accident Commission as evidence in proceeding for additional compensation.

4. Workmen's compensation ⟹1408

The Industrial Accident Commission is not bound by legally recognized rules of evidence, but evidence must at least have some degree of probative force to warrant finding by commission.

5. Workmen's compensation ⟹1674

A referee's report, from his observation of punch machine after injury to operator, that accident would not have happened had effective guard been in place on machine, was not substantial evidence, sufficient to warrant finding that employer was guilty of willful misconduct in failing to place guard on machine, in absence of specific order by Industrial Commission requiring safety device and in view of testimony of safety engineers that a guard was unnecessary.

6. Workmen's compensation ⟹939

Where injured employee claims that employer was guilty of willful misconduct entitling employee to more than normal compensation, Industrial Accident Commission must protect substantial rights of all parties to proceeding for additional compensation, as such claim is quasi-criminal charge.

7. Workmen's compensation ⟹939

"Serious and willful misconduct", rendering employer liable for more than normal compensation for resulting injuries to employee, is conduct which employer knows or should know is likely to cause serious injury to employee or evinces reckless disregard for employee's safety.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Serious and Willful Misconduct".

8. Workmen's compensation ⟹1939

Whether employer's serious and willful misconduct caused employee's injury, so as to render employer liable for more than normal compensation, is essentially a fact question for Industrial Accident Commission, and its award will not be disturbed if its findings on such question are supported by any substantial evidence.

9. Workmen's compensation ⟹941

An employer's deliberate breach of law framed in workingmen's interests amounts to serious misconduct rendering employer liable for resulting injury to employee.

10. Workmen's compensation ⟹1674

Evidence was insufficient to warrant Industrial Accident Commission's finding that employer's failure to place guard on punch machine at point where operator thereof received injury constituted willful misconduct rendering employer liable for more than normal compensation under Workmen's Compensation Act.

11. Workmen's compensation ⟹1765

The Industrial Accident Commission being judicial body exercising judicial functions, its decisions and awards are subject to general legal principles circumscribing and regulating all judicial tribunals' judgments.

12. Workmen's compensation ⚷1738

A finding of Industrial Accident Commission may be declared sufficient by reference to record, including evidence. St. 1937, p. 294, § 5315.

13. Workmen's compensation ⚷1738

The Industrial Accident Commission's findings must be such that truth or falsity of each material allegation in issue can be demonstrated from such findings. St.1937, pp. 294, 301, §§ 5315, 5800.

14. Workmen's compensation ⚷1913

Where neither referee nor Industrial Accident Commission made findings on issue, presented to commission by amended application, filed just before hearing on application for adjustment of compensation claim, as to whether employer was guilty of serious and willful misconduct in directing inexperienced person to work on guardless punch machine, District Court of Appeal cannot pass on soundness of theory of rehearing referee, reporting on such subject, in proceeding to review commission's findings and award of more than normal compensation on ground of employer's serious and willful misconduct in failing to have guard on machine. St.1937, pp. 294, 301, §§ 5313, 5315, 5800.

Special proceeding by the Simmons Company to review the Industrial Accident Commission's findings and award of more than normal compensation to Doris Tringale, petitioner's employee, for personal injuries.

Award annulled, and cause remanded to the commission.

Keith & Creede, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Everett A. Corten and Joseph Sheehan, both of San Francisco, for respondent Industrial Accident Commission.

WARD, Justice.

This cause is presented as a petition to review the findings and an award of the Industrial Accident Commission based upon the alleged "serious and wilful misconduct of the employer" wherein it was held that the injury to the applicant for industrial compensation resulted from the failure "to have in place a guard upon the machine upon which applicant was hurt at or near the point where she was required to handle its operation." In addition to normal compensation an award of fifty per cent was imposed on the employer.

On or about July 14, 1944, Doris Tringale filed an application for adjustment of a claim, alleging that on March 7, 1944, arising out of and in the course of her employment an injury had occurred to the index and middle fingers of her right hand which resulted in their amputation. The application contained a general allegation of "wilful misconduct." An amended application dated August 21, 1944, was filed just prior to the hearing by the referee alleging "serious and wilful misconduct of employer in directing applicant a wholly inexperienced person to work on a guardless punch machine." On January 10, 1945, the referee to whom the application had been assigned filed a report containing the following:

"The controversy is whether the accident was caused by the serious and wilful misconduct of the employer. Almost immediately after it occurred, at least within 48 hours, an effective guard was installed at small cost. If it had been in place at the time, the accident would not have happened.

"No photographs are in the file. It is difficult to obtain a clear view unless one sees the machine in operation, which I did.

"As briefly as possible: Applicant was putting necks on canisters used in gas masks. The canister is a tin can open at one end with a small hole opening at the other where the neck goes on. The open end of the canister is put over a cylinder, which is upon a rod, all part of the machine. The rod is pulled out and then pushed back, when the canister is in place, under the press. The peddle is then tripped and the press, or plunger, with the neck comes down upon the canister and the neck is attached. The left hand is used to push the rod back and forth, the right to put the canister in place on the cylinder. This is the work applicant did. She claims she was adjusting the canister as it went back in place under the press. She must have had her fingers on top of the can as it went under the plunger, because they were cut off.

"As long as the fingers are kept off the top of the can, there is no danger. Now that there is a guard, the fingers can't get in under the plunger. A guard could have been in place at the time of the injury.

"The defendant says a guard was not required by 'Mechanical Power Transmission Safety Orders' of the Industrial Accident Commission, particularly Order 2601, the first paragraph of which reads: 'These orders shall also apply to all connecting rods * * * revolving or reciprocating parts up to but not including the "point of operation."' It is argued that by reason of this provision, the defendant is exempt from placing any guard at the point where the plunger contacted the horn of the cylinder. Just what is meant by the 'point of operation' is debatable. The witness Horswell, a Safety Engineer of the Commission, testified that in his opinion the 'point of operation' is the point where the operator stands and feeds objects into the machine. In accordance with this view no guard is necessary at the point where the injury is most likely to occur.

"To construe the point of operation as the point where the operator stands in front of the machine and feeds materials into it so as to make it unnecessary to guard moving parts in front of him would be to render Order #2601 inoperative. Rather I would be inclined to think the proper interpretation of the section would be to find a guard unnecessary only where materials could not be put into the machine, if at the point of operation, a guard was in place.

"Here it was entirely possible to put on a guard at small cost, which, when in place, would offer adequate protection and while in place would not interfere or hinder the work. Should the employer have realized this before the accident happened?

"To work on this machine undeniably had a tendency to draw applicant's fingers in and about the plunger where there was an open and obvious danger of serious injury. It was the kind of a danger, which, if the employer had turned his attention to it, he should have anticipated and corrected.

"If he did rely on the Safety Orders of the commission, he placed an erroneous interpretation upon them. The machine could have been guarded at small cost and the accident avoided.

"The employer should pay the applicant fifty per cent additional compensation and I so recommend."

[1] Considerable space is devoted by each side to the question whether there was a sufficient showing that if there was serious and wilful misconduct, it was the result of an act or the failure to act on the part of an "executive, managing officer or general superintendent." In the present case there is sufficient evidence from which to draw a reasonable inference that the foreman had been invested with general discretionary powers as managing officer and superintendent, with particular supervisory authority in the care and operation of the machine and the direction of forty employees in that "department" of the Simmons plant. Manifestly he was not "an employee occupying a relatively inferior and subservient position." Bechtel, etc., Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 25 Cal.2d 171, 177, 153 P.2d 331, 334; Gordon v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 199 Cal. 420, 249 P. 849, 58 A.L.R. 1374; Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 23 Cal.2d 659, 145 P.2d 583; California Shipbuilding Corp. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 64 Cal.App. 2d 622, 149 P.2d 432.

No recommendation or allusion is made in the report of the referee with reference to the allegations in the amended application relative to the employer's directing a wholly inexperienced applicant to work on a guardless punch machine.

Subsequent to the report of the referee, the commission on January 26, 1945, filed its findings and award and made a separate finding as follows: "Aforesaid injury was caused by the serious and wilful misconduct of the employer in that said employer failed to have in place a guard upon the machine upon which applicant was hurt at or near the point where she was required to handle its operation." The finding is limited to the failure of the employer "to have in place a guard upon the machine," but there is no finding that the employer knowingly and wilfully violated any provision required by "'Mechanical Power Transmission Safety Orders' of the Industrial Accident Commission, particularly Order 2601."

One of the safety inspectors for the Commission testified that prior to the accident he had inspected the machine in question and did not then or at any other time recommend that a guard should be placed "on that machine." Another safety engineer for the Commission testified: "We have never required guards on machines like that, and I have inspected hundreds of similar machines." The evidence shows that several months prior to the accident a security inspector representing a branch of the Security Command of the United States government interested in the manufacture of "gas masks," visited the Simmons plant and made certain recommendations for the "safety" of workers engaged in the manufacture of articles for the federal government, none of which required a guard on the machine in question. The only evidence upon which the finding of wilful misconduct may be based is the report of the referee who personally examined the machine after the accident.

In the absence of a specific order by the Industrial Accident Commission requiring a safety device, and in view of the opinions of safety engineers of the Commission and of the United States government that a safety device was not necessary, plus the report of the referee that the applicability of Order 2601 "is debatable," was the Commission justified, merely upon the referee's observation of the operation of the machine after the accident, in finding that there was substantial evidence that the employer was guilty of wilful misconduct in failing to place a guard on the machine? The applicant for compensation is not quite clear in her description of how the accident occurred. She had been operating the machine for over an hour. Contrary to the report of the referee, there is evidence that with the guard now on the machine it is still possible for a similar accident to occur, but it would "not be as easy as it was before."

[2] Ordinarily engineers qualified by training and experience are proper witnesses within the purview of their training. Such testimony includes evidence as to instruments propelled by power or mechanical force. 10 Cal.Jur. 1011. Whether a machine is of complicated construction, or its operation so simple that one educated in the law but untrained in the science of mechanical devices is able to say that a safety guard is necessary, are questions vital in the determination of this case. The members of the Commission who did not examine the machine must have determined that the referee's views, as expressed in the report, were superior to the opinions of the Commission's expert engineers.

[3, 4] The observations made by a referee in viewing the premises, or, as in this case, a mechanical device, may be considered by the Commission as evidence. Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 219 Cal. 699, 28 P.2d 919. The Commission is not bound by legally recognized rules of evidence but at least the evidence must have some degree of probative force. There is no evidence that the referee was an expert or knew anything about the construction or operation of this or any other mechanical device.

[5, 6] This is not a case where the trier of the facts may use his independent judgment against the opinion of one presumably skilled in subjects not within the knowledge of the ordinary person, and may determine a disputed question from observation. The facts here show, without contradiction, that the experts of the Commission did not think, prior to the accident, that a guard was necessary. The referee's opinion was formed as a sequence of the accident. The evidence shows that, with the guard, a similar accident would not be as likely to occur, but there is no evidence to show that, prior to the accident, any one knew, or should have known, that such an accident would occur to an ordinarily prudent person. The referee's report on this question is merely a surmise and conjecture which the law does not recognize as the basis of a finding. It is not substantial evidence. Thoreau v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 120 Cal.App. 67, 7 P.2d 767; Southern Pac. Co. v. Railroad Comm., 13 Cal.2d 125, 87 P.2d 1055; Pacific Emp. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 47 Cal.App.2d 494, 118 P.2d 334; Winthrop v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 213 Cal. 351, 2 P.2d 142. It is merely a fanciful Conclusion that does not raise the possibility of a conflict in the evidence. Brant v. Retirement Board of San Francisco, 57 Cal.App.2d 721, 135 P.2d 396. A recent expression of the view of the Supreme Court of this state appears in Pacific Freight Lines v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 26 Cal.2d 240, 157 P.2d 634, 637; "The law under which the commission functions is founded upon sound public policy and with the general objective of compensating the injured employee or his dependents for injuries or death resulting from the ordinary hazards of the employment. But where, as here, the uncontradicted and unimpeached evidence points unerringly to the conclusion that the death was caused solely by the intoxication of the employee, and there is no substantial evidence in conflict therewith, a finding to the contrary and an award based on such finding are not within the jurisdiction of the commission. Eagles Home Ass'n v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 140 Cal.App. 646, 648, 35 P.2d 591. * * * Here no 'rational view of the evidence', North Pacific Steamship Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 174 Cal. 500, 502, 163 P. 910, 911 supports the challenged finding of the commission." In this respect, when the employee makes a claim of wilful misconduct, which is a quasi criminal charge, it is incumbent upon the Commission to protect the substantial rights of all parties. It should not be amiss to repeat the accepted views on the subject of wilful misconduct.

[7-9] The views of the Supreme Court as set forth in the last three years are interesting. In Parkhurst v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 20 Cal.2d 826, 829–831, 129 P.2d 113, 115, it was said: "Serious and willful misconduct is conduct that the employer knew, or should have known, was likely to cause serious injury, or conduct that evinces a reckless disregard for the safety of others. [Citing cases.]" "It is true that not every violation of a statute is serious and willful misconduct. [Citing cases.]" "It is well settled that the question whether serious and willful misconduct of the employer caused the employee's injury is essentially one of fact, and that if there is any substantial evidence to support the findings of the commission its award will not be disturbed. Its award will be set aside, however, if there is no evidence to support its findings. Hatheway v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra [13 Cal.2d 377, 90 P.2d 68]; Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra [219 Cal. 699, 28 P.2d 919]." "The test under these cases is whether the employer knowingly or willfully committed an act that he knew or should have known was likely to cause harm to his employee." "'* * * Where there is a deliberate breach of a law * * *, which is framed in the interests of the working man, it will be held that such a breach * * * amounts to serious misconduct.' So spoke the court in Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 171 Cal. 728, 154 P. 834, 835, L.R.A.1916D, 903, annulling an award based on a finding that an employee whose injury resulted from a violation of speed laws was not guilty of serious and willful misconduct. The rule must be similarly applied to the conduct of an employer." The same rule is recognized in Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra. In the present case there is no "deliberate breach of a law."

In Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra [219 Cal. 699, 28 P.2d 923], inspectors employed by the Commission had visited the premises involved and made recommendation of "various unspecified changes," but did not make any recommendation with respect to a "ladder" from which the applicant in that case had fallen and suffered injuries. It was stated that the evidence "with respect to the visits of inspectors is too vague to support so bold an argument" as that the Commission had approved the use of the ladder without "handholds" which a specific safety order of the Commission required. The court held (219 Cal. at page 708, 28 P.2d at page 923): "The Industrial Accident Commission, in its administrative capacity, possesses no authority to waive or consent to the violation of a duty owing primarily and directly to the employee from the employer." In the present case there is no claim that the Commission waived a duty to an employee by the failure of the inspectors to examine the machine, thereby approving its construction. On the contrary, this particular machine was examined, approved at that time and specifically approved by safety inspectors as appears from testimony under oath before the referee. Ten years later upon facts somewhat similar to those in the Ethel D. Co. case and the present case, in Central Cal. Ice Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 66 Cal.App.2d 339, 346, 347, 152 P.2d 33, 36 (petition for hearing by the Supreme Court denied), it is said: "It is not enough to prove negligence or even gross negligence on the part of the employer in order to fasten the added liability on it. In addition there must be a wilful disregard of consequences with injury to the employee as a probable result." "This suggests that neither the Commission nor its inspectors regarded the practice involved here as dangerous. Otherwise the Commission should have performed the duty imposed upon it by law and should have prohibited the practices which are now, for the first time, urged as inherently dangerous. As the Commission must be charged with notice of these practices and as it failed to regard them as sufficiently dangerous to require the issuance of a safety order regulating them, as neither it nor its employees had even criticized the practices, and as no similar accident had happened in the ice industry, those practices should not be held to furnish grounds for concluding that their employment by petitioner constituted serious and wilful misconduct until the Industrial Accident Commission issues a safety order prohibiting or regulating either or both of them which is in its power to do if either practice creates a serious hazard to an employee. Bethlehem Steel Co. v. Industrial Acc.

Comm., 23 Cal.2d 659, 145 P.2d 583." On the foregoing reasoning an award of extra compensation based upon a finding of serious and wilful misconduct in continuing the particular practices was annulled. In the present case, the Commission's engineers did not think that the safety order covered the machine in question. The referee thought this question was debatable.

[10] Extensive liberality has been exercised by appellate courts in construing and upholding findings made by the Industrial Accident Commission, but in view of the facts in this case and the holding in the Central Ice Company case it is impossible to approve the present finding of the Commission that the failure to place a guard at the point where the applicant received the injury is wilful misconduct.

[11] The second question presented concerns the duty of the Commission in making an award to state its determination as to the rights of the parties and make findings upon all facts involved in the controversy. Labor Code, sec. 5800, St.1937, p. 301; Western Metal Supply Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 407, 156 P. 491, Ann.Cas. 1917E, 390. "Since the Industrial Accident Commission is a judicial body exercising judicial functions, its decisions and awards are subject to those general legal principles which circumscribe and regulate the judgments of all judicial tribunals." Gouanillou v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 184 Cal. 418, 420, 421, 193 P. 937, 938. Based upon the above rule it was stated in Taylor v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 38 Cal.App.2d 75, 80, 100 P.2d 511, 514: "Therefore, the sufficiency of the questioned finding must be determined in the light of rules applicable to such procedure in our courts. Section 5313 of the Labor Code provides that the referee shall report his findings in writing to the commission within fifteen days after the testimony is closed, and provides further that 'the facts found and conclusions of law shall be separately stated.' Section 5315 of the Labor Code clothes the commission with power to confirm, adopt, modify or set aside the report of the referee or any part thereof, and to enter its order, findings, decision or award, based in whole or in part upon the report of the referee, or upon the record in the case." The finding in the Taylor case differed from the finding in this case in that here there was a specific finding of failure to place a guard upon the machine upon which applicant was hurt instead of merely a general finding of wilful misconduct.

[12-14] In the present petition in addition to the difference in the form of the finding from that in the Taylor case, supra, an issue was presented to the Commission upon which neither the referee nor the Commission made a finding, though it was referred to by the "rehearing referee" in his recommendation to deny a motion for rehearing. Just before the hearing started an amended application for adjustment of claim was filed in which the charges of serious and wilful misconduct were based upon the act of directing "a wholly inexperienced person to work on a guardless punch machine." A finding may be declared sufficient by reference to the record, including the evidence (Ethel D. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra), but in the present case there is no finding on the amended allegations of wilful misconduct based upon failure to instruct an inexperienced employee. It is "essential that findings be such that the truth or falsity of each material allegation in issue can be demonstrated from the findings." Taylor v. Industrial Acc. Comm., supra, 38 Cal. App.2d at page 81, 100 P.2d at page 514. In a rehearing before the Commission there may appear substantial evidence from which a reasonable inference may be drawn that an inexperienced girl was directed to operate a mechanical instrument, and it is possible, depending upon circumstances, that the evidence may show such disregard of probable or possible consequences as to warrant a finding of serious and wilful misconduct on that issue. The rehearing referee reported on this subject. His theory may or may not be sound. On this writ of review it is impossible to pass on that question.

The award of additional benefits based upon the alleged serious and wilful misconduct of the petitioning employer's failure to "place a guard upon the machine," etc., is annulled. In view of the failure of the Commission to find on the issue presented in the amended application for compensation, the cause is remanded to make such finding as may seem proper to the Commission.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

26 Cal.2d 860

Ex parte GILLIAM.

Cr. 4640.

Supreme Court of California.

Aug. 31, 1945.

1. Criminal law ⟹1202(1)

Petitioner's conviction under federal statute fixing penalty for entering railroad boxcar with intent to commit larceny therein, which conviction petitioner admitted was for burglary, was an offense which could be considered in fixing petitioner's status as an habitual criminal under state statute. Pen.Code, §§ 459, 644; 18 U.S.C.A. § 409.

2. Criminal law ⟹1202(1)

The character of the institution and the inmates, together with the nature of the proceedings leading to confinement therein, determines the status of the institution as respects question whether it is a "prison" or "penitentiary" within meaning of habitual criminal statute, irrespective whether the institution may be called a "reformatory", a "prison", or a "penitentiary". Pen. Code, § 644.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Penitentiary" and "Prison".

3. Criminal law ⟹1202(1)

The serving of a term in the United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, upon conviction under federal statute relating to entering a railroad boxcar and committing larceny therein, constituted the service of a sentence in a federal "penitentiary", within meaning of state habitual criminal statute. Pen.Code, § 644; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 409, 831.

4. Criminal law ⟹1202(1)

That petitioner was 19 years of age at time he was sentenced to the United States Industrial Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, for "boxcar robbery", was not a governing factor in determining character of the reformatory for purposes of state habitual criminal statute. Pen.Code, § 644; 18 U.S.C.A. §§ 409, 831.

5. Criminal law ⟹1202(3)

Where petitioner was charged with prior convictions of felony and with service of term of imprisonment on each of the convictions, petitioner pleaded guilty to the three counts and admitted in open court that he had been previously convicted of two prior offenses and that he had served time in the penitentiary under such convictions, fact that petitioner had actually served terms of imprisonment on the prior convictions was sufficiently established so as to bring petitioner within habitual criminal statute. Pen.Code, § 644.

In Bank.

Proceeding in the matter of the application of Wilford Gilliam for a writ of habeas corpus to be discharged from custody.

Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

Prior opinion 157 P.2d 32.

Wilford Gilliam, in pro. per., and Thomas O'Hara, of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Arthur A. Ohnimus and James O. Reavis, Deputy Attys. Gen., for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

By this proceeding in habeas corpus petitioner challenges the propriety of the trial court's adjudication that he is an habitual criminal. Pen.Code, § 644.

The information contained three counts, respectively charging petitioner with burglary and with two prior convictions of felonies. One of the prior convictions was alleged to have been for burglary committed in Texas, for which judgment was "pronounced and rendered and the defendant served a term of imprisonment" in the Texas State Prison. The other prior conviction was alleged to have been for "box car robbery, a felony," for which "judgment [was] pronounced and rendered" and "defendant * * * was imprisoned in a Federal Prison known as 'U.S.I.R.' at Chillicothe, Ohio." The last-mentioned prison is the United States Industrial Reformatory "used for the confinement of male persons who have been or shall be convicted of offenses against the United States, * * * and sentenced for terms of imprisonment for more than one year, with or without hard labor, except those who have been convicted previously of an offense punishable by imprisonment for more than one year, and except also those convicted of treason, murder in the first or second degree, rape or arson, and those sentenced to life imprisonment." 18 U.S.C.A. § 831. Upon arraignment, petitioner pleaded guilty to the principal charge of burglary, and admitted the two prior felony convictions and the service of the terms of imprisonment as alleged.

Following such plea and admissions, the trial court determined the principal crime to be burglary in the second degree, adjudged petitioner an habitual criminal as required by law, Pen.Code, § 644, and sentenced him to State Prison "for the term prescribed by law on Counts One, Two and Three of the information."

Petitioner claims to be illegally deprived of his liberty and in support thereof he argues that the trial court erred in these respects: (1) in holding his conviction of "box car robbery" and imprisonment therefor to be a "qualified prior" within the provisions of section 644 of the Penal Code; and (2) in adjudging him to be an habitual criminal without taking evidence on the point. The cited code section, so far as pertinent to petitioner's contentions, reads as follows: "Every person convicted in this State of any felony who shall have been previously twice convicted upon charges separately brought and tried, and who shall have served separate terms therefor in any State prison and/or Federal penitentiary, either in this State or elsewhere, of the crime of * * * burglary * * * shall be adjudged an habitual criminal and shall be punished by imprisonment in the State prison for life."

[1] Petitioner first maintains that the prior conviction for "box car robbery" should not be considered in fixing his status as an habitual criminal because that offense is not one of those enumerated in section 644. The record herein includes a certified copy of the writ of commitment which was issued in the matter of the designated offense and which recites that petitioner "was indicted * * * for having * * * violated sec. 409 of the U.S. Code—robbery of interstate shipments of freight, etc., contrary to the statutes of the United States in such case made and provided; and the said accused was convicted of said charge. * * *" Referring to said section 409 captioned "Larceny, etc., of goods in interstate or foreign commerce; penalty," 18 U.S.C.A. § 409, the following provision is pertinent: "Whoever * * * shall enter any [railroad] car [containing interstate or foreign shipments of freight or express] with intent * * * to commit larceny therein * * * shall * * * be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both * * *." Our statutes contain a correlative provision in section 459 of the Penal Code where it is provided that "every person who enters any * * * railroad car * * * with intent to commit grand or petit larceny or any felony is guilty of burglary." At the time for sentence, petitioner was interrogated as to the nature of the two prior convictions and he stated: "They were for Burglary." As so admitted by petitioner, his offense against the federal statute manifestly comes within the import and intent of section 644, expressly specifying burglary among the enumerated crimes for consideration by the trial court in passing judgment. Upon such basis this case is distinguishable from People v. Lohr, 28 Cal.App.2d 397, 82 P.2d 615, cited by petitioner, because in that case the record furnished "no assistance" as to which section of the federal act there involved defendant had transgressed. Accordingly, it was said there at page 399, of 28 Cal.App.2d, at page 617 of 82 P.2d: "We must therefore assume that defendant was convicted of the violation of that portion of the * * * Act which" was the least offense thereunder, one not comparable with any of the enumerated felonies in said section 644. Likewise the record before us does not involve an "unindentified" crime as was the situation in People v. McChesney, 39 Cal.App.2d 36, 102 P.2d 455. Rather, the record here affirmatively establishes that the prior conviction in question does fulfill the statutory requirement, Pen.Code, § 644.

[2] With reference to this same prior conviction, petitioner next takes the position that the term of imprisonment served therefor does not come within the contemplation of section 644, because, he contends, that section of the Penal Code is based upon the serving of a term in any state prison or federal penitentiary, and not upon the serving of a term in a federal reformatory. In this connection he argues that a "reformatory" is distinguishable from a penal institution such as a "prison" or "penitentiary" because the primary purpose of a reformatory is to educate, discipline, and reform the persons confined therein rather than to punish them for their crimes. But this attempted general distinction, based merely upon the name which may be given to an institution, is of but little, if any, assistance in solving the question presented, for under enlightened modern practices the object of reformation may be as characteristic of the scheme of management of a so-called prison or penitentiary as it is of a reformatory. Webster's New International Dictionary, 2d Ed., pp. 1810, 1968. Rather it is the character of the institution and its inmates together with the nature of the proceedings leading to confinement therein which determine its status in relation to the language of the code section under consideration. The word "penitentiary" may be used in a sense sufficiently broad to include a "reformatory" (50 C.J. § 3, Penitentiary, p. 330; State v. Vaughn, 15 Okl. Cr. 187, 175 P. 731), and so it would appear here with reference to the federal reformatory wherein petitioner was imprisoned.

[3, 4] As declared by federal statute, 18 U.S.C.A. § 831, supra, the "United States Industrial Reformatory" at Chillicothe, Ohio, is used for the confinement of male persons who have been convicted of offenses against the United States, with certain exceptions, and who have been sentenced for terms of imprisonment for more than one year. Said statute also provides that "it shall be sufficient for the courts to sentence said class of offenders to imprisonment in the penitentiary without specifying the particular penitentiary or the United States industrial reformatory, and the imprisonment shall be in such penitentiary or the United States industrial reformatory as the Attorney General shall from time to time designate." (Italics ours.) The provision for general sentence by the court of the designated class of offenders and for the attorney general's exercise of discretion in determining the place of imprisonment clearly indicates that the above-mentioned reformatory was nothing more or less than a particular type of penitentiary under the federal scheme for confinement of prisoners. Under similar considerations but involving the additional factor of an age limitation not here present, a state reformatory for the imprisonment of persons between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five years was held to be a "sub-prison or penitentiary" with respect to application of the Habitual Criminal Act. Hudson v. State, Okl.Cr., 145 P.2d 774, 776. Moreover in this state, it has been held that "imprisonment in the men's state reformatory [of Nebraska] * * * constitutes the 'serving of a term' in a state prison within the meaning of" section 644 of the Penal Code. In re Brady, 5 Cal.2d 224, 225, 53 P.2d 945. In contrast are proceedings under the Juvenile Court Law of this state (Welfare and Institutions Code, § 550 et seq., Stats. 1937, ch. 369, p. 1021), whereby "any person under the age of twenty-one years" is adjudged to be "a ward of the juvenile court" and is committed as such ward to a state industrial school for a period of time which may extend until he attains his majority. This precise situation is discussed in Ex parte Nichols, 110 Cal. 651, 43 P. 9, 10, where the Whittier Reform School is distinguished from a state prison because as a correctional institution for its inmates, its object "is not punishment, but reformation, discipline, and education." The distinction is further clarified in People v. DeFehr, 81 Cal.App. 562, at page 574, 254 P. 588, 593, where it is held that commitment to a reform school under the Juvenile Court Law of this state "does not involve a criminal prosecution or a judgment of sentence." The federal reformatory here involved is obviously not at all akin to a training school for juvenile offenders who are committed to the custody of such school but who are not confined therein under sentence of imprisonment. This reformatory is defined as a place "for the confinement of male persons," regardless of age, who have been "sentenced for terms of imprisonment for more than one year." Despite the fact that this institution is called a reformatory, it is clearly a penal institution established for the usual purpose of imposing punishment under sentence of imprisonment as well as for the purpose of effecting the reformation of the inmates. Petitioner's age at the time of sentence—nineteen years—is not a governing factor here in determining the character of the federal reformatory for the purposes of the habitual criminal statute of this state. It would be unreasonable to hold that confinement under sentence of a man twenty-two years of age in such reformatory constitutes service of a term of imprisonment in a "federal penitentiary" while like confinement under sentence of a minor is not to be similarly regarded. The federal statute in question furnishes no ground for such distinction as to inmates of the reformatory on the basis of age, and a reasonable interpretation of section 644 of the Penal Code warrants the conclusion that petitioner's service of sentence in such reformatory constitutes "the serving of a term in a federal penitentiary" within the meaning of that section. Cf. People v. Salisbury, 29 Cal.App.2d 697, 85 P.2d 456.

[5] Petitioner finally argues that no proof was made that he had actually served terms of imprisonment on the prior convictions, and that the trial court's adjudication of his status as an habitual criminal may not therefore be sustained. In re Bertrand, 61 Cal.App.2d 183, 142 P.2d 351. A review of the proceedings had at the arraignment and sentence of petitioner readily distinguishes the record here from that prevailing in the cited case and demonstrates that petitioner's point of objection is without merit. By Counts II and III of the information petitioner herein was expressly charged with two prior convictions of felony and with the service of a term of imprisonment on each of said prior convictions. On arraignment, petitioner pleaded guilty to "count one, count two and count three." Later at the time of sentence, petitioner, in response to a question as to how long he had followed a certain trade, answered: "I followed that occupation after I left the reformatory." Also pertinent to the point of petitioner's previous penal terms is the following testimony: "Q. How many times have you been convicted of a felony? A. Two. Q. And what were they for? A. They were for Burglary. One was committed and the other one I was supposed to plead guilty to a charge and it was carried through." Then, as authorized by law in pursuance of petitioner's plea and admissions of prior convictions and imprisonment as charged, the trial court formally adjudged petitioner to be an "habitual criminal, he having suffered two prior confinements." In re Boatwright, 216 Cal. 677, 15 P.2d 755.

Petitioner's reliance on the Bertrand case, supra, is of no avail because there, in contrast to the present record, the information contained "no allegation that defendant had served terms of imprisonment on any of the prior convictions"; his admission on arraignment that "he had suffered the prior convictions 'charged in the information'" was "only an admission that he had suffered said prior convictions and not that he had served terms of imprisonment thereon"; "no proof was made to the court that he had ever served such terms of imprisonment"; "the trial court did not adjudge him to be an habitual criminal"; and in consequence of these deficiencies in the record, "the Board of Prison Terms and Paroles acted without authority of law in fixing his term at life imprisonment." 61 Cal.App.2d at pages 184, 185, 142 P.2d at page, 352. A complete answer to petitioner's argument is found in the recent case of People v. Stone, Cal.App., 159 P.2d 701, 702: "Contention that the trial court's judgment is erroneous because it did not take evidence upon the question of the prior convictions is utterly without merit. It is not an arbitrary judgment of the court when it adjudicates a prisoner to be an habitual criminal after he admits in open court two prior convictions for felonies and service of prison terms therefor at the time of his pleading guilty to the felony charged in the pending accusation. The confession of a prisoner at the bar of his guilt as charged as well as of the truth of the allegation of prior convictions is, in the absence of insane delusions, most satisfactory evidence upon which to convict and will support a judgment that he is an habitual criminal. People v. Nicholson, 34 Cal.App. 2d 327, 93 P.2d 223; In re Boatwright, 216 Cal. 677, 15 P.2d 755; People v. Dawson, 210 Cal. 366, 292 P. 267; People v. Birdsell, 6 Cal.App.2d 749, 45 P.2d 378."

The writ is discharged and petitioner is remanded to custody.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SCHAUER, JJ., concurred.

26 Cal.2d 867

BROWN v. REPUBLIC PRODUCTIONS, Inc., et al.

L. A. 19145.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 14, 1945.

1. Literary property ⊂⇒4, 9

A motion picture company's and music publishing company's use of all music and portion of lyrics of musical composition in revised composition with same title, pursuant to license agreement executed by two of three authors and owners of original composition without third owner's knowledge or consent, did not destroy original composition or third owner's rights therein as matter of law, but question whether such destruction resulted was fact issue requiring proof by competent evidence in third owner's action against such companies for damages.

2. Literary property ⊂⇒9

A judgment, requiring two of three authors and owners of musical composition to account to third owner for profits realized from use of revised composition by such other owners and their licensees, but denying third owner any relief as against licensees, was not erroneous as wholly destroying such owner's rights in original composition, from which his rights in revised composition necessarily derived.

3. Appeal and error ⚷704(2)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, error cannot be predicated on trial court's failure to find on an issue raised by pleadings, in absence of a record showing introduction of sufficient evidence on such issue to sustain finding for appellant.

4. Appeal and error ⚷907(3)

On appeal on judgment roll alone, where no record, showing introduction of evidence sufficient to sustain finding for appellant on issue as to which trial court failed to find, is presented, Supreme Court must assume that finding on such issue would have been adverse to appellant.

◆

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Suit by George R. Brown against the Republic Productions, Inc., Mills, Music, Inc., and others for plagiarism, infringement, and conversion or destruction of the music, lyrics and title of a musical composition. From a portion of the judgment rendered, denying plaintiff relief against named defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 156 P.2d 40.

See, also, 161 P.2d 798.

Ray Sandler, of Los Angeles, Max Fink, of Hollywood, and Robert Kingsley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loeb & Loeb, Herman F. Selvin, and Milton H. Schwartz, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

In this suit brought by plaintiff for the plagiarism, infringement, conversion or destruction of the music, lyrics and title of a certain musical composition known as "Puddin' Head," plaintiff appeals, on the judgment roll alone, from such portion of the judgment rendered by the trial court, sitting without a jury, as denies to plaintiff relief by injunction, damages, or otherwise, against a motion picture company and a music publishing company.

The court found, among other things, that plaintiff, and defendants Jule Styne and Sol Meyer, were the coauthors and coowners of the composition; that before publication thereof defendant Styne, within the scope of his employment by defendant Republic Productions, Inc., used all of the music and a portion of the lyrics of the composition by incorporating them in a similar composition also entitled "Puddin' Head," and that defendants Styne and Republic Productions, Inc., thereby altered and changed the original lyrics of plaintiff and his coauthors with knowledge of plaintiff's rights; that thereafter defendant Republic Productions, Inc., used the revised composition in a motion picture produced by it which had been and is being distributed by it for profit; that defendant Mills Music, Inc., has distributed and is distributing for profit copies of the revised composition; that the use by the two corporate defendants of the revised composition was made pursuant to a written agreement executed by Styne and Meyer permitting and licensing such use; and that the alteration of the original composition and the licensing and use by defendants of the revised product were done without plaintiff's knowledge or consent and without compensating him.

From such findings the court concluded that plaintiff was entitled to an accounting against his coowners Styne and Meyer for profits realized and to be realized by them from the use of the revised composition, but that he was entitled to nothing as against defendants Republic Productions, Inc., and Mills Music, Inc. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Plaintiff in support of his appeal from the latter portion of the judgment earnestly contends that, as alleged by him in his complaint, the effect of the use by defendants of the revised composition "now is, and unless * * * enjoined, will continue to be, the impairment and destruction of plaintiff's property and property rights" (italics added) and that therefore plaintiff is entitled to relief against the two corporate defendants in addition to that awarded him against his coauthors, defendants Styne and Meyer. He concedes that if the composition had been used in its original form he could not recover against the corporate defendants, inasmuch as Styne and Meyer as owners in common with plaintiff of the original composition were severally entitled to use the composition and to license others to use it without first securing plaintiff's consent. (See Klein v. Beach (D.C.1916), 232 F. 240, 247; Id. (2 Cir., 1917), 239 F. 108, 151 C.C.A. 282; Lee Chuck v. Quan Wo Chong & Co. (1891), 91 Cal. 593, 598, 599, 28 P. 45; Dinsmore v. Renfroe (1924), 66 Cal.App. 207, 214, 225 P. 886; Herbert v. Fields (Sup., 1915), 152 N.Y.S. 487, 489.) But he asserts that the acts of defendants amount to more than a license and user of the original composition; that they amount to a destruction thereof; that the authority of a cotenant over literary property is not different from the authority of a cotenant over tangible personal property; and that such authority, as to tangible property, does not extend to acts of destruction or to the rendering impossible of further enjoyment of the common property by another cotenant. In support of such assertion plaintiff cites Shafter, Musical Copyright (1939), pp. 165–166; Yadkoe v. Fields (1944), 66 Cal.App.2d 150, 159, 151 P.2d 906. (See, also, Herbert v. Fields (1915), supra, 152 N.Y.S. 487; Amdur, Copyright Law and Practice (1936), p. 835; Horn v. Klatt (1944), 65 Cal.App.2d 510, 517, 151 P.2d 149.) However, for the reasons hereinafter stated, we find it wholly unnecessary in the disposition of this appeal to resolve the propositions of law asserted in the contentions above stated.

[1, 2] The trial court made no finding as to whether plaintiff's property (the original composition) or his property rights therein were destroyed in whole or in part by the enumerated acts of defendants. Whether a destruction resulted was an issue of fact requiring proof by competent evidence. The use to which parts of the composition were put by defendants does not by itself show destruction of the original composition or plaintiff's rights therein. Under the judgment plaintiff is to be compensated for rights in the rewritten composition. This, in itself, is in a measure inconsistent with the theory that he has been wholly deprived of his rights in and under the original literary property; his interest in and rights under the revised composition necessarily derive only from his interest in and rights under the original. Hence such rights are being recognized and given efficacy rather than being wholly destroyed.

[3, 4] As mentioned above, this is an appeal on the judgment roll alone and the evidence introduced in the trial court is not before us. Therefore, as stated in Delanoy v. Delanoy (1932), 216 Cal. 23, 27, 13 P.2d 513, 514, "Even though it appears that the trial court failed to find on an issue raised by the pleadings [i. e., the issue of destruction of the musical composition], error cannot be predicated upon such failure in the absence of a record showing that evidence was introduced on such issue sufficient to sustain a finding on behalf of appellant. 2 Cal.Jur. 525, § 262. In order to warrant the reversal of a judgment for failure to find on an issue, it must be shown by the record on appeal that evidence sufficient to sustain a finding for the complaining party was introduced. 24 Cal.Jur. 947, § 189. No such record has been presented. We must assume, therefore, that, had a finding been made on the issue, it would have been adverse to appellant." (See, also, Franklin v. Bettencourt (1936), 16 Cal.App.2d 511, 513, 60 P.2d 1017; Klein v. Maddox (1943), 59 Cal.App.2d 141, 146, 138 P.2d 28; 2 Cal.Jur. § 614, p. 1034.)

Plaintiff makes no other attack on the judgment and therefore, for the reasons stated above, the portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

26 Cal.2d 874

BROWN v. REPUBLIC PRODUCTIONS, Inc., et al.

L. A. No. 19146.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 14, 1945.

Literary property ⟹9

A judgment, awarding one of three authors and owners of musical composition an accounting against other owners for profits from use and sale of revised composition by motion picture company and music publishing company under licenses granted by such owners without third owner's knowledge or consent, but denying him relief against such companies, was not erroneous as destroying his rights in original composition.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Thomas C. Gould, Judge.

Suit by George R. Brown against Republic Productions, Inc., Mills Music, Inc., and others for plagiarism, infringement and conversion or destruction of the music, lyrics and titles of certain musical compositions. From a portion of the judgment rendered, denying plaintiff relief against named defendants, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Prior opinion, 156 P.2d 42.

Ray Sandler, of Los Angeles, Max Fink, of Hollywood, and Robert Kingsley, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Loeb & Loeb, Herman F. Selvin, and Milton H. Schwartz, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SCHAUER, Justice.

The controlling issue in this case is basically the same as that of Brown v. Republic Productions, Inc., 161 P.2d 796, our opinion in which has been this day filed and reference to which is suggested for a statement of pertinent facts. The cases may be said to differ only in that the findings establish that the extent to which portions of the original compositions were incorporated in the revised productions is substantially smaller here. The musical compositions involved are five: "All This and Heaven Too," "Peek-a-Boo," "I Could Love You Any Time At All," "Hunky-Dunky-Dory," and "Bonita Lolita."

The court found that plaintiff, and defendants Styne and Meyer, were coauthors and coowners of the music and lyrics of such songs; that prior to publication thereof defendants Styne and Meyer, within the scope of their employment by defendant Republic Productions, Inc., used certain portions of the music and lyrics of the several compositions by incorporating them into other compositions with various titles; that such use was made with full knowledge of plaintiff's rights in the original compositions; that thereafter defendant Republic Productions, Inc., used the revised compositions in various motion pictures produced by it which had been and are being distributed by it for profit; that defendant Mills Music, Inc., has distributed and is distributing for profit copies of the revised compositions; that the use by the two corporate defendants of the revised compositions was made pursuant to a written agreement executed by Styne and Meyer permitting and licensing such use; and that alteration of the original compositions and the licensing and use by defendants of the revised products were done without plaintiff's knowledge or consent and without compensating him.

Plaintiff was awarded judgment requiring defendants Styne and Meyer to account to him for profits from the revised compositions, but was denied relief against the corporate defendants. Plaintiff's argument in support of his appeal is substantially the same as that advanced in the companion case, mentioned hereinabove. Here, as in that case, the appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. We are satisfied that the mere fact that the findings here establish that the extent to which portions of the original compositions were incorporated in the rewritten productions is substantially smaller than in the preceding case cannot alter our conclusion. In neither case has the court found, directly or in effect, that the plaintiff's rights have been destroyed. In both cases the judgments award an accounting for plaintiff's interest in profits from the rewritten compositions. For the reasons stated above and in the opinion therein referred to, the portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK, EDMONDS, CARTER, TRAYNOR, and SPENCE, JJ., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 785

MORGAN et ux. v. FRENCH.

Civ. 12929.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 19, 1945.

1. Courts 🔑122

Complaint, in action brought in superior court for actual and exemplary damages exceeding $1,000, alleging that defendant unlawfully entered into residence of plaintiffs, stated facts giving court jurisdiction of defendant's person and of the subject matter irrespective of special demurrer on ground of ambiguity, since such fact could not affect superior court's jurisdiction. Code Civ.Proc. § 112; Const. art. 6, § 5.

2. Trespass 🔑40(1)
Trover and conversion 🔑32(1)

Complaint, in action for actual and exemplary damages, alleging that defendant wrongfully and by force and without authority by plaintiffs entered their residence during their absence and took certain enumerated articles belonging to plaintiffs and converted them to her own use and that discovery of unlawful entry caused plaintiffs to suffer fright, nervousness, and humiliation, was sufficient to state cause of action in tort.

3. Action 🔑45(3)

A complaint joining cause of action for alleged injury to person and property of plaintiffs was not demurrable on ground of misjoinder. Code Civ.Proc. § 427.

4. Evidence 🔑14

That the burglary of one's home causes fright and nervousness and injury to the feeling of the homeowner is a matter of common knowledge.

5. Evidence 🔑14

That another has unlawfully made a search of one's personal belongings, papers, and clothing causes injury to the feeling of the owner is a matter of common knowledge.

6. Pleading 🔑192(2)

Complaint, in action for exemplary damages, alleging that defendant unlawfully entered plaintiffs' residence and unlawfully searched plaintiffs' personal belongings, and that discovery caused mental anguish to plaintiffs and thereafter to suffer from fright, nervousness, and humiliation, was not demurrable for ambiguity and uncertainty on ground that it could not be ascertained how plaintiffs sustained such mental sufferings.

7. Trespass 🔑40(5)
Trover and conversion 🔑32(6)

Where complaint sought only damages to extent of value of personalty allegedly unlawfully taken by defendant from plaintiffs' residence, complaint was not demurrable on ground that it could not be ascertained whether damage was caused to plaintiffs' realty or personalty.

8. Pleading 🔑192(2)
Trespass 🔑50

Plaintiffs, who sued for actual and exemplary damages for alleged unlawful entry of defendant into plaintiffs' residence, would be entitled under statute to interest from date of unlawful entry, if plaintiffs should succeed in proving that entry was made maliciously; hence, fact that plaintiffs pleaded for interest at a rate of 7% did not make pleading demurrable as ambiguous or uncertain. Civ.Code, § 3288.

9. Pleading 🔑8(6)

Complaint, alleging that defendant deliberately and willfully without plaintiffs' authority entered plaintiffs' residence for purpose of injuring plaintiffs, did not plead a conclusion of law, but pleaded facts showing malice so as to state a cause of action for exemplary damages under statute authorizing recovery of exemplary damages if defendant was guilty of malice. Civ. Code, § 3294; Code Civ. Proc. § 1962.

10. Damages 🔑151

A complaint which pleads deliberate commission of an unlawful act for purpose of injuring another pleads the only facts necessary to put in play conclusive presumption of a malicious and guilty intent, so as to warrant recovery of exemplary damages under statute. Civ.Code, § 3294; Code Civ.Proc. § 1962.

11. Damages 🔑163(1)

Before statutory conclusive presumption of a malicious and guilty intent arises so as to authorize recovery of exemplary damages, commission of an unlawful act, that its commission was deliberate, and that it was committed with deliberate purpose of injuring plaintiff, must be established. Civ. Code, § 3294; Code Civ.Proc. § 1962.

12. Damages ⚷91(1)

A malicious motive or intent so to authorize recovery of exemplary damages will be presumed or implied in law from intentional commission of a wrongful act which causes injury to another. Civ.Code, § 3294.

13. Damages ⚷91(1)

Though it may appear that party acted without hatred or revenge, if he acted wantonly, doing what any man of reasonable intelligence must have known to be contrary to his duty, and purposely prejudicial and injurious to another, the law will imply malice, so as to warrant recovery of exemplary damages. Civ.Code, § 3294.

14. Damages ⚷91(1), 163(1)

Legal "malice" so as to authorize recovery of exemplary damages means wrongful intention to do harm which the law always presumes as accompanying a wrongful act without any proof of malice in fact. Civ.Code, § 3294.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Malice".

15. Courts ⚷122

Whether superior court has jurisdiction of action is to be determined on demurrer to complaint upon amount of "the demand" and not upon what may then be deemed to be the probable recovery. Code Civ.Proc. § 112; Const. art. 6, § 5.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; Maxwell McNutt, Judge.

Action by Rupert Morgan and wife against Mary Belle French for actual and exemplary damages for an alleged unlawful entry of defendant into plaintiffs' residence. From a judgment sustaining defendant's demurrer to the complaint, plaintiffs appeal.

Reversed.

Sefton & Quattrin, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for respondent.

NOURSE, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiffs sued for actual and exemplary damages for the alleged unlawful entry of defendant into the residence of plaintiffs. A demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained; the plaintiffs declined to amend further; and defendant took judgment. We will herein refer to the second amended complaint as the "complaint."

This alleges that the defendant "wrongfully and by force" entered the residence of plaintiffs during their absence, conducted a search of plaintiffs' household goods, clothing, and personal effects, and "took" certain enumerated articles therefrom which belonged to plaintiffs and converted them to her own use; that the entry and taking "were without any authority or consent by the plaintiffs"; that in "so entering" into the home of plaintiffs "the defendant was guilty of malice in that said entry was deliberately and wilfully made by the defendant for the purpose of injuring the plaintiffs, and said entry constituted an unlawful act." Then follows an allegation that the discovery of the unlawful entry caused plaintiffs "mental anguish and thereafter to suffer from fright, apprehension, nervousness, disgrace and humiliation."

Damages were prayed in the sum of $19—the value of the articles taken; $1,000 for the unlawful entry; $10,000 as exemplary damages; and interest at 7% a year from June 22, 1944, the date of the entry.

[1-7] The defendant demurred on eleven grounds. The first and second are that the complaint does not state facts giving the court jurisdiction of the person, and of the subject matter. Both are without merit. The third ground urged is the failure to state a cause of action. The complaint pleads a case in tort with alleged injury to the person and property of plaintiffs and clearly, though briefly, pleads a cause of action. The fourth ground claims a misjoinder of causes of action. Defendant has failed to observe section 427 of the Code of Civil Procedure which permits the joinder of causes of action for injuries to person and to property. Under the fifth ground the defendant claims that the complaint was ambiguous because it can not be ascertained therefrom how the plaintiffs suffered from fright, nervousness, humiliation and had their feelings injured. It is a matter of common knowledge that the burglary of one's home causes fright and nervousness and injury to the feelings of the home owner. The knowledge that another has unlawfully made a search of one's personal belongings, papers and clothing may also cause suffering. It was not necessary to plead any further facts in this respect. The same may be said as to the sixth ground relating to the allegations that plaintiffs suffered mental anguish by the alleged unlawful entry of their home. The seventh ground asserting ambiguity in that it can not be ascertained if damage was caused to the real or personal property of plaintiffs does not present any debatable question. The complaint does not seek damages for injuries to real property, but does claim damages to the extent of the value of the personal property alleged to have been taken.

[8] The eighth ground asserts ambiguity in that it can not be ascertained how plaintiffs are entitled to ask for interest from the date of the unlawful entry. This is not a question of ambiguity or uncertainty. Section 3288 of the Civil Code provides that in every case of oppression, fraud or malice interest may be given in the discretion of the jury. If plaintiffs succeed in proving that the unlawful entry was made maliciously, they would be entitled to interest under this section, and the fact that they pleaded for interest at the rate of 7% does not make the pleading either ambiguous or uncertain. The tenth and eleventh grounds merely asserted that the complaint is unintelligible and uncertain for the same reasons theretofore asserted as to its ambiguity.

[9, 10] The ninth ground presents the only debatable question. It is there argued that the complaint is ambiguous because it can not be ascertained therefrom what acts, if any, of the defendant entitled plaintiffs to ask for exemplary damages. The defendant relies upon the dictum found in Avakian v. Noble, 121 Cal. 216, 218, 53 P. 559, where the court said: "It may be conceded that, as against a special demurrer for uncertainty or ambiguity, the complaint would be bad, and that plaintiff would have been required to allege in a more specific manner the circumstances showing oppression or malice in the doing of the act complained of, in order to entitle him to damages in excess of the actual value of the property taken." In that case the plaintiff recovered both actual and exemplary damages upon a complaint alleging that the defendants "unlawfully, oppressively, and with force and arms," took and carried away a certain lot of raisins to the value of $300. It was conceded that the verdict of $500 included an award for exemplary damages. In affirming the judgment the supreme court, after using the language heretofore quoted, held that the point was not before it because no special demurrer had been interposed, and all the evidence showing the circumstances of aggravation was admitted without objection. The difference between the complaint there considered and the one before us is substantial. Here the plaintiffs rely upon malice; there the plaintiff relied upon oppression only. Here the complaint alleges that the entry was deliberate and wilful, made for the purpose of injuring the plaintiffs and that the entry was without authority or consent of the plaintiffs. Thus all the facts tending to show malice that could have been pleaded are pleaded with such certainty that no one could have any doubt as to their meaning. The argument that the complaint merely pleads a conclusion of law is not sound. Section 3294 of the Civil Code provides that a party may recover exemplary damages where the "defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied." Malice is not only "implied" but it is conclusively presumed "from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act, for the purpose of injuring another." Section 1962, Code Civ.Proc. This conclusive presumption precedes all rebuttable presumptions, implications and inferences which may be drawn from facts proved. Where a complaint pleads the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another, it pleads the only facts necessary to put in play the conclusive presumption of a malicious and guilty intent. That the alleged burglary and petty theft of articles taken from plaintiffs' residence are unlawful acts within the meaning of section 1962 can not be questioned.

[11] The complaint was thus complete in alleging the malicious acts on the part of the defendant which entitled plaintiffs to sue for exemplary damages under the code section. This is in accord with the rule stated in Davis v. Hearst, 160 Cal. 143, 167, 116 P. 530, 541: "The only presumption of our law touching malice in fact is that announced in section 1962, Code of Civil Procedure, which declares as a conclusive presumption 'the existence of a malicious and guilty intent from the deliberate commission of an unlawful act for the purpose of injuring another.' But before this presumption arises, the jury is to find as facts (1) the commission of an unlawful act; (2) that its commission was deliberate; and (3) that it was committed with the deliberate purpose of injuring another. In these three findings it will be noted are all the elements of malice in fact." In harmony with this is Clark v. McClurg, 215 Cal. 279, 284, 9 P.2d 505, 507, 81 A.L.R. 908, where the supreme court states: "The law presumes that general damages follow from the utterance or publication of matter slanderous or libelous per se. Hence where, as here, the publication is slanderous or libelous per se, and is false and unprivileged, a cause of action for actual or compensatory damages is conclusively established." (Citing cases)

[12, 13] "A malicious motive or intent will be presumed or implied in law from the intentional commission of a wrongful act which causes injury to another." 34 Am. Jur. p. 685. And though it may appear that the party acted without hatred or revenge "if he acted wantonly, doing what any man of reasonable intelligence must have known to be contrary to his duty, and purposely prejudicial and injurious to another, the law will imply malice." 34 Am.Jur. p. 683.

[14] Hence legal malice means no more than the wrongful intention to do harm which the law always presumes as accompanying a wrongful act, without any proof of malice in fact. Star Pub. Co. v. Donahoe, Del., 58 A. 513, 65 L.R.A. 980.

[15] We have heretofore said that the demurrer to the jurisdiction is not well taken. It should be added that respondent supports her plea on this assignment with the argument relating to her special demurrer on the allegations supporting plaintiffs demand for exemplary damages. It is argued that since the complaint is ambiguous in this respect the amount in controversy appears to be less than $1,000, and hence that the superior court did not have jurisdiction within the provisions of section 112 of the Code of Civil Procedure. But the complaint is not vulnerable to the general demurrer. It pleads a cause of action within the jurisdiction of the superior court, and the special demurrer for ambiguity can not affect the question of the court's jurisdiction. This is so because all the grounds urged in that special demurrer might be waived as was done in Avakian v. Noble, supra. In respect to the amount in controversy the jurisdiction of the superior court as against that of an inferior court is to be determined by "the demand" made in the complaint. Constitution Article VI, Section 5; Section 112, Code of Civil Procedure. Hence, when the question of jurisdiction is raised by demurrer to the complaint is must be determined upon the amount of "the demand" and not upon what may then be deemed to be the probable recovery.

Though the complaint is unusually brief it states the facts "in ordinary and concise language" sufficient to entitle plaintiffs to go to trial on the issues raised within the provisions of section 426 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment is reversed.

STURTEVANT and GOODELL, JJ., concur.

---

71 Cal.App.2d 1

PEOPLE v. DAY.

Cr. 2338.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Sept. 27, 1945.

1. Criminal law 🔑517(4)

Generally, foundation for introduction of a confession is sufficient if commission of the crime is established and proof of the corpus delicti need not connect defendant with the crime.

2. Criminal law 🔑517(4)

Even if proof of corpus delicti as to defendant would require a showing of his connection with crime because he was not present when it was committed, proof that defendant, who had been employed in office where robbery occurred, was seen in front of office shortly before robbery, and that thereafter one of women employees received a telephone call from one whose voice she identified as defendant's to get only man who was in office away, sufficiently established corpus delicti, so as to authorize introduction of a confession.

3. Criminal law 🔑517(4)

Only slight proof which prima facie establishes the corpus delicti is required as foundation for admission of defendant's confession.

4. Criminal law ⚷1159(4)

Argument as to credibility of testimony was for triers of facts and not for an appellate court.

5. Criminal law ⚷1159(4)

Although appellate court will not uphold a judgment based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category.

6. Criminal law ⚷1159(4)

To warrant rejection of statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions.

7. Criminal law ⚷1159(3, 4)

Conflicts and even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion do not justify reversal of a judgment, since it is exclusive province of trial judge or jury to determine credibility of witness and truth or falsity of facts upon which a determination depends.

8. Robbery ⚷24(1)

In robbery prosecution, testimony of one of women employees in office where robbery occurred that, a short time before robbery, she received a telephone call from one whose voice she identified as defendant's, calling only man who was in office away, was not required to be rejected as inherently improbable.

9. Criminal law ⚷538(3)

Where defendant did not take stand and defense rested without producing any evidence, jury was entitled to consider defendant's written confession upon proof of corpus delicti, with other proof, in determining whether defendant's guilt was established beyond a reasonable doubt.

10. Robbery ⚷24(1)

Evidence supported conviction of first-degree robbery. Pen.Code, § 211a.

11. Robbery ⚷27(5)

Where crime proved, because of use of a deadly weapon, was first-degree robbery, and it was shown that defendant was guilty as a principal in helping to plan the robbery, though not present at time it was committed, failure to instruct jury that it might bring in a verdict of second-degree robbery as to defendant was not error. Pen.Code, §§ 31, 211a, 971.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; Harold Jacoby, Judge.

Lewis J. Day was convicted of first-degree robbery, and he appeals.

Affirmed.

Edward E. Craig, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and David K. Lener, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem.

The appellant Day and one Miramontes were convicted of first degree robbery. The evidence showed that on August 9, 1944, during the noon lunch hour Miramontes entered the office of the Housing Authority in the city of Richmond and at the point of a pistol compelled the two women employees then present to give him the cash on hand in the office. The only evidence connecting appellant with the robbery, other than his confession introduced over the objection that there was no proof of the corpus delicti as to him, is here recited:

Day had up to some time in July, 1944, been employed in the office of the Housing Authority; shortly before the robbery occurred Day was seen in front of the office and a few moments later one of the two women in the office received a telephone call; this witness identified the voice of the man who made this call as that of Day and testified that Day, simulating a Spanish accent, told her that he was locked out of his apartment, giving the address of an apartment which the witness knew was not occupied by Day, and asked to have some one sent from the office with a key to admit him; there were then present in the office the two women and one man; in response to the telephone call the man left the office with the key to the apartment mentioned leaving the two women alone; a few minutes later Miramontes entered and, although he was only slightly acquainted with the office as a tenant of the Housing Authority, directed the women to get the key to the safe from the cash register and to open the safe, which was in a back room and not visible from the outer office; and some days after the robbery the manager of the Housing Authority met Day and said to him that the robbery was well planned but poorly executed, whereupon Day turned pale and walked away.

[1] The fact that the robbery occurred was testified to positively and in detail by the two women present. It is the general rule that the foundation for the introduction of a confession is sufficient if the commission of the crime is established and the proof of the corpus delicti need not connect the defendant with the crime. People v. Fierro, 58 Cal.App.2d 215, 220, 136 P.2d 94; People v. Meyers, 7 Cal.App.2d 351, 354, 46 P.2d 282; 8 Cal.Jur. 236.

[2, 3] Assuming, without deciding, that in this case, because the proof of the crime itself affirmatively showed that Day was not present when it was committed, proof of the corpus delicti as to him would require a showing of his connection with it, the facts above outlined were sufficient for that purpose. Only slight proof which prima facie establishes the corpus delicti is required as foundation for the admission of a defendant's confession. People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 68, 69, 55 P. 698; People v. Bollinger, 196 Cal. 191, 200, 231 P. 25; People v. Kaye, 43 Cal.App.2d 802, 809, 111 P.2d 679; 8 Cal.Jur. 235. The jury could reasonably infer from the preliminary proof that Day, who was familiar with the office and had had an opportunity a few moments before to observe who was present therein, put in the telephone call to get the only man who was there at the time away from the office so that Miramontes would have only the two women to deal with when he entered for the purpose of committing the robbery.

[4-8] Appellant argues that the testimony of the witness that she recognized his voice over the telephone is inherently improbable. We quote from appellant's brief:

"If she had recognized Day's voice over the telephone and knew that he did not live at the address given where the lockout was, she certainly would have called it to his attention over the phone and she certainly would not have sent her superior on a wild goose chase."

This is an argument as to the credibility of the testimony for the triers of the facts to weigh and decide, and not for an appellate court. "Although an appellate court will not uphold a judgment or verdict based upon evidence inherently improbable, testimony which merely discloses unusual circumstances does not come within that category. Kidroski v. Anderson, 39 Cal.App.2d 602, 603, 103 P.2d 1000. To warrant the rejection of the statements given by a witness who has been believed by a trial court, there must exist either a physical impossibility that they are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions. Back v. Farnsworth, 25 Cal.App.2d 212, 219, 77 P.2d 295; Lufkin v. Patten-Blinn Lumber Co., 15 Cal.App.2d 259, 262, 59 P.2d 414; Agoure v. Spinks Realty Co., 5 Cal.App.2d 444, 451, 42 P.2d 660; Hughes v. Quackenbush, 1 Cal.App.2d 349, 354, 355, 37 P.2d 99; Powell v. Powell, 40 Cal.App. 155, 158, 159, 180 P. 346. Conflicts and even testimony which is subject to justifiable suspicion do not justify the reversal of a judgment, for it is the exclusive province of the trial judge or jury to determine the credibility of a witness and the truth or falsity of the facts upon which a determination depends. Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc., 18 Cal.2d 773, 781, 117 P.2d 850." People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, 759. Cf. People v. Stephens, 66 Cal.App.2d 755, 152 P.2d 1019.

[9, 10] The appellant's written confession was complete and circumstantial. He stated that he planned the robbery, persuaded Miramontes to commit it, put in the telephone call concerning the fabricated lockout, and afterwards received a share of the stolen money from Miramontes. Neither defendant took the stand and the defense rested without producing any evidence. The jury was entitled to consider the confession, with the other proof, in determining whether appellant's guilt was established beyond a reasonable doubt. People v. Selby, 198 Cal. 426, 439, 245 P. 426. Upon the whole case they could not very well have entertained any reasonable doubt of appellant's guilt. This being so the claimed misconduct of the prosecution in the closing argument requires no extended comment. It was not aggravated and probably did not go beyond the scope of legitimate argument, a question which we need not pass upon because under the facts of this case appellant cannot show that it prejudicially influenced the jury.

[11] The failure to instruct that the jury might bring in a verdict of second degree robbery as to appellant was not error. The crime proved, because of the use of a deadly weapon, was first degree robbery, Pen.Code, Sec. 211a, and appellant was guilty as a principal, Pen.Code, secs. 31, 971. The proof furnished by appellant's confession leaves no doubt that he contemplated the use of a deadly weapon in the commission of the crime. We quote: "I had made the remark it would be easy to stick the place up. * * * I suggested to Charles (Miramontes) that it would be easy to hold the place up * * *."

Judgment and order denying appellant's motion for new trial affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 833

GAZZERA et al. v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Civ. 12833.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 25, 1945.

1. Evidence 🔑570

The weight to be given to the opinion of an expert depends on the reasons he assigns to support it.

2. Evidence 🔑574

Trial court was justified in adopting and following opinions of experts who had assigned what appeared to be sound reasons for their opinions against opinion of expert who gave no reasons for his opinion.

3. Municipal corporations 404(6)

In action against city for damage to real property by hill slide as alleged result of excavation and grading of street and removal of drain pipes, findings for defendant were sustained by the evidence.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑404(6)

Burden was on plaintiffs to prove that hill slide damaging their property was caused by alleged negligence of city.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by Steve Gazzera and Mary Gazzera against City and County of San Francisco for damages to real property. From a judgment for defendant, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

John D. Harloe and Joseph A. Brown, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and John F. Moran, Deputy City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, Justice.

Action for damages to real property. Plaintiffs appeal from a judgment for the defendant city rendered by the court sitting without a jury.

Plaintiffs' house and property are situated on the northeast corner of the intersection of Kirkwood Avenue and Mendell Street, facing Kirkwood Avenue. The house and lot immediately adjacent on the northwest was owned by Thomas T. Shoaf and was occupied by Mrs. Margaret MacArtney, his daughter. Mendell Street was graded and paved in 1917 but no paving was laid in the intersection as Kirkwood was unimproved. In 1930 pursuant to a request of Mr. Shoaf, the city excavated and graded a temporary roadway twelve feet wide on Kirkwood Avenue easterly from Mendell Street. The cut was from five to ten feet deep with sloping sides. Water seeped from the upper side of the cut and pipes were laid to carry it off. These pipes were removed when the intersection was paved.

In February, 1940, ten years after the excavation, there was a series of heavy rain storms. After one of these storms a section of the hill slid into the Kirkwood and Mendell intersection and plaintiffs' house was destroyed. Plaintiffs presented a claim to the city but payment thereof was refused. They then brought suit claiming the excavation and grading of Kirkwood removed the lateral support of the hill and this, coupled with the subsequent removal of the drain pipes, was the proximate cause of the slide.

Before proceeding it should be noted that the maps show commencing on the north, Newhall, Mendell, Lane and Keith Streets run from east to west and that they are crossed by Innes, Jerrold, Kirkwood, La Salle and McKinnon which run from north to south.

Mendell Street, from Jerrold Avenue to Kirkwood Avenue, was graded, curbed and paved in 1917, and from Kirkwood Avenue to La Salle Street said Mendell Street was graded, curbed and paved in 1918. At the time of the grading, curbing and paving of Mendell Street, as above set forth, the intersection of Mendell Street and Kirkwood was not done.

At the time of the grading, paving and curbing of said Mendell Street in front of plaintiffs' property, said property was, by reason thereof, left eight or ten feet above the grade line of said Mendell Street, and at the time of the grading, curbing and paving, plaintiffs and their predecessors in interest were notified to, and did, shore up their property by the erection of a good and substantial concrete bulkhead.

The plaintiffs claimed the street work was so done as to injure their property. They alleged:

"That on the 6th day of December, 1929 * * * a temporary roadway twelve feet wide was graded out of the middle of Kirkwood Avenue; that no notice to plaintiffs or to any other property owners fronting on Kirkwood Avenue at said place was given and that in grading said temporary roadway, the sides of Kirkwood Avenue were left in a sloping condition;

"That the grading of Kirkwood Avenue in the manner in which it was done, * * * made it impossible for plaintiffs as well as other property owners fronting on Kirkwood Avenue, to shore up their property.

"That by reason of the grading of Kirkwood Avenue, there was considerable seepage of water and in order to carry off said water, pipes were installed; that in the month of November, 1930, the crossing of Kirkwood Avenue and Mendell Street, which had theretofore been left undone, was graded, curbed and paved. That at the time of the grading, curbing and paving of the crossing, the pipes which had theretofore been installed for the draining off of the water from Kirkwood Avenue, were blocked and prevented from draining off the water.

"That by reason of the blocking and stopping of said drain pipes, the water percolated and seeped in, around and under the foundation of plaintiffs' property; that by reason of the grading of the temporary roadway in Kirkwood Avenue, that land which was left on the sides thereof, was caused to and did, on or about the 2nd day of March, 1940, shift and slide into the center of said roadway on Kirkwood Avenue.

"That said land, in shifting and sliding took with it the foundation under plaintiffs' property, causing the said foundation to slip and break away from the retaining wall which had theretofore been erected along Mendell Street, causing the property to sink and to become untenantable.

"That said damage to plaintiffs' property was caused by the failure of the City and County of San Francisco to properly grade the entire width of Kirkwood Avenue, and that by reason of the shifting and sliding of said land and taking with it the foundation of plaintiffs' property, plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum of Seventy-five Hundred Dollars ($7500.00)."

In its answer the defendant denied each charge of negligence. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendant on all of said charges. In their briefs the plaintiffs contend the findings should have been in their favor. We think the trial court was warranted in making said findings as written.

In discussing the plaintiffs' contention we will take up first the charge that the excavation on Kirkwood was the cause of the slide. The evidence is not clear but there are passages that indicate the ground slid toward Mendell and not toward the cut in Kirkwood.

Steve Gazzera, the plaintiff, testified regarding the presence of seeping waters. From 1916 he visited the premises about once a month to collect his rent. Nearly every visit he saw water running out of the slope on Kirkwood and down Kirkwood. From time to time he saw other slides that had occurred. Two pepper trees were uprooted. He saw water every time he passed Kirkwood. On February 28, 1940, the witness was notified by his tenants that the slide complained of had occurred. He went immediately to the property. An examination disclosed a crack in the ground that circled from Kirkwood to Mendell. In places it was a foot wide. It went down the witness did not know how deep.

Thomas V. Reeves, a mining engineer and geologist called by the defendant, testified that he was familiar with the property and had visited it before February, 1940. On May 20, 1940, acting upon the request of the defendant, the witness again visited the property. He proceeded to examine the conditions relating to the slide that had recently occurred. In reply to a question propounded by the defendant the witness testified that the cut in Kirkwood had nothing to do with the slide. He based his opinion, he said, "on the several rock formations. The general underlying formation is a series of shale and sandstone strata. Overlying that, coming up in a slight inclination from the north, is a body of serpentine. Intruded in the above, through the sandstone and serpentine, is another formation, a diabase, surrounding both the serpentine and the diabase. The other formations, the sandstone and the shale, have been broken and cracked. The slide was caused by an infiltration of water into this crushed stone until the material gave way and moved on the side hill. It was infiltration into that cracked formation that caused the slides. The water oozing out of the cut would lessen the possibility of a slide. The removal of any support would affect the stability of any ground that was above but in this case the cut was not sufficiently close to the house to remove the support to the extent that the house would be affected by it. When the slide occurred there was no movement toward Kirkwood Street at all. On the hill there are other cracks, some a block away, that extend down between Jerrold and Innes Streets. One of the older scars extends right around the present scar. There is a series of these scars that extend up the side of the hill. I am satisfied that if nobody had ever lived on those hills that nevertheless these slides would have occurred from time to time in that sort of formation. You can see such scars in similar formation just outside of Vallejo. In the instant case the old slide extended below the level of Mendell Street and can be seen on the other side. Water flows out of a garage at 1011 Mendell Street. It comes from the same crack. The crack is an extensive thing. It is concentric with the ones that extend up the hill above it." After making an extended study over a period of eighteen days it was his opinion that the making of the cut on Kirkwood was in no way responsible for the slide complained of.

Mr. Irvin H. Danenhower, an employee in the engineering department of the defendant, gave substantially the same testimony as did Mr. Reeves. However he based his opinion on the following facts. The plaintiffs' house slid toward Mendell and not toward Kirkwood. The distance from the foundation wall facing Kirkwood to the center line of the cut in that street is fifty-seven feet. The cut was made in 1929. The house stood eleven years after that before any slide occurred and then the slide was "definitely" toward Mendell Street.

[1-3] Mr. F. Chace was called as an expert by the plaintiffs. He testified that he had formed a different opinion and that the excavation on Kirkwood in his opinion caused the slide. He gave no reasons for his opinion. No other witness testified on the subject. It is settled law that the weight to be given to the opinion of an expert depends on the reasons he assigns to support that opinion. Barker v. Gould, 122 Cal. 240, 243, 54 P. 845. The witness Reeves assigned what appear to be sound reasons for his opinion. So did the witness Danenhower. Chace assigned no reasons to support his opinion. The trial court was therefore justified in adopting and following the opinions of Reeves and Danenhower. Moreover the trial court went to the property and made a personal examination of the conditions. Under these circumstances the adverse findings made by the trial court were supported by the evidence and are controlling on appeal. Bellon v. Silver Gate Theatres, Inc., 4 Cal.2d 1, 13, 14, 47 P.2d 462.

Taking up the subject of the pipes the witness Shoaf was examined at length on the subject of the placing of certain drain pipes and the removal thereof. However a most careful reading of the record does not disclose that said pipes were improperly placed, nor that they became clogged, nor that they were negligently removed. Moreover there is much in the evidence showing that the pipes were drains for certain springs which during some seasons flowed the entire year both before any street work was done and thereafter. Furthermore there is no evidence that pipes placed in Kirkwood Avenue below the lands where the slide occurred could in any manner either cause or prevent the slide complained of.

A large number of exhibits were used at the trial and have been brought up. They clearly sustain the theory of Mr. Reeves. The cut on Kirkwood was about 200 feet long. It was made through a ridge. It was deepest at a point in about the middle of its length and it was not deep at either end. It extended through the middle of Kirkwood running north and south from Mendell toward Lane, the next street on the south. Photographs show that the slide pressed heavily into Mendell Street where no cut had been made and also toward the north end of the cut on Kirkwood. The break was circular. On Exhibit "J" the break in the ground is shown extending from a point near the north side of the plaintiffs' house and running north under Mr. Shoaf's house it curves toward Kirkwood, crosses it almost at right angles, and continues toward the south. The scars of former breaks are concentric with the scar made in February, 1940. One scar is approximately sixty feet toward the east and the other is about ninety feet. Both of the latter scars are old and, as stated by two witnesses, may be fifty or one hundred years old. The breaks in Kirkwood are pronounced at the surface and indicate a parting rather than a lateral pressure. If the cut caused the slide we would expect the side of the cut adjacent to the slide to slough as a part of the slide. The photographs do not show such sloughing, but they do show heavy pressure toward Mendell and a sloughing for twenty feet or more back from Kirkwood. Plaintiffs' Exhibit 13, a photo taken while the slide was on, strongly supports the proposition last stated. It shows that not even the grass on the east bank of the cut (the side on which the slide occurred) was disturbed. Defendant's Exhibit "A," a photo taken April 26, 1940, shows the same facts. Mr. Danenhower testified that as a result of the slide plaintiffs' house and its foundation slid toward Mendell.

The record discloses that the neighborhood consists of seepy ground. Numerous springs are mentioned by the witnesses. Some of those springs are permanent. Some of them are of such capacity that the waters are collected and sold as mountain spring water. The facts recited in this and the preceding paragraph strongly reinforce the opinions stated by Mr. Reeves and Mr. Danenhower. Therefore we think it is clear that the trial court did not err in making findings in accordance with the opinions expressed by said witnesses.

From time to time the property owners complained to the public officials of seepage on the lots of such owners and of the water discharged by some of the springs above mentioned. There was evidence that the city authorities did nothing regarding those complaints. Counsel do not set forth any authorities showing that it was the duty of the city to enter on private property and cut off the flow of seepage water or springs located thereon.

The plaintiffs cite and quote the entire decision, Gove v. Lakeshore Homes Ass'n, 54 Cal.App.2d 155, 128 P.2d 716. That case involved an appeal from a judgment of nonsuit. It is a splendid exposition of the law on that subject. But the instant case is an appeal from a judgment in an action to recover damages which denied the plaintiffs any relief. As stated above the findings fully support the judgment. The cited case is not helpful. It contains nothing that is at variance with anything we have said.

[4] If the alleged cut made by the defendant in Kirkwood Avenue was not the cause of the alleged slide, then the defendant was not liable. Whether the cut on Kirkwood was properly made or negligently made the question presented by the plaintiffs was, did said cut cause the slide which injured plaintiffs' property. The burden rested on the plaintiffs to prove an affirmative answer to that question. 19 Cal.Jur. 557, Negligence, sec. 10; Union, etc., Co. v. San Francisco Gas, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 58, 62, 141 P. 807; Dull v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 27 Cal.App.2d 473, 476, 81 P.2d 158. The findings are that neither the cut on Kirkwood nor the handling of the drainage pipes was the cause of the slide. It follows the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and GOODELL, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 763

PEOPLE v. JACKSON.

Cr. 3896.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 18, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 18, 1945.

1. Robbery 🔑3

Where motorist was robbed by two persons he had picked up on highway, it was immaterial whether the intent to rob arose before or after such persons entered the automobile.

2. Robbery 🔑24(1)

Evidence sustained conviction of defendant as a principal in robbery. Pen. Code, § 31.

3. Robbery 🔑27(1)

In prosecution for robbery of motorist by two persons he had picked up on highway, court properly instructed that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or knowingly and with criminal intent aided and abetted in its commission, should be prosecuted, tried, and punished as principals, and are equally guilty. Pen.Code, § 31.

4. Criminal law ⚷1038(3)

Where record failed to disclose that defendant requested an instruction on the subject of alibi, he could not for the first time, on appeal, urge the omission to instruct jury as reversible error.

5. Criminal law ⚷824(4)

Where no request for instruction on alibi is made, no error is committed in failing to give such instruction.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles W. Fricke, Judge.

Edward Isiac Jackson was convicted of second-degree robbery, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Alexander L. Oster, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., and Walter L. Bowers, Asst. Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DESMOND, Presiding Justice.

The defendant Jackson and his co-defendant Hoover were convicted by a jury of second degree robbery. Jackson appeals upon the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the judgment, that the court committed error in instructing the jury and also failed to instruct the jury sua sponte on the law pertaining to alibi.

The complaining witness Henry M. Strand testified that around midnight of July 12, 1944, while he was driving home in his automobile from Los Angeles to Lynwood on Atlantic Avenue, he noticed two sailors standing on the street corner in front of a market; that he pulled up to the curb, stopped and offered them a ride. He identified the two defendants as the persons who accepted his invitation. Hoover took his place in the front seat of the automobile, sitting next to Strand, Jackson sitting on the outside next to the door. After proceeding south along Atlantic Avenue for approximately two and one-half miles, the defendants told Strand to pull over to the curb. Strand did not pull over to the curb but did pull off the center of the highway and stopped. Hoover said: "Now, you get out; we are going to take your car." Strand then shut off the motor, unlatched the door, stuck his left foot out on the running board and grabbed the ignition keys. Hoover told him to leave the keys, and grabbed his arm; but Strand snapped the ignition key in two and dropped the bunch of keys on the floor. Hoover then ordered Strand to hand over his wallet, but the latter refused and started to get out of the car. Hoover grabbed him and pressed him against the wheel, whereupon Jackson started beating Strand over the head with his fists. After a somewhat lengthy struggle in which Strand was beaten and bloody upon his head and almost rendered unconscious, he finally said: "I give up; I will give it to you, let go of this hand so I can get it." Jackson, however, said, "Use your other hand," and thereupon Strand tossed the wallet into their laps. (He testified that the wallet contained $14 in currency, being a $5 bill and nine $1 bills). Strand then left his automobile and ran into a nearby building, seeking the aid of workmen who were there employed and returned with them to the automobile. The defendants left the scene, escaping in the darkness. They were picked up by police officers on Atlantic Boulevard half a mile south of where the robbery took place, about 1:30 that morning. They presented a disheveled appearance with blood stains on their jackets, mud on their shoes and one of them had a cut under his chin and dried blood on his face. The officers took the $14 in currency from the person of Hoover. Both defendants denied at their trial that they participated in the robbery and claimed that at the time it was committed they were on North Main Street in Los Angeles several miles from the scene of the crime and at that time and place engaged in a controversy with three marines, one of whom was with Prudence Baca, claimed by Hoover as a friend. They produced no witness to substantiate the claimed alibi and Prudence Baca, taking the stand, denied their story in toto.

[1] In support of his claim that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the judgment, appellant asserts that there is nothing in the record to show that he attempted to take the automobile or that he tried to take the wallet. He argues that all the conversations about the keys, the car, and the wallet came from his co-defendant Hoover. He claims that there was no evidence produced from which an inference could be drawn that he entered the automobile with intent to deprive the owner of it or of his wallet. It is altogether immaterial whether the intent arose before he entered the automobile or after he entered. The fact that Hoover ordered Strand to get out of the car, stating, "we are going to take your car," and then while he held Strand, Jackson proceeded to beat their victim, certainly shows criminal intent on the part of each. In addition, we note from the record that this appellant was down on the floor of the car looking for the ignition keys, demanding to know where they were, then found them and then grabbed Strand. Also, that when Strand finally gave up and said he would give him the wallet if they would let go of his hand so he could get it, the appellant instructed him, "Use your other hand."

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that he was not sufficiently identified as a participant in the robbery, pointing out that the night was quite dark and that the defendants were dressed in the uniform of sailors which might easily cause a mistake in identification because of the number of sailors travelling upon the public highways. But the matter of identification was one to be passed upon by the jurors and, considering all the facts of this case, we do not question the accuracy of their judgment. Among these facts may be noted the opportunity which Strand had to observe the features of his assailants at close quarters, the amount and denominations of the currency found upon Hoover when the officers arrested the two defendants and the bloodstains then found on the jackets of each. In view of the incidents cited it is clear that the jury was justified in finding both defendants guilty as principals and that the instruction which appellant Jackson claims was erroneous was altogether appropriate. It is based on section 31 of the Penal Code and reads as follows:

"The Court further instructs the jury, that it is the law of this State, that all persons concerned in the commission of a crime, whether they directly committed the act constituting the offense, or knowingly and with criminal intent aided and abetted in its commission, shall be prosecuted, tried and punished as principals, and are equally guilty."

The appellant contends that an instruction in substantially the same language was held to be reversible error in People v. Delgado, 1938, 28 Cal.App.2d 665, 667, 83 P.2d 512. One needs only to read the comment of the court in the Delgado case, appearing in item [2] at page 668, of 28 Cal.App.2d, at page 514 of 83 P.2d, and summarized in the second paragraph of the syllabus, to see that the language of the instruction was not substantially the same as used in the instant case.

[4, 5] The claim of appellant that prejudicial error arose when the court permitted the case to go to the jurors without instructing them on the law pertaining to alibi, even though no such instruction was requested, rests upon the decisions in People v. Warren, 1940, 16 Cal.2d 103, 117, 104 P.2d 1024, and People v. Putnam, 1942, 20 Cal.2d 885, 890, 129 P.2d 367, 370. In the first of these cases the Supreme Court reversed the conviction of Warren and remanded the cause for a new trial for the reason that the court failed to instruct the jury on the subject of what constitutes an accomplice and the necessity for corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. No request was made of the trial judge for instruction on these points which, under the circumstances of the case, impressed the Supreme Court as vital on the question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conviction. We note in this connection the comment of the court that failure to advise the jury on the technical rule relative to accomplice testimony negatives the view that the court fully and fairly charged the jury upon the law appertaining to the facts of the case. In the Putnam case, supra, the defendant was convicted of lewd conduct with a minor and his motion for a new trial denied, but the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and order, holding that under the circumstances a proper cautionary instruction should have been given by the court on its own motion, when rejecting one improperly drafted which defendant had requested. In that opinion it is pointed out that "An instruction is necessary if it is vital to a proper consideration of the evidence by the jury" and a number of cases involving various types of crime are cited as instances where the necessity for an instruction sua sponte existed. Among them we find none involving a claimed alibi and see no reason, under the facts of the instant case, to inaugurate a departure from the settled rule cited by respondent that "where the record fails to disclose that defendant requested an instruction on the subject of alibi, he may not for the first time on appeal urge the omission to instruct the jury on such defense as reversible error; and where no request for such instruction is made no error is committed in failing to give such an instruction. People v. Jori, 99 Cal.App. 280, 283, 278 P. 250; People v. Tracy, 18 Cal.App.2d 444, 446, 64 P.2d 166; People v. Ramirez, 21 Cal.App.2d 466, 467, 468, 69 P.2d 913; People v. Keilly, 54 Cal.App.2d 764, 767, 129 P.2d 939."[1]

The judgment is affirmed.

SHINN and PARKER WOOD, JJ., concur.

COIT v. JEFFERSON STANDARD LIFE INS. CO.*

Civ. 12862.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 19, 1945.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 19, 1945.

Hearing Granted Nov. 15, 1945.

1. Insurance 🔑146(3)

Ambiguous policy is construed most strongly against insurer.

2. Insurance 🔑438

A provision in life policy exempting insurer from liability for death from any cause while insured was serving outside the United States in military service of any country at war did not create an absolute exemption because of military service per se, but set up only a partial exemption, the limitation being geographical in character.

3. Insurance 🔑438

Under life policy excluding insurer's liability if death of insured occurred "from any cause" while serving in the military forces outside the United States, death of insured in the military forces in Alaska resulting from an embolism following an appendectomy was not within the coverage of the policy; the quoted phrase meaning without regard to the cause.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "From Any Cause".

4. Insurance 🔑146(3)

Where there is no ambiguity in insurance policy, courts will indulge in no forced construction against insurer, and policy will be interpreted according to intention of parties as expressed in policy in light of circumstances surrounding its execution.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Sylvain J. Lazarus, Judge.

Action by George A. Coit, as administrator of Jean Miriam Parks, deceased, against Jefferson Standard Life Insurance Company, a corporation, to recover face amount of life policy. From a judgment awarding only the return of premiums plus interest, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

H. F. Chadbourne and Anthony S. Devoto, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Keesling & Keil, of San Francisco, for respondent.

GOODELL, Justice.

The appellant sued on a policy of life insurance for the sum of $2500, the face of the policy. The court awarded judgment only for the return of the premiums plus interest, amounting to $71.48.

On January 19, 1942, Charles T. Parks, then a sergeant in the United States army, made application to the respondent for insurance in the sum of $2500. On February 1, 1942, the policy was issued with the insured's wife, Jean M. Parks, named as beneficiary. On October 22, 1942, while serving with troops, the insured died in an army hospital in Alaska of an embolism following an appendectomy. On December 6, 1942, the insured's wife died. The insurer made a tender of $71.48, claiming that under the policy's war risk exclusion rider no more than that was due. The tender was rejected and the administrator of the beneficiary brought this action. The prayer of the complaint was for the reformation of the insurance contract and for $2500, with interest, but at the trial the pursuit of the remedy of reformation was abandoned and the plaintiff stood, and now stands, on the policy as issued.

The rider, which was part of the policy when it was issued, provides that the "policy is issued and accepted upon the express agreement that the liability of the

---

[1] See People v. Whitson, 25 Cal.2d 593, 154 P.2d 867.

* Subsequent opinion 168 P.2d 163.

Company shall be limited to the amount specified below if the death of the Insured occurs: * * * (2) From any cause while the Insured is serving outside the states of the United States, the District of Columbia, and Dominion of Canada, in the military, naval or air forces of any country at war (declared or undeclared) or within six months after the termination of such service if death be caused from any wounds, injuries or disease received or suffered while in such service; * * *. In event the insured's death should occur under any of the conditions defined above, the Company's liability under this policy shall be a single sum equal to the premiums actually paid on this policy with compound interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum * * *."

[1] The trial judge decided that the insured's death from natural causes while serving in Alaska was not a risk assumed by the insurer. The appellant attacks this conclusion and contends that it was the meaning and intent of the contract to insure against death caused by ills common to everyone, whether in the service or not, and that the exclusion or exemption applies only in case of death from a cause connected with war and its hazards and perils. He argues that: "The words 'From any cause' when read in connection with the heading of the rider attached to the policy—'Aviation and War Risk Exclusion Rider' mean no more than that the liability of the insurer shall be limited when the death of the insured is occasioned by, incidental to or proximately caused by military activities, and not where it has been due to natural, ordinary or accidental causes." Further, that such an interpretation is consistent with the universal rule (37 C.J. 546) that where the language of an insurance contract is ambiguous, it is to be construed most strongly against the insurer, who is presumed to have drawn the policy and caused the uncertainty to exist. That rule, of course, is well settled in this state. 14 Cal.Jur. 443, sec. 24; Bayley v. Employers' Liability Assurance Corp., 125 Cal. 345, 352, 58 P. 7; Clarke v. New Amsterdam Casualty Co., 180 Cal. 76, 81, 179 P. 195; Blackburn v. Home Life Ins. Co., 19 Cal.2d 226, 229, 120 P.2d 31.

The question is new in this state. A score of cases have been cited by the appellant and several by the respondent, most of which came before the courts of other states after World War I and arose because of deaths from pneumonia during the widespread influenza epidemic in 1918–1919, with a few cases of deaths by accident not caused by the perils of war or combat. It is agreed by both sides and recognized in the decisions that there is a diversity in the holdings, arising not because one group of states follows one line of decision and another group follows another, but because of the difference in the wording of the policies themselves. The cases fall, broadly, into two groups, one holding that the status of the insured as a soldier or sailor is determinative, the other that the cause of death is determinative. There is unanimity, however, on the rule that ambiguities in the policy are to be resolved in favor of the insured and against the insurer and in most of the cases relied on by the appellant that rule will be found to have played an important part in reaching the decision. See, generally, 29 Am. Jur., p. 695, sec. 911; 137 A.L.R. 1263, also 147 A.L.R. p. 1294; 150 A.L.R. p. 1414; 151 A.L.R. p. 1452, and 152 A.L.R. p. 1449.

[2, 3] We are satisfied from a reading of paragraph 2 by itself that it is free from any ambiguity or uncertainty, and that it means precisely what it says. In the first place, it does not attempt to create an absolute exemption because of military or naval service per se; it sets up only a partial exemption, the limitation being geographical in character. It is only "while the Insured is serving outside the states of the United States, the District of Columbia, and Dominion of Canada" that the exemption is operative. Even while serving in time of war within that area the insured seemingly would be covered whether death results from natural causes or, for instance, from wounds or injuries received in maneuvers while training or in actual combat. This seems to be the plain and natural meaning of the language. Secondly, the use of the words "From any cause" makes it doubly clear that death from injuries received in combat, or as a consequence of actual warfare, could not possibly have been contemplated as the sole ground of exemption. Those words show a studied attempt to get away from the constricted meaning for which the appellant contends. No broader or more comprehensive phrase could well have been chosen. Moreover, as will presently appear, these words, "From any cause" or words of similar import, are not found in any of the policies involved in the authorities relied on by the appellant. Aside then, from whatever light is shed on the present problem by authorities from other jurisdictions, the language, in our opinion, when read by itself means just what the trial judge held it to mean, namely, that death "from any cause," however remote from, or unrelated to, actual hostilities is within the limitation of liability if it occurs under the conditions named.

The respondent cites and strongly relies on the recent case of Bending v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 74 Ohio App. 182, 58 N.E.2d 71, 72, where the clauses in the policy were held to be clear and unambiguous and to make the status of the insured in the military or naval service, and not his activities therein, the ground of exemption. The clauses there read: (a) "provided * * * that death shall not have resulted from bodily injuries * * * sustained while the insured is in the military or naval service in time of war" and (b) "the insurance under this * * * contract shall be suspended * * * while the insured is in the military or naval service in time of war." That case is well reasoned. The language of the policy therein subjected to examination is comparable with that under examination herein (but nowhere nearly so explicit, because of the words herein "from any cause"). The opinion discusses the entire subject and cites most of the authorities with care and discrimination. For these reasons we adopt the discussion therein of the cases on which the appellant herein chiefly relies. In those cases the insured persons died, while in the service, from causes common to all humans, in most cases from influenza or pneumonia (in a few cases by accident) and in most instances at training camps or other places far removed from combat areas. In the Bending case the court says:

"The apparent conflict is due in a great measure to the difference in phraseology of the exemption clauses, but the courts in many of these cases, adhering to the well settled rule that in construing an insurance contract which by reason of ambiguities is capable of two reasonable interpretations, that interpretation will be adopted which is most favorable to the insured, have gone to some length in taking a particular word or phrase in the military clause, construing the same as ambiguous, then resolving that ambiguity as meaning activity of a military nature and not status, and holding the insurer liable.

"One of those words is 'engaged' and it occurs in clauses of which the following is typical: 'If within five years from date hereof the death of the insured shall occur while engaged in the military or naval service in time of war, without previously having obtained from the company a permit therefor, the company's liability shall be limited * * *.' Boatwright v. American Life Ins. Co., 191 Iowa 253, 180 N.W. 321, 11 A.L.R. 1085.

"The court in that case reasons that the word 'engaged' connotes 'resulting from' or 'in consequence of' etc. Consequently the clause was not intended to exempt the company from liability by reason of the soldier's mere status of being in the military service, but the exemption only applied where death occurred from activities of a purely military nature which were not common to soldiers and civilians alike. In that case the insured died in camp of influenza. To the same effect are the cases of Benham v. American Central Life Ins. Co., 1919, 140 Ark. 612, 217 S.W. 462; Long v. St. Joseph Life Ins. Co., Mo.App. 1920, 225 S.W. 106; Rex Health & Accident Ins. Co. v. Pettiford, 1920, 74 Ind. App. 507, 129 N.E. 248; Myli v. American Life Ins. Co. of Des Moines, 43 N.D. 495, 175 N.W. 631, 11 A.L.R. 1097; Kelly, Adm'x, v. Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. of Philadelphia, 169 Wis. 274, 172 N.W. 152, 4 A.L.R. 845; Barnett v. Merchants' Life Ins. Co., 87 Okl. 42, 208 P. 271.

"The use of the word 'risk' in those clauses has also been used as the basis of the construction of the clause as involving 'activities' and not 'status.' The case of Atkinson, Adm'r, v. Indiana National Life Ins. Co., 194 Ind. 563, 143 N.E. 629, 630, is illustrative of this type of construction. The policy there provided: 'After one year from the date of issue this policy shall become incontestable if the premiums have been duly paid, except in case of self-destruction within two years, whether sane or insane, and except that military or naval service in time of war without a permit from the company, is a risk not assumed under this policy at any time.'

"Due to the use of the word 'risk' that clause was held to be ambiguous in that it might mean either activities or status and was therefore resolved against the insurer which was held liable for the death of the insured in a motorcycle accident while on leave of absence from duty."

Each of the cases discussed in the foregoing quotation is relied on by the appellant herein. In addition thereto he has cited a number of cases most of which fit into the same category (to quote from the Bending case) putting "emphasis on the phrases 'resulting from,' 'in consequence of,' and 'active service' in arriving at a similar construction."

Those cases, with parenthetical quotations from their exemption clauses, are as follows: Gorder v. Lincoln National Life Ins. Co., 46 N.D. 192, 180 N.W. 514, 11 A.L.R. 1080 ("in consequence of such service"); Starr v. Great American Life Ins. Co., 114 Kan. 315, 219 P. 514, 515, ("in consequence of such service"); Johnson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 154 Ga. 653, 115 S. E. 14, 15 ("as a result of military or naval service in time of war, * * * nor if such death be caused directly or indirectly, wholly or partly, by * * * war, or any act incident thereto"); Nutt v. Security Life Ins. Co., 142 Ark. 29, 218 S.W. 675 (military or naval service in time of war are "risks not assumed"); Malone v. State Life Ins. Co., 202 Mo.App. 499, 213 S.W. 877, 880 ("the death of the insured while so engaged * * * as a result of such service"); Farmers' National Life Ins. Co. v. Carman, 76 Ind.App. 700, 132 N.E. 697, decided, without setting forth any facts, on the authority of the Rex case, supra; Stephen v. Prairie Life Ins. Co., 113 Neb. 469, 203 N.W. 626, 627 ("if the insured * * * engage in military or naval service in time of war * * * and death shall occur during such engagement or as a result thereof"); Arendt v. North American Life Ins. Co., 107 Neb. 716, 187 N.W. 65, 66 ("death occurring in any part of the world and in any occupation, or from any cause, except military or naval service in time of war"); Illinois Bankers' Life Ass'n v. Jackson (2 cases), 88 Okl. 133, 211 P. 508 ("if the insured engages in military or naval service"); Illinois Bankers' Life Ass'n v. Davaney, 102 Okl. 302, 226 P. 101, 103 ("death while in the service in the army or navy of any government in time of war is not a risk covered * * *"). Also Welts v. Connecticut Mutual Life Ins. Co., 48 N.Y. 34, 8 Am.Rep. 518, where the policy provided that the insured was not protected against death from any of the casualties or consequences of war or rebellion, or from belligerent forces in any place where he may be. He was a civilian engineer building a bridge for the Union army thirty miles behind the Union lines, and was killed by four hold-up men who were not soldiers in either the Union or Confederate armies. In the cases last cited (just as in the eight cases reviewed in the Bending case) a recovery of the full face of the policy was allowed on the theory that the insured's death from causes not related to hostilities, was not within the terms of the policy's exemption.

The appellant also cites several cases which do not appear to fit into this category. They are: Railey v. United Life & Accident Ins. Co., 26 Ga.App. 269, 106 S. E. 203, where the insured a soldier, was killed in the collision with another troopship of the troopship on which he was being transported to the combat area in Europe. It was held to be squarely within the exemption. American Nat. Ins. Co. v. Turner, Tex.Civ.App., 226 S.W. 487, simply involved the question whether the beneficiary could collect attorney fees. The insured, a marine, was killed in battle in France, a risk clearly within the exemption.

In the Bending case the court says: "The court in many of the cases above referred to, while holding that the particular clause under consideration was ambiguous and therefore to be construed against the insured, specifically recognized the proposition that a clause might be written making status the ground for exemption and it would be valid." As an example the court quotes from the Myli case, supra, where it is said: "For instance, it might well have been stated, 'If within five years from date the insured shall enlist or become inducted into the military or naval service without having obtained a permit therefor; etc., then status would clearly have been the test." A year later, in the Gorder case, 46 N.D. 192, 195, 180 N.W. 514, 11 A.L.R. 1080, supra, Justice Birdzell, the author of the opinion in the Myli case, said: "There is a vast difference between a death in the active military service [citations] and a death in consequence of such service [citations]." See also Olson v. Grand Lodge, 48 N.D. 285, 290, 184 N.W. 7, 15 A.L.R. 1270, where the same court discusses the Myli case. In Long v. St. Joseph Life Ins. Co., Mo.App., 225 S.W. 106, 107 (affirmed, Mo.Sup., 248 S.W. 923), supra, the court says: "The insurance company has the right to decide the kind of contract it will enter into. * * * If it chooses, it can say to the insured: 'During the period you are an enlisted soldier or sailor I will not be liable for the insurance, should you die in that period, no matter whether such service caused it or not.'" In Johnson v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 154 Ga. 653, 656, 115 S.E. 14, supra, it is said: "Provisions in policies of life insurance, that the insurer does not assume risk of death which shall occur while the insured is engaged in military service, * * * have been held to exempt the insurer from liability, notwithstanding the fact that death did not result from any hazard peculiar to such service. [Citations.] * * * Under such provisions, when the insured is engaged in military service * * * and he dies in such service, from any cause, these authorities hold that there cannot be any recovery. * * * If the insurer had intended that it was not to be liable for this double indemnity if the insured died while in the military service from any cause whatsoever, it would have been an easy matter to have written such a stipulation in the policy. Such a provision would have made the insured's status in the military service, at the time he met his death, and not the cause of his death, the ground of the insurer's exemption from liability." [Emphasis ours.]

The quotations just given are all taken from cases relied on herein by the appellant.

A number of authorities which support the decision of the trial court and the position of the respondent herein, construe policies where the language is quite similar to the language employed in the cases upon which the appellant relies. Notably, among such cases, is Bradshaw v. Farmers' & Bankers' Life Ins. Co., 107 Kan. 681, 193 P. 332, 11 A.L.R. 1091, where the limitation was "If * * * the insured shall engage in military or naval service in time of war, the liability of the company, in event of the death of the insured while so engaged * * * will be limited * * *." The court held that the status of the insured as a member of the armed forces was alone sufficient to bring the exemption into operation. Other cases where an exemption is created if the insured shall engage in the military or naval service (or equivalent language is used) are Huntington v. Fraternal, etc., Ass'n, 173 Wis. 582, 181 N.W. 819; Olson v. Grand Lodge, 48 N.D. 285, 184 N.W. 7, 15 A.L.R. 1270, supra; Field v. Western Life Ind. Co., Tex. Civ.App., 227 S.W. 530; Mattox v. New England Life Ins. Co., 25 Ga.App. 311, 103 S.E. 180; and Sandstedt v. American Central Life Ins. Co., 109 Wash. 338, 186 P. 1069. In these cases the courts reached conclusions opposite to those reached in the Benham, Boatwright and Long cases, supra, and held that the words "engage" or "engaged in" were simply descriptive of the status of the insured, and that the insurer's liability was limited. The same result was reached in Ruddock v. Detroit Life Insurance Co., 209 Mich. 638, 177 N. W. 242, 243, where the exemption read: "This policy * * * shall be incontestable * * * except for naval or military service in time of war, without a permit, which are risks not assumed * * ." And likewise in Miller v. Illinois Bankers' Life Ass'n, 138 Ark. 442, 212 S.W. 310, 7 A.L.R. 378, where the language was: " * * death while in the service in the army or navy of the government in time of war is not a risk covered * * *."

In McQueen v. Sovereign Camp, 115 S. C. 411, 106 S.E. 32, the exemption read: "* * * In the event the holder of this certificate shall die while serving in any branch of the United States Army or Navy, either as an officer or enlisted man, outside the boundaries of the United States" the liability of the insurer would be limited. This language is closer to that in the policy involved herein than that of any case we have been able to find. It contains also a geographical limitation. The court held the liability was effectively limited.

In addition to the Bending case the respondent also relies on the recent cases of Life & Casualty Ins. Co. v. McLeod, 70 Ga.App. 181, 27 S.E.2d 871, and Lindsey v. Life & Casualty Ins. Co., 70 Ga.App. 190, 27 S.E.2d 877. In both cases the clause read: "Should the insured die while enrolled in such [military or naval] service in war time without such permit, the company's liability will be restricted to the net reserve of this policy." The clause was held in both cases to preclude a recovery of the face of the policy, and to fasten only limited liability on the insurer.

From the foregoing discussion it will be seen that the cases on this subject may be grouped about as follows: (1) Those holding that language such as "death in consequence of" or "death resulting from" military service means that death from natural causes while in the service is not within the exemption; (2) those holding that death "while engaged in" the service has the same meaning (as group 1); (3) those holding that death "while engaged in" the service means no more than while enlisted in, or enrolled in, the armed forces, hence such death, even from natural causes, is within the exemption, and (4) those cases where the war risk clause contains no such language as is found in (1), (2) or (3) but simply states the condition, namely, military or naval service.

The clause in this case (as in the Bending, McLeod, Lindsey and McQueen cases) is in the fourth category.

It is interesting to note, however, that the third paragraph in the war risk rider now before the court does contain language somewhat similar to that discussed in group (1). That paragraph is designed to limit the insurer's liability if death occurs: "(3) Within two years after the date of issue of this policy as a result of war (declared or undeclared), or any act incident thereto occurring while the Insured is traveling, residing or stationed outside the states of the United States, the District of Columbia, and the Dominion of Canada." The words "as a result of war" and "any act incident thereto" are in sharp contrast to the language of paragraph 2, here involved, and would indicate that two distinct forms of coverage were intended. Paragraph 3 of course is not before the court in this case.

[4] The phrase "from any cause" which would seem to mean "without regard to the cause" (see Bohrnstedt v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 123 Or. 539, 259 P. 419, 262 P. 938, 939) in our opinion leaves little or no room for argument in the instant case. "Because contracts of insurance are not the result of negotiation and are generally drawn by the insurer, any uncertainties or ambiguities therein are resolved most strongly in favor of the insured. * * * Where there is no ambiguity, however, courts will indulge in no forced construction against the insurer, and the insurance policy, like any other contract, is to be interpreted according to the intention of the parties as expressed in the instrument in the light of the circumstances surrounding its execution. * * *." Blackburn v. Home Life Ins. Co., 19 Cal.2d 226, 229, 120 P.2d 31, 32, supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOURSE, P. J., and DOOLING, Justice pro tem., concur.

SUTTER et al. v. GENERAL PETROLEUM CORPORATION et al. *

Civ. 14948.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 17, 1945.

Hearing Granted Nov. 15, 1945.

1. Fraud ⚷41

In action for damages for fraudulently inducing plaintiff to take over oil lease and steel island by means of corporation organized for that purpose, allegation that because of such fraud plaintiff received no compensation for his services, but that he expected and intended to be compensated therefor out of profits of the corporation which profits were to be brought about by plaintiff's efforts, showed no right of action by plaintiff, where it was not alleged that plaintiff was a stockholder in the corporation or had any contract with corporation to compensate him for his services. St.1937, p. 262, § 3002.

2. Corporations ⚷202

If a wrong is primarily against a corporation, redress must be sought by the corporation, and a stockholder or body of stockholders cannot sue as an individual or individuals in their own names, and such rule applies although the injury to the corporation may incidentally result in the destruction or depreciation of value of the stock of the corporation, but an exception to the rule is that a derivative action by stockholder is allowable.

3. Corporations ⚷202

Alleged refusal of defendants to comply with contract with corporation and commission of other wrongful acts against such corporation did not entitle stockholders of corporation to maintain action for damages against defendants.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Robert H. Scott, Judge.

Action by Austin P. Sutter and others against General Petroleum Corporation and others for alleged fraud. From a judgment dismissing plaintiffs' complaint on ground that it failed to state a cause of action, the plaintiffs appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

---

* Subsequent opinion 170 P.2d 898.

Haight, Trippet & Syvertson, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Martin J. Weil and J. M. Jessen, both of Los Angeles, for respondent General Petroleum Corporation.

Mortimer Kline, of Los Angeles, for respondents J. W. Pauson and Pauson Bros., Inc.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment of dismissal predicated upon the sustaining of defendants' objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint as amended failed to state a cause of action, in a suit to recover damages for alleged fraud, plaintiffs appeal.

The complaint contains 27 causes of action seeking damages caused by the alleged fraud of the defendants. Plaintiffs summarize the allegations of the first cause of action in substance as follows:

A corporation known as the Rincon Oil Company had for several years prior to 1942 been the lessee of certain tidelands from the State of California under a lease known as Oil and Gas Lease No. 82. The land leased was submerged in the Pacific Ocean and located in the Rincon Oil Field, Ventura county. In 1932 the Rincon Oil Company constructed a steel island structure and derrick upon the leased property about one-half mile west of the shore line for the purpose of drilling for oil. The island was entirely artificial, and the Rincon Oil Company and the General Petroleum Corporation had certain drilling equipment and tanks located thereon.

In 1938 plaintiff Sutter was interested in developing certain other oil property in the same oil field, and defendants learned of this fact. Pursuant to a common plan to induce Mr. Sutter to take over the adjacent lease and steel island the defendants represented that the island had been constructed according to certain plans and specifications shown to Mr. Sutter. They also represented that the engineers of General Petroleum Corporation had recently made a thorough inspection of the island and that it was in good condition, properly designed and constructed to support the equipment necessary for the drilling of additional wells. They further represented that the lease held by the Rincon Oil Company could be assigned. Defendant General Petroleum Corporation promised that it would rent to a corporation to be organized by Mr. Sutter the drilling equipment located on the island for $25 per day, and that no charge would be made while the equipment was not being used; also that General Petroleum Corporation would purchase all of the oil produced from the property and supply all water which might be necessary to operate the property. It was further represented that General Petroleum Corporation would furnish Mr. Sutter with all available engineering and geological information that it had concerning the oil field. All of these things were essential to the successful operation of the field. This was especially true so far as the renting of the equipment was concerned, because the cost of buying equipment would have been so great as to render the venture impracticable.

The aforementioned representations and promises were relied upon by Mr. Sutter and were made for the express purpose of inducing him to abandon his other project, organize a new corporation to take over the above-mentioned lease and to purchase the steel island structure and equipment owned by Rincon Oil Company. All of the representations were false and the promises were made with no intention of performing them. The island structure was not constructed in accordance with the plans exhibited to Mr. Sutter and was not properly and safely designed; but on the contrary the under-water portion was constructed of short pieces and scraps of steel welded together in an unsafe and unsound manner, which facts defendants knew. In addition, the girders were partially eroded and cut where they entered the ocean floor. Mr. Sutter could not with reasonable diligence have discovered the true state of facts for the reason that the under-water portion of the structure was covered with marine growth, and defendants told Mr. Sutter that the marine growth should not be removed. They also stated to him that an examination was unnecessary because one had recently been made by defendant General Petroleum Corporation. Mr. Sutter, who was unfamiliar with the design and construction of steel structures of the type here involved, relied upon the representations of defendants.

Prior to 1939 and unknown to Mr. Sutter a portion of the steel island had collapsed into the ocean and had been reconstructed and restored by defendants. At that time defendants learned that the structure had been weakened but concealed this fact from

Mr. Sutter, who did not learn of the prior collapse of the structure until April 15, 1939.

Because of the above representations and promises Mr. Sutter organized a California corporation known as Rincon Development Company for the purpose of taking over the lease above mentioned and purchasing the island and equipment hereinbefore described. Subscriptions were taken for stock in the new corporation, which took possession of the island and commenced drilling operations January 8, 1939. Rincon Development Company entered into a contract with Rincon Oil Company for the purchase of the island and equipment on January 16, 1939, and a contract was entered into with General Petroleum Corporation for the rental of the drilling equipment on February 1, 1939. Although the defendants had promised to procure the consent of the State of California to the assignment of the aforesaid oil lease, on February 8, 1939, the State refused to consent to such transfer. As a result of this refusal Rincon Development Company was unable to proceed with drilling operations or to issue its capital stock.

Since Rincon Development Company did not have a lease, defendants promised to and did deliver to Mr. Sutter all of the stock of the Rincon Oil Company and agreed with him that this stock should be reissued to the subscribers to stock of the Rincon Development Company and to the general public. Certain assets of the Rincon Oil Company were then transferred to defendants Pauson Bros., Inc., and resold to Rincon Oil Company. General Petroleum Corporation promised that it would enter into the same contractual relations with Rincon Oil Company as it had theretofore promised to enter into with Rincon Development Company. Thereafter the stock of Rincon Oil Company was reissued to the subscribers for stock in Rincon Development Company and to the general public. New officers and directors were elected by the Rincon Oil Company and drilling operations were continued on the lease. On April 9, 1939, an oil well was brought in and placed on production. Prior to this date and during the drilling of such well Rincon Oil Company called upon the General Petroleum Corporation to furnish the engineering and geological assistance which it had promised, but the latter failed so to do. Also, during said period Rincon Oil Company requested General Petroleum Corporation to enter into agreements for the rental of drilling equipment, furnishing of water and the purchase of oil, but the corporation refused to enter into any of said agreements, as it had promised.

On May 5, 1939, General Petroleum Corporation offered to purchase oil on a day-to-day basis, and because of the location of the steel island Rincon Oil Company was unable to dispose of its oil other than through defendant General Petroleum Corporation. On May 16 1939, General Petroleum Corporation in violation of its promises, gave notice that its drilling equipment would be removed from the island unless purchased by Rincon Oil Company. Since Rincon Oil Company was financially unable to purchase other equipment it was compelled to and did purchase the equipment on May 18, 1939. On May 16, 1939, General Petroleum Corporation canceled and repudiated its contract to purchase oil and thereafter refused to purchase any oil from or supply any water to Rincon Oil Company.

On January 8, 1940, because of its defective condition as described above, the steel structure together with the derrick, tanks, machinery and equipment collapsed into the ocean and became a total loss. Rincon Oil Company employed salvage crews and divers to remove the wreckage from the ocean floor, at which time Mr. Sutter first learned that the structure was not properly and safely designed and constructed, as represented by defendants, but was in fact constructed in an inferior and unsound manner. Because of the collapse of the steel structure Rincon Oil Company was prevented from fulfilling the terms of Oil and Gas Lease No. 82 and the same was terminated by the State of California on January 14, 1942.

The steel structure had at all times appeared to be stable, sound and safe, and Mr. Sutter in reliance upon the representations and promises of the defendants devoted all of his time to the development of the property for a period of eighteen months from and after January 8, 1939. The reasonable value of Mr. Sutter's services is the sum of $500 per month, and he expected to be compensated therefor out of the profits of the Rincon Oil Company; but by reason of the alleged fraud of defendants Mr. Sutter was prevented from obtaining any compensation whatever, to his damage in the sum of $9,000.

At all times above mentioned defendants J. W. Pauson and Pauson Bros., Inc., were stockholders in the Rincon Oil Company. Each plaintiff in the other 26 causes of action was an investor in the Rincon Oil Company. It was also alleged in each of the other causes of action that the defendants entered into a plan and conspiracy to induce each plaintiff by fraudulent means to purchase stock in a corporation to be organized by Mr. Sutter, which corporation was to be organized for the purpose of purchasing the oil and gas lease, the structure, derrick, machinery and equipment described in Count 1 of the complaint. Also, that plaintiffs relied upon the fraudulent representations, statements and promises made by defendants and were induced to and did invest in the stock of Rincon Oil Company because of such representations; and that by reason of the collapse of the structure and the cancellation of the lease the investment of each plaintiff was rendered worthless and of no value, all to the damage of each in the amount he had invested.

There are two questions presented for our determination which will be stated and answered hereunder seriatim:

First: Was the allegation in the complaint that plaintiff Sutter received no compensation for his services "but expected and intended to be compensated therefor out of profits" of the corporation which profits were to be brought about by his efforts a sufficient allegation of damages to permit him to recover?

[1] This question must be answered in the negative. There is not any allegation in the complaint that plaintiff Sutter (1) was a stockholder in Rincon Oil Company or (2) had any contract or agreement with the company to compensate him for his services. Hence the allegation relative to his alleged loss is entirely speculative, indefinite and uncertain and insufficient to support a judgment for damages. (See Ramsey v. Penry, 53 Cal.App.2d 773, 128 P.2d 399, 401.) In Ramsey v. Penry, supra, an action was brought for fraud growing out of an attempt to sell stock of a corporation which plaintiff had caused to be organized and to which he had assigned a contract giving him the exclusive right to purchase and operate certain soil renovators. The trial court originally awarded damages in favor of the plaintiff amounting to $7500 on the theory that defendant's fraud had destroyed the value of plaintiff's interest in the corporation. A motion for new trial was made, whereupon new findings were entered by the court which completely changed plaintiff's theory of the case. The trial judge, in an opinion on the motion for a new trial, stated: "Damages were allowed at the original trial upon the theory that plaintiff had been deprived of 7,500 shares of stock of the par value of $1.00 a share, and was damaged accordingly * * *. However, upon further consideration, on the motion for new trial herein, we are of the opinion that plaintiff's damage is more properly measured by his loss of time and money in his efforts to promote the enterprise, which the acts of the defendant have cut off. What profits plaintiff might have made are speculative and uncertain. The loss of time and money is both definite and certain, and we have found it to be $3,750.00." In reversing the decision of the trial court Mr. Justice Marks said, 53 Cal.App.2d at page 778, 128 P.2d at page 402:

"In considering the measure of damages applied here we must observe that plaintiff had no agreement with any one for repayment of any money spent by him in organization expenses or promotion of sales of stock in the corporation. Nor was he to be compensated for time spent in those activities by payment of anything for those services. The only way in which plaintiff could have been compensated for those expenditures of time and money was by receiving the stock placed in escrow for him under the permit of the Commissioner of Corporations.

"The hope of plaintiff to derive any profit from the venture is dependent on the happening of three major contingencies: (1) The sale of sufficient stock to cash purchasers so that $15,000 in cash could be deposited from such sales with the escrow holder. Before the deposit of such sum in escrow no money could be released to the corporation. (2) The successful operation of the soil renovators. (3) Sufficient contracts with agriculturalists for renovation of soil at prices that would return a profit to the corporation."

There is no allegation in the complaint to show that plaintiff Sutter was a "servant" or Rincon Oil Company, and therefore section 3002 of the Labor Code St.1937, p. 262, is not applicable to the present case.

Second: Did the complaint or any count thereof state a cause of action in favor of any or all of the plaintiffs?

[2] This question must likewise be answered in the negative and is governed by this general principle of law: If a wrong is primarily against a corporation redress must be sought by the corporation, and a stockholder or body of stockholders cannot sue as an individual or individuals in their own names. This rule applies although the injury to the corporation may incidentally result in the destruction or depreciation of the value of the stock of the corporation. There is an exception to the general rule where a derivative action by a stockholder is allowable. (Anderson v. Derrick, 220 Cal. 770, 774, 32 P.2d 1078; Difani v. Riverside County Oil Co., 201 Cal. 210, 215, 256 P. 210; Nighbert v. First National Bank of Bakersfield, 26 Cal.App.2d 624, 631, 79 P.2d 1105; American Trust Co. v. California, etc., Ins. Co., 15 Cal.2d 42, 66, 98 P.2d 497. See also 13 Fletcher Cyclopedia Corporations [1943], p. 268 et seq., sec. 5911, and 18 C.J.S. (1939) Corporations, p. 1272, § 559.)

Applying the foregoing rule to the facts in the present case, the only injuries alleged in the complaint may be summarized as follows:

1) Defendant General Petroleum Corporation refused to (a) furnish to Rincon Oil Company engineering and geological assistance, information and advice; (b) enter into an agreement for the rental of drilling machinery to Rincon Oil Company; (c) furnish Rincon Oil Company with all the water required for its operations; (d) purchase all oil produced by Rincon Oil Company, except on a day-to-day basis; (e) purchase after May 16, 1939, any oil from Rincon Oil Company;

2) Threatened to remove its drilling equipment from the lease unless the same was purchased by Rincon Oil Company; and

3) The steel structure, because of its unsound condition, collapsed on or about January 8, 1940, which resulted in the Rincon Oil Company being unable to perform the obligations of its drilling lease, with the consequent termination of same on January 14, 1942.

[3] It is clear that the gravamen of the alleged injuries was an injury to the corporation and not to any individuals or individual stockholder. Therefore, under the general rule stated above the cause of action, if any, was in the corporation and must be instituted by the corporation and in its name, and not by individual stockholders.

Plaintiffs concede that this is not a derivative action. Therefore it is not one that falls within any exception to the general rule.

Neither Pourroy v. Gardner, 122 Cal. App. 521, 10 P.2d 815, Whitten v. Dabney, 171 Cal. 621, 622, 154 P. 312, Turner v. Markham, 155 Cal. 562, 102 P. 272, nor James v. P. B. Steifer Mining Co., 35 Cal. App. 778, 171 P. 117, are applicable to the facts of the present case. In each of the cited cases the injury was one to the stockholder and not to the corporation; hence the stockholder was permitted to maintain the action.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurs.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 759

ROBSON et al. v. UNION PAC. R. CO. et al.

Civ. 14906.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 17, 1945.

Hearing Denied Nov. 15, 1945.

1. Trial 🔑178

A directed verdict for defendant is permissible only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, conceding as true all of plaintiffs' evidence, and indulging every reasonable inference favorable to plaintiffs which may be drawn therefrom, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiffs if such verdict were given.

2. Carriers 🔑286(1)

A railroad is not an insurer of the safety of its station premises, but is required to exercise only ordinary care as to invitees.

3. Carriers 🔑286(1)

The care required of carrier for protection of a passenger on its premises involves reasonable care to provide and maintain safe and adequate stations, platforms, walks, steps, and landings for use in waiting for, approaching and leaving trains or other means of conveyance in which the transportation is to be, or has been, furnished.

4. Carriers ⚷286(1)

A carrier is liable for injuries caused by defects which are known, or ought to be known, but not for those caused by mere depressions or irregularities or of which it has no knowledge as being of a dangerous character.

5. Carriers ⚷320(7)

Where there is no conflict in evidence and reasonable minds cannot differ as to conclusions to be drawn from such evidence, whether a defect in sidewalk at railroad station is trivial defect is a question of law for determination of trial judge and not a question of fact.

6. Carriers ⚷286(1)

A carrier is not liable for injuries resulting from minor defects in a sidewalk on its premises.

7. Carriers ⚷286(4)

Carriers were not liable to prospective passenger who fell when her heel caught in depression resulting from chipped tile in sidewalk in entry way of Union Station constituting a defect two inches in diameter and sloped from walk level on one side to a depth of one fourth of an inch for a distance of not over one inch on opposite side, since such defect constituted a minor defect in the walk as a matter of law.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Alfred L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by Mable L. Robson and Donald A. Robson against the Union Pacific Railroad Company and others to recover for injuries sustained by first-named plaintiff in a fall while in the act of entering the waiting room of railroad station. From a judgment on a directed verdict for defendants, plaintiffs appeal.

Affirmed.

William Dellamore and Joseph W. Pierce, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Jonathan C. Gibson and H. K. Lockwood, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

McCOMB, Justice.

From a judgment in favor of defendants predicated upon the granting of their motion for a directed verdict in an action to recover damages for personal injuries, plaintiffs appeal.

On December 17, 1942, at approximately five p.m., plaintiff Mable L. Robson, whose husband is her co-plaintiff, was in the act of entering the waiting room of the Los Angeles Union Station for the purpose of buying a ticket and then boarding a train from Los Angeles to San Bernardino. A portion of the floor of the premises immediately outside of the entrance to the station was surfaced with red Padre tile in blocks about six inches square. One of these tiles immediately adjacent to the sill of the door by which Mrs. Robson undertook to enter the building was chipped.[1] The diameter of the chip was approximately two inches. At its deepest point, which was adjacent to the sill of the door, it was one-fourth inch deep and approximately one inch wide. This chip in the tile had existed two or three months prior to the date of the accident hereinafter described. Plaintiff was wearing shoes with Cuban heels.[2] She stepped with her left foot upon the depression in the tile, then took one step into the doorway with her right foot, and while in the act of putting her left foot forward to take another step her foot was caught, which gave her a jerk causing her to fall.

The principal question in this case will be discussed in light of the following general rules which are here applicable.

[1] 1) A directed verdict is permissible only when, disregarding conflicting evidence, conceding as true all of plaintiffs'

---

[1] It was stipulated at the time of the trial that defendants' Exhibit A which is attached hereto and made a part of this opinion was a true and correct representation of the portion of the floor of the Union Passenger Terminal upon which the plaintiff Mable Robson claimed to have stepped and have fallen on December 17, 1942.

[2] Attached hereto and made a part hereof is the left shoe of defendants' Exhibit E which is the shoe plaintiff Mable Robson was wearing at the time of the accident.

evidence and indulging every reasonable inference favorable to the plaintiffs which may be drawn therefrom, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff, if such verdict were given. (In re Estate of Yale, 214 Cal. 115, 124, 4 P.2d 153; In re Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 150, 155 P. 631.)

[2] 2) A railroad is not an insurer of the safety of its station premises, but is required to exercise only ordinary care as to invitees. (Falls v. San Francisco, etc., R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 114, 119, 31 P. 901. See also Sanchez v. Pacific Auto Stages, 116 Cal.App. 392, 396, 2 P.2d 845; 44 Am.Jur. [1942] sec. 429, p. 648; 52 C.J. [1931], § 2165, p. 612.)

[3, 4] The rule is accurately stated in 10 C.J. [1917], § 1341, p. 916, as follows:

"The care required of the carrier for the protection of a passenger on its premises involves reasonable care to provide and maintain safe and adequate stations, platforms, walks, steps, and landings for use in waiting for, approaching, and leaving trains or other means of conveyance in which the transportation is to be, or has been, furnished; and it is liable for injuries caused by defects which are known, or ought to be known but not for those caused by mere depressions or irregularities of which it has no knowledge as being of a dangerous character." See, also, 13 C.J.S., Carriers, § 717.

[5] 3) Where there is not any conflict in the evidence and reasonable minds cannot differ as to the conclusion to be drawn from such evidence, it is a question of law for the determination of the trial judge, and not a question of fact, whether a defect in a sidewalk is or is not a trivial defect. (Whiting v. National City, 9 Cal. 2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990; Clarke v. Foster's, Inc., 51 Cal.App.2d 411, 414, 125 P.2d 60; Sischo v. City of Los Banos, 37 Cal.App.2d 717, 718, 100 P.2d 305.)

[6] 4) A defendant is not liable for injuries resulting from minor defects in a sidewalk. (Whiting v. National City, supra, 9 Cal.2d at page 165, 69 P.2d 990; Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 365, 54 P.2d 725.)

This is the specific question presented for our determination:

Did the defect in the tile in the doorway leading into the Union Station constitute a minor defect in the sidewalk?

[7] This question must be answered in the affirmative. The facts are undisputed. The defect in the sidewalk in the entryway to the Union Station is evidenced by defendants' Exhibit A. This exhibit discloses that the defect was only two inches in diameter and sloped from the level of the floor on one side to a depth of not to exceed one-fourth of an inch for a distance of not to exceed one inch on the opposite side of the depression. Hence it is apparent that reasonable minds could reach only one conclusion, to wit, that the defect in the sidewalk was a minor and trivial one and therefore it was the duty of the trial judge under rule 3, supra, to determine the matter as a question of law. Since the defect was a minor one, defendants were not liable under rule 4, supra, for the unfortunate accident which occurred and the trial judge properly granted their motion for a directed verdict.

This conclusion is further borne out by the fact that there is a total absence of any evidence that any accident caused by the defect occurred during the three months' period it is stipulated that the defect existed.

Our conclusion is fully supported by the decisions of our Supreme Court and Appellate Courts.

In Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, supra, our Supreme Court reversed a decision in favor of plaintiff and held that a crack at one of the joints between the panels in a sidewalk, where the difference in grade at the break was not more than an inch and a half, constituted a minor and trivial defect for which the defendant was not liable.

In Whiting v. National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 69 P.2d 990, a judgment in favor of plaintiff was likewise reversed by our Supreme Court, the court holding that where the defect consisted of a difference in elevation, between two contiguous squares in a sidewalk, of about three-quarters of an inch, such defect was a minor and trivial defect. Mr. Justice Shenk said, 9 Cal.2d at page 165, 69 P.2d at page 991:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that it is impossible to maintain a sidewalk in a perfect condition. Minor defects are bound to exist. A municipality cannot be expected to maintain the surface of its sidewalks free from all inequalities and from every possible obstruction to travel. Minor defects due to continued use, or action of the elements, or other cause, will not necessarily make the city liable for injuries caused thereby. What constitutes a minor defect is not always a mere question of fact. If the rule were otherwise the city could be held liable upon a showing of a trivial defect."

In Clarke v. Foster's, Inc., 51 Cal.App. 2d 411, 125 P.2d 60, the District Court of Appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of defendants, holding that a defect consisting of a bulge in the doors of a sidewalk elevator approximately six inches long and 7/16 of an inch in depth was a trivial defect.

In Van v. Teche Lines, Inc., 164 So. 267, the Court of Appeal in Louisiana, in affirming a judgment in favor of defendant, held that maintenance of the floor in a bus station with a difference in elevation of three inches between the floor of the dressing room and the floor of the station did not constitute negligence and defendant was not liable for injuries to plaintiff sustained therefrom.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

MOORE, P. J., concurs.

Hearing denied; CARTER, J., dissenting.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 827

FITCH et al. v. CARPENTER et al.

Civ. 14869.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 3, California.

Sept. 21, 1945.

1. Principal and agent 🔑101(2), 173(3)

In shippers' action against motor carrier for loss of goods, evidence supported finding that plaintiffs' 16-year-old son had no authority to sign a contract for plaintiffs which purported to limit defendant's liability, and that plaintiffs did not ratify the son's act, so as to bar right to recover full value of goods. Civ.Code, § 2176.

2. Carriers 🔑108

Unless limited by a special contract, the liability of a common carrier for goods in his possession is that of an insurer. Civ. Code, § 2176.

3. Carriers 🔑161

Where plaintiffs did not accept a bill of lading or execute one at time goods were delivered to defendant carrier for transportation, provision of statute that the acceptance of bill of lading by consignor with knowledge of its terms constitutes an assent to limitation of liability was not available to carrier as a ground for limitation of liability. Civ.Code, § 2176.

4. Carriers 🔑152

Where plaintiffs had no knowledge that sum charged by defendant carrier for transporting plaintiffs' goods was at the rate fixed for shipment of goods at a valuation which would limit carrier's liability for loss, plaintiffs had right to assume that carrier was undertaking to transport goods at their true value, and payment of charges on basis of lower valuation did not amount to a contract on their part to a limitation of carrier's liability. Civ.Code, § 2176.

5. Carriers 🔑134

Evidence sustained finding fixing value of household goods lost by common carrier at $1950. Civ.Code, § 2176.

6. Pleading 🔑172

In action against motor carrier for loss of goods, court did not abuse its discretion in allowing plaintiffs to file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of bill of lading after the expiration of five days from the filing of defendants' answer setting up the bill of lading as a partial defense. Civ.Code, § 2176.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carl A. Stutsman, Judge.

Action by Lester A. Fitch and Minnie F. Fitch against W. L. Carpenter, doing business under the firm name and style of Argonne Van Lines and Argonne Van & Storage Company, for the loss of household goods which defendant undertook to transport for plaintiffs. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from order denying his motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Judgment affirmed and appeal from order denying new trial dismissed.

W. L. Carpenter, of Los Angeles, in pro. per.

Arthur C. Webb, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

SHINN, Justice.

Plaintiffs recovered a judgment in the sum of $1950 as damages suffered in the loss of their household goods which defendant W. L. Carpenter, doing business under the firm name and style of Argonne Van Lines and Argonne Van and Storage Company, a common carrier, undertook to transport from Mill Valley, California, to Los Angeles. The complaint alleged the contract of carriage, the payment of defendant's charges in the sum of $173.61, that defendant represented to plaintiffs that all goods carried by him were fully covered by insurance against loss by fire; that they were induced thereby to enter into the contract of carriage with him, that defendant was negligent in the handling of the goods, and that the goods were thereby wholly lost through fire while in possession of defendant. In a separate cause of action plaintiffs alleged breach of the contract of carriage by failure to deliver the goods as agreed, and in the third cause of action it was sought to recover the sum paid for the transportation charges. The goods were alleged to be of the value of $4,239.50.

In addition to denials, the answer alleged that plaintiffs instructed defendant to set the goods off at San Francisco until notified by plaintiffs that they were ready to accept delivery thereof; that this instruction was followed; that the goods were destroyed by fire while so set off, and it alleged the making of a special contract of carriage, by the terms of which defendant's liability was limited to a sum equal to ten cents per pound for the weight of the goods shipped, amounting in the aggregate to $528. The agreement pleaded by defendant as a limitation upon his liability consisted of a provision in a bill of lading that the value of the property did not exceed ten cents per pound. Floyd Fitch, 16-year-old son of plaintiffs, signed his own name to this declaration of value in the bill of lading. Plaintiffs filed an affidavit denying the authority of their son to enter into an agreement on their behalf and the due execution by them of the alleged agreement limiting defendant's liability.

The court found the allegations of the complaint to be true, with the exception of the amount of plaintiffs' damage, which was fixed at $1950. It was further found that plaintiffs did not execute the bills of lading and did not authorize their son to execute the same on their behalf and that they did not authorize the stopping of said goods in transit at San Francisco nor the unloading thereof by defendant. Although by finding the allegations of the complaint to be true the court found that defendant represented the goods to be covered by insurance, and was negligent in the handling of them, these findings are immaterial; the other facts found furnish a sound basis for the judgment.

Plaintiffs arranged for the shipment of their goods at defendant's San Francisco office during the week preceding January 4, 1943. They were present while the goods were being loaded at their home in Mill Valley on January 4, 1943. Shortly before defendant's van left, and while plaintiffs were in the house, their son Floyd Fitch, at the request of one of defendant's employees, affixed his own name to a bill of lading as the owner of the property and after the van left he told plaintiff Lester A. Fitch that he had signed some paper. No copy of the bill of lading was furnished to plaintiffs or their son at the time. After the van left, plaintiffs drove to San Francisco on their way to Los Angeles, paid defendant his charges of $173.71, received a receipt therefor, and requested a copy of the bill of lading. They were told that it would be mailed to them but this was not done and they had no knowledge as to its contents. The evidence was that the son had no authority to make any agreement for them and that they did not believe that he had affixed his name to anything more than a receipt which evidenced delivery of the goods. Plaintiffs denied that they had authorized the stoppage of the goods in transit or given any directions other than for their transportation directly to Los Angeles. There was evidence that it was defendant's custom to bring small loads of goods to his dock in San Francisco and to unload them there for the purpose of transfer to a larger van, thus combining the shipments of several owners into a single load for a long haul. This was done with the goods of plaintiffs. The dock was destroyed by fire, the cause of which was undisclosed, and plaintiffs' goods were thereby lost.

[1] Defendant, who is appearing in propria persona, lists 65 points of law or fact which, when assembled, constitute his argument that plaintiffs entered into a special contract for the shipment of their goods and are bound by the limitation of liability therein declared. He contends that the court should have held plaintiffs to the agreement on the theory that their son had authority to make it or upon the grounds of ratification and estoppel. There was no evidence that the son had authority to act for plaintiffs or that they held him out as their agent. The uncontroverted evidence was that plaintiffs were present in their home at the time the loading was completed and that nothing was said to them concerning the issuance by defendant of a bill of lading. The finding that they did not execute the special contract is sustained by the evidence. The finding that plaintiffs did not ratify the act of their son is also supported by the evidence. They did not know he had signed a bill of lading; it was not furnished to them, although they asked for it, and the goods were destroyed on the following day. Being without knowledge of what their son had signed, plaintiffs did not ratify his act nor could they be held estopped under the circumstances to deny his authority.

[2, 3] There are no questions of law in the case which have not been decided contrary to appellant's contentions. Unless limited by the special contract, his liability was that of an insurer. American Fruit Distributors v. Hines, 1921, 55 Cal.App. 377, 385, 203 P. 821. It was held in McQueen v. Tyler, 1943, 61 Cal.App.2d 263, 142 P.2d 466, that a contract purporting to limit the liability of a carrier is not binding upon the shipper unless it is entered into freely and fairly, citing Donlon Bros. v. Southern Pacific Co., 1907, 151 Cal. 763, 91 P. 603, 11 L.R.A.,N.S., 811, 12 Ann.Cas. 1118. Although the shipper there had signed a freight bill which contained a limitation of liability similar to the one here involved, a finding of the jury that it did not constitute a contract fairly entered into by the parties limiting defendant's liability was held to be sustained by evidence that it was signed by the shipper upon a representation that it was an authorization to take the goods and without reading the paper and without knowledge that it contained a provision purporting to limit the liability of the carrier. Section 2176 of the Civil Code provides that the acceptance of a bill of lading by a consignor with knowledge of its terms constitutes an assent to a limitation of liability as to property carried in packages, trunks or boxes when the value is not stated, but that the consignor's consent to any other modification of the carrier's obligation contained in such instrument can be manifested only by his signature of the same. The court found, upon sufficient evidence, that plaintiffs did not accept a bill of lading and that they did not execute one. The provisions of section 2176, supra, are therefore not available to defendant as a ground for limitation of his liability.

[4] Defendant makes the further contention that plaintiffs elected to ship their goods at the rate applicable to a valuation of ten cents per pound and that they thereby necessarily limited his liability. The court found that plaintiffs did not make such an election. The finding is supported by the evidence. There was no evidence that plaintiffs had any knowledge that the sum charged by defendant was at the rate fixed for the shipment of goods at a valuation of ten cents per pound, nor was there any evidence that they had any knowledge whatever as to the basis of defendant's rates. Not having entered into or even discussed any agreement or arrangement to limit defendant's liability, they had a right to assume that defendant was undertaking to transport the goods at their true value and that he was charging his customary rate therefor. Although defendant's tariffs had been filed with and approved by the Railroad Commission and the charges which he made were in accordance therewith, and were applicable to the shipment of goods at a valuation not to exceed ten cents per pound, the payment by plaintiffs of the minimum rate did not constitute an agreement upon their part to a limitation of defendant's liability. That is a matter of contract and is governed by section 2176 of the Civil Code.

Defendant makes the further argument that the finding that the goods were worth $1950 results in his having agreed to ship goods of that value at a rate applicable to goods of far less value, that this would have amounted to giving plaintiffs a preferential rate, which the law does not allow, and that out of these facts there arose an implied agreement limiting the value of the goods so as to conform to the rate charged. Plaintiffs had no knowledge that they were receiving any preference. They were not shown to have been unwilling to pay a higher rate if it had been charged by defendant, and they cannot be held responsible for defendant's omissions or mistakes. The argument that as plaintiffs had the benefit of the lower rate they should bear the consequences which followed the acceptance of that rate is without force, inasmuch as there was no evidence that they had any knowledge that defendant's charges were based upon a restricted liability.

[5] There was ample evidence to sustain the finding as to the value of plaintiffs' goods; indeed a finding of a considerably higher value would not have been unjustified.

[6] The contention that the court was guilty of an abuse of discretion in allowing plaintiffs to file an affidavit denying the genuineness and due execution of the bill of lading after the expiration of five days from the filing of defendant's answer setting up the bill of lading is without merit. The record contains nothing to indicate that the order was not based upon valid grounds and a sufficient showing.

The judgment is affirmed. The attempted appeal from the order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

DESMOND, P. J., and PARKER WOOD, J., concur.

---

70 Cal.App.2d 816

INDEPENDENT LAUNDRY v. RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Civ. 12870.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 21, 1945.

Hearing Denied Nov. 19, 1945.

1. Action 🔑6

Actions for declaratory relief may be brought against sovereign bodies, depending on facts, in absence of specific expression of legislative intent to the contrary, but declaratory judgment statute does not enlarge jurisdiction of superior court as to parties and subject matter, so that, if governmental body or subject matter involved in the action is not within superior court's jurisdiction, such statute will not confer jurisdiction. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060.

2. Courts 🔑42(1)

The statute providing that no court except Supreme Court, to extent therein specified, shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct, or annul any order or decision of Railroad Commission, or to suspend or delay execution or operation thereof, is a valid limitation on jurisdiction of courts of state. Gen. Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

3. Action 🔑6

In lessor's action for declaratory relief as to rights and duties under lease and rule of Railroad Commission respecting resale charges by lessor to lessee for electric current purchased from electric company, if action develops into issues with which Railroad Commission is not directly concerned, but which are solely between lessor and lessee, commission is not a necessary party thereto. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Gen. Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

4. Action 🔑6

If lessor's action for declaratory relief under lease provision and rule of Railroad Commission respecting resale of electric current purchased from electric company sought to restrain Railroad Commission from performance of its official duties or desired that order approved by commission should be annulled or modified, such proceeding could not properly be brought in superior court. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Gen.Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

5. Action 🔑6

The scope of contract in lease giving lessee permission to install electric meter at own expense for purpose of consolidating current used by lessee, and providing that lessee should have full benefit of savings from the consolidated rate, could be determined in lessor's action for declaratory relief without making Railroad Commission a party. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Gen. Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

6. Public service commissions 🔑24

The superior court may not require Railroad Commission to accept court's discretion instead of commission's discretion in enforcement of commission's regulations, notwithstanding section 69, providing that actions involving acts or orders of commission shall have preference over certain other civil causes, and section 75, authorizing commission's attorney in name of people to commence action by mandamus or injunction in superior court to stop violation of law or an order or rule of commission. Gen. Laws 1943, Act 6386, §§ 67, 69, 75.

7. Constitutional law ⇨24
Statutes ⇨159

Repeals by implication of constitutional provisions, as well as statutes, are recognized only where there is an irreconcilable conflict between existing statutes or constitutional provisions.

8. Constitutional law ⇨24

The 1928 constitutional amendment giving superior court jurisdiction of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for did not repeal constitutional provision giving Railroad Commission duty of regulation as to certain matters, since such matters, though constituting "special cases and proceedings", were "otherwise provided for" within the 1928 amendment. Const. art. 6, § 5, amended in 1928; art. 12, § 22, amended in 1911.

9. Action ⇨6

Even if lessor's action for declaration of rights under lease provision and rule of Railroad Commission relating to charges on resale of electric current purchased from electric company presented actual present controversy with a protectable interest in lessor, such as a lease, nevertheless such controversy was one which was required to be subject to action by the court wherein jurisdiction was claimed. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Gen. Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

10. Action ⇨6

A lessor's action for declaratory relief against lessee, under conflicting lease provision and rule of Railroad Commission as to rates at which electric current could be resold by lessor to lessee, did not involve a present justiciable controversy between lessor and commission wherein superior court might determine validity of commission's regulation, since basis of the action was lease between lessor and lessee, but superior court in such action could interpret commission's regulation and declare whether it was applicable. Code Civ.Proc. § 1060; Gen.Laws 1943, Act 6386, § 67.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Peter J. Mullins, Judge.

Action for declaratory judgment by the Independent Laundry against the Railroad Commission of the State of California and others for a declaration of rights and duties of plaintiff and defendants Craig Carrier, doing business as Pacific Linen Supply Company, and Pacific Gas & Electric Company under a lease between plaintiff and defendant Carrier, and a rule and regulation of the defendant Electric Company. From a judgment that plaintiff take nothing from defendant Railroad Commission, following an order sustaining such defendant's demurrer to an amended complaint without leave to amend and granting of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, plaintiff appeals.

Affirmed.

Stanislaus A. Riley, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Everett C. McKeage, Roderick B. Cassidy, Wyman C. Knapp, Hal F. Wiggins, and John M. Gregory, all of San Francisco, for respondent Railroad Commission of California.

WARD, Justice.

Plaintiff brought this action for declaratory relief joining as defendants Craig Carrier, doing business as Pacific Linen Supply Company, Pacific Gas and Electric Company and the Railroad Commission of the State of California. The appeal is by plaintiff from a judgment that plaintiff take nothing of or from defendant Railroad Commission which followed an order sustaining said defendant's demurrer to an amended complaint without leave to amend and the granting of its motion for judgment on the pleadings.

The amended complaint set forth that plaintiff had leased to defendant Carrier, for the operation of a laundry and linen supply business 5124 square feet in a building owned and operated by plaintiff as a laundry. The sixth clause of the lease between the parties provided: "Said lessee is given permission to install an electric meter at his own expense for the purpose of consolidating the current of the Pacific Gas and Electric Co. to be used for the purposes of measuring the current used by said lessee, it being agreed that lessee shall have the full benefit of the saving secured on a consolidated rate for all current used by him." The amended complaint also alleged that the Railroad Commission under the Constitution and laws of the state of California regulates and supervises public utilities in the matter of fixing rates for gas, electricity and water; that the Pacific Gas and Electric Company is a public utility under the jurisdiction of the commission; that this company has been providing electric current to plaintiff on the premises, and plaintiff in turn has been supplying to defendant Carrier such portion of the current as was required in the operation of the linen supply business. It is further alleged that the defendant gas and electric company, with the approval of the defendant commission, has had in force and operation a rule and regulation reading as follows:

"Where the Company has adequate service facilities to supply separate premises such separate premises, even though owned by the same consumer, will not be supplied with electric energy through the same meter.

"Unless specially agreed upon, the consumer shall not re-sell any of the electric energy received by him from the Company to any other person or for any other purpose, or on other premises than specified in his application for service.

"Owners or lessees of apartment houses or other buildings may re-sell electric energy to tenants of such houses or buildings, provided either,

"(a) Such energy is resold at rates identical with the rates of the Company that would apply in the event that energy were supplied to the sub-consumer directly by the Company: or

"(b) The charge to the sub-consumer for such energy is absorbed in the rental charge for the premises occupied by him. In the event that such energy is resold otherwise than as provided in this paragraph, the Company shall have the right at its option, either to discontinue service to the consumer, or, to furnish electric energy directly to the sub-consumer."

Plaintiff further alleges that it charged defendant Carrier for electric current supplied at the rate charged by the company to plaintiff; "that the amount of current consumed and used by defendant Carrier caused an increase in the amount of current received by and charged to plaintiff and under the schedule of rates fixed by the Commission the charge to plaintiff for such increased consumption was substantially less than the charge would have been had it been computed upon the basis of such increase being separately supplied; during the period above mentioned plaintiff allowed defendant Carrier the benefit of the saving thereby effected." It was also alleged that plaintiff was unaware of the rule and regulation for some period after the execution of the lease, but subsequently notified and demanded of defendant Carrier that he pay the same rates as would be in effect were the energy supplied directly by the utility company to said defendant; that defendant Carrier refused to pay the rates applicable as a sub-consumer and has offered to pay the "lease" rates and no more. It is alleged that the company and the commission insist that payment be made in accordance with the rule. It is then alleged that plaintiff's business, operating for many years and rendering service to approximately thirty drivers, will be disrupted and that plaintiff, the drivers, etc., will be irreparably injured if the defendant gas and electric company exercises its right to enforce the rule by discontinuance of service. It is further alleged: "That in view of the conflict in the demands of defendants, namely, that of defendant Carrier that the provisions of Clause Sixth of the lease apply, and the demands of defendants Company and Commission that the provisions of said rule and regulation apply, it is necessary that a declaration of the rights and duties of plaintiff and the defendants under said lease and said rule and regulation be had." Defendant commission demurred upon the grounds that (1) the "complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action"; (2) "The Court has no jurisdiction of this defendant, or the subject of the action," and (3) there is a "misjoinder of parties." This demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend.

The appellant contends that none of the grounds of the demurrer is good. Respondent commission urges, mainly, lack of jurisdiction of the superior court to hear or determine any action such as this, so far as the Railroad Commission is concerned. Whatever is said by this court on this appeal is to be considered only in relation to the position of the commission, the lone respondent herein.

Irrespective of the fact "that the Railroad Commission has exclusive original jurisdiction and the Supreme Court exclusive reviewing jurisdiction," and that no appeal from the order of the commission was presented to the Supreme Court, it is appellant's position that the regulation of the commission must be taken as valid and that it supersedes and renders invalid the provisions of the lease. Appellant contends that the "status of all the parties can be determined only if and when the appellant, its lessee, Carrier, the Railroad Commission and the gas company are before the court in the same proceedings." Appellant argues that if the superior court does not have jurisdiction over the commission, there is no way of binding the Commission to an order that the superior court may make.

[1] Actions for a declaratory relief, Code Civ.Proc. sec. 1060, may be brought against sovereign bodies, depending upon the facts of the case, in the absence of a specific expression of legislative intent to the contrary. However, the section does not enlarge the jurisdiction of the superior court as to parties and the subject matter, so that if the commission or the subject matter of this action is not within the jurisdiction of the superior court, section 1060 will not confer such jurisdiction. Hoyt v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs, 21 Cal.2d 399, 132 P.2d 804; People v. Buellton Development Co., 58 Cal.App.2d 178, 136 P.2d 793; Imperial Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Caminetti, 59 Cal.App.2d 501, 139 P.2d 693.

[2] Section 67 of the "Public Utilities Act," Stats. 1915, pp. 115, 161, amended by Stats. of 1933, pp. 1157, 1158; 2 Deering's Gen.Laws (1943), Act 6386, pp. 2464, 2522, provides in part:

"No court of this State (except the Supreme Court to the extent herein specified) shall have jurisdiction to review, reverse, correct or annul any order or decision of the commission or to suspend or delay the execution or operation thereof, or to enjoin, restrain or interfere with the commission in the performance of its official duties; provided, that the writ of mandamus shall lie from the Supreme Court to the commission in all proper cases.

"In any proceeding wherein the validity of any order or decision is challenged on the ground that it violates any right of petitioner under the Constitution of the United States, the Supreme Court shall exercise an independent judgment on the law and the facts, and the findings or conclusions of the commission material to the determination of the said constitutional question shall not be final." The provision that the Supreme Court only shall have jurisdiction to review an order of the commission is a valid limitation upon the jurisdiction of the various courts of this state. Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, 166 Cal. 640, 137 P. 1119; Marin M. W. Dist. v. North Coast W. Co., 178 Cal. 324, 173 P. 473.

[3, 4] In the present case appellant seeks to have the superior court declare the Railroad Commission's rights and duties under the lease and "said rule and regulation." If the declaration of rights develops into issues with which the commission is not directly concerned but which are solely between plaintiff and defendant Carrier, then the commission is not an essential or necessary party. If plaintiff seeks to restrain the commission in the performance of its official duties, or desires that the order approved by the commission should be annulled or modified, the proceeding has not been instituted in the proper tribunal.

[5] The only California case called to our attention wherein an attempt was made to make the Railroad Commission a party to a superior court action involving issues similar in any respect to those in the present appeal is Sexton v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 173 Cal. 760, at page 763, 161 P. 748, at page 749, in which case the court said "that, by reason of said section [sec. 67, Public Utilities Act], no court of the state other than the Supreme Court has any power to review the orders of the commission, or to control its official action." It has been held in Truck Owners, etc., Inc., v. Superior Court, 194 Cal. 146, 228 P. 19, that the superior court has jurisdiction where the purpose of a suit is to enjoin a carrier which has not applied to the commission for a certificate, which certificate would in effect permit competition with the plaintiff who previously had received a certificate of public convenience and necessity to operate trucks for transportation purposes over a designated area. The proper court to determine the right of another company to operate over the same designated route was the superior court in the absence of action by the commission in assuming jurisdiction over the second trucking company. At page 153 of 194 Cal., at page 22 of 228 P., it was stated "that the superior court has no jurisdiction to compel the commission to act," and again 194 Cal. at page 156, 228 P. at page 23, that "We entertain no doubt that, when the commission has assumed and exercised its jurisdiction, the court would conform its orders and process agreeably to the action of the commission made within its jurisdiction." The prior action taken by the commission in the Truck Owners' case consisted in the issuance of one certificate applicable to the holder thereof. In the present case it is the promulgation of a rule and regulation directed to all consumers of electric energy that such power should not be supplied to separate premises where the company has adequate service facilities to supply the additional consumer unless such energy is resold at rates identical with the rates of the company that would apply in the event that energy were supplied to the sub-consumer directly. In City of Oakland v. Key System, 64 Cal.App.2d 427, 149 P.2d 195, this court discussed questions involving the jurisdiction of the commission and the superior court. The views expressed in the City of Oakland case are in accord with the views expressed herein. However, here the issue, the scope of a contract between appellant and defendant Carrier, may be determined without the presence of the commission.

An interpretation of the rule and regulation in accordance with appellant's views might be of advantage in finally determining the dispute alleged in the amended complaint to exist between plaintiff and defendant Carrier. However, so far as the superior court is concerned its jurisdiction in the determination of the validity of a regulation of the commission has been restricted. Pacific Telephone, etc., Co. v. Eshleman, supra; Truck Owners, etc., Inc., v. Superior Court, supra; Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 175 P. 466, 8 A.L.R. 249; People v. Hadley, 66 Cal.App. 370, 226 P. 836; Wallace Ranch W. Co. v. Foothill D. Co., 5 Cal.2d 103, 53 P.2d 929; Foothill D. Co. v. Wallace Ranch W. Co., 25 Cal.App.2d 555, 78 P.2d 215.

[6] Appellant points to sections other than section 67, which provide or intimate that the commission may, under certain circumstances, take part in court proceedings in which an order or act of the commission is involved. Section 4 provides merely for the appointment of an attorney to represent the commission in all actions involving an order or act of the commission. Section 69 provides that actions involving the acts or orders of the commission shall have preference over certain other civil causes. Section 75 authorizes the commission's attorney in the name of the people of the state of California to commence an action by mandamus or injunction in the superior court to stop or prevent a violation of law or of an order, rule, etc., of the commission. "The statute, instead of conferring upon the Commission the means of directly enforcing such orders, has provided (Public Utilities Act, § 75) for the institution by the Commission of court proceedings, or for the issuance of process by the court to carry out and make effective the orders of the Commission. As was said in Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.App. 332, 341, 185 P. 195, 199: 'The purpose and intent in enacting section 75 is obvious. The Public Utility Act invests the Board of Railroad Commissioners with large powers in the control of public utilities, and gives it powers to fine and punish for contempt. But the Commission is not a court and has not complete court machinery. It was seen that cases might arise where punishments for contempt and fine would not accomplish the objects sought, that writs of mandamus and injunction might be needed, and such writs the Commission has no power to issue. It might become necessary for it to avail itself of the equity powers of the courts. Without express authority granted by the Legislature to so do, the question of its right to bring suit might be raised in any litigation arising. Anticipating such contingency, express power was conferred upon the Commission to avail itself of court processes and writs, so that its power in this regard might not be questioned.'" Motor Transit Co. v. Railroad Commission, 189 Cal. 573, 582, 583, 209 P. 586, 590; see also, Kern County Land Co. v. Railroad Comm., 2 Cal.2d 29, 38 P.2d 401. Enforcing its orders through the offices of the superior court under a specific statute authorizing such appearance is entirely different from a forced appearance without statutory authorization. Hoyt v. Board of Civil Service Com'rs, supra. In brief, the superior court may not require the commission to accept the court's discretion instead of the commission's discretion in the enforcement of orders, rules and regulations. Sexton v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., supra.

[7, 8] In appellant's closing brief a new thought is injected which requires mention. Appellant does not argue nor present supporting authority but suggests that article VI, section 5 was adopted in 1928, some seventeen years after article XII, sec. 22 of the state Constitution and that the 1928 amendment is the latest expression of the will of the people upon the subject of jurisdiction. Appellant does not state that the 1928 amendment to article VI, sec. 5 repealed article XII, sec. 22, but such inference may be drawn from the language used in the closing brief. Repeals by implication are only recognized where there is an irreconcilable conflict between existing statutes. Railroad Commission v. Riley, 192 Cal. 54, 218 P. 415; Penziner v. West Amerian Finance Co., 10 Cal.2d 160, 74 P.2d 252; Rexstrew v. City of Huntington Park, 20 Cal.2d 630, 128 P.2d 23. On three occasions sec. 5 of article VI has been amended. The purport of the original section and the first two amendments was to outline the jurisdiction of the superior court. Originally and in several amendments the superior court was given original jurisdiction in all cases of equity and all cases of law involving specified issues. In 1928 the section was amended without mention of "equity" or "law." In the original and amended sections it is made plain that the superior court has jurisdiction in special cases and proceedings not otherwise provided for. The 1928 amendment contains the following: "* * * and of all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for." Article XII, sec. 22, and the following sections, provide the duty of regulation by the commission upon matters as are herein raised as issues in this case. Such matters are within the realm of "special cases and proceedings," but they are "otherwise provided for." With respect to the purpose of the proposed amendment to section 5, the sponsor, the Judicial Council, said: "The first paragraph has been reframed in an effort to eliminate, generally, concurrent jurisdiction in the superior and the inferior courts and to correct certain apparent inconsistencies between the provisions of that section and other provisions relative to the jurisdiction of inferior courts." (Appendix to Journals of Senate and Assembly (1927), Ex. C., First Report of the Judicial Council of California, p. 61.) Evidently there was no thought that the 1928 amendment should repeal any portion of article XII.

[9] Assuming that the amended complaint for declaratory relief presented an actual present controversy with a protectable interest in plaintiff (Dowd v. Glenn, 54 Cal.App.2d 748, 129 P.2d 964), such as a lease (Anway v. Grand Rapids R. Co., 211 Mich. 592, 179 N.W. 350, 12 A.L.R. 52, 82), still the controversy must be one subject to action by the court wherein jurisdiction is claimed.

[10] The basis of this action is the lease contract between plaintiff and defendant Carrier. There is no present justiciable controversy between plaintiff and defendant commission in which the superior court may determine the validity of the regulation. Merkley v. Merkley, 12 Cal.2d 543, 86 P.2d 89; Gillies v. La Mesa, etc., Irr. Dist. 54 Cal.App.2d 756, 129 P.2d 941. In brief, the superior court does not have jurisdiction as the facts are set forth in the amended complaint of the commission or the determination of the validity of the regulation referred to, even though the commission might intervene. However, the superior court in the action between plaintiff and defendant Carrier may interpret the "regulation" and declare whether it is applicable in view of the existence of clause sixth of the lease. In Henderson v. Oroville-Wyandotte Irr. Dist., 207 Cal. 215, at page 219, 277 P. 487, at page 488 it was held: "Again, the validity of the order of the Railroad Commission is not in question nor under review. The interpretation of that order at most is the only question before the court. The superior court is a court of general jurisdiction. It derives its powers from article 6, sec. 5, of the Constitution and section 76, subd. 3, of the Code of Civil Procedure. Yolo Water, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 43 Cal.App. 332, 185 P. 195. Where a written instrument affects the title to real property, otherwise subject to the jurisdiction of the superior court, we can conceive of no reason why such an instrument may not be construed and its meaning declared, even though the document is final in its nature and is the result of action by either the legislative, executive, or judicial branch of a state government or of the government of the United States."

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and KNIGHT, J., concur.

70 Cal.App.2d 675

PEOPLE v. HOROWITZ.

Cr. 3851.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 5, 1945.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing Sept. 18, 1945.

Hearing Denied Oct. 4, 1945.

1. Forgery ⚷44(2)
Obstructing justice ⚷16

Evidence sustained conviction of decedent's adopted son of forgery of will which he wrote over decedent's signature on blank paper, of causing forged will to be filed in office of county clerk, offering forged will in evidence, and preparing a false and antedated will. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 132, 134, 470.

2. Forgery ⚷12(4)

The crime of "forgery of a will" is complete when document has been so prepared that upon its face it will have the effect of defrauding one who acts upon it as genuine. Pen.Code, § 470.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Forgery of a Will".

3. Forgery ⚷9

That accused did not execute signature of testatrix to will rendered it no less a forgery where he prepared contents of purported will above the signature after it had been written by testatrix on blank paper. Pen.Code, § 470.

4. Forgery ⚷5

Intent to defraud another constitutes the essence of crime of forgery and the fact of forgery may imply an intention to defraud. Pen.Code, § 470.

5. Forgery ⚷47

Whether accused prepared contents of purported will over signature of testatrix on blank piece of paper with intent to defraud another so as to be guilty of forgery was a question for jury. Pen.Code, § 470.

6. Criminal law ⚷1159(2)

Determination of what facts are established is the function of jury and verdict will not be reversed on appeal for insufficiency of the evidence unless it is made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in court below.

7. Forgery ⚷44

Evidence that husband survived decedent was sufficient to overcome adopted son's contention that it was impossible for him to defraud anyone by presenting forged will for probate. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

8. Forgery ⚷4, 14

The felony of forging a will is not to be determined by whether decedent left an estate, but the crime is complete when instrument is uttered with intention of defrauding another. Pen.Code, § 470.

9. Forgery ⚷14, 15

Offense of procuring a forged will to be filed in office of county clerk was complete when forged instrument had been filed at behest of accused regardless of whether anyone was defrauded by filing of the forgery. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

10. Obstruction of justice ⚷5

Accused who offered for probate a will forged by him and, in defending a contest filed by heir, knowingly offered forged will in evidence, was properly convicted of offense of offering in evidence a forged instrument. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 132, 470.

11. Forgery ⚷20

Adopted son was properly convicted of offense of preparing a false and antedated will with intent to produce it for a fraudulent purpose, though he had a power of attorney from testatrix authorizing him to exercise the broadest authority over her property including power of disposition. Pen.Code, § 134.

12. Principal and agent ⚷97

Power of attorney to exercise broadest authority over principal's property, including power of disposition, was merely authority to represent principal, and could not be construed as a deed of gift.

13. Criminal law ⚷481, 1153(2)

The qualification of an expert to testify upon a subject requiring scientific knowledge is committed to the sound discretion of trial court which is not restricted by any specified limitations in determining such qualifications and exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed except when shown to have been abused.

14. Criminal law ⚷478(1)

A witness who exhibits an unusual skill and knowledge gained from study and experience not possessed by man on the street, is competent to testify as to an opinion.

15. Criminal law ⚷472

Testimony of handwriting experts that in their opinion body of will was written after testatrix had signed blank paper and that thereafter names of attesting witnesses were written under testatrix' signature was admissible in prosecution for forgery of will. Pen.Code, § 470.

16. Criminal law ⚷371(5)

Proponent's notice of intent to move for new trial of will contest and supporting affidavit of corroborating witness were admissible in prosecution of proponent for forgery of will and offering forged will for probate as competent evidence of proponent's intent to defraud decedent's husband of his share of estate, even though they tended to show proponent guilty of subornation of perjury. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

17. Perjury ⚷32(3)

In prosecution for perjury, the judgment roll of the case in which the false swearing was committed is competent evidence.

18. Criminal law ⚷371(5)

In prosecution for forgery of a will and offering it for probate, the record of will contest in which forged will was introduced was admissible, even though it might tend to prove an altogether different crime or aid in disclosing the proponent's motive. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

19. Witnesses ⚷255(6)

In prosecution for forgery of will and offering it for probate, trial court did not err in having counsel read aloud to witness, who could not see to read it, his affidavit which was filed in support of accused's motion for new trial of will contest, where affidavit was prepared from memorandum of imaginary events written by affiant as dictated by accused in order to refresh witness' memory. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

20. Witnesses ⚷268(3)

Cross-examination of state's witness as to statements made by accused in conversation concerning which witness had testified in direct examination, was improper where defense counsel showed no definite, legal purpose in asking excluded questions.

21. Witnesses ⚷268(3)

Trial court has discretion to determine what portions of a conversation proved on direct examination may be excluded on cross-examination and cross-examiner must show a definite, legal purpose in asking the excluded question.

22. Witnesses ⚷255(9)

In prosecution for forgery of will and offering it for probate, permitting prosecuting attorney to refresh memory of attorney who filed will for probate at accused's behest and who had testified that will when delivered to him was folded as it appeared at criminal trial by use of attorney's testimony before grand jury was not error. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

23. Witnesses ⚷254, 255(9)

A witness' memory may be refreshed by repeating to him his former declaration or testimony.

24. Witnesses ⚷236(1)

Exclusion of question propounded to hotel clerk as to whether people would come in and go to some room without clerk noticing them was not error, where clerk had testified that it was his business to know who entered hotel and that he paid attention to know that a large number were in and out.

25. Witnesses ⚷205

Inquiry of attorney as to whether client had said to him that signature on check was true signature of decedent was properly excluded as calling for a privileged communication where client had refused to waive privilege as to any conversations with attorney. Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 2.

26. Criminal law ⚷464

Objection that there was no proper foundation "that that was the kind and type and exact size of the envelope" did not state ground for excluding as an exhibit envelope which witness identified as of about the size of one he had mailed for decedent, since inquiry as to size of an object which witness has observed does not call for an opinion, for the expression of which a foundation must be laid.

27. Witnesses ⚷269(4)

On cross-examination of attorney who testified for state, trial court did not err in excluding inquiries as to what the witness had said to defense counsel whose name had not been mentioned on direct examination of the witness.

28. Witnesses 🔑267

Trial court is vested with a wide discretion in keeping cross-examination within reasonable bounds.

29. Criminal law 🔑1036(2), 1129(3)

Appellate court would not consider wholesale assignment of error that cross-examination of accused by prosecuting attorney was prejudicial, where accused did not set forth questions asked or statements made by such attorney and made no objections to such cross-examination in trial court.

30. Criminal law 🔑706

Cross-examination of accused as to whether person whom accused had attempted to show on direct examination was the cause of his criminal career had caused accused to commit crimes other than four robberies, was not error in absence of showing that prosecuting attorney asked questions solely for wanton purpose of creating a prejudice against accused or that his acts militated against orderly procedure.

31. Witnesses 🔑277(4)

Upon cross-examination accused cannot close the door to inquiry concerning the transactions which were suggested by his own direct examination.

32. Criminal law 🔑1170(3)

Accused could not predicate error on adverse rulings as to admissibility of certain testimony on his direct examination, where after a full statement by defense counsel of what he intended to prove, the objections were withdrawn and accused was permitted to give such testimony.

33. Criminal law 🔑730(3), 1037(1)

Prejudicial error could not be predicated on statement of prosecuting attorney as to nature and purpose of exhibit he was offering in evidence, where no objection was made either to exhibit or prosecutor's statement and jury was instructed to disregard any remark of counsel on either side.

34. Criminal law 🔑1144(15)

On appeal it must be presumed that jury obeyed instruction of trial court to disregard any remark of counsel on either side.

35. Criminal law 🔑464

Trial court had discretion to determine whether sufficient foundation was laid for admitting as an exhibit the envelope which witness selected from two presented by prosecuting attorney as being approximately the same size as letter which witness had testified he had mailed for decedent.

36. Witnesses 🔑240(2)

The matter of leading questions is largely within the discretion of trial court.

37. Criminal law 🔑1170½(1)

In prosecution for forgery of a will, overruling objection that inquiry as to whether anything was said on occasion of accused's second visit to witness' room about a will bearing a certain date was leading and suggestive, was not prejudicial error. Pen.Code, § 470.

38. Witnesses 🔑240(5), 255(2)

In prosecution for forgery of a will, inquiry by prosecuting attorney as to whether witness in memorandum which he had written at dictation of accused had stated that he resided at a certain address, was not objectionable as leading and suggestive or on ground that no foundation had been laid for using such memorandum for the purpose of attempting to get the purport of some other document, where memorandum was at the time in defense counsel's possession and had been used by accused in will contest.

39. Criminal law 🔑1035(3), 1166½(12)

Where prosecuting attorney in prosecution for forgery of a will had elicited testimony that at first meeting accused offered to buy witness a parking lot if witness would make false affidavit in support of accused's motion for new trial of will contest and next question as to whether promise was made before witness wrote memorandum from which affidavit was prepared was answered affirmatively after objection thereto that it was leading and suggestive had been overruled, trial judge's remark that such testimony was obviously from former testimony of the witness was not prejudicial and, having neglected to move to strike such remark, accused could not complain thereof on appeal. Pen.Code, § 470.

40. Criminal law 🔑1035(3)

Accused waived his right by neglecting to move to strike remark made by trial judge during the taking of testimony and could not complain thereof on appeal.

41. Criminal law 🔑1036(2)

Where accused did not object to witness for state on ground of his mental incompetency, reversible error could not be predicated on trial court's action in permitting such witness to testify, even if prosecuting attorney knew of witness' mental incompetency before producing him as a witness.

42. Witnesses 🔑39, 79(1)

Mental competency to qualify as a witness cannot be determined on the basis of any prescribed standard but in each instance is confided to the discretion of the trial judge.

43. Witnesses 🔑41

A previous commitment for insanity is not conclusive of lack of mental competency to qualify as a witness at a later date.

44. Witnesses 🔑79(1)

Determination of the qualification of a witness is almost wholly in discretion of trial judge.

45. Witnesses 🔑255(6)

Where prosecuting attorney was by accused denied the use of memorandum written by state's witness and in accused's possession to refresh witness' memory as to contents thereof, prosecuting attorney was properly permitted to refresh witness' memory by reading to him affidavit which was based on memorandum and signed by witness. Code Civ.Proc. § 2047.

46. Criminal law 🔑723(1)

Record did not sustain contention that accused was denied a fair trial by determined persistent effort to influence jury by appeals to their passions, and to play upon their prejudices by sneering at and belittling accused's counsel and by wanton disregard of fundamental principles of right and justice.

47. Criminal law 🔑553

That witness may have been mistaken or may have falsified would not warrant conclusion that her testimony was inherently improbable and could not have been believed by jury had not jury been unduly influenced by passion and prejudice.

48. Criminal law 🔑553

Testimony is not inherently improbable merely because it discloses unusual circumstances.

49. Criminal law 🔑1159(4)

Where testimony is such that within the knowledge of reasonable men it cannot be true, appellate court may assume such knowledge and hold the testimony legally insufficient, but to do so, court must act on what is equivalent to judicial notice.

50. Constitutional law 🔑268

Presence of decedent's widower at trial for forgery of will by which accused allegedly intended to defraud widower of his share of decedent's estate, did not constitute denial of accused's right to due process of law, though widower was a sickly, legless, old man in a wheel chair. Pen.Code, § 470.

51. Criminal law 🔑1035(3)

Error could not be predicated on presence of decedent's widower at trial for forgery of will by which accused allegedly intended to defraud widower of his share of decedent's estate, where accused did not object to widower's presence at time of trial or in motion for new trial specify any irregularity of prosecuting attorney or court by reason of such presence. Pen. Code, § 470.

52. Criminal law 🔑728(2, 5)

Defense counsel should object to improper argument by prosecuting attorney, move to strike harmful matter and request court to admonish counsel, even though he believes court has indicated that it will disregard all objections or assignments of the defense.

53. Criminal law 🔑720(6)

"Misconduct" implies a dishonest act or attempt to persuade jury by vicious measures, and drawing erroneous inference in argument to jury from a fact proved, would not constitute misconduct of prosecuting attorney.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Misconduct".

54. Criminal law 🔑1038(3)

Error could not be predicated on alleged misconduct of prosecuting attorney in making certain specified statements in argument to jury, even if such statements were prejudicial, where accused failed to lay a proper foundation at trial by requesting an instruction to disregard such statements.

55. Criminal law ⚷1173(2)

Refusal of requested instruction to disregard all testimony of named witness if jury believe he had been an inmate of state hospital for insane and released therefrom but never declared sane was not prejudicial error, where neither his competency to testify, nor his testimony were challenged on ground of mental incompetency, and he was not shown to be incompetent as a witness.

56. Criminal law ⚷829(3)

In prosecution for forgery of a will and offering it for probate, refusal to give requested instruction not to consider a letter from decedent to her husband whom accused allegedly intended to defraud of his share of estate was not error, where court's charge included statute clearly stating the law applicable to the filing of forged instruments. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

57. Criminal law ⚷829(3)

Trial court did not err in rejecting requested instructions directing acquittal if accused on trial for forgery of a will, offering it for probate and preparing a false and antedated will, had no intent to defraud and declaring he could have no such intent if he believed decedent desired and intended to leave her entire estate to him, where statutes stating law applicable to the offering in evidence of a forged instrument and the preparing of a false and antedated will were read to jury and jury was instructed with respect to specific intent to defraud and to produce a false instrument. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 132, 134, 470.

58. Criminal law ⚷814(17)

Trial court did not err in rejecting requested instruction that testimony of eyewitness is direct and positive testimony and that direct and positive testimony of one witness is sufficient to prove a fact at issue, where such instruction was not a correct application of the law to facts in issue and would have improperly excluded all circumstantial proof offered by state.

59. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Requested instruction that it was immaterial in so far as law of forgery was concerned whether body of will was written before or after decedent placed signature thereon, or when will was prepared or written if accused had authority to prepare such will was properly rejected as argumentative and repetitious.

60. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Requested instruction to consider relationship between accused and decedent whose will he allegedly forged, her attitude toward accused, her desire that accused have her property, and her desire to exclude any other person from any benefits under her estate and accused's knowledge of such facts was properly rejected as argumentative and repetitious.

61. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Trial court did not err in rejecting as argumentative and repetitious requested instruction concerning rights of inheritance of adopted child and adopting parent, and that if accused was adopted child of decedent whose will he allegedly forged and offered for probate and evidence failed to show any other legal heirs, accused would be entitled to whole estate and could not have intended to defraud which is an essential element of forgery. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 470.

62. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Requested instruction that in absence of proof that person whom accused allegedly intended to defraud by forging will and offering it for probate was legal husband of decedent at time of her death, jury must find there was no intent to defraud such person, was properly rejected as argumentative and repetitious. Pen. Code, §§ 115, 470.

63. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Trial court did not err in rejecting as argumentative and repetitious instruction to acquit decedent's adopted son on charge of forgery of will if decedent at time of death was not legally married to person whom accused allegedly intended to defraud. Pen.Code, § 470.

64. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Trial court did not err in rejecting as argumentative and repetitious requested instruction that prosecution would be bound by new matter brought out by prosecution on cross-examination but not brought out on direct examination.

65. Criminal law ⚷806(1), 807(1)

Requested instruction to acquit decedent's adopted son on charge of forgery of a will if deceased at time of death was not legally married to purported widower or had made a property settlement with him and accused was only known child of decedent, since in such event, accused would have succeeded to whole estate of decedent without a will and could not have intended to defraud estate or purported widower was properly rejected as argumentative and repetitious. Pen.Code, § 470.

66. Forgery 🔑5

Specific intent to defraud is an essential element of offenses of forgery of a will and of preparing a false and antedated will. Pen.Code, §§ 134, 470.

67. Forgery 🔑5
Obstructing justice 🔑5

The word "knowingly" as used in statutes stating the law applicable to the offenses of filing a forged instrument and offering it in evidence, refers to a knowledge of the essential facts which bring the act within purview of the Penal Code and does not make specific intent to defraud an essential element of such offenses. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 132.

See Words and Phrases, Permanent Edition, for all other definitions of "Knowingly".

68. Criminal law 🔑1172(1)

Instruction that intent to produce a false document did not constitute essence of the charge and that specific intent to defraud was essential only to crimes of forgery of a will and preparation of a false and antedated will as charged in Counts 1 and 5 of indictment, but not to crime of causing forged will to be filed and offering it in evidence as charged in Counts 2 and 3, contained no prejudicial matter. Pen.Code, §§ 115, 132, 134, 470.

69. Criminal law 🔑808½

Instruction in exact language of statute that intent is manifested by the circumstances connected with offense and sound mind and discretion of accused was not erroneous. Pen.Code, § 21.

70. Criminal law 🔑13

Statute providing that intent is manifested by circumstances connected with offense and sound mind and discretion of accused, and that all persons are of sound mind who are neither idiots or lunatics, nor affected with insanity, is not unconstitutional. Pen.Code, § 21.

71. Criminal law 🔑308

The rule that if evidence is susceptible of two interpretations, each of which appears reasonable, and one of which points to guilt of defendant and the other to his innocence, the interpretation admitting of defendant's innocence must be adopted is applicable only to cases in which there are two opposing interpretations each of which appears reasonable, and if one interpretation appears reasonable and the other unreasonable, the reasonable interpretation must be adopted.

72. Criminal law 🔑822(1)

Paragraphs of instructions which were a reasonable explanation of first paragraph of instruction which was not criticized, were themselves correct.

73. Criminal law 🔑822(1)

One portion of an instruction should not be considered separately from the entire instruction any more than a single instruction should be considered separate and apart from the entire charge.

74. Criminal law 🔑864, 1174(5)

Where jury after retirement requested bailiff to fetch certain designated exhibits and trial judge answered bailiff's inquiry by telling him that requested exhibits were a part of the evidence, there was not a communication with jury by court without presence of counsel, prejudicial to accused.

75. Criminal law 🔑858(3), 1174(6)

Jury's request for exhibits after retirement should be made to judge by bailiff and request along with objections by either party should be heard in open court, but delivery of such exhibits to jury by bailiff without hearing or notice to either counsel was not prejudicial to accused.

76. Criminal law 🔑858(3)

The jury is a constitutional part of court and they are privileged to take all or any of the exhibits with them when retiring to deliberate upon the verdict, but neither litigant has absolute right to have exhibits sent to jury unless jury demands them, nor is it mandatory upon court to deliver exhibits to jury in court room before they retire. Pen.Code, § 1137.

77. Criminal law 🔑1163(1)

Prejudice is not presumed to have been suffered because exhibits marked for identification were by mistake given to the jury.

78. Criminal law ⟾1186(4)

Injury is not presumed from error, but prejudice must appear affirmatively to the court after examination of the entire cause including the evidence, and appellant has burden of establishing prejudice. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

◆

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Arthur Crum, Judge.

Harry Horowitz was convicted of forgery of a will, causing to be filed a forged will, offering in evidence a forged will, and preparing a false and antedated will, and he appeals.

Judgment affirmed.

Robert W. Kenny, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

Morris Lavine, of Los Angeles, for defendant.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appellant was accused by indictment of having committed five felonies, to wit: forgery of a will, Penal Code, sec. 470, altering a public document, Government Code, sec. 6200, St.1943, p. 992, causing to be filed a forged will, Penal Code, sec. 115, offering in evidence a forged will, Penal Code, sec. 132, preparing a false and antedated will, Penal Code, sec. 134. As a part of the same indictment it was alleged that appellant had been convicted of four distinct felonies in the state of Illinois and that he had served a term of imprisonment therefor in the state prison. The indictment contained all of the essentials to constitute a valid accusation. Appellant was convicted on all of the counts except the second and was sentenced to be confined in the state prison for the term prescribed by law upon each of the four counts, the sentences to run concurrently. He grounds his appeal upon the insufficiency of the evidence, errors in admitting and rejecting evidence, misconduct of the prosecuting attorney, errors in giving and refusing instructions and misconduct of the court in communicating with the jury without the presence of counsel.

The Evidence Is Sufficient

Appellant is the adopted son of Esther Horowitz, whose will he was accused of forging. He lived in her home until he was 15 years of age when, according to his testimony, he left the home on account of his abuse by Morris Horowitz, the husband of decedent. Appellant was convicted of robbery for which he was sentenced to Joliet Penitentiary in 1926. Except for one parole granted him in 1934 he was confined until 1939. During his imprisonment his foster mother visited him and upon his release his life was marked by filial piety. He was her nurse and chauffeur, managed her properties, deposited her money, and acted as her bodyguard. When ill he took her to clinics and health resorts and whenever invalided he nursed her in the sanitarium. The last scenes of his devoted services were at Los Angeles in 1942. In July of that year he returned to Chicago. He there busied himself with caring for the properties of his mother and performed such other services as he was able to do in her absence. A portion of his time was consumed by his efforts to write a will for his benefactress.

In the late fall of 1942 Mrs. Horowitz resided in the sanitariums of Mrs. Nailor and Mrs. Drucker and for a while at the Merritt Jones Hotel in Ocean Park from which on December 30, 1942, she returned to the home of Mrs. Drucker where she expired on the following day.

One week later appellant called with his wife at the sanitarium of Mrs. Drucker and demanded possession of the belongings of his mother, and for the purpose of his identification exhibited to her a blank piece of paper bearing the signature of Esther Horowitz. Not having succeeded on his first mission he called upon Mrs. Drucker a second time, exhibited the same paper but containing then the forged will without attesting witnesses. He employed attorney Buchalter to probate the will but following a contest entered on behalf of Morris Horowitz probate was denied. In support of his motion for a new trial of the will contest appellant procured one Foley, a disabled veteran and former inmate of the state hospital for the insane, to make an affidavit. It contained averments corroborative of the testimony of appellant on the trial of the will contest. He obtained it by promising to buy a parking lot for the affiant. In anticipation of such affidavit appellant had Foley write out the statements dictated by appellant. He thereupon accompanied appellant to the office of Mr. Buchalter where the affidavit was prepared by the attorney and a notary. Needless to say, on the trial of the present action Foley denied the truth of all of the substantial contents of the affidavit.

After the will had been filed for probate on January 11, 1943, appellant called at the office of the county clerk, obtained possession of the will and sat at a table studying the document and comparing it with others. Messrs. John L. Harris and Clark Sellers, experts on questioned documents, gave testimony that four changes had been made in the attestation clause; that the 40 lines comprising the will were written after the paper had been folded, albeit the letter H in the name of the testatrix was written before the paper had been creased; that "Esther Horowitz" was the first writing on the paper containing the will; that it was subsequently folded and the body of the will was written in above the name of the testatrix. Beneath the words of the will are the names of Maria Matus and Emma Cordova as attesting witnesses. Both experts opined that the will was written at three different times and in the following order: the signature, the body of the will, the names of the witnesses. Both gave candid and complete technical explanations for their conclusions. Appellant's wife, Celia Chico, testified that she had requested Maria Matus to have some friend join her as a witness to the publication of the will which, they testified, was signed while the decedent resided at the Merritt Jones Hotel. However, neither the maid that cared for the room of decedent nor the elevator operators nor the manager of the hotel nor its clerk had ever seen either Maria or Emma in the hotel. While the purported will bequeathed all of the belongings of decedent to appellant, it was proved in the probate proceedings of the estate of Esther Horowitz that Morris Horowitz was her surviving husband and that she had left a surviving brother and sister.

[1] Evidence of the foregoing recitals was presented by witnesses deemed by the jury to be competent and reliable. Although it was contradicted by appellant and by the witnesses who testified in his behalf, it was sufficient if believed by the jury to establish the allegations of the indictment that a will was forged by appellant; that he composed and antedated the document; that he caused it to be filed for probate; and that he offered it in evidence in a judicial proceeding.

[2-5] To constitute a forged will the crime is complete when the document has been so prepared that upon its face it will have the effect of defrauding one who acts upon it as genuine. People v. McKenna, 11 Cal.2d 327, 332, 79 P.2d 1065. That appellant may not have executed the signature of the testatrix to the will renders it no less a forgery so long as he prepared the contents of the purported will above the signature after it had been written by the testatrix on the blank paper. Union Tool Co. v. Farmers' & Merchants' Nat. Bank, 192 Cal. 40, 52, 218 P. 424, 28 A.L.R. 1417. The intent on the part of the accused to defraud another constitutes the essence of the crime forgery, and the fact of forgery may imply an intention to defraud. People v. Baender, 68 Cal.App. 49, 59, 228 P. 536. While intent to defraud is of the essence of forgery the question of intent was one for the determination of the jury. People v. Pruitt, 55 Cal.App.2d 272, 275, 130 P.2d 767; People v. Borrego, 211 Cal. 759, 765, 297 P. 17.

[6] It is the function of the jury and of the trial court to determine what facts are established and no verdict will be upset on appeal for the insufficiency of the evidence unless it "be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below." People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, 780; People v. Perkins, 8 Cal. 2d 502, 510, 66 P.2d 631; People v. Tom Woo, 181 Cal. 315, 326, 184 P. 389.

[7] Appellant argues earnestly that because of the facts that his mother had oftentimes declared that it was her intention to bequeath to him all of her property and had evidenced such intention by having him named as the alternate beneficiary in Liberty bonds in the amount of $13,000; that she had relied upon him exclusively in her declining years to nurse and care for her; that she had selected him to manage her properties and to write her will—it was therefore impossible for him to defraud anyone by presenting the forged will for probate. But the answer to all such arguments is that in the will contest Morris Horowitz filed his "contest of the will" and also an "amended contest" and that in such pleadings he declared himself to be the surviving spouse of Esther Horowitz. These instruments were both received as exhibits at the trial and were read by the prosecuting attorney to the jury without objection by appellant. In addition to such evidence it was proved that in the petition of appellant for the probate of the will he set forth as an heir at law of the deceased the name of Morris Horowitz, husband, 63, beside that of Harry Horowitz, adopted son, 33. Moreover, a letter of decedent addressed to Morris as her husband was in evidence and appellant proved that Morris and Esther at one time lived together as man and wife, giving rise to the presumption of wedlock. Such proof was sufficient to overcome any doubt created by appellant's testimony which was nothing more than a legal conclusion.

[8] The question raised by appellant that there could be no fraud committed against such a nonentity as an estate cannot be taken seriously. The felony of forging a will is not to be determined by whether the decedent left an estate. The crime is complete the moment the instrument is uttered with intention of defrauding another. People v. Davidian, 20 Cal. App.2d 720, 724, 67 P.2d 1085. The requirements of the law are satisfied when it is established that if the evident intent of the accused had been carried out an innocent person would have suffered detriment. People v. Kuhn, 33 Cal.App. 319, 165 P. 26. If the forged instrument had been admitted to probate, Morris Horowitz would have lost at least one half of Esther's estate and he is a living person.

[9] Appellant was convicted also of procuring a forged instrument to be filed in the office of the county clerk. In support of this count the proof is complete that appellant employed attorney Buchalter to file the forged will for probate. As to that crime the law does not require proof that anyone has been defrauded by the filing of the forgery. People v. Standley, 126 Cal.App. 739, 747, 15 P.2d 180. It also was complete after the document had been filed at the behest of appellant. People v. Baender, supra.

[10] Similarly does appellant stand legally convicted of offering in evidence the forged instrument. He offered it for probate. He defended a contest filed by Morris. He knowingly offered the forged instrument in evidence, the crime denounced by section 132.

[11, 12] Likewise, in spite of appellant's own testimony and that of his witnesses, the contrary evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that appellant prepared a false, antedated will with the intent to produce it for a fraudulent purpose. His attempt to support his daring crimes as a lawful enterprise finds no support in reason or authority. He argues that he had a power of attorney from Esther authorizing him to exercise "the broadest authority over her property, including the power of disposition" and that such power should continue after her death. The instrument is an authority to "represent" her. It cannot be reasonably construed as a deed of gift. Each of the crimes of which appellant was convicted is a distinct crime from the others. Each was committed on a separate date; each is defined by a different statute and each required proof peculiar to that particular crime. In no respect was there a want of evidence for the purpose of establishing any of the judgments based upon the crimes alleged.

No Errors In Rulings On Evidence

[13-15] The second assignment is that the court erred in admitting certain evidence offered by the prosecution and in excluding certain evidence offered by the defense. His chief attack is made upon the handwriting experts who were allowed to testify to conclusions which he says should have been drawn by the jury. He contends that their qualifications lacked a knowledge of the chemistry of ink. The qualification of an expert to testify upon a subject requiring scientific knowledge is committed to the sound discretion of the trial court. It is not restricted by any specified limitations in determining such qualifications and the exercise of its discretion will not be disturbed except when it is shown to have been abused. People v. Salas, 17 Cal.App.2d 75, 78, 61 P.2d 771; People v. Rose, 119 Cal.App. 487, 489, 6 P.2d 963. If the witness exhibits an unusual skill and knowledge gained from study and experience not possessed by the man on the street he is competent to give an opinion. State v. Smails, 63 Wash. 172, 115 P. 82, 85. The equipment, training and experience of the expert on forged documents makes of him a special functionary for the illumination of facts which are not readily discernible by the non-expert. While the character of a handwriting may be distinguished by a peculiarity in the formation and union of letters, it is not readily noticeable by the non-expert; yet when analyzed by one who has devoted years to the study of questioned documents such character may be quickly determined, and from his conclusions it may be established that a writing imputed to another may be shown to have been forged and the alterations or changes in a document may be made clear to the untrained eye. Sharon v. Hill, C. C. Cal., 26 F. 337, 357; State v. Smails, supra. The testimony of witnesses Harris and Sellers in explaining the effects of the folds in the paper, of the spreading of ink in the creases as contrasted with its non-spread on areas not folded, of the erasures of the dates of the execution and witnessing of the will and of the discovery by use of the microscope of the original date on the paper constituted evidence that could not have been produced by any but experts. Under proper instructions 1127b, Penal Code, the jury was not obliged to accept the opinions of the experts as the only evidence of the forgery or more than evidence. In addition to their testimony the forged document itself and magnified photostats thereof were before the jurors who were enabled to form some opinion of their own as to its genuineness. Rolland v. Porterfield, 183 Cal. 466, 469, 191 P. 913.

[16-19] Complaint is made of the receipt in evidence of the notice of intention to move for a new trial which had been prepared and filed by appellant in the will contest. He contends that it was irrelevant and that Foley should not have been permitted to refresh his memory from its contents. On the contrary, the affidavit of the witness Foley together with the notice of intention to move for a new trial were a part of the proceedings in the will contest and they were both proof of the offer of the forged will in that proceeding. If in a prosecution for perjury the judgment roll of the case in which the false swearing had been committed is competent evidence, People v. Bradbur, 155 Cal. 808, 815, 103 P. 215; People v. Reitz, 86 Cal. App. 791, 796, 261 P. 526, then the record of a will contest in which a forged will was introduced should be likewise received as proof of the proponent's alleged crime. But the fact that it may tend to prove an altogether different crime or aids in disclosing the proponent's motive makes it none the less admissible. People v. Pollock, 31 Cal.App.2d 747, 758, 89 P.2d 128. As to the court's ruling in allowing the prosecutor to refresh the memory of Foley by reading from the affidavit he had signed, the facts are: After Foley had penned a memorandum of imaginary events as dictated by appellant he accompanied the latter to the office of Buchalter. The attorney then dictated an affidavit based upon the memorandum for Foley's signature to be used in support of his motion for a new trial of the will contest. When Foley could not see to read the affidavit it was not error for the court to have counsel read it aloud to him. People v. Allen, 47 Cal.App.2d 735, 743, 118 P.2d 927. The fact that the exhibit tended to show appellant guilty of subornation was not a valid objection to its introduction. People v. Hansen, 62 Cal.App. 105, 107, 216 P. 399; People v. Burke, 18 Cal.App. 72, 98, 122 P. 435. Moreover, taken with Foley's testimony it was competent evidence of appellant's intent to defraud Morris Horowitz of his share of his decedent's estate.

[20, 21] Attorney Buchalter while under direct examination by the prosecution testified concerning his employment by and conversation with appellant. On cross-examination he was asked: "Did he also state that Mrs. Horowitz had not only had nothing to do with Horowitz, but had terminated all her relationship with Horowitz and had made some kind of a settlement with him?" Objection to this question as self-serving was sustained. This was not error for the reason that it was discretionary with the court to determine what portions of a conversation proved on direct may be excluded on cross-examination, and it is incumbent upon the cross-examiner to show a definite, legal purpose in asking the excluded question. People v. Kiser, 24 Cal.App. 540, 546, 141 P. 1078; Zibbell v. Southern Pac. Co., 160 Cal. 237, 250, 116 P. 513; Moore v. Re, 131 Cal. App. 557, 560, 22 P.2d 45. This will suffice to answer appellant's criticism of the other rulings upon kindred cross-questions by appellant's counsel.

[22, 23] In allowing the prosecution to refresh the memory of attorney Buchalter by the use of his testimony before the grand jury no prejudice was suffered. The attorney had testified that the will when delivered to him on January 6, 1943, was folded as it appeared at the trial of the present action. After he had read his testimony before the grand jury on December 22, 1943, he was asked: "Do you now say that it is as folded and as creased as it was when it first came into your possession?" Over objection that it had been answered the court allowed the witness to repeat his answer that the document was not as fully creased and as clearly shown as when it was first handed to him. This was not error. A witness may have his memory refreshed by having his former declaration or testimony repeated to him. People v. Curtis, 36 Cal.App.2d 306, 322, 98 P.2d 228.

[24] It was not error for the court to exclude the question propounded to the clerk of the Merritt Jones Hotel. Appellant had previously elicited the answer of the clerk that it was his business as clerk to know who entered the hostelry; that he paid attention to know that a large number were in and out. Thereupon it was argumentative to inquire whether people would come in and go to some room without the clerk's noticing them.

[25] Neither was it error to exclude the question propounded to the witness, attorney Duchowney. Mrs. Drucker had employed him to present her claim against the estate. After the witness had testified that his client had objected to his testifying as to any conversation with her and had declined to waive the privilege as to any such conversation, and that he had not presented the check bearing the purported signature of decedent in support of her claim because of his conclusion that it would be a simple procedure to predicate her claim upon her bills, the court properly excluded the inquiry whether Mrs. Drucker had said "to you that that was the true signature of Mrs. Horowitz," on the ground that it called for a privileged communication. Code Civ.Proc. § 1881, subd. 2.

[26] Appellant complains that he was prejudiced by the court's receiving in evidence exhibit 12, an envelope which the witness Foley identified as of about the size of one he had mailed for the decedent while living at the hotel. He now contends that the envelope should have been excluded as incompetent. The only objection was that "there is no proper foundation that that was the kind and type and exact size of the envelope." Such an objection was not pertinent to an offer to prove a fact by resorting to a visual demonstration to illustrate the witness' impression of the size of the object under inquiry. Foundations for opinions are required to be laid only in those cases where a witness is called upon to give his opinion. An opinion is not called for by asking the size of an object which had been observed by the witness. Such a question merely calls for testimony concerning a simple fact.

[27, 28] While he makes no specific assignment appellant contends that he was unduly restricted in his cross-examination of attorney Abrahams. There was no error in excluding the inquiries as to what the attorney had said to appellant's counsel. The latter's name had not been mentioned on Abrahams' brief direct examination. The court is vested with a wide discretion in keeping the cross-examination within reasonable bounds. East Bay Municipal Utility Dist. v. Kieffer, 99 Cal.App. 240, 261, 278 P. 476, 279 P. 178.

[29, 30] Appellant complains that he was prejudiced by his cross-examination administered by the prosecuting attorney. He sets forth 28 questions asked and two statements made by counsel. There is no authority for assigning errors in wholesale lots. Such method was condemned in People v. Keyes, 103 Cal.App. 624, 641, 284 P. 1096, 1105. In the Keyes case to every question included in the assignment objection had been made. But in the case at bar, with a single exception, no objection was registered to any matter of which appellant complains. By reason of this neglect to register his disapproval of the numerous questions which he now assigns as error and thus afford the trial judge opportunity to correct the conduct of the prosecutor, we need not now indulge in further discussion of the extended remarks of appellant. People v. Wong Toy, 189 Cal. 587, 594, 209 P. 543; People v. Garcia, 83 Cal.App. 463, 469, 256 P. 876. The record reveals that each question by the state's counsel was a logical sequitur to what had preceded it. Appellant's counsel had undertaken by the direct examination to show that Morris Horowitz was the cause of appellant's criminal career. Much of the cross-examination was directed to an attempt to prove that such was not the fact. The inquiry whether Morris had caused him to commit the crimes other than the four robberies which he had charged to the latter was pertinent to appellant's accusing statements. The inquiry as to his having committed other crimes was a preliminary to the question as to whether he was convicted of grand larceny of an automobile on April 10, 1925.

[31] The cross-examination was not at all similar to that exercised in People v. Braun, 14 Cal.2d 1, 92 P.2d 402, cited by appellant. No attempt was made to discredit appellant by showing that he held out in resorts where ex-convicts assembled. Neither does the case of People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 470, 71 P. 564, 565, apply. The questions propounded to the witness in that case by the district attorney were objected to and exceptions were taken to his remarks throughout the examination and such objections and exceptions were the grounds urged for reversal. In that case the questions were asked by the district attorney "in face of the rulings of the court, and certainly, with the knowledge that the court would not permit them to be answered." That district attorney by forbidden questions got before the jury that Derbert had committed crimes of terror and should be convicted on general principles. No such conduct is shown to have been a part of the cross-examination of this appellant. In the absence of a showing that the prosecutor asked questions solely for the wanton purpose of creating a prejudice against the prisoner or that his acts militated against a fair and orderly procedure, it cannot be said that his conduct was prejudicial or offensive. People v. Wilson, 76 Cal.App. 688, 702, 245 P. 781. Upon cross-examination appellant cannot close the door to inquiry concerning the transactions which had been suggested by his own direct-examination. People v. Selk, 46 Cal.App.2d 140, 151, 115 P.2d 607; People v. Masolini, 107 Cal.App. 192, 195, 290 P. 77. Hence there was no error. People v. Martinez, 59 Cal.App. 121, 123, 210 P. 61.

[32] Appellant complains at length of adverse rulings made at the time of his attempts to prove that his leaving the home of his mother was due to the acts of Morris Horowitz. Upon a full statement of his counsel of what he intended to prove the objections were withdrawn and appellant testified to his heart's content.

[33, 34] In offering exhibit 22 the prosecutor stated: "It is a declaration on the part of Esther Horowitz exactly and entirely contrary to the express testimony of some 25 or 30 witnesses here in this court room as to her intentions and her feelings towards Morris Horowitz, her husband." The exhibit was a note written by decedent to her husband while she was in Chicago in August, 1942. Appellant was at the time present with her. It advised Morris that "if you want to come home I have some money yet. * * * Your Wife." Such evidence was a fair offer to rebut the imputation theretofore created by the testimony of appellant that Morris was not the widower of decedent. No objection was made to either the exhibit or the prosecutor's statement. Moreover, in view of the instruction to the jury to disregard any remark of counsel on either side it must be presumed that the jury obeyed such instruction. Therefore no harm could have been suffered by appellant. People v. Amer, 8 Cal.App. 137, 142, 96 P. 401; People v. Bradbury, 151 Cal. 675, 679, 91 P. 497.

No Misconduct In Producing Foley As A Witness

[35] Appellant asserts that the production of Foley as a witness was marked by the gravest misconduct on the part of the prosecutor and persistent error on the part of the court. In November or December 1942 Foley had mailed a letter for decedent. He testified that he did not so carefully inspect it as to ascertain its dimensions. Thereupon the people's advocate selected two envelopes of different sizes and asked the witness whether the letter which he had mailed was like either. The witness selected the larger of the two as being approximately the size of the letter he had mailed. The only objection made to the introduction of the envelope was that "there is no proper foundation that that was the kind and type and exact size of the envelope." Under the circumstances it was within the discretion of the court to determine whether sufficient foundation was laid for the admission of the exhibit which was merely a material embodiment of Foley's recollection of the size of the packet he had mailed.

[36, 37] Objection was made as leading and suggestive to a question asked of Foley whether anything was said on the occasion of appellant's second visit to Foley's room "about a will bearing such a date of December 8, 1942." The matter of leading questions is largely within the discretion of the trial court. No prejudicial error resulted here.

[38] A series of questions was propounded to Foley of which appellant now makes unwarranted complaint. With one exception he made no objection at the time. That objection was to the inquiry whether Foley, in the document that he had written at the dictation of appellant, in substance said that he resided at 116 Marine Street, Ocean Park, California. The objection was based upon the ground that it was "leading and suggestive"; that "he has laid no foundation for using this document for the purpose of attempting to get the purport of some other document." Such objection had nothing to commend it, since at the moment of its utterance appellant's counsel had possession of the very document Foley had written, and it had been used by appellant in the will contest.

[39, 40] Criticism is made of the trial judge's remark as follows: "Well it is obvious that it was from the former testimony given by the witness." The prosecutor had asked Foley when appellant promised to buy him a parking lot to which the answer was that it was at their first meeting. When this was followed by the inquiry whether it was before the writing of the memorandum the objection followed that it was leading and suggestive. After an affirmative answer the court interrupted with the quoted remark. No prejudice was caused. The observation made by the judge was a fair comment and a reasonable interposition to expedite the trial. But having waived his right by neglecting to move to strike the court's remark he cannot now complain. People v. Brazil, 53 Cal.App.2d 596, 128 P.2d 204.

[41-45] The contention that prejudice was suffered by the court's permitting Foley to testify because the prosecutor "knew the man's mental incompetency before he produced him" cannot be taken seriously. No objection was made to the witness on the ground of his incompetency and for that reason the assignment if of value could not be the basis of a reversal. People v. Rulia Singh, 182 Cal. 457, 484, 188 P. 987. There is no prescribed standard of mental competency to qualify one as a witness. It is well known that out of the mouths of babes oftentimes the truth is spoken. Since there is no standard, each instance is confided to the discretion of the trial judge. In re Mazuran, 88 Cal.App. 272, 277, 263 P. 339. However, no criticism of the court in permitting Foley to testify appears to be justified by his testimony in print. The fact that he had once been committed for insanity is not conclusive at a later date. The determination of the qualification of a witness is "almost wholly in the discretion of the trial judge." People v. Harrison, 18 Cal. App. 288, 295, 123 P. 200, 203. Criticisms of Foley's qualifications for testifying come with poor grace from appellant. When he was in the depths of despair at the denial of the probate of the forged will he was both zealous and bold in employing Foley to come to his rescue. Not until the shadows of his freedom had merged into eventide did he scorn as mentally deficient him whose averments appellant had once erected as a refuge. He was unhesitant in calling him to the stand to aid in effecting the defeat of the judgment in the will contest. Since the state's counsel was by appellant denied the use of the memorandum to refresh Foley's memory, no unfairness appears to have been committed by allowing his memory to be refreshed by reading to him the contents of the affidavit he had signed and which attorney Buchalter proved to have been based upon the contents of the same memorandum. Should the prosecution be foreclosed by so strict an interpretation of section 2047, Code Civil Procedure, as contended for by appellant, justice would be at the mercy of every person accused who should be so fortunate as to sequester a fatal memorandum prepared at some time by a pivotal witness. The cases cited by appellant to establish error in the court's permitting the examination of Foley are not pertinent. McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 187 Cal. 144, 201 P. 577; Kearney v. Bell, 160 Cal. 661, at page 670, 117 P. 925; Richmond v. Denny, 47 Cal.App. 745, 191 P. 554; People v. Tufts, 167 Cal. 266, 139 P. 78; People v. Mohr, 157 Cal. 732, 109 P. 476; People v. Derwae, 155 Cal. 592, 597, 102 P. 266; People v. Davenport, 13 Cal.App. 632, 110 P. 318; People v. Valliere, 127 Cal. 65, 59 P. 295; People v. Wells, 100 Cal. 459, 34 P. 1078; People v. Hail, 25 Cal.App. 342, 358, 143 P. 803; Viereck v. United States, 318 U.S. 236, 63 S.Ct. 561, 87 L.Ed. 734, 741; Berger v. United States, 295 U.S. 78, 88, 55 S.Ct. 629, 79 L.Ed. 1314; People v. Lee Chuck, 78 Cal. 317, 328, 20 P. 719; People v. Yokum, 118 Cal. 437, 442, 50 P. 686; People v. Derbert, 138 Cal. 467, 470, 71 P. 564. They treat of a variety of means by which the prosecuting attorney may illegally prejudice the prisoner on trial. It is true that many a person tried for crime has suffered prejudice at the hands of the prosecutor, but to regale us with a recital of such cases is a far cry from showing by objections, exceptions, assignments of error or motions to strike that the People's counsel in the instant case abused his office to the detriment of appellant.

A Fair Trial Was Not Prevented By Misconduct Of The Prosecutor

[46-51] Appellant contends that he was denied a fair trial by (1) the hostile atmosphere created in the course of the trial by the prosecution and (2) the argument of state's counsel. He asserts that there was "a determined persistent effort to influence the jury by appeals to their passions, and to play upon their prejudices by sneering at and belittling appellant's counsel and by a wanton disregard of fundamental principles of right and justice." We find nothing in the record answering the description of the conduct referred to and will confine our discussion to the occurrences and characters specified. Appellant says Mrs. Drucker's testimony was so inherently incredible that the jury could not have believed it had they not been unduly influenced by passion and prejudice. The lady testified that when appellant first called on her he displayed the blank sheet of paper bearing decedent's autograph and at a subsequent time displayed the same paper with the will above the signature. Appellant says it is "unthinkable that he would forge an instrument above that signature and then present the same paper to the person to whom the signature had originally been exhibited." The stupid follies committed by persons about to embark upon crime are not unthinkable—to the actors. Possession of the knowledge that criminals undertake such ill-conceived ventures is the factor that enables the crime detector at the threshold of an investigation to suspect and even to reenact the successive steps of the offense of which the accused is suspected. Of course Mrs. Drucker might have been mistaken; indeed she might have falsified. But the jury were impaneled to determine that question. Neither possibility is sufficient cause for concluding that her testimony was inherently improbable. For it to be so it is not sufficient that it disclose unusual circumstances. "Where the testimony is such that within the knowledge of reasonable men it cannot be true the appellate court might assume that knowledge and hold the testimony legally insufficient, but to do so the court must act on what is equivalent to judicial notice." People v. Jackson, 63 Cal. App.2d 586, 588, 147 P.2d 94, 96. Such equivalent does not here appear. The presence at the trial, "with the tacit approval of the court," of the widower of decedent, a sickly, legless, forlorn, old man sitting in a wheel chair either in the presence of the jury during the proceedings or in the corridor traversed by them, is not a denial of appellant's right of due process of law. There is no doubt that the ghostly form of the helpless man had hovered over the dreams of appellant many a night as the latter schemed to gain possession of the wealth to which the husband was entitled. For this reason it is startling to learn that his counsel made no protest at the presence of the intended victim of appellant's aborted chicanery. But since objection was not recorded to his haunting the purlieus of the temple, no advantage thereof may be taken on appeal. 8 Cal.Jur. 506, sec. 520. Furthermore, in his motion for a new trial appellant failed to specify any irregularity of the district attorney or of the court by reason of the presence at the trial of Morris Horowitz. He was an interested spectator, in fact the complaining witness, and was entitled to be present. Therefore his presence cannot be said to have violated appellant's right of due process of law.

No Misconduct In Prosecutor's Argument

[52-54] It is contended that appellant was prejudiced by a number of statements of the People's counsel and that the court "indicated" that it would disregard all objections or assignments of the defense. If appellant's attorney was thus impressed at the trial he should nonetheless have made his objections; should have moved to strike the harmful matter and have requested the court to admonish counsel. He now specifies 28 remarks of the prosecutor in the course of his argument and assigns them as grounds for reversal. In the 81 pages of such argument appear but two interruptions by appellant's counsel. At one time a statement of the law as to the extent of the power granted by a power of attorney was challenged; at another when the prosecutor said of decedent, "That woman was not right mentally," appellant's counsel assigned it as "erroneous; it is an unfair inference." Such a criticism is directed at the correctness of the logic of the prosecutor. If he had erred in drawing an inference from a fact proved it may not for that reason be said that he is guilty of misconduct. Misconduct implies a dishonest act or attempt to persuade the jury by vicious measures. But having laid no foundation at the trial for the other 26 statements listed in his brief as constituting prejudicial error by requesting an instruction to disregard them, appellant is in no position to take advantage of them even if they had been prejudicial. People v. Ramirez, 21 Cal.App.2d 466, 69 P.2d 913.

No Error On Giving Or Refusing Instructions

